The Epiſtle of PAUL the Apoſtle to the GALATIANS.

CHAP. II.

Ver. 1. THEN fourteen years after I went up again to Jeruſalem, &c.] That is, either after it pleaſed God to call him by his grace, and reveal his Son in him; or rather after he had been at Jeruſalem to ſee Peter, with whom he ſtaid fifteen days, and then went into Syria and Cilicia; ſo that it was ſeventeen years after his converſion that he took this journey to Jeruſalem he here ſpeaks of; and he ſeems to refer to the time when he and Barnabas went from the church at Antioch to the Apoſtles and elders about the queſtion, whether circumciſion was neceſſary to ſalvation, Acts xv. 1, 2. which entirely agrees with the account the Apoſtle here gives of this journey, and which he went not alone, but with Barnabas: and took Titus with me alſo; Barnabas, is mentioned in Luke's account as going with him at this time, but Titus is not; who, tho' he was not ſent by the church, yet the Apoſtle might judge it proper and prudent to take him with him, who was converted by him, was a miniſter of the Goſpel, and continued uncircumciſed; and the rather he might chuſe to have him along with him, partly that he might be confirmed in the faith the Apoſtle had taught him; and partly that he might be a living teſtimony of the agreement between the Apoſtle's principles and practice; and that having him and Barnabas, he might have a competent number of witneſſes to teſtify to the doctrines he preached, the miracles he wrought, and the ſucceſs that attended him among the Gentiles; and to relate, upon their return, what paſſed between him and the elders at Jeruſalem; for by the mouth of two or three witneſſes, every thing is eſtabliſhed.

Ver. 2. And I went up by revelation, &c.] He was not ſent for by the Apoſtles at Jeruſalem, nor did he go of himſelf, nor only by the vote of the church at Antioch, but by a divine revelation; not a revelation made to the church, or by the prophets there, but by God himſelf to him; he had a ſecret impulſe from the Spirit of God, and a private intimation given him, that it was the will of God he ſhould go up at this time; which is no ways inconſiſtent with his being ſent by the church, but ſerved as a confirmation to him, that what they determined was right, and according to the mind of God: and communicated unto them that Goſpel, which I preach among the Gentiles; that ſelf-ſame Goſpel, which he had preached, and ſtill continued to preach to the Gentiles; relating to free and full remiſſion of ſin by the blood of Chriſt, juſtification by his righteouſneſs without the works of the law, and freedom from all the rituals and bondage of the Moſaic diſpenſation; for as the Goſpel he preached was all of a-piece, uniform and conſiſtent, ſo he did not preach one ſort of doctrine to the Gentiles, and another to the Jews; but the very ſelf-ſame truths which were the ſubject of his miniſtry in the Gentile world, which were a crucified Chriſt, and ſalvation alone by him, theſe he communicated, laid before, and expoſed unto the conſideration of the elders and Apoſtles at Jeruſalem; not with a view either to give, or receive inſtructions, but to compare their ſentiments and principles together; that ſo it might appear that there was an entire harmony and agreement between them; and this he did not publickly, to the whole church, at leaſt at firſt, and eſpecially the article of chriſtian liberty, which reſpects the freedom of the believing Jews, from the yoke of the law; for as yet they were not able to bear this doctrine; they could pretty readily agree that the Gentiles were not obliged to it, but could not think themſelves free from it; wherefore the Apoſtle in great prudence, did not avouch this in the publick audience: but privately to them which were of reputation; or who ſeemed to be, i. e. ſomewhat, very conſiderable perſons; not in their own opinion, or appearance only, but in reality, they ſeemed to be, and were pillars in the houſe of God; particularly he means James, Cephas, and John, men in great eſteem with the ſaints, and deſervedly honoured and reſpected by them, they being faithful labourers in the word and doctrine; ſo the Jewiſh doctors [a] call men of great eſteem, חשובים, who ſeem to be, or are accounted of, a word to which the phraſe here uſed anſwers: theſe were ſpiritual men, capable of judging of all ſpiritual things; men of full age, whoſe ſenſes were exerciſed to diſcern between truth and error; and were very proper perſons for the Apoſtle to lay before, the ſcheme of his miniſtry, and the various truths he inſiſted on in it: theſe he met privately, or ſeparately, and ſingly, as it may be rendered; he either converſed with the Apoſtles alone, and all together, in ſome private houſe; or ſeparately, one by one, in their own houſes, and there freely and familiarly diſcourſed with them, about the ſeveral doctrines of the Goſpel; and particularly this, of freedom from the law: his end in it was, as he ſays, leſt by any means I ſhould run, or had run in vain; which is ſaid, not with regard to himſelf, as if he had entertained any doubt of the doctrines he had preached, and needed any confirmation in them from them; for he was fully aſſured of the truth of them, and aſſured others of the ſame; or that he queſtioned the agreement of the Apoſtles with him; or that his faith at all depended on their authority; but with regard to others, and his uſefulneſs among them. The falſe teachers had inſinuated, that his doctrine was different from that of the Apoſtles in Jeruſalem, and ſo endeavoured to pervert the Goſpel he preached, and overthrow the faith of thoſe that heard him; and could this have been made to appear, it would in all likelihood have rendered, in a great meaſure, his paſt labours in vain, and have prevented his future uſefulneſs: ſome read theſe words as an interrogation, do I in any manner run, or have I run in vain? no; from the account he laid before the church, the elders, and Apoſtles, both in private and in publick, Acts xv. 4, 12. it clearly appeared what ſucceſs attended his miniſtry, how many ſeals he had of it, what numbers of ſouls were converted under it, and how many churches were planted by his means; for by running here is not meant, the chriſtian courſe he ran, in common with other believers, which lies in the exerciſe of grace, and the diſcharge of duty; but the courſe of his miniſtry, which he performed with great activity, application, diligence, and conſtancy, until he had finiſhed it.

Ver. 3. But neither Titus, who was with me, being a Greek, &c.] There was ſuch an agreement between the Apoſtle, and his fellow Apoſtles at Jeruſalem, even about this article of the neceſſity of circumciſion, and other rituals of the law of Moſes, to ſalvation; that Titus, whom he brought along with him, an intimate companion of his in his travels, a fellow-labourer with him in the miniſtry, and now upon the ſpot, tho' he was a Gentile, an uncircumciſed perſon, yet even not he, was compelled to be circumciſed: the elders did not urge it, or inſiſt upon it, as proper and neceſſary; they looked upon it as a thing indifferent, left him to his liberty, and made uſe of no forcible methods to oblige him to it; yea, were of opinion, as Peter and James in the ſynod declared, that ſuch a yoke ought not to be put upon the necks of the diſciples, and that thoſe who turned to God from among the Gentiles, ſhould not be troubled with theſe things.

Ver. 4. And that becauſe of falſe brethren, &c.] This is the reaſon why the elders did not inſiſt upon the circumciſion of Titus, why he did not ſubmit to it, and why the Apoſtle would not admit of it: had it been left as a thing indifferent, or had it been moved for in order to ſatiſfy ſome weak minds, it might have been complied with, as in the caſe of Timothy; but theſe men inſiſted upon it as neceſſary to ſalvation; they were ſly, artful, deſigning men; could they have gained their point in ſuch an inſtance; could they have got ſuch a precedent at ſuch a time, when this matter was canvaſſing, they would have made great uſe of it in the Gentile churches, for which reaſon it was by no means judged proper and expedient. Theſe men are deſcribed as falſe brethren; they had the name, but not the grace, which entitles to the character of brethren; they called themſelves Chriſtians, but were in reality Jews: at the head of theſe, Cerinthus, that archheretick, is ſaid [b] to be. They are further deſcribed as ſuch, who were unawares brought in, who came in privily; into the churches, and into the miniſtry, into private houſes, where the Apoſtles were; or rather into the publick ſynod, where they were convened together about this article of the neceſſity of circumciſion to ſalvation. Their views, aims, and ends were, to ſpy out our liberty which we have in Chriſt Jeſus; by which is meant, not a liberty to ſin, which is no chriſtian liberty, is contrary to Chriſt, to the Spirit of Chriſt, to the principle of grace in believers, and to the doctrines of the Goſpel; but a liberty from ſin; not the being of it, but the dominion and damning power of it: that branch of chriſtian liberty the Apoſtle here chiefly deſigns, is a freedom from the law, both the moral law, as in the hands of Moſes, and as a covenant of works, tho' not from obedience to it as in the hands of Chriſt, and as a rule of walk and converſation; but from obeying it, in order to obtain life, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation by it, and from the curſe and condemnation of it; and chiefly the ceremonial law, circumciſion, and all the other rituals of it, and the free uſe of all things indifferent, provided the glory of God, and the peace of weak believers, are ſecured. This liberty is ſaid to be had in Chriſt, becauſe Chriſt is the author of it; it is that with which Chriſt makes his people free; and ſuch as are made free by him, are free indeed; and is what they come to enjoy by being in him; for by having union to him, they come to partake of all the bleſſings of grace which come by him, and this among the reſt. Now the deſign of theſe falſe teachers getting in privily among the Apoſtles, elders, and brethren, was to make their remarks upon this liberty, to object to it, and, if poſſible, to break in upon it, and deſtroy it, and ſo gain another point, which follows: that they might bring us into bondage; to the moral law, by directing ſouls to ſeek for juſtification and ſalvation by the works of it, which neceſſarily induces a ſpirit of bondage, genders to a ſtate of bondage and involves in it; and to the ceremonial law, by engaging to an obſervance of circumciſion, that yoke of bondage, and of days, months, times, and years, and other beggarly elements, which naturally lead on to ſuch a ſtate.

Ver. 5. To whom we gave place by ſubjection, &c.] Meaning not the Apoſtles, elders, and brethren at Jeruſalem, who did not inſiſt upon the obſervance of the rituals of the law as neceſſary, but were one and all of opinion, that the Gentiles ſhould be free from them; but the falſe teachers with whom they combated, and would not yield in the leaſt unto, ſo as to be brought into ſubjection to their impoſitions, nor ſuffer others to yield unto them: no, not for an hour; for the leaſt ſpace of time, knowing what advantages and improvements would be made of it, ſhould they allow of the uſe of theſe things as neceſſary for any ſhort time, tho' it ſhould be agreed then to drop them. This is a way of ſpeaking uſed by the Jews, when they would expreſs their ſteady adherence to any principle or practice; of which take the following inſtance from Gamaliel[c]: "it happened to Rabban Gamaliel, that he read the firſt night he was married; his diſciples ſaid to him, maſter, haſt thou not taught us, that the bridegroom is free from reading the Shema, i. e. hear, O Iſrael, &c. the firſt night? he replied to them, I wont hearken to you to cauſe to ceaſe from me the yoke of the kingdom of heaven, אפילו שעה אחת, even one hour." The reaſon why the Apoſtle, and others with him, were ſo reſolute and pertinacious in this matter was, that the truth of the Goſpel might continue with you; with the Galatians in particular, and with all the Gentiles in general, which otherwiſe would have been in danger of being entirely removed from them, at leaſt of being adulterated and mixed with the Moſaic rites, and the inventions of men; whereas the Apoſtle's deſire was, that the Goſpel might be continued with them genuine, ſincere, and unmixed, in oppoſition to the ſhadows of the law, and the falſe doctrines of men.

Ver. 6. But of theſe, who ſeemed to be ſomewhat, &c.] Not the falſe brethren, but the Apoſtles James, Cephas, and John, who were, חשובים, men of great eſteem; high in the opinion of all good men; not that they were looked upon to be more than human, as Simon Magus gave out that he was ſome great one, and his followers thought him to be the great power of God; for ſuch an extravagant conceit of theſe men was never entertained; nor were they thought to be ſomething when they were nothing, for they really were ſomewhat; they were miniſters of Chriſt, and ſtewards of the myſteries of grace; they were the Lord's embaſſadors, and the Apoſtles of the Lamb. However, ſays the Apoſtle, whatſoever they were; ϖοτε, formerly, ſometime ago, which our verſion does not ſo fully expreſs, it maketh no matter to me, God accepteth no man's perſon. This is ſaid, not by way of ſlight or contempt, but in vindication of himſelf, whom the falſe teachers endeavoured to leſſen, by giving high encomiums of the Apoſtles at Jeruſalem. It looks as if they had upbraided the Apoſtle with being a perſecutor of the church before his converſion, when nothing of ſuch a nature could be laid to the charge of theſe men, and therefore he was not to be ſet upon a level with them: to which he may be thought to reply in ſuch manner as this, that as for himſelf, 'tis true, he had been an injurious perſon to the ſaints; and he was ready to own it, for his own humiliation, and to illuſtrate the grace of God in his converſion; and as for theſe excellent men, what they were before their converſion, it was no concern of his; tho' perhaps, was he diſpoſed to enquire into their characters then, ſome blemiſhes might be found therein, as well as in his; but it is not what he and they had been, but what they now were: he could have obſerved, that they were perſons formerly of a very low figure in life, of mean occupations, fiſhermen by employment, and very illiterate perſons, when he was bred a ſcholar at the feet of Gamaliel; but he choſe not to make ſuch obſervations, he knew that God was no reſpecter of perſons, nor was he influenced by any ſuch external circumſtances, but choſe whom he pleaſed to ſuch an high office; and that he, who of fiſhermen made them Apoſtles, of a perſecutor, had made him one alſo. Or theſe falſe teachers perhaps had objected to him, that theſe valuable men had been with Chriſt from the beginning, were eye-witneſſes of his majeſty, heard the doctrines of the Goſpel from his lips, and ſaw his miracles, had had a familiar converſation with him, when he was a preacher of much later date, and could not pretend to ſuch advantages, and therefore ought not to be equalled to them: his anſwer is, that whatever privileges of this kind they had enjoyed, as could not be denied, but they were conſiderable, yet this mattered not, nor did it make any great difference between him and them; he had ſeen Chriſt too, tho' as one born out of due time; had received an immediate commiſſion from him to preach his Goſpel, and was appointed an Apoſtle by him as they were, without any reſpect of perſons: and whereas it might have been urged, that theſe men had entertained different ſentiments from him formerly, concerning the obſervance of the law, he ſignifies he had nothing to do with that, to their own maſter they ſtood, to whom they muſt give an account, who, without reſpect of perſons, will render to every man according to his works: and, adds he, for they who ſeemed to be ſomewhat in conference added nothing to me; whatever opinions they formerly gave into, in their converſation with him, when he communicated the Goſpel he preached to them, they found no fault with it; they did not go about to correct it; nor did they make any addition to it; the ſcheme of truths he laid before them, which had been the ſubject of his miniſtry, was ſo compleat and perfect, containing the whole counſel of God, that they had nothing to add unto it; which ſhows the agreement between them, that he did not receive his Goſpel from them, the perfection of his miniſtry, and that he was not a whit behind them in knowledge and gifts.

Ver. 7. But contrariwiſe, when they ſaw that the Goſpel, &c.] James, Cephas, and John, were ſo far from blaming or correcting any thing in the Apoſtle's miniſtry, or adding any thing to it, that they highly approved of it; and as a token of their agreement with him and Barnabas, gave them the right hand of fellowſhip: the reaſons of their ſo doing are interſerted here, and in the following verſe, and in the next to that: the reaſon here given is, becauſe they ſaw that the Goſpel of the uncircumciſion was committed unto me, as the Goſpel of the circumciſion was to Peter; by the uncircumciſion and circumciſion are meant the Gentiles and Jews; ſee Rom. ii. 26, 27. and iii. 30. by the Goſpel of the one, and the Goſpel of the other, two Goſpels are not deſigned, for there is but one Goſpel, and not another. Paul did not preach one Goſpel unto the uncircumciſed Gentiles, and Peter another to the circumciſed Jews; but the ſame Goſpel was preached by both, and is ſo called with reſpect to the different perſons to whom it was preached by theſe Apoſtles, [c] Miſn. Beracot, c. 2. §. 5.

Apoſtles. The Apoſtle Paul was ordained a miniſter of the Gentiles, and he chiefly preached among them, tho' not to them only. Peter was principally employed among the Jews, tho' alſo as he had opportunity he ſometimes preached to the Gentiles: however, the ſubject of both their miniſtrations was the Goſpel, which is ſaid to be committed to them, as a truſt depoſited in their hands, not by man, but by God; the management of which required both prudence and faithfulneſs, and which were eminently ſeen in theſe good ſtewards of the myſteries of God. This being obſerved by the Apoſtles at Jeruſalem, they came into an agreement, that one part ſhould diſcharge their miniſtry among the Gentiles, and the other among the Jews.

Ver. 8. For he that wrought effectually in Peter, &c.] The Syriac verſion renders it, he who exhorted Peter to; the Arabic verſion is, he who ſtrengthened Peter in; the Spirit of God is meant, who filled Peter with ſuch eminent gifts, and inſpired him with ſo much zeal and reſolution to the apoſtleſhip of circumciſion, to diſcharge his office as an Apoſtle among the Jews; and who wrought by him ſuch wonderful works for the confirmation of it, as curing the man that was lame from his birth, ſtriking Ananias and Sapphira dead for telling lyes, and raiſing Dorcas from the dead, and communicating miraculous gifts by the impoſition of his hands; and which ſame ſpirit alſo made his miniſtrations effectual to the converſion of a large number of ſouls, as of three thouſand by one ſermon. The ſame was mighty in me towards the Gentiles. The Spirit of God wrought as effectually in, and by him, as in Peter; filled him with extraordinary gifts for the diſcharge of his work among the Gentiles, and inſpired him with equal zeal, conſtancy, and intrepidity of mind; wrought as many miracles by him to confirm his miſſion; ſuch as ſtriking blind Elymas the ſorcerer, healing the cripple at Lyſtra, raiſing Eutychus from the dead, with many other ſigns and wonders wrought by him among the Gentiles, through the power of the Spirit of God, whereby they became obedient by word and deed. The ſame Spirit alſo accompanied the Goſpel preached by him, to the converſion of multitudes, by which means many famous churches were founded and raiſed among the Gentiles; and this is another reaſon which induced the Apoſtles at Jeruſalem to take Paul and Barnabas into an aſſociation with them.

Ver. 9. And when James, Cephas, and John, &c.] Theſe are the perſons all along deſigned, tho' not till now named. James was the brother of our Lord, the ſon of Alpheus, who wrote the Epiſtle that goes by his name, made that famous ſpeech in the ſynod at Jeruſalem, Acts xv. 13. preſided in that church, was a man of great holineſs, and much eſteemed of by the ſaints, and had a good report of them that were without. Cephas is Simon Peter. This name was given him by Chriſt, John i. 42. and in the Syriac language ſignifies a ſtone, as Peter does in the Greek, to which our Lord alludes, Matt. xvi. 18. John was the Evangeliſt, and the ſame that wrote the Epiſtles, was the beloved diſciple, and who out-lived all the reſt: who ſeemed to be pillars; not as the Arabic verſion, who thought themſelves ſuch, but were eſteemed ſo by others, and very rightly. They were pillars among the Apoſtles of the higheſt note, and greateſt eminence among them; they were the very chief of the Apoſtles; for tho' they were all in the ſame office, and had the ſame commiſſion, and were employed in the ſame work, yet there were ſome who made a greater figure than others, as theſe did, and are therefore called pillars; they were more conſpicuous, and to be obſerved, and taken notice of, than the reſt; they were pillars in the church, ſet in the higheſt place there, and the ornaments of it; ſee Prov. ix. 1. Rev. iii. 12. They are called ſo for their conſtancy and ſtability in preaching the Goſpel, and ſuffering for the ſake of Chriſt; they were ſtedfaſt and immoveable in his work, nor could they be ſhaken or deterred from it by the menaces, reproaches, and perſecutions of men; and they were the means of ſupporting others that were feeble minded, and of defending and maintaining the truths of the Goſpel; and were ſet, as Jeremy was, as a defenced city, an iron pillar, and brazen walls againſt all the enemies of Chriſt, and his Goſpel; and were, as the church is ſaid to be, the pillar and ground of truth. The Apoſtle may have reſpect to the titles of this kind which were beſtowed on the Jewiſh doctors. 'Tis ſaid [d], "when R. Jochanan "ben Zaccai was ſick, his diſciples went in to viſit "him; and when he ſaw them, he began to "weep; his diſciples ſaid to him, lamp of Iſrael, "עמוד הימיני, the right-hand pillar, &c. why doſt "thou weep?" So another of their Rabbins is ſaid [e] to be, "one of the walls, ועמודי, and pillars "of the ſchool." The character better agrees with theſe eminent Apoſtles, who when they perceived the grace that was given unto me; meaning not ſo much the grace of the Spirit of God that was wrought in him, or the good work of grace upon his ſoul, with which the church at Jeruſalem, and the Apoſtles there, had been made acquainted ſome years before; but the grace and high favour of Apoſtleſhip, which was conferr'd upon him, and all thoſe extraordinary gifts of grace, whereby he was qualified for the diſcharge of it; and particularly the efficacy and ſucceſs of his miniſtry thro' the grace of God which went along with it, and was ſo viſible in it: they gave to me and Barnabas the right-hands of fellowſhip; as a token of a covenant or agreement between them; they took them, as it were, into partnerſhip with them, admitted them as Apoſtles into their ſociety, and gave their full conſent, particularly to this article, that we, Paul and Barnabas ſhould go unto the heathen, preach among the Gentiles; and they, Peter, and thoſe that were with him, unto the circumciſion, and diſcharge their office among the Jews; and to ſhew their joint agreement, uſed the above rite; and which ceremony was uſed as among other nations [f], ſo with the Jews, when covenants were made, or partnerſhip was entered into; ſee Lev. vi. 2. where the phraſe, בתשומת יד, in putting of the hand, and which we render in fellowſhip, is, both by Onkelos, and Jonathan ben Uzziel, rendered, בשותפות ידא, in fellowſhip of the hand, or by the right hand of fellowſhip; that being given in token of their agreement and conſent to be partners together, to which the alluſion ſeems to be here; or to the making of proſelytes, to whom they ſtretch out the hand to bring them under the wings of the Shechinah [g], or in token of their being proſelytes.

Ver. 10. Only they would that we ſhould remember the poor; &c.] Not in a ſpiritual ſenſe, as ſome have thought, tho' theſe the Apoſtle was greatly mindful of; but properly and literally the poor as to the things of this world; and may deſign the poor in general, every where, in the ſeveral churches where they ſhould be called to miniſter, and particularly the poor ſaints at Jeruſalem; who were become ſuch, either thro' the frequent calamities of the nation, and a dearth or ſcarcity of proviſions among them, and which affected the whole country; or rather thro' the perſecutions of their countrymen, who plundered them of their goods for profeſſing the name of Chriſt; or it may be thro' their having given up all their ſubſtance into one common ſtock and fund, as they did at firſt, and which was now exhauſted, and that in a great meaſure by aſſiſting out of it the preachers who firſt ſpread the Goſpel among the Gentiles; ſo that it was but juſt that they ſhould make ſome return unto them, and eſpecially for the ſpiritual favours they received from them, as the Goſpel, and the miniſters of it, which firſt went out of Jeruſalem: the remembring of them not only intends giving them actual aſſiſtance according to their abilities, which was very ſmall, but mentioning their caſe to the ſeveral Gentile churches, and ſtirring them up to a liberal contribution: the ſame which I alſo was forward to do; as abundantly appears from his Epiſtles to the churches, and eſpecially from his two Epiſtles to the Corinthians. Now ſince the Apoſtles at Jeruſalem deſired nothing elſe but this, and ſaid not a word concerning the obſervance of the rites and ceremonies of the law, and neither found fault with, nor added to the Goſpel the Apoſtle communicated to them, it was a clear caſe that there was an entire agreement between them, in principle and practice, and that he did not receive his Goſpel from them.

Ver. 11. But when Peter was come to Antioch, &c.] The Alexandrian copy, and others, and the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions, inſtead of Peter, read Cephas; who, by ſome ancient writers, is ſaid to be not Peter the Apoſtle, named Cephas by Chriſt, but one of the ſeventy diſciples. So Clemens[h] ſays, that Cephas, of whom Paul ſpeaks, that when he came to Antioch he withſtood him to his face, was one of the ſeventy diſciples who had the ſame name with Peter the Apoſtle: and Jerom ſays[i], that there were ſome who were of opinion, that Cephas, of whom Paul writes that he withſtood him to his face, was not the Apoſtle Peter, but one of the ſeventy diſciples called by that name: but without any manner of foundation; for the ſeries of the diſcourſe, and the connexion of the words, moſt clearly ſhew, that that ſame Cephas, or Peter, one of the twelve diſciples mentioned, ver. 9. with James and John, as pillars, is here meant. Our Apoſtle firſt take notices of a viſit he made him, three years after his converſion, ch. i. 18. when his ſtay with him was but fifteen days, and for what appears there was then an entire harmony between them; fourteen years after he went up to Jeruſalem again, and communicated his Goſpel to Peter, and the reſt, when they alſo were perfectly agreed; but now at Antioch there was a diſſention between them, which is here related. However, the Papiſts greedily catch at this, to ſecure the infallibility of the biſhops of Rome, who pretend to be the ſucceſſors of Peter, leſt ſhould the Apoſtle appear blameworthy, and to be reproved and oppoſed, they could not, with any grace, aſſume a ſuperior character to his: but that Peter the Apoſtle is here deſigned, is ſo manifeſt, that ſome of their beſt writers are obliged to own it, and give up the other as a mere conceit. When Peter came to Antioch is not certain; ſome have thought it was before the council at Jeruſalem concerning the neceſſity of circumciſion to ſalvation, becauſe 'tis thought that after the decree of that council, Peter would never have behaved in ſuch a manner as here related; tho' it ſhould be obſerved, that that decree did not concern the Jews, and their freedom, from the obſervance of the law, only the Gentiles; ſo that Peter, and other Jews might, as it is certain they did, notwithſtanding that, retain the rites and ceremonies of the law of Moſes; and according to the ſeries of things, and the order of the account, it ſeems to be after that council, when Paul and Barnabas returned to Antioch, and with others continued there for ſome time, during which time Peter came thither; ſee Acts xv. 30, 35. and the following contention happened, I withſtood him to the face; not in ſhew, and outward appearance only, as ſome of the ancients have thought, as if this was an artifice of the Apoſtle's, that the Jews having an opportunity of hearing what might be ſaid in favour of eating with the Gentiles, might be convinced of the propriety of it, and not be offended with it: but this is to make the Apoſtle guilty of the evil he charges Peter with, namely, diſſimulation; no, the oppoſition was real, and in all faithfulneſs and integrity; he did not go about as a tale-bearer, whiſperer, and back-biter, but reproved him to his face, freely ſpoke his mind to him, boldly reſiſted him, honeſtly endeavoured to convince him of his miſtake, and to put a ſtop to his conduct; though he did not withſtand him as an enemy, or uſe him with rudeneſs and ill-manners; or, as Jannes and Jambres withſtood Moſes, and falſe teachers reſiſt the truth; but as a friend and an Apoſtle, and in an amicable manner, and yet with all uprightneſs: his reaſon for it was, becauſe he was to be blamed; ſome read it, was blamed, or condemned, either by others, by the Jews, for his going into Cornelius's houſe formerly; but what has this to do with the preſent caſe? or by thoſe who lately came from James to Antioch, for his eating with the Gentiles there; yet this could be no reaſon for the Apoſtle's withſtanding him, but rather a reaſon why he ſhould ſtand by him; or he was condemned by himſelf, ſelf-condemned, acting contrary to the ſentiments of his mind, and what he had declared in the council at Jeruſalem; though it is beſt to render the word, to be blamed, which ſhews that the Apoſtle did not oppoſe him for oppoſition-ſake, raſhly, and without any foundation; there was a juſt reaſon for it, he had done that which was culpable, and for which he was blame-worthy; and what that was is mentioned in the next verſe.

Ver. 12. For before that certain came from James, &c.] The Lord's brother, mentioned before with Cephas and John, who reſided at Jeruſalem, from whence theſe perſons came; and who are ſaid to come from James, becauſe they came from the place and church where he was, though it may be, not ſent by him, nor with his knowledge. They were ſuch as profeſſed faith in Chriſt; they were judaizing chriſtians believing in Chriſt, but were zealous of the law. Now before the coming of theſe perſons to Antioch, he, Peter, did eat with the Gentiles; which is to be underſtood, not of eating at the Lord's table with them, but at their own tables: he knew that the diſtinction of meats was now laid aſide, and that nothing was common and unclean of itſelf, and that every creature of God was good, and not to be refuſed if received with thankfulneſs; wherefore he made uſe of his chriſtian liberty, and eat ſuch food dreſſed in ſuch manner as the Gentiles did, without any regard to the laws and ceremonies of the Jews; and in this he did well, for hereby he declared his ſenſe of things, that the ceremonial law was aboliſhed, that not only the Gentiles are not obliged to it, but even the Jews were freed from it, and that the obſervance of it was far from being neceſſary to ſalvation: all which agreed with the preaching and practice of the Apoſtle Paul, and ſerved greatly to confirm the ſame, and for this he was to be commended; nor is this mentioned by way of blame, but for the ſake of what follows, which was blameworthy: but when they were come he withdrew and ſeparated himſelf; not from the church, and the communion of it, for then he had been guilty of ſchiſm, but from private converſation with the Gentiles; he did not viſit them in their own houſes, and ſit down at table and eat with them as he was wont to do; which argued great inconſtancy and inſtability, very unbecoming one that ſeemed to be, and was a pillar in the church of God, as well as much diſſimulation, for he knew better than he acted; his conduct did not agree with the true ſentiments of his mind, which he covered and diſſembled; and which muſt be very ſtaggering to the believing Gentiles, to ſee ſo great a man behave in ſuch a manner towards them, as if they were perſons not fit to converſe with, and as if the obſervance of Jewiſh rites and ceremonies was neceſſary to ſalvation. What induced him to take ſuch a ſtep was, his fearing them which were of the circumciſion; that is, the circumciſed Jews, who profeſſed faith in Chriſt, and were juſt now come from Jeruſalem; not that he feared any danger from them, that they would abuſe his perſon, or take away his life; but he might either fear he ſhould come under their cenſure and reproofs, as he formerly had for going to Cornelius, and eating with him and his; or leſt that they ſhould be offended with him, and carry back an ill report of him, as not acting up to his character as an Apoſtle of the circumciſion. This led him into ſuch a conduct; ſo true is that of the wiſe man, that the fear of man bringeth a ſnare, Prov. xxix. 25.

[h] Apud Euſeb. Eccl. Hiſt. l. 1. c. 12.

[i] In loc.

Ver. 13. And the other Jews diſſembled likewiſe with him, &c.] Not the men that came from James, for they never acted otherwiſe, and therefore could not be ſaid to diſſemble; but the Jews that were members of this church at Antioch from the beginning; or who came along with Paul and Barnabas, and ſtaid with them there; ſee Acts xv. 35. and who before had eat with the Gentiles, as Peter; but being under the ſame fear he was, and influenced by his example, concealed their true ſentiments, and acted the very reverſe of them, and of their former conduct: inſomuch that Barnabas alſo was carried away with their diſſimulation; ſo good a man as he was, full of faith, and of the Holy Ghoſt; who had been a companion of the Apoſtle Paul's in his travels among the Gentiles, had greatly aſſiſted him in preaching the Goſpel to them, was a meſſenger with him at the council in Jeruſalem, heard the debates of that aſſembly, and the iſſue of them, returned with him to Antioch, and was one with him both in principle and practice; and yet ſo forcible was the example of Peter, and the other Jews, that as with a mighty torrent he was carried away with it, and not able to withſtand it; ſuch is the force of example in men who are had in great veneration and eſteem: wherefore it becomes all perſons, particularly magiſtrates, maſters of families, and miniſters of the Goſpel, to be careful what examples they ſet, ſince men both of grace and ſenſe are much influenced by them.

Ver. 14. But when I ſaw that they walked not uprightly, &c.] Or did not foot it aright; or walked not with a right foot; they halted, as the Jews of old did, between two opinions, being partly for God, and partly for Baal; ſo theſe ſeemed, according to their conduct, to be partly for grace, and partly for the works of the law; they ſeemed to be for joining Chriſt and Moſes, and the grace of the Goſpel, and the ceremonies of the law together; they did not walk evenly, were in and out, did not make ſtraight paths for their feet, but crooked ones, whereby the lame were turned out of the way; they did not walk in that ſincerity, with that uprightneſs and integrity of ſoul, they ought to have done: nor according to the truth of the Goſpel; tho' their moral converſations were as became the Goſpel of Chriſt, yet their Chriſtian conduct was not according to the true, genuine, unmixed Goſpel of Chriſt; which as it excludes all the works of the law, moral or ceremonial, from the buſineſs of juſtification and ſalvation, ſo it declares an entire freedom from the yoke of it, both to Jews and Gentiles. Now when, and as ſoon as this was obſerved, the Apoſtle without any delay, leſt ſome bad conſequences ſhould follow, thought fit to make head againſt it, and directly oppoſe it: I ſaid unto Peter before them all. The Alexandrian copy, and others, and the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read, Cephas, as before. The reproof was given perſonally and principally to Peter, tho' Barnabas and others were concerned with him, becauſe he was the firſt in it, the chief aggreſſor, who by his example led on the reſt; and this was given publickly before Barnabas, and the other Jews that diſſembled with him, and for their ſakes as well as his; before the Jews that came from James for their inſtruction and conviction, and before all the members of the church at Antioch, for the confirmation of ſuch who might be ſtaggered at ſuch conduct; nor was this any breach of the rule of Chriſt, Matt. xviii. 15. for this was a public offence done before all, and in which all were concerned, and therefore to be rebuked in a public manner: and which was done in this expoſtulatory way, if thou being a Jew; as Peter was, born of Jewiſh parents, brought up in the Jews religion, and was obliged to obſerve the laws that were given to that people: liveſt after the manner of Gentiles, and not as do the Jews; that is, he had done ſo, he had eat with the Gentiles, and as the Gentiles did, without regarding the laws and ceremonies of the Jews relating to meats and drinks; being better informed by the Spirit of God, that theſe things were not now obligatory upon him, even tho' he was a Jew, to whom theſe laws were formerly made: why compelleſt thou the Gentiles to live as do the Jews? he aſks him, with what conſcience, honour, and integrity, with what conſiſtency with his own principles and former practice, he could compel, not by force, nor it may be, even by perſuaſions and exhortations, but by his example, which was very ſtrong and powerful, the Gentiles, to whom theſe laws were never given, and to obſerve which they never were obliged; how he could, I ſay, make uſe of any means whatever to engage theſe to comply with Jewiſh rites and ceremonies. The argument is very ſtrong and nervous; for if he, who was a Jew, thought himſelf free from this yoke, and had acted accordingly, then a Gentile, upon whom it was never impoſed, ought not to be entangled with it: and in what he had done, either he had acted right or wrong; if he had acted wrong in eating with the Gentiles, he ought to acknowledge his fault, and return to Judaiſm; but if right, he ought to proceed, and not by ſuch uneven conduct enſnare the minds of weak believers.

Ver. 15. We who are Jews by nature, &c.] I Paul, and you Peter and Barnabas, and the reſt of the Jews at Antioch. Some are Jews by grace, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, as all are that are Chriſt's, that are true believers in him, that are born again, and have internal principles of grace formed in their ſouls, of whatſoever nation they be; ſee Rom. ii. 28, 29. Rev. ii. 9. Others become Jews by being proſelytes to the Jewiſh religion: ſuch were the Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven, that were dwelling at Jeruſalem, when the Spirit was poured down on the Apoſtles on the day of Pentecoſt, Acts ii. 5. but theſe here ſpoken of were ſuch as were Jews by birth; they were born ſo, were deſcended of Jewiſh parents, and from their infancy were brought up in the Jewiſh religion, and under the law of Moſes, and in the obſervance of it: and not ſinners of the Gentiles; רשעי אומות העולם, the wicked of the nations of the world, as the [l] Jews call them. Not but that the Jews alſo were ſinners both by nature and practice, were involved in the guilt of ſin, under the power of it, and defiled with it, as the Apoſtle elſewhere moſt fully proves: nor is this ſaid with regard to the vain opinion the Jews had of themſelves, as very holy and righteous perſons, who in their own apprehenſion needed neither repentance nor remiſſion; and who looked upon the Gentiles as very unholy and unfit for converſation with them: but this more particularly reſpects that part of the character of the heathens, that they were without the law, and were under no reſtraints, but lived in all manner of wickedneſs, without hope and God in the world, and ſo were notorious ſinners, filled with all unrighteouſneſs, profligate and abandoned to every evil work, and are therefore called emphatically ſinful men, Luke xxiv. 7. And indeed the word Εθνος, Gentiles, among themſelves is ſometimes uſed for μερος τι ϖονηροτατον, a certain moſt wicked part of Gentiles in a city [m], and ſo may here deſign ſuch who lived the moſt diſſolute lives and converſations, to which the Jews are oppoſed, who had a written law, and were under a better regulation and diſcipline. The reaſon of this deſcription, both in the poſitive and negative branch of it, is to obſerve, that ſince they, the Apoſtles, and others, who were born Jews, and ſo under the law of Moſes, and until Chriſt came, were under obligation to obſerve it, but had now relinquiſhed it, and wholly and alone believed in Chriſt for righteouſneſs and life; then it was the moſt unreaſonable thing in the world, by any means whatever, to lead the Gentiles, who never were under the law, to an obſervance of it.

Ver. 16. Knowing that a man is not juſtified by the works of the law, &c.] That is, Peter, Paul, Barnabas, and other believing Jews knew this, and that from the law itſelf, which requires perfect and ſinleſs obedience, and accuſes, holds guilty, and adjudges to condemnation and death for the leaſt failure, both as to matter or manner of duty; and from the prophets, which declare that by the deeds of the law no fleſh can be juſtified in the ſight of God, and who bear witneſs to the doctrines of remiſſion of ſin, and juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; and from the Goſpel, in which this truth is moſt clearly revealed; and from the illumination of the bleſſed Spirit, who led them into all truth; and from the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt they were favoured with; and from their own experience, being fully convinced of the exceeding ſinfulneſs of ſin, the inſufficiency of their own righteouſneſs, and of the neceſſity, ſuitableneſs, and fulneſs of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt. By the works of the law are meant, not only obedience to the ceremonial law, tho' this is included, but alſo to the moral law; for it can hardly be thought, that the men the Apoſtle oppoſes could ever dream of juſtification by their compliance with the rituals of the ceremonial law, if they believed there could be no juſtification by their obedience to the moral law; for if there is no juſtification by the latter, there can be none by the former: the words are therefore to be taken in the largeſt ſenſe, as rejecting all works of the law, of whatſoever kind, from juſtification in the ſight of God; and ſuch works are deſigned, as are performed by ſinful men in and of themſelves, otherwiſe men are juſtified by the works of the law as performed by Chriſt in their room and ſtead, but not by any as performed by themſelves, for at beſt they are very imperfect, and ſo can't juſtify; they are oppoſed to the grace of God, to which the juſtification of a ſinner is always aſcribed, and therefore can't be by works; ſuch a ſcheme would diſanul the death of Chriſt, and promote boaſting in men, and indeed is impracticable and impoſſible: but by the faith of Jeſus Chriſt; not by that faith, which Chriſt, as man, had in God, who promiſed him help, ſuccour, and aſſiſtance, and for which he, as man, truſted in him, and exerciſed faith upon him; but that faith of which he is the object, author, and finiſher; and not by that as a cauſe, for faith has no cauſal influence on the juſtification of a ſinner; it is not the efficient cauſe, for it is God that juſtifies; nor the moving cauſe, or which induces God to juſtify any, for that is his own free grace and good-will; nor the meritorious or procuring cauſe, for that is the obedience and bloodſhed of Chriſt: nor is faith the matter of juſtification; it is not a juſtifying righteouſneſs; it is a part of ſanctification; it is imperfect; as an act it is a man's own, and will not continue for ever in its preſent form, nature, and uſe; and is always diſtinguiſhed from the righteouſneſs of God, by which we are juſtified, which is perfect, is another's, and will laſt for ever. Men are not juſtified by faith, either as an habit, or an act; not by it as an habit or principle, this would be to confound juſtification and ſanctification; nor as an act, for as ſuch it is a man's own, and then juſtification would be by a man's works, contrary to the ſcripture: but faith is to be taken, either objectively, as it relates to Chriſt, the object of it, and his juſtifying righteouſneſs; or as it is a means of receiving and apprehending Chriſt's righteouſneſs; the diſcovery of it is made to faith; that grace diſcerns the excellency and ſuitableneſs of it, approves of it, rejects a man's own, lays hold on this, and rejoices in it: even we have believed in Jeſus Chriſt; we who are Jews by nature, being fully apprized that there is no juſtification by the works of the law, but by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, received by faith, have quitted all confidence in our own works, and are come to Chriſt, and believe in him, not only as the Meſſiah, but as the Lord our righteouſneſs: that we might be juſtified by the faith of Chriſt, and not by the works of the law; not that faith, as before obſerved, has any cauſal influence on juſtification. Theſe Jews did not believe in Chriſt, in order by their believing to procure their juſtification before God, and acceptance with him, but that they might receive, by faith, this bleſſing from the Lord in their own conſcience, and enjoy the comfort of it, and all that ſpiritual peace which reſults from it, and which they could not find in the works of the law: for by the works of the law ſhall no fleſh be juſtified; reference ſeems to be had to Pſ. cxliii. 2. and contains a reaſon why theſe believing Jews relinquiſhed Moſes and his law, in whom they formerly truſted, and looked to, and depended on Chriſt for their juſtification, becauſe that by obedience to the law of works no ſinful mortal man can be juſtified in the ſight of God.

[l] Mattanot Cehunah in Vajikra Rabba, fol. 164. 3.

[m] Harpocratian. Lex. p. 93.

Ver. 17. But if while we ſeek to be juſtified by Chriſt, &c.] As they did, and not only ſought for, but obtained what they ſought for, becauſe they ſought for it at the hands of Chriſt, and not as it were by works, but by faith, even a juſtifying righteouſneſs in him. We ourſelves alſo are found ſinners: that is, either we ſhould be ſo, were we not to reſt here, but ſeek to join our own works with Chriſt's righteouſneſs for our juſtification, and ſo make Chriſt the miniſter of ſin, of an imperfect righteouſneſs, which can't juſtify, which God forbid ſhould ever be done by us; or we are reckoned ſinners by you, judaizing Chriſtians, for leaving the law, and going to Chriſt for righteouſneſs; and if ſo, Chriſt muſt be the miniſter of ſin, for he has directed and taught us ſo to do; but God forbid that any ſuch thing ſhould be ſaid of him: or if we are ſtill ſinners, and unjuſtified perſons, notwithſtanding we ſeek to Chriſt to be juſtified by him, but need the law, and the works of it to juſtify us, then Chriſt, inſtead of being a miniſter of righteouſneſs, is a miniſter of the law, the ſtrength of ſin, which accuſes for it, and is the miniſtration of condemnation and death, on account of it; which God forbid ſhould ever be: or this is an objection of the adverſary to the doctrine of free juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, as if it made void the law, diſcouraged the performance of good works, opened a door to licentiouſneſs that men might continue ſinners, and live as they liſt, being under no reſtraints of the law, or under obligation to obedience to it, and by ſuch doctrine make Chriſt the miniſter of ſin; who hereby teaches men to live in ſin, and in the neglect of duty; to which the Apoſtle anſwers, God forbid; as holding ſuch conſequences in the utmoſt abhorrence and deteſtation; ſee Rom. vi. 1, 2, 15. and vii. 7.

Ver. 18. For if I build again the things which I deſtroyed, &c.] Which muſt be underſtood not of good things, for formerly he deſtroyed the faith of the Goſpel, at leaſt as much as in him lay, and now he built it up, eſtabliſhed, and defended it; in doing which he did no evil, or made himſelf a tranſgreſſor, but the reverſe; he ſhewed himſelf a faithful miniſter of Chriſt: but of things not lawful, ſuch as the rites and ceremonies of the law of Moſes, which were now abrogated, and he had declared to be ſo all over the Gentile world; and therefore ſhould he go about to eſtabliſh theſe things as neceſſary to ſalvation, or teach men to join the obſervance of them with Chriſt's righteouſneſs for juſtification, then, ſays he, I make myſelf a tranſgreſſor: for he could not be otherwiſe, be the caſe how it would with reſpect to the abrogation, or non-abrogation of the law; for if the law was not aboliſhed, then he made himſelf a tranſgreſſor of it, by neglecting it himſelf, and teaching others to do ſo; and if it was aboliſhed, then it muſt be criminal in him to enforce the obſervance of it as neceſſary to a ſinner's juſtification before God. Now though the Apoſtle transfers this to himſelf, and ſpoke in his own perſon to decline all invidious reflections and characters; yet he tacitly regards Peter, and his conduct, who had been taught by the viſion the abrogation of the ceremonial law, and acted accordingly by converſing and eating with the Gentiles, and had declared that law to be an inſupportable yoke of bondage, which the Gentiles were not obliged to come under; and yet now by his practice and example, built up and eſtabliſhed thoſe very things he had before deſtroyed; and therefore could not exculpate himſelf from being a tranſgreſſor: or theſe things may regard ſins and immoralities in life and converſation; and the Apoſtle's ſenſe be, that ſhould he, or any other, take encouragement to ſin from the doctrine of free juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, as if he was the author and miniſter of ſin, and allowed perſons in it; this would be to eſtabliſh ſin, which the righteouſneſs of Chriſt juſtifies from, and engage in a living in ſin, to which, by Chriſt's righteouſneſs, they are dead unto; than which nothing can be a greater contradiction, and which muſt unavoidably make them not only tranſgreſſors of the law, by ſinning againſt it, but apoſtates, as the word παραβατης here uſed ſignifies, from the Goſpel; ſuch muſt act quite contrary to the nature, uſe, and deſign of the Goſpel in general, and this doctrine in particular, which teaches men to deny ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, and that being dead to ſin, they ſhould live unto righteouſneſs.

Ver. 19. For I through the law am dead to the law, &c.] The Apoſtle further replies to the objection againſt the doctrine of juſtification, being a licentious one, from the end of his, and other believers being dead to the law: he owns he was dead unto it, not in ſuch ſenſe as not to regard it as a rule of walk and converſation, but ſo as not to ſeek for life and righteouſneſs by it, nor to fear its accuſations, charges, menaces, curſes, and condemnation: he was dead to the moral law as in the hands of Moſes, but not as in the hands of Chriſt; and he was dead to it as a covenant of works, tho' not as a rule of action, and to the ceremonial law, even as to the obſervance of it, and much more as neceſſary to juſtification and ſalvation: and ſo he became through the law; that is, either thro' the law or doctrine of Chriſt; for the Hebrew word, תורה, to which νομος anſwers, ſignifies properly doctrine, and ſometimes evangelical doctrine, the Goſpel of Chriſt; ſee Iſ. ii. 3. and xlii. 4. Rom. iii. 27. and then the ſenſe is, that the Apoſtle by the doctrine of grace was taught not to ſeek for pardon, righteouſneſs, acceptance, life, and ſalvation, by the works of the law, but in Chriſt; by the doctrine of the Goſpel, which ſays, believe on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt and thou ſhalt be ſaved; he became dead to the law, which ſays, do this and live: or thro' the books of the law, and the prophets, the writings of the Old Teſtament, which are ſometimes called the law, he learnt that righteouſneſs and forgiveneſs of ſins were only to be expected from Chriſt, and not the works of the law; things, tho' manifeſted without the law, yet are witneſſed to by the law and prophets: or thro' the law of his mind, the principle of grace formed in his ſoul, he became dead to the power and influence of the law of works, he being no longer under the bondage of that, but under grace, as a governing principle in his ſoul: or the word law, here twice uſed, may ſignify one and the ſame law of works; and the meaning be, either that thro' Chriſt's fulfilling the law in his room and ſtead, aſſuming an holy human nature the law required, and yielding perfect obedience to it, and ſubmitting to the penalty of it, he became dead to it; that is, thro' the body of Chriſt, ſee Rom. vii. 4. and thro' what he did and ſuffered in his body to fulfil it; or thro' the uſe, experience, and knowledge of the law, when being convinced of ſin by it, and ſeeing the ſpirituality of it, all his hopes of life were ſtruck dead, and he entirely deſpaired of ever being juſtified by it. Now the end of his being dead unto it, delivered from it, and being directed to Chriſt for righteouſneſs, was, ſays he, that I might live unto God; not in ſin, in the violation of the law, in neglect and defiance of it, or to himſelf, or to the luſts of men, but to the will of God revealed in his word, and to his honour and glory; whence it moſt clearly follows, that tho' believers are dead to the law, and ſeek to be juſtified by Chriſt alone, yet they do not continue, nor do they deſire to continue in ſin, or indulge themſelves in a vicious courſe of living, but look upon themſelves as under the greater obligation to live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly in this preſent world.

Ver. 20. I am crucified with Chriſt, &c.] Not literally, for ſo only the two thieves were crucified with him, but myſtically; Chriſt was crucified for him in his room and ſtead, and ſo he was crucified with him, and in him, as his head and repreſentative. Chriſt ſuſtained the perſons of all his people, and what he did and ſuffered was in their name, and on their account, and ſo they were crucified and ſuffered with him, as they are ſaid to be buried with him, and to be riſen with him, and to ſit together in heavenly places in him. Moreover, their old man was crucified with him; when he was crucified, all their ſins, the whole body of them were laid upon him, and he bore them, and bore them away, deſtroyed and made an end of them; they received their mortal wound by his crucifixion and death, ſo as never to be able to have any damning power over them; and in conſequence of this the affections and luſts are crucified, and the deeds of the body of ſin mortified by the Spirit and grace of God in regeneration and ſanctification, ſo as not to have the dominion over them; the world is crucified to them, and they to the world; and this is another reaſon, proving that juſtification by Chriſt is no licentious doctrine. This clauſe is in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, put at the end of the preceding verſe. Nevertheleſs I live; which is to be underſtood, not of his natural, but of his ſpiritual life; the life of juſtification he lived, by faith, on the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; and the life of ſanctification which he had from Chriſt, by the quickening influences of his Spirit, by virtue of which he walked in newneſs of life. The believer is a mere paradox, he is dead to the law, and yet lives to God; he is crucified with Chriſt, and yet lives by him; yea, a crucified Chriſt lives in him. Yet not I; not the ſame I as before, but quite another man, a new creature: he did not now live as in his ſtate of unregeneracy, and whilſt in Judaiſm; he was not now Saul the blaſphemer, the perſecutor, and injurious perſon; nor did he now live Saul the Phariſee: or the life he had was not of his own obtaining and procuring; his life of righteouſneſs was not of himſelf, but Chriſt; his being quickened, or having principles of life and holineſs implanted in him, was not by himſelf, but by the Spirit; and the holy life and converſation he lived, was not owing to himſelf, to his power and ſtrength, but to the grace of God: or it was not properly himſelf, or ſo much he that lived, but Chriſt liveth in me; who was not only the author and maintainer of his ſpiritual life, but the life itſelf; he was formed in his ſoul, dwelt in his heart, was united to him, was one with him, whence all vital principles and vital actions ſprung, and all the communion and comforts of a ſpiritual life flowed. And the life which I now live in the fleſh; in the body, whilſt in this mortal ſtate, whereby he diſtinguiſhes that ſpiritual life he had from Chriſt, and thro' Chriſt's living in him, both from the natural life of his body, and from that eternal life he expected to live in another world: and which he ſays, I live by the faith of the Son of God; meaning, not that faith which Chriſt, as man, had, but that of which he is the author and object, by which the juſt man lives; not upon it, for the believer don't live upon any of his graces, no, not upon faith, but by faith on Chriſt the object; looking to him for pardon, righteouſneſs, peace, joy, comfort, every ſupply of grace, and eternal ſalvation: which object is deſcribed as the Son of God; who is truly God, equal with his Father; ſo that he did not live upon a creature, or forſake the fountain of living waters, but upon the only-begotten Son of God, who is full of grace and truth: of whom he further ſays, who loved me; before the foundation of the world, from everlaſting, prior to his love to him; and freely, without any regard to worth or merit, and tho' he was a blaſphemer and a perſecutor; and him perſonally, and particularly, in a diſtinguiſhing manner, of which he had a ſpecial knowledge and application by the Spirit of God; and was a reaſon and argument conſtraining him, and prevailing on him to live to him who loved him, and died for him, or, as he adds, and gave himſelf for me; his whole ſelf, his ſoul and body, as in union with his divine perſon, into the hands of juſtice, and unto death, in his room and ſtead, as an offering and ſacrifice for ſin, and which he did freely and voluntarily; and is a ſtrong and full proof of his love to him. Now tho' Chriſt gave his life a ranſom for many, and himſelf for his whole church, and all the members of his myſtical body, yet the Apoſtle ſpeaks of this matter as ſingularly reſpecting himſelf, as if almoſt he was the only perſon Chriſt loved and died for; which ſhews that faith deals with Chriſt not in a general way, as the ſaviour of the world, but with a ſpecial regard to a man's ſelf: this is the life of faith; and theſe conſiderations of the perſon, love, and grace of Chriſt, animate and encourage faith in its exerciſes on him.

Ver. 21. I do not fruſtrate the grace of God, &c.] Or caſt it away, as the Vulgate Latin verſion reads it; or deny it, as the Syriac and Arabic; or deſpiſe, reject, and make it void, as other verſions; meaning either the grace of the Son of God in giving himſelf for him, juſt mentioned by him; or the particular doctrine of grace, juſtification, he is ſpeaking of, as proceeding from the grace of God, upon the foot of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; or the whole Goſpel, all and each of which would be denied, deſpiſed, rejected, made null and void, be in vain, fallen and departed from, ſhould juſtification be ſought for by the works of the law: but this the Apoſtle did not do, and therefore did not fruſtrate the grace of God; which to do would be to act the moſt ungenerous and ungrateful part to God, and Chriſt, and to that love and grace which are ſo largely diſplayed in the free juſtification of a ſinner. For if righteouſneſs come by the law; if a juſtifying righteouſneſs is to be attained unto by the works of the law, or men can be juſtified by their obedience to it, then Chriſt is dead in vain; there was no neceſſity for his dying; he died without any true reaſon, or juſt cauſe; he died to bring in a righteouſneſs which might have been brought in without his death, and ſo his blood and life might have been ſpared, his ſufferings and death being entirely unneceſſary; which to ſay, is to caſt contempt upon the wiſdom, love, and grace of God in this matter, and to offer the greateſt indignity to the perſon, character, ſufferings and death of Chriſt. Wherefore it may be ſtrongly concluded, that there is no righteouſneſs by the law of works, nor to be attained that way, otherwiſe Chriſt had never died; and that juſtification is ſolely and alone by his righteouſneſs.

CHAP. III.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle reproves the Galatians for their diſobedience to the Goſpel, and departure from it; confirms the doctrine of juſtification by faith, by various arguments; ſhews the uſe of the law, and the abrogation of it, and makes mention of ſeveral privileges which belong to believers in Chriſt. He begins with a ſharp reproof of the Galatians, and repreſents them as fooliſh and bewitched, and charges them with diſobedience to the truth of the Goſpel, which is aggravated by the clearneſs of the Goſpel-miniſtry, in which a crucified Chriſt, and juſtification by him, had been ſo evidently ſet before them, ver. 1. and by the fruit and effect of it, they having received the Spirit by it, and not by the preaching of the law of works, ver. 2. and it ſtill increaſed their folly, that whereas they had begun with the Spirit of God, and ſet out in a dependance on him and his grace, they ſeemed now as if they would end in a carnal and legal way, ver. 3. To which is added, the conſideration of their having ſuffered many things for the ſake of the Goſpel, which muſt be ſuffered in vain ſhould they relinquiſh the Goſpel, though the Apoſtle hoped otherwiſe of them, ver. 4. nay, they had not only received thro' the preaching of the Goſpel the Spirit, and his graces, but even extraordinary gifts attended it, for the confirmation of it, ver. 5. ſo that this caſe of theirs was a very aggravated one, and they were guilty of great folly and madneſs: from hence the Apoſtle paſſes to the main thing in diſpute, the great truth of juſtification by faith in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which theſe perſons were departing from, and which he eſtabliſhes by ſeveral arguments; and firſt from the inſtance and example of Abraham, who was juſtified by faith, as appears from that which he believed, being imputed to him as his juſtifying righteouſneſs, ver. 6. and as many as are believers in Chriſt are his ſpiritual children, and ſo undoubtedly are juſtified the ſame way their father was, ver. 7. and particularly, that the Gentiles are juſtified by faith, is clear from the preaching of the Goſpel to Abraham, and the promiſe made unto him, that in his ſeed all nations ſhould be bleſſed; that is, with the bleſſing of juſtification, ver. 8. The concluſion of which inſtance and example is, that as faithful Abraham was bleſſed with a juſtifying righteouſneſs thro' faith, ſo all that believe are bleſſed along with him with the ſame bleſſing, ver. 9. and that no man can be juſtified by the works of the law is certain, ſince the law is ſo far from juſtifying any on account of obedience to it, that it pronounces a curſe upon all that do not perfectly and conſtantly fulfil it, ver. 10. And this is ſtill further evident from a paſſage in the propheſy of Habakuk, ch. ii. 4. which declares, that the juſt live by faith, or that thoſe who are truly righteous are ſuch who are juſtified by it, ver. 11. And this is illuſtrated by the law and faith being contrary; for if a juſt man lives by faith, then not by the law, for the law does not direct a man to believe, but to work, and to live by his works, ver. 12. And the Apoſtle having ſpoken of the law as a curſing law, takes the opportunity of ſhewing how believers are delivered from the curſe of it, which is done by Chriſt's being made a curſe for them; and that he was, appears from his being crucified and hanged on a tree; the ends of which were, that the ſame bleſſing of juſtification Abraham had, might come upon the Gentiles thro' Chriſt, and that they might by faith receive the promiſe of the Spirit, ver. 13, 14. ſo that it is clear from hence, that the bleſſing of juſtification is thro' Chriſt's being made a curſe, and is received by faith, and is not by the works of the law. The Apoſtle next argues from the inheritance being by covenant, teſtament, or promiſe, and therefore not by the law: he obſerves, that a man's covenant or teſtament, when confirmed, can neither be diſanulled, nor have any thing added to it, and much leſs can the covenant or teſtament of God, confirmed of him in Chriſt, be diſanulled by the law, or the promiſe in it be made of none effect by that which was ſeveral hundred years after a declaration of it to Abraham, to whom, and to whoſe ſeed the promiſes were made; ſo that it unavoidably follows, that ſince the inheritance or bleſſing of life is by promiſe, as is clear from its being given to Abraham by promiſe, then it is not of the law, ver. 15, 16, 17, 18. And whereas an objection might ariſe, if this be the caſe, of what uſe and ſervice can the law be? to what purpoſe, or for what end was that given? The Apoſtle anſwers, that it was added becauſe of tranſgreſſions; and that it was to endure until Chriſt ſhould come, to whom the promiſe was made; and accordingly it was publiſhed in a very grand and ſolemn manner by angels, and was put into the hands of a mediator, Moſes, who ſtood between God as one party, and the people of Iſrael as another, ver. 19, 20. Moreover, as it might be further objected, that according to this way of reaſoning, the law is againſt the promiſes; the Apoſtle replies in a way of deteſtation and abhorrence of any ſuch thing, and by an argument from the inſufficiency of the law to juſtify, ſince it can't give life, ver. 21. And then proceeds to point out another uſe of the law, which is to conclude men under ſin, or convince men of it, that they, ſeeing their need of righteouſneſs and life by Chriſt, might receive the promiſe of it thro' faith in him, ver. 22. and ſo far were men from being juſtified by the law under the former diſpenſation, that they were kept under it as in a garriſon, and ſhut up in it as in a priſon, until Chriſt, the object of faith, was revealed, and releaſed them, ver. 23. and was moreover as a rigid and ſevere ſchool-maſter; and ſo it continued until the times of Chriſt; and theſe therefore being the uſes of the law, it is a clear caſe that juſtification is by faith, and not by that, ver. 24. Beſides, Chriſt being now come, the Jews themſelves are no more under this law as a ſchool-maſter; it is now aboliſhed, and therefore there's no juſtification by it, ver. 25. And that this is the caſe of true believers in Chriſt, is evident, becauſe ſuch are the children of God, and are taught and led by the Spirit of God, and are free, and not under the law as a ſchool-maſter, ver. 26. Beſides, as they are baptized into Chriſt, they have put him on, as the Lord their righteouſneſs, and ſo profeſs to be juſtified by him, and him only, ver. 27. and theſe, let them be of what nation, ſex, ſtate, and condition ſoever, are all one in Chriſt, and are all juſtified in one and the ſame way; and being Chriſt's, they are Abraham's ſpiritual ſeed, and ſo heirs of the ſame promiſe of righteouſneſs and life as he, ver. 28, 29.

Ver. 1. O fooliſh Galatians, &c.] Referring not to any national character, as ſome have thought, by which they were diſtinguiſhed from others for their rudeneſs in knowledge, their ignorance and folly, as the Cretians for their lying, &c. nor to their former ſtate in unregeneracy, it being common to all men, to God's elect themſelves before converſion to be fooliſh, in a moral and ſpiritual ſenſe; but to their preſent ſtupidity about the article of juſtification, it being an inſtance of moſt egregious folly to leave Chriſt for Moſes, the Goſpel for the law, and the doctrine of free juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which brings ſo much ſolid peace and comfort with it, for the doctrine of juſtification, by the works of the law, which naturally leads to bondage. Now this was ſaid, not raſhly, nor in anger, or on purpoſe to reproach and provoke, and ſo not at all contrary to Matt. v. 22. but in like manner as Chriſt ſaid to his diſciples, O fools, and ſlow of heart to believe, &c. Luke xxiv. 25. So the Apoſtle here, as pitying the Galatians, grieved for them, and as one ſurprized and aſtoniſhed that ever people of ſuch light, that had had the Goſpel ſo clearly preached to them, ſhould ever give into ſuch a notion. Who hath bewitched you? ſome falſe teacher, or another had, or it can't be conceived how their heads ſhould ever have been turned this way; which muſt be underſtood, not in a literal and proper ſenſe, as Simon Magus bewitched the people of Samaria with his ſorceries, but in a figurative and improper one; that as ſorcerers and inchanters caſt a miſt before peoples eyes, or by ſome evil arts, or juggling tricks, deceive their ſight, and make objects ſeem to appear which do not, or in a different form than they really do, ſo theſe deceitful workers, who had transformed themſelves into the Apoſtles of Chriſt, as ſatan ſometimes transforms himſelf into an angel of light, had ſet this doctrine in a falſe light before them, thereby to corrupt their minds from the ſimplicity that is in Chriſt. Tho' the Apoſtle reproves the Galatians for their folly and weakneſs in giving in ſo eaſily to ſuch deceptions, yet he imputes the chief fault unto, and lays the greateſt blame on the falſe teachers; whom he repreſents as ſorcerers and enchanters, and their doctrine, particularly that of juſtification by works, as witchcraft; it being pleaſing to men, a gratifying of carnal reaſon, and operating as a charm upon the pride of human nature. What Samuel ſaid to Saul, 1 Sam. xv. 22, 23. may be applied to the preſent caſe, to obey the truth is better than ſacrifice, than all the rituals of the ceremonial law, and to hearken to the Goſpel of Chriſt, than the fat of rams, or any of the legal inſtitutions; for rebellion againſt, and oppoſition to any of the doctrines of the Goſpel, and eſpecially to this of juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, is as the ſin of witchcraft. The Greek word, βασκαινω, ſignifies to envy, and hence, to bewitch; becauſe the miſchief, by witchcrafts, generally proceeds from envy; and ſo the Syriac verſion, which the Arabic follows, renders it, מנו חסם בכון, who hath envied you, which ſuggeſts this ſenſe, that the falſe Apoſtles envying their light and knowledge in the Goſpel, their faith, peace, comfort, and happineſs, had endeavoured to introduce another doctrine among them, ſubverſive of all this. That ye ſhould not obey the truth. This clauſe is left out in the Alexandrian copy, and in ſome others, and in the Syriac verſion. By the truth is meant, either the whole Goſpel, often ſo called, in oppoſition to the law, and the types and ſhadows of it; and becauſe it is contained in the ſcriptures of truth, and comes from the God of truth; the ſubſtance of it is Chriſt, who is the truth, and is what the Spirit of truth leads into; or elſe particularly the doctrine of juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which is the truth the Apoſtle is eſtabliſhing, and theſe Galatians ſeemed to be going off from, thro' the artful inſinuations of the falſe teachers. Formerly theſe people had not only heard this truth, but embraced it; they received the love of it, were ſtrongly affected to it, and firmly believed it; but now they began to heſitate and doubt about it; they were not ſo fully perſuaded of it as heretofore; they ſeemed ready to let it go, at leaſt did not hold it faſt, and the profeſſion of it, without wavering as before; they were fallen from ſome degree of the ſtedfaſtneſs of their faith in, and of the obedience of it to this truth, which is what was the deſign of the falſe Apoſtles, and is here charged upon the Galatians. The aggravations of which follow in this, and in ſome ſubſequent verſes, before whoſe eyes Jeſus Chriſt hath been evidently ſet forth; meaning in the miniſtry of the Goſpel, in the clear preaching of it by the Apoſtle; Jeſus Chriſt was the ſum and ſubſtance of his miniſtry, in which he was ſet forth and deſcribed, and as it were painted to the life by him; the glories and excellencies of his divine perſon, the nature of his office, as mediator, the ſuitableneſs of him as a ſaviour, the fulneſs of his grace, the efficacy of his blood, ſacrifice, and righteouſneſs, were ſo fully, and in ſuch a lively manner expreſſed, that it was as if Chriſt was perſonally and viſibly preſent with them; yea, he was ſo deſcribed in his ſufferings and death, as hanging, bleeding, dying on the accurſed tree, that he ſeemed to be as it were, as the Apoſtle adds, crucified among you: for this can't be underſtood literally, for he was crucified without the gates of Jeruſalem; nor does it reſpect the ſin of the Galatians in departing from the Goſpel, as if that was a crucifying of him again, and a putting him to open ſhame; nor their ſufferings for the ſake of Chriſt, as if he, in that ſenſe, was crucified in them, and with them: but it intends the clear Goſpel-revelation of a crucified Chriſt, in the preaching of him by the Apoſtle, which was ſuch that no picture, no image, no crucifix could come up to, and which, where ſuch preaching is, are altogether vain and needleſs; and the clear view theſe ſaints had, by faith, in the glaſs of the Goſpel of Chriſt, and him crucified, which ſo realized the object, as if it was preſent and before the natural eye. Now this was an aggravation of their weakneſs and folly, that after ſuch clear preaching, and clear ſight, they had of the Goſpel, and of Chriſt in it, that they ſhould in the leaſt degree depart from it.

Ver. 2. This one thing would I learn of you, &c.] Tho' there were many things he could have put to them, yet he would only aſk this one queſtion, which if rightly attended to, and honeſtly anſwered, muſt expoſe their folly, and put an end to the controverſy upon this head: received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? This queſtion ſuppoſes they had received the Spirit; that is, the Spirit of God, as a ſpirit of wiſdom and knowledge in the revelation of Chriſt; as a ſpirit of regeneration and ſanctification; as a ſpirit of faith and adoption; and as the earneſt, ſeal, and pledge of their future glory. Now the Apoſtle aſks, whether they received this Spirit by the works of the law; meaning, either whether they could imagine, that they by their obedience to the law had merited and procured the Spirit of God; or whether they thought that the Spirit came to them, and into their hearts, thro' the doctrine or preaching of the law: the former could not be true, for if they could not obtain righteouſneſs and life by the works of the law, then not the Spirit; beſides, works done without the Spirit of God, are not properly good works: not the latter, for tho' by the law is the knowledge of ſin, yet this leaves nothing but a ſenſe of wrath and damnation in the conſcience; it is the killing letter, and a miniſtration of condemnation and death, and not of the Spirit, and of life; this belongs to the Goſpel, or the hearing of faith; for by faith is meant the Goſpel, and particularly the doctrine of juſtification by faith in Chriſt's righteouſneſs; and by the hearing of it, the preaching of it, the report of it, Iſ. liii. 1. which, in the Hebrew text is שמעתנו, our hearing, that by which the Goſpel is heard and underſtood. Now in this way the Spirit of God is received; while the Goſpel is preaching he falls on them that hear it, conveys himſelf into their hearts, and begets them again by the word of truth: and in this way the Galatians came by the Spirit, and which is another aggravation of their folly, that they ſhould enjoy ſo great an advantage by the Goſpel, and yet be ſo eaſily removed from it.

Ver. 3. Are ye ſo fooliſh, &c.] Is it poſſible you ſhould be ſo ſtupid? and do you, or can you continue ſo? having begun in the Spirit; that is, either in the Spirit of God, whom they had received thro' the preaching of the Goſpel. They ſet out in a profeſſion of religion in the light, under the influence, and by the aſſiſtance of the Spirit; they began to worſhip the Lord in ſpirit, and in truth, without any confidence in the fleſh; they entered upon the ſervice of God, and a newneſs of life, a different converſation then before, a ſpiritual way of living in a dependance on the grace and help of the divine Spirit: or in the Goſpel, which is the Spirit that gives life, is the miniſtration of the Spirit of God, and contains ſpiritual doctrines, and gives an account of ſpiritual bleſſings, and is attended with the Holy Ghoſt, and with power. This was firſt preached unto them, and they embraced it; this they begun and ſet out with in their Chriſtian profeſſion, and yet it looked as if they ſought to end with ſomething elſe: are ye now made perfect by the fleſh? or in it; not in carnality, in the luſts of the fleſh, as if they now walked and lived after the fleſh, in a carnal, diſſolute, wicked courſe of life; for the Apoſtle is not charging them with immoralities, but complaining of their principles: wherefore, by the fleſh is meant, either the ſtrength of mere nature, in oppoſition to the Spirit of God, by which they endeavoured to perform obedience to the law; or elſe the law itſelf, in diſtinction from the Goſpel; and particularly the ceremonial law, the law of a carnal commandment, and which conſiſted of carnal ordinances, and only ſanctified to the purifying of the fleſh; and alſo their obedience to it; yea, even all their own righteouſneſs, the beſt of it, which is but fleſh, merely external, weak, and inſufficient to juſtify before God. This is a third aggravation of their folly, that whereas they begun their chriſtian race depending upon the Spirit and grace of God, now they ſeemed to be taking a ſtep as if they thought to finiſh it in the mere ſtrength of nature: and whereas they ſet out with the clear Goſpel of Chriſt, and ſought for juſtification only by his righteouſneſs, they were now verging to the law, and ſeeking to make their juſtifying righteouſneſs perfect, by joining the works of the law unto it, which needed them not, but was perfect without them.

Ver. 4. Have ye ſuffered ſo many things in vain? &c.] Theſe Galatians had ſuffered great reproach, many afflictions and perſecutions for the ſake of the Goſpel, as all that embrace it muſt expect to do; and which to them that perſevere in the faith of the Goſpel will not be in vain, they will be followed with eternal life and glory; not that theſe things are meritorious of ſuch happineſs, or deſerve ſuch a reward; the reward of them is not of debt, but of grace. But, if ſuch who have made a profeſſion, and have ſuffered for it, ſhould after all relinquiſh it, their ſufferings for it are in vain; they'll come ſhort of that glory which is promiſed to them that ſuffer for righteouſneſs ſake: and this is another aggravation of the folly of theſe perſons, that they ſhould ſuffer ſo much perſecution for the Goſpel, which if not true, they muſt have ſuffered in vain, and might as well have avoided it; and if true, by relinquiſhing it not only ſuſtain a great loſs, but bring great hurt and damage to themſelves: if it be yet in vain; by which words the Apoſtle does, as it were, correct himſelf, and expreſſes his hope of them, that they would ſee their miſtake, revoke their error, and abide by the truth of the Goſpel.

Ver. 5. He therefore that miniſtreth to you the Spirit, &c.] By whom he means not himſelf, nor any other miniſter of the Goſpel, in whoſe power it does not lie to miniſter the Spirit, either the ordinary or the extraordinary gifts of it unto men; but either God or Chriſt who had miniſtred, and ſtill continued to miniſter the grace of the Spirit thro' the preaching of the Goſpel; or rather the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, which were miniſtred at the firſt preaching of the Goſpel to them for the confirmation of it, and which they were ſtill ſupplied with, as the following words ſhew: and worketh miracles among you; ſo that this is a diſtinct argument from that in ver. 2. and a further proof and aggravation of the folly and ſtupidity of the members of this church, who had not only received thro' the Goſpel the Spirit, as a Spirit of regeneration, at leaſt many of them, but had ſeen the Goſpel confirmed by the extraordinary gifts, ſigns, and wonders of the Holy Ghoſt, and which were ſtill among them; and yet they were departing from this Goſpel, thro' which all this was done: for 'tis aſked, doth he it by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? and the Apoſtle's meaning is, that theſe extraordinary gifts of the Spirit and theſe miracles done among them, did not attend the preaching of the law, or the doctrine of juſtification by works, taught by the falſe Apoſtles, but the doctrine of faith, of juſtification by faith in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, delivered by him and others, for the truth of which he appeals to themſelves; and therefore they muſt be guilty of the moſt egregious folly, once to think of, or take any one ſtep towards a departure from that doctrine. The Alexandrian copy reads here, as in ver. 2. received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?

Ver. 6. Even as Abraham believed God, &c.] The Apoſtle having obſerved, that the ſpecial grace and extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, were received not through the preaching of the law, but through the doctrine of faith; by an eaſy tranſition, paſſes on to a further confirmation of the doctrine of juſtification by faith, by producing the inſtance of Abraham, what the ſcripture ſays of him, and the promiſe made unto him; which is very appoſite to his purpoſe, ſince Abraham was certainly a righteous man, the firſt of the circumciſion, and the head of the Jewiſh nation; and whom the falſe teachers much gloried in, and boaſted of their being his ſeed, and of being circumciſed as he was; and would fain have perſuaded the Gentiles to the ſame practice, in imitation of him, and as neceſſary to their juſtification before God; whereas the Apoſtle here ſhews, referring to Gen. xv. 6. that Abraham was juſtified by faith, and not by any works whatever, much leſs by circumciſion; for what he here refers to, was many years before his circumciſion; and ſince therefore he was a juſtified perſon, declared to be ſo, before it and without it, it was not neceſſary to his juſtification, nor is it to any other perſons: he believed God. The object of faith is God, Father, Son, and Spirit; here Jehovah the Son ſeems principally intended, who in Gen. xv. 1. is called the Word of the Lord; the eſſential Word, who was with God from everlaſting, and was God, and in the fulneſs of time was made fleſh and dwelt among men; and Abraham's ſhield, the ſame the Apoſtle in Epheſ. vi. 16. calls the ſhield of faith; meaning not the grace of faith, but Chriſt the object of faith; which faith lays hold on, and makes uſe of as a ſhield againſt the temptations of ſatan: and alſo his exceeding great reward; his all in all, being made to him, as to all believers, wiſdom, righteouſneſs, ſanctification, and redemption: him he believed, not only that he was God, but he believed his word of promiſe, and in his power and faithfulneſs to fulfil it; which regarded not only his natural offspring, and a numerous race, the enjoyment of the land of Canaan, and many temporal good things in it, but the Meſſiah, and ſpiritual bleſſings in him: he believed in the Lord, Gen. xv. 6. in Jehovah the Word, in him as his ſhield, and exceeding great reward, in him as the Lord his righteouſneſs: and it was accounted to him for righteouſneſs; that is, by God, whom he believed; for the ſenſe is, not that Abraham aſcribed righteouſneſs to God, and celebrated his juſtice and faithfulneſs, as ſome; nor as others, that Abraham was accounted a righteous man by the world; but that ſomething was accounted by God to Abraham as his righteouſneſs, which could not be the act of his faith; for faith is not a man's righteouſneſs, neither in whole nor in part; faith and righteouſneſs are two diſtinct things, and are often diſtinguiſhed one from another in ſcripture: beſides, that which was accounted to Abraham for righteouſneſs, is imputed to others alſo; ſee Rom. iv. 23, 24. which can never be true of the act of his faith; but is of the object of it, the Word of the Lord, his ſhield and exceeding great reward, the Lord his righteouſneſs and ſtrength, who is made or accounted, as to him, ſo to others, righteouſneſs. The righteouſneſs of Chriſt whom he believed in, was accounted to him as his juſtifying righteouſneſs: now for faith to be accounted for righteouſneſs, is all one as to be juſtified by faith; that is, by Chriſt, or by his righteouſneſs imputed and received by faith; and if Abraham was juſtified this way, as he was, the Apoſtle has his argument againſt the falſe teachers.

Ver. 7. Know ye therefore, &c.] Or ye know; this is a thing known by you, at leaſt may, or ſhould be; it ought not to be contradicted or diſputed, it is ſo plain a caſe, and ſo clear a point: that they which are of faith; of the faith of Abraham, as in Rom. iv. 16. have the ſame faith as he had, for nature and kind; though it may be not to the ſame degree, yet exerciſed on the ſame object, Jehovah the Word, the Lord our righteouſneſs, and wrought by the ſame Spirit; or who are of the faith of Chriſt, believers in him with all their hearts, and for themſelves; who look to him for righteouſneſs and life, who ſeek for juſtification by his righteouſneſs, and truſt in him alone for it, and not in the works of the law: the ſame are the children of Abraham; his ſpiritual ſeed, though they may not be his natural offſpring; for he is the father of all that believe, whether of the circumciſion or the uncircumciſion, and of none elſe in a ſpiritual ſenſe: in this the Apoſtle ſtrikes at the falſe teachers, who boaſted of their being the ſeed of Abraham, his natural deſcendants, which they might be, and yet not his ſpiritual children; for none are ſuch, but they that are of faith, or ſeek for righteouſneſs by faith; not they that are of the law, or ſeek for juſtification by the works of it, and ſo not heirs of the bleſſing; were they, faith would be made void, and the promiſe of none effect, Rom. iv. 14. and his view herein is to prove, that the Gentiles who believe, are the true ſeed of Abraham, the children of the promiſe, thoſe in many nations, he was promiſed to be the father of; and his further view is to obſerve, that as the father of the faithful was juſtified, ſo are all his children; and that as he was juſtified by faith, ſo are they.

Ver. 8. And the ſcripture foreſeeing, &c.] This ſeems to agree with the Jewiſh forms of citing paſſages of ſcripture, מה ראה הכתוב, what does the ſcripture foreſee? and מה ראתה תורה [a], what does the law foreſee? The ſcripture here by a proſopopeia, is repreſented as foreſeeing an event that would come to paſs, and accordingly ſpoke of it before-hand, and deſigns God the author of the ſcripture; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, for ſeeing, דקדם ידע אלהא, that God foreknew, &c. and means either the Holy Spirit, who ſearches the deep things of God, is privy to all his counſels and decrees, and to this of the juſtification of the Gentiles; or God the Father, who juſtifies the uncircumciſion through faith, according to his own previſion and pre-determination of it, before the world was; for he was in Chriſt, reconciling the world, his elect among the Gentiles, from all eternity; when he reſolved not to impute their ſins to them, but to his Son, who engaged to be their ſurety: or rather the Son of God, ſince he was the preacher of this to Abraham; who lay in the boſom of the Father, and was not only acquainted with all his purpoſes and determinations, but entered into a covenant with him, for, and on the behalf of the people, the choſen ones, among the Gentiles as well as Jews; and undertook to bring in a righteouſneſs for them, by which, being received by faith, they ſhould evidentially, manifeſtatively, in the court of their own conſciences, be juſtified: wherefore the wiſdom of God, the eternal Logos, having ſuch a certain foreſight, both as God and as mediator, concerned in the covenant of grace for his people, that God would juſtify the Heathen through faith; that is, that whereas a righteouſneſs would be wrought out, and brought in, for the juſtification of all God's elect, and the doctrine of it be preached among the Gentiles, to whom faith would be given to lay hold on, and receive this righteouſneſs, God would hereby, and hereupon pronounce the ſentence of juſtification in the court of conſcience; from whence follow peace and joy in the Holy Ghoſt; the ſcripture, the author, and ſubſtance of it, God the Word, preached before the Goſpel unto Abraham; for not to the Father or the Spirit, as to the Son, can preaching be ſo well aſcribed: Chriſt was the firſt preacher of the Goſpel that ever was; he firſt preached it to Adam and Eve in the garden, and afterwards to Abraham: it was Goſpel, it was good news to him, that the Meſſiah ſhould ſpring from him, and all nations be bleſſed in him; he rejoiced at it, and by faith ſaw Chriſt's day and was glad; and particularly that part of the Goſpel, and which is a principal part of it, juſtification by faith; and that as it concerned the Gentiles, was preached unto him; and before his circumciſion, of which that was a ſign and ſeal, namely, that the righteouſneſs of faith ſhould be upon the uncircumciſed Gentiles; and before the law of works was given on mount Sinai, and long before the doctrine of juſtification by faith was preached unto the Gentiles, and they enjoyed the comfort of it; which ſhews this to be the Goſpel, and to be no new doctrine, nor different from what was ſo early taught; the ſum and ſubſtance of which lies in theſe words, in thee ſhall all nations be bleſſed; the paſſage referred to, is in Gen. xii. 3. and is repeated, ch. xviii. 18. and in ch. xxii. 18. is thus expreſſed, in thy ſeed ſhall all the nations of the earth be bleſſed; which ſhews, that this is not to be underſtood of Abraham perſonally, but of his ſeed; and which cannot intend Iſaac, the immediate ſeed of Abraham, in whom it was never verified; and beſides, is carried down to his ſeed, Gen. xxvi. 4. as not terminating in him; and for the ſame reaſon it cannot deſign Jacob, the immediate ſeed of Iſaac; ſee Gen. xxviii. 14. nor the whole body of the Jews, the poſterity of Jacob, in whom it never had its completion; for when and how, have the nations of the earth been bleſſed in them? either whilſt in their own land, when they would have no converſation with them, neither on a civil or ſacred account, unleſs they conformed to their rites; or ſince their diſperſion, ſo far from it, that their name is uſed by way of reproach, and as a proverb, a taunt, and a curſe every where; but it is to be underſtood of the Meſſiah, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is the ſon of Abraham, took upon him the ſeed of Abraham, and to whom it is applied, ver. 16. as by the Apoſtle Peter, Acts iii. 25, 26. The phraſe being bleſſed in him, does not ſignify a bleſſing of themſelves or others, or a proverbial expreſſion that ſhould be uſed among the Gentiles, God bleſs thee as Abraham, or the God of Abraham bleſs thee, or God bleſs you as he did the Iſraelites, or ſeed of Abraham; for no one inſtance can be produced, of the nations of the world ever uſing ſuch a form of bleſſing; no hiſtory, ſacred or profane, makes mention that theſe, or any other Jewiſh forms of bleſſing, were ever uſed among the Gentiles: but here it deſigns bleſſings in Chriſt, and not temporal, but ſpiritual ones, even all ſpiritual bleſſings; as redemption, reconciliation, peace, pardon, adoption, ſanctification, and eternal life, and particularly juſtification; this is the bleſſedneſs more eſpecially intended, which comes not upon the circumciſion only, but the uncircumciſion alſo; and they that partake of this, are bleſſed indeed; for they are juſtified from all ſin, are free from condemnation, ſecure from the wrath of God, have a title to eternal life, and ſhall certainly be glorified: and when it is ſaid that all nations ſhall be thus bleſſed, the meaning is, not that every individual of all nations ſhall enjoy this happineſs, for all are not in Chriſt, nor have his righteouſneſs imputed to them, nor have faith in him, there are many that will be condemned with the world; but ſome of all nations, that God will have ſaved, and Chriſt has redeemed by his blood; and theſe are the many he juſtifies, even all the elect of God, in the ſeveral nations of the world.

[a] Bemidbar Rabba, Paraſh. 10. fol. 201. 4. Tzeror Hammor, fol. 122. 1.

Ver. 9. So then they which be of faith, &c.] This is the Apoſtle's concluſion upon the whole, from the inſtance of Abraham, and the promiſe made to him; and is an explanation of the preceding clauſe, and ſhews that it muſt be taken in a limited ſenſe, and underſtood not of every individual; only of thoſe who are of the ſame faith with Abraham, are believers in Chriſt, and ſeek for juſtification by faith in him, and not by the works of the law: theſe are bleſſed with faithful Abraham; in his ſeed Chriſt; they are bleſſed with a juſtifying righteouſneſs in Chriſt as he was, and will be bleſſed with eternal life as he is; they ſhall ſit with him, and with Iſaac and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven. The character of faithful given to him, reſpects not his uprightneſs and integrity among men, but his faith in God; and does not ſuppoſe that he was bleſſed for his faith, but that it was through faith that he received the bleſſing of juſtification, and not by the works of the law; and that in the ſame way, all that believe enjoy the ſame favour, for to them it is limited and reſtrained: nor can the Jews of all men find fault with this interpretation of the Apoſtle's, ſince they themſelves interpret the above clauſe of ſome particular perſons of the nations of the world, and ſay in ſo many words, that "the "meaning is, not that all the men of the world "ſhould be bleſſed, but that every family that is "in the world, שהתקרב למשמעתו ואמונתו, that "comes to the obedience and faith of him (God,) to "it ſhall adhere the bleſſing and providence *."

Ver. 10. For as many as are of the works of the law, &c.] The Apoſtle does not ſay, as many as were of the law, to whom it belonged, who were born and brought up in it, and to whom it was given, the Jews; for there were ſome of them who believed in Chriſt, were bleſſed with Abraham, and not under the curſe of the law; nor does he ſay, as many as do the works of the law: for the works of the law are to be done, though not in order to obtain righteouſneſs and life by them; yet it is not the doing of them, but the not doing of them, that entails the curſe on men: his meaning is, that as many as ſeek for juſtification by the works of the law, and truſt in their own righteouſneſs for acceptance with God, theſe are ſo far from being bleſſed or juſtified hereby, that they are under the curſe, that is, of the law; they are under its ſentence of condemnation and death, they are deſerving of, and liable to the ſecond death, eternal death, the wrath of God, here meant by the curſe; to which they are expoſed, and which will light upon them, for aught their righteouſneſs can do for them; for truſting in their works, they are truſting in the fleſh, and ſo bring down upon themſelves the curſe threatened to the man that truſts in man, and makes fleſh his arm; not only that truſts in a man of fleſh and blood, but in the works of man; his own, or any other mere creature's: beſides, by ſo doing, he rejects Chriſt and his righteouſneſs, whereby only is deliverance from the curſe of the law; nor is it poſſible by his preſent obedience to the law, be it ever ſo good, that he can remove the guilt of former tranſgreſſions, and free himſelf from obligation to puniſhment for them; nor is it practicable for fallen man, to fulfil the law of works, and if he fails but in one point, he's guilty of all, and is ſo pronounced by the law; and he ſtands before God convicted, his mouth ſtopped, and he condemned and curſed by that law, he ſeeks for righteouſneſs by the deeds of: for it is written, Deut. xxvii. 26. curſed is every one that continues not in all things written in the book of the law to do them. The law requires doing; it is not content with mere theory without practice; it is not enough to know it, or hear it, it muſt be done. The Jews boaſted of their knowledge, and truſted much to the hearing of it read every ſabbath-day; but not thoſe who had a form of knowledge, and of the truth in the law, or were hearers of it, were juſt before God, but the doers of it are juſtified; and it requires perfect obedience, an obſervance of all things contained in it, which can never be performed by fallen man. The Jews pretend [p], that Abraham their father, קיים כל התורה כולה, fulfilled all the whole law; and the ſame they ſay [q] of the Iſraelites in common, than which nothing is more untrue; for in many things, all men offend: moreover, the law requires conſtant perfect obedience; not only that a man ſhould do all the things commanded in it, but that he ſhould continue to do them from his infancy, to the day of his death; and in failure hereof, it pronounces every man curſed, without any reſpect to perſons, or any regard to pleas, taken from the infirmity of human nature, the ſincerity of the heart, or repentance for tranſgreſſions. It ſhould be obſerved, that the word all is not in the Hebrew text, in Deut. xxvii. 26. but is manifeſtly implied, an indefinite propoſition being equal to an univerſal one; and agreeable to the true ſenſe of the words, it is inſerted by the Apoſtle here, as it is in the Septuagint and Samaritan verſions there; and perfectly accords with the ſenſe of the beſt interpreters among the Jews; one of them has this Gloſs upon the words [r], כאן כלל את כל התורה כולה, here he (Moſes) comprehends all the whole law; and another [s] ſays the ſame thing, almoſt in the ſame words; "this, ſays he, includes all the commandments "which are in the law:" and the note of a third is [t], "there are ſome that ſay, this is to be underſtood, על כל התורה, of the whole law; and "there are others that ſay, it is to be underſtood "of thoſe things that are mentioned (above,) but "they ſay nothing, for it is written to do them; "and it is right in my eyes, that he curſes for the "negative commands mentioned, and he curſes "him who does not keep even ſecretly the affirmative precepts, wherefore he ſays to do them:" to which may be added, the obſervation of another of them [u], that theſe words intimate, that a man ought to honour the law, במחשבת ובדיבור ובמעשה, in thought, and in word, and in deed: nor ſhould this be thought to be too ſevere, that the law of God curſes men for non-performance of the whole. The Athenians [w] formerly, condemned perſons as guilty, though they had not broke the whole law, yet if they had tranſgreſſed but one ſyllable of it: upon the whole it is a clear point, that there can be no juſtification by the works of the law, ſince it curſes in caſe of want of perfect and conſtant obedience to it.

* Abarbinel in Pentateuch, fol. 54. 1, 2. Vid. R. Iſaac Chizzuk, Emuna, par. 1. c. 13. p. 135.

Ver. 11. But that no man is juſtified, &c.] There are ſome that are juſtified, as all God's elect are, in his own mind and will from eternity; which will of his to juſtify them, upon the righteouſneſs of his Son, undertook by him to bring in, is their juſtification in the court of heaven; and all that believe in Chriſt, are openly and manifeſtatively juſtified in the court of conſcience, under the teſtimony of the Spirit of God: but no one is juſtified by the law; 'tis in the Greek text, in the law; there were many juſtified before the law was given, as Noah, Job, Abraham, and all the Ante-Moſaic believers; and there were many juſtified in, or under the legal diſpenſation; but none of them were juſtified by their obedience to the law, but by the righteouſneſs they believed they had in the Lord: eſpecially no man is juſtified in the ſight of God; who ſees the heart, knows the ſpring of actions, and whoſe judgment is according to truth; that is, by the law and the deeds of it, however they may before men: it is evident; 'tis a clear caſe, out of all diſpute, as appears from Hab. ii. 4. for the juſt ſhall live by faith; which may be read either, the juſt by faith, ſhall live; that is, the man who is juſt by faith, or juſtified by faith, not by it as a principle or act, or as the cauſe or matter of his juſtification, but by the object of his faith, Chriſt and his righteouſneſs apprehended by faith, and ſo not juſt or juſtified by works; he ſhall live a life of juſtification, through that righteouſneſs his faith receives; he ſhall live comfortably, with much peace and joy in the Holy Ghoſt, as the reſult of his being juſtified by faith; and ſhall live eternally, and never die the ſecond death: or the juſt ſhall live by faith; he that is righteous, not by his own works, but by the obedience of Chriſt, ſhall live not upon his faith, but by it on Chriſt, and his righteouſneſs, which is revealed from faith to faith; and this makes it a clear point, that he is not juſtified by the law, for if he was, he would not live by faith on Chriſt, but in and by the deeds of the law.

Ver. 12. And the law is not of faith, &c.] The Arabic verſion adds, but of man; which as it is an addition to the text, ſo it contains falſe doctrine; for though the law is not of faith, yet not of man, but of God; the law does not conſiſt of faith in Chriſt, nor does it require it, and that a man ſhould live by it upon his righteouſneſs; it is the Goſpel that reveals the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and directs and encourages men to believe in him and be ſaved; nor does the law take any notice of a man's faith; nor has it any thing to do with a man as a believer, but as a doer, in the point of juſtification: but the man that doth them ſhall live in them; the paſſage referred to, is in Lev. xviii. 5. the word them, relates to the ſtatutes and judgments, not of the ceremonial, but of the moral law, which are equally obligatory on Gentiles as on Jews. The Jewiſh doctors [x] obſerve on thoſe words, that "it is not ſaid, prieſts, Levites, and "Iſraelites, but האדם, the man; lo, you learn "from hence, that even a Gentile that ſtudies in "the law, is as an high-prieſt:" ſo that whatever man does the things contained in the law, that is, internally as well as externally, for the law is ſpiritual, reaches the inward part of man, and requires truth there, a conformity of heart and thought unto it, and that does them perfectly and conſtantly, without the leaſt failure in matter or manner of obedience, ſuch ſhall live in them and by them; the language of the law is, do this and live; ſo life, and the continuation of that happy natural life which Adam had in innocence, was promiſed to him, in caſe of his perſiſting in his obedience to the law; and ſo a long and proſperous life was promiſed to the Iſraelites in the land of Canaan, provided they obſerved the laws and ſtatutes which were commanded them: but ſince eternal life is a promiſe made before the world began, is provided for in an everlaſting covenant, is revealed in the Goſpel, and is the pure gift of God's grace thro' Chriſt, it ſeems that it never was the will of God that it ſhould be obtained by the works of the law; and which is a further proof, that there can be no juſtification in the ſight of God by them, ſee ver. 21.

Ver. 13. Chriſt hath redeemed us from the curſe of the law, &c.] The Redeemer is Chriſt, the Son of God; who was appointed and called to this work by his Father, and which he himſelf agreed to; he was ſpoken of in prophecy under this character; he came as ſuch, and has obtained eternal redemption, for which he was abundantly qualified; as man, he was a near kinſman, to whom the right of redemption belonged; and as God, he was able to accompliſh it. The perſons redeemed are us, God's elect, both of Jews and Gentiles; a peculiar people, the people of Chriſt, whom the Father gave unto him; ſome out of every kindred, tongue, people, and nation: the bleſſing obtained for them, is redemption; a buying of them again, as the word ſignifies; they were his before by the Father's gift, and now he purchaſes them with the price of his own blood, and ſo delivers them from the curſe of the law; its ſentence of condemnation and death, and the execution of it; ſo that they ſhall never be hurt by it, he having delivered them from wrath to come, and redeemed them from the ſecond death, the lake which burns with fire and brimſtone. The manner in which this was done, was by being made a curſe for us; the ſenſe of which is, not only that he was like an accurſed perſon, and looked upon as ſuch by the men of that wicked generation, who hid and turned away their faces from him, as an abominable execrable perſon, calling him a ſinner, a Samaritan, and a devil; but was even accurſed by the law; becoming the ſurety of his people, he was made under the law, ſtood in their law-place and ſtead; and having the ſins of them all imputed to him, and he anſwerable for them, the law finding them on him, charges him with them, and curſes him for them; yea, he was treated as ſuch by the juſtice of God, even by his Father, who ſpared him not, awoke the ſword of juſtice againſt him, and gave him up into his hands; delivered him up to death, even the accurſed death of the croſs, whereby it appeared that he was made a curſe: made, by the will, counſel, and determination of God, and not without his own will and free conſent; for he freely laid down his life, and gave himſelf, and made his ſoul an offering for ſin: for it is written, Deut. xxi. 23. curſed is every one that hangeth on a tree; it is in the Hebrew text, תלוי, he that is hanged; which is the very name the Jews[y] commonly call Chriſt by way of reproach; that is, every one that hangeth, as the Apoſtle rightly renders it; which is always the ſenſe of an indefinite phraſe, unleſs a reſtriction is put: adding out of the ſame verſe, on the tree, by way of explanation; for which he cannot upon any account be found fault with, ſince it is manifeſt one hanged on a tree is meant, who is accurſed of God, or the curſe of God; the curſe of God in vindicating his righteous law, was viſibly on ſuch a perſon; as it was on Chriſt, when he hung on the croſs, in the room and ſtead of his people; for he was made a curſe, not for himſelf, or for any ſins of his own, but for us; in our room and ſtead, for our ſins, and to make atonement for them: upon the whole, the Jew[z] has no reaſon to find fault as he does, either with the Apoſtle's ſenſe, or citation of this paſſage; for whether it be rendered hangeth, or is hanged, the ſenſe is the ſame; and though the Apoſtle leaves out the word God, it is clear from what he ſays, that his meaning is, that the curſe of God lighted upon Chriſt as the ſurety of his people, ſtanding in their law-place and ſtead, in order to redeem them from the law and its curſe; ſince he ſays, he was made a curſe for them, which muſt be done by the Lord himſelf: and whereas the Jew objects, that it is impoſſible that any one, even an Iſraelite, ſhould be delivered from the curſes of the law, but by the obſervance of it, this ſhows his ignorance of the law, which in caſe of ſin, requires a penalty, and which is its curſe; and it is not future obſervance of the law will free from that: and as for the Gentiles, he ſays, to whom the law was not given, and who were never under it, they are free from the curſes of it, without a redemption; but as this is to be underſtood not of the ceremonial, but of the moral law, it is a miſtake; the Gentiles are under the moral law, and being guilty of the violation of it, are liable to its curſe; and can't be delivered from it, but through the redemption that is in Chriſt Jeſus; by vertue of which, they have a part and portion in the bleſſings promiſed as follows.

Ver. 14. That the bleſſing of Abraham, &c.] The ſame bleſſing Abraham enjoyed, even juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; and what was promiſed to Abraham, that in him, his ſeed, that is Chriſt, the Gentiles ſhould be bleſſed, or juſtified; for though this bleſſing may in general comprize every ſpiritual bleſſing, yet it chiefly regards that of juſtification, or a deliverance from the curſe of the law, and which is the end of Chriſt's being made a curſe, that this bleſſedneſs might come on the Gentiles; the uncircumciſion, as well as the circumciſion; ſee Rom. iv. 9. that is, upon as many of them as were ordained unto eternal life, and in conſequence of that believe in Chriſt; quite contrary to a Jewiſh notion, that "no bleſſing dwells "but upon an Iſraelite[a]:" now though this bleſſing, as all other ſpiritual ones, were laid up in the covenant of grace, put into the hands of Chriſt, and God's elect bleſſed therewith, as conſidered in him, yet the curſe of the law for their tranſgreſſions, ſtood in the way of their perſonal enjoyment of it, to their peace and comfort in their own ſouls; wherefore Chriſt is made a curſe for them, to make way for the bleſſing to take place upon them; which is by an act of God's grace imputed to them, and is received by faith: through Jeſus Chriſt; or in Jeſus Chriſt, as the words may be read; meaning either, that this bleſſing comes upon the Gentiles that were in Chriſt, choſen in him, in union with him, and repreſented by him, both in the covenant and on the croſs; or elſe that Chriſt is the mediator, as from whom, ſo through whom, this, as every bleſſing of grace, comes to the children of God: that we might receive the promiſe of the Spirit through faith; Beza puts the copulative and to this clauſe, reading it, and that we, &c. as does the Ethiopic verſion; thereby more clearly pointing out this to be another end, of Chriſt's being made a curſe for us: by the promiſe of the Spirit may be meant, either by an hypallage, the Spirit of promiſe, who opens and applies the promiſes; or the Spirit promiſed, not as a Spirit of regeneration, converſion, and faith; for as ſuch, he cannot be received by faith; ſince antecedent to his being ſo, there can be no faith; but rather as a Spirit of adoption, in reſpect to which he is ſaid to be received, Rom. viii. 15. and this bleſſing of adoption, as in conſequence of redemption from under the law, its curſe and condemnation, Gal. iv. 4, 5, 6. Or elſe a ſpiritual promiſe, in diſtinction from the temporal promiſe of the land of Canaan, made to Abraham and his natural ſeed, and means the promiſe of eternal life and happineſs in the world to come; which promiſe is now received by faith, and that in conſequence of the ſufferings and death of Chriſt the teſtator; ſee Heb. ix. 15.

[a] Zohar in Exod. fol. 51. 3.

Ver. 15. Brethren, &c.] Whereas in ver. 1. he calls them fooliſh Galatians, which might ſeem too harſh and ſevere, therefore to mitigate and ſoften their reſentments, he ſtiles them brethren; hoping ſtill well of them, and that they were not ſo far gone, but that they might be recovered; and imputing the blame and fault rather to their leaders and teachers, than to them: I ſpeak after the manner of men; agreeable to a Talmudic form of ſpeech in uſe among the Jews, דברה תורה כלשון בני אדם, the law ſpeaks according to the language of the children of men, or after the manner of men [b], when they argue from any ſcripture, in which a word is repeated, and the latter word ſeems to point out ſomething peculiar; but the Apoſtle's meaning is, that the thing he was about to ſpeak of, was taken from among men, in common uſe with them, and what was obvious to the common ſenſe and underſtanding of men, and might eaſily be applied and argued from, as it is by him: though it be but a man's covenant, or teſtament, yet if it be confirmed, no man diſannulleth or addeth thereto; if a covenant made between men, or a man's will and teſtament be confirmed, ſigned, ſealed, and witneſſed in a proper manner; no other man can make them void, or take any thing from them, or add any thing to them, only the parties concerned by their own will and conſent; and if this be the caſe among men, much leſs can the covenant of God, confirmed by two immutable things, his word and oath, or his will and teſtament, or any branch of it, be ever diſannulled, or be capable of receiving any addition thereunto. The Apoſtle ſeems to have a particular reſpect to that branch of the covenant and will of God, which regards the juſtification of men in his ſight by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, to which the falſe teachers were for adding the works of the law.

Ver. 16. Now to Abraham and his ſeed were the promiſes made, &c.] The promiſes deſign the promiſes of the covenant of grace mentioned in the next verſe, which are exceeding great and precious, better than thoſe of any other covenant; and which are all yea and amen in Chriſt, and are chiefly of a ſpiritual nature; though all the temporal bleſſings of God's people come to them in a covenant way, and by vertue of the promiſe; for godlineſs has the promiſe of this life, that God will verily feed them, withold no good thing from them proper for them, ſanctify all their afflictions, ſupport under them, and never leave nor forſake them: but the promiſes here intended principally, are ſuch as theſe, that God will be their God, and they ſhall be his people; the promiſe of Chriſt as a Saviour and Redeemer of them; of the Spirit ~~as~~ their ſanctifier, and the applier of all grace unto them; of juſtification by Chriſt's righteouſneſs, and pardon by his blood; of adoption through free rich grace; of perſeverance in grace, and of the eternal inheritance: now theſe promiſes were made, ερρηθησαν, were ſaid unto, or ſpoken of, to Abraham and his ſeed; that is, they were diſcovered, made manifeſt, and applied to Abraham, the father of many nations; and were declared to belong to him and his ſpiritual ſeed, even all that believe, whether Jews or Gentiles; for the Apoſtle is not ſpeaking of the original make and conſtitution of the covenant of grace and its promiſes, which were made from all eternity; the grand promiſe of life was made before the world began, and Chriſt was ſet up as Mediator from everlaſting, before ever the earth was, which ſuppoſe a covenant in which this promiſe was granted, and of which Chriſt was the Mediator as early; it was made long before Abraham, or any of his ſpiritual ſeed were in being; nor was it made with any ſingle perſon, any mere creature, Abraham, or any other, but with Chriſt, as the head and repreſentative of the whole election of grace: but what is here treated of is, the declaration and manifeſtation of the covenant, and its promiſes to Abraham; which was frequently done, as upon the call of him out of the land of Chaldea, upon his parting with Lot, when he was grown old, and when Eliezar his ſervant was like to be his heir, and juſt before the giving of him the covenant of circumciſion, and again upon the offering up of his ſon Iſaac: he ſaith not unto ſeeds, as of many; in the plural number, as if Jews and Gentiles, were in a different manner his ſpiritual ſeed: but as of one; uſing the ſingular number: and to thy ſeed, which is Chriſt; meaning not Chriſt perſonal, though he was of the ſeed of Abraham, a ſon of his, as was promiſed; but the covenant and the promiſes were not now made with, and to Chriſt, as perſonally conſidered, this was done in eternity; but Chriſt myſtical, the church which is the body of Chriſt, of which he is the head, and is called by his name, 1 Cor. xii. 12. and deſigns all Abraham's ſpiritual ſeed, both Jews and Gentiles; who are all one in Chriſt, and ſo Abraham's ſeed, and heirs according to the promiſe: hence there's no room for the objection of the Jew, to the Apoſtle's application of this paſſage to Chriſt [c], that the ſcripture ſpeaks not of any particular perſon, but of ſeed in a general and collective ſenſe, of a large and numerous offſpring; ſince the Apoſtle deſigns ſuch a ſeed by Chriſt, as numerous as the ſtars of the ſky, and the ſand on the ſea-ſhore, even all believers in all nations, Abraham is the father of; though did the Apoſtle mean Chriſt particularly, and perſonally conſidered, there are inſtances to be given, where the word ſeed is uſed, not in a collective ſenſe, but of a ſingle perſon, as in Gen. iv. 25. and xv. 3. and xxi. 13. Nor has the Jew [d] any reaſon to charge him with a miſtake, in obſerving that the word is not in the plural, but in the ſingular number, when it is the manner of the Hebrew language, to ſpeak of ſeed only in the ſingular number; but this is falſe, the word is uſed in the plural number, and ſo might have been here, had it been neceſſary, as in 1 Sam. viii. 15. concerning ſeed ſown in the earth, from whence the metaphor is here taken. The firſt tract in the Jews Miſna, or oral law, is called, זרעים, ſeeds; and the word even as ſpoken of the poſterity of men, is uſed in the plural number in their Talmud[e]; where they ſay, "pecuniary judgments are not as capital ones; in pecuniary judgments, a man gives his money, and it atones for him; in capital judgments, his blood, and the blood, זרעותיו, of his ſeeds, or poſterity, hang on him to the end of the world; for we ſo find in Cain, who ſlew his brother; as it is ſaid, the bloods of thy brother crieth; it is not ſaid, the blood of thy brother, but the bloods of thy brother, his blood, and the blood זרעותיו, of his ſeeds."

Ver. 17. And this I ſay, &c.] Aſſert and affirm as a certain truth, that is not to be gainſayed: that the covenant that was confirmed before of God in Chriſt, the law which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot diſannul; by the covenant is meant, not the covenant made with Adam, as the federal head of all his poſterity; for this was made two thouſand years before the law was given; nor that which was made with the Iſraelites at mount Sinai, for that itſelf is the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after this covenant; nor the covenant of circumciſion given to Abraham, for that was not ſo long by ſome years, before the giving of the law, as the date here fixed: but a covenant confirmed of God in Chriſt; a covenant in which Chriſt is concerned; a covenant made with him, of which he is the ſum and ſubſtance, the mediator, ſurety, and meſſenger; and ſuch is what the ſcriptures call the covenant of life and peace, and what we commonly ſtile the covenant of grace and redemption; becauſe the articles of redemption and reconciliation, of eternal life and ſalvation, by the free grace of God, are the principal things in it. This is ſaid to be in Chriſt, εις Χριστον, with reſpect to Chriſt; though the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions leave out this clauſe, nor is it in the Alexandrian copy, and ſome others; meaning either that this covenant has reſpect to Chriſt perſonal, he having that concern in it, as juſt now mentioned, and as it was made manifeſt and confirmed to Abraham, was promiſed in it to ſpring from him; or rather, that it has reſpect to Chriſt myſtical, as before, to all Abraham's ſpiritual ſeed, both Jews and Gentiles: and this is ſaid to be confirmed of God, with reſpect thereunto; which muſt be underſtood, not of the firſt eſtabliſhment of the covenant, in and with Chriſt, for that was done in eternity; nor of the confirmation of it by his blood, which was at his death; nor of the confirmation of it in common to the ſaints by the Spirit of God, who is the ſeal of the covenant, as he is the Spirit of promiſe; but of a peculiar confirmation of it to Abraham, either by a frequent repetition thereof, or by annexing an oath unto it; or rather by thoſe rites and uſages, and even wonderful appearances, recorded in Gen. xv. 9, 10, 12, 13, 17, 18. and which was four hundred and thirty years before the law was given, which are thus computed by the learned Pareus; from the confirmation of the covenant, and taking Hagar for his wife, to the birth of Iſaac, 15 years; from the birth of Iſaac, to the birth of Jacob, 60 years, Gen. xxv. 26. from the birth of Jacob, to his going down into Egypt, 130 years, Gen. xlvii. 9. from his going down to Egypt, to his death, 17 years, Gen. xlvii. 28. from the death of Jacob, to the death of Joſeph in Egypt, 53 years, Gen. l. 26. from the death of Joſeph, to the birth of Moſes, 75 years; from the birth of Moſes, to the going out of the children of Iſrael from Egypt, and the giving of the law, 80 years, in all 430 years. The Jews reckoned the four hundred years ſpoken of to Abraham, Gen. xv. 13. and mentioned by Stephen, Acts vii. 6. from the birth of Iſaac; but they reckon the four hundred and thirty years, the number given by Moſes, Exod. xii. 40. and by the Apoſtle here, to begin from the confirming the covenant between the pieces, though ſomewhat differently counted; ſays one of their chronologers[f], we reckon the 430 years, from the 70th year of Abraham, from whence to the birth of Iſaac were 30 years, and from thence to the going out of Egypt, 400 years; and another[g] of them ſays, "they are to be reckoned from the time that the bondage was decreed, in the ſtanding between the pieces; and there were 210 years of them from thence, to the going down to Egypt, and theſe are the particulars; the 105 years which remained to Abraham, and the 105 years Iſaac lived after the death of Abraham, and there were 10 years from the death of Iſaac, to the going down to Egypt, and it remains that there were 210 years they ſtaid in Egypt:" another[h] of their writers ſays, "that from the time that the decree of the captivity of Egypt was fixed between the pieces, to the birth of Iſaac, were 30 years; and from the birth of Iſaac, to the going down of the children of Iſrael into Egypt, 400 years; take out from them the 60 years of Iſaac, and the 130 years that Jacob had lived when he went into Egypt, and there remains 210." Joſephus reckons[i] theſe years from Abraham's coming into the land of Canaan, to the departure of the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, and makes them four hundred and thirty, agreeable to Exod. xii. 40. and to the Apoſtle here, and to the Talmud; ſee the note on Acts vii. 6. However, be theſe computations as they will, 'tis certain, that the law which was ſo long after the confirming of the covenant to Abraham, could not make it null and void: or that it ſhould make the promiſe of none effect; the particular promiſe of the covenant, reſpecting the juſtification of Abraham and his ſpiritual ſeed, by faith in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt.

Ver. 18. For if the inheritance be of the law, &c.] By the inheritance is meant, either the eternal inheritance, everlaſting life and happineſs in heaven, which is the gift of God through Chriſt, and not attained to and enforced by the works of the law; or particularly the bleſſing of juſtification, promiſed in the covenant to Abraham, and his ſpiritual ſeed; even to the Gentiles, and inherited by them; which is not obtained through obedience to the law of works, nor does it belong to thoſe who ſeek for it by the deeds of the law, for theſe are not heirs of it; ſee Rom. iv. 14. For was this the caſe, it is no more of promiſe; it can't be by merit and by promiſe, by works and grace too; theſe can never be reconciled, and conſiſt together; if it is by promiſe, then not of the law; and if it is of the law, it is not by promiſe: but nothing is more certain than this, that God gave it, freely, without any conſideration of the works of the law, to Abraham by promiſe; wherefore juſtification is not by works, but by the free grace of God, through faith in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; and in this way, men become heirs according to the hope of eternal life: all which is directly oppoſite to the notion of the Jews, who ſay, that, בשכר מצות ירשו גן עדן, "for the reward of the commandments, men ſhall inherit paradiſe[k]."

Ver. 19. Wherefore then ſerveth the law? &c.] If this be the caſe, might an objector ſay, why was the law given? what ends and purpoſes are to be ſerved by it? of what uſe can it be? there had as good been no law at all, if the inheritance is not of it, and there's no juſtification by it. To which it is anſwered, it was added becauſe of tranſgreſſions; four hundred and thirty years after the covenant made with Abraham; it did not ſucceed it, nor take the place of it, and ſo make it null and void; but was over and above added unto it, for the ſake of reſtraining tranſgreſſions; which had there been no law, men would not have been accountable for them; and they would have gone into them without fear, and with impunity; but the law was given, to lay a reſtraint on men, by forbidding ſuch and ſuch things, on pain of death; and alſo for the detecting, diſcovering, and making known tranſgreſſions, what they are, their nature and conſequences; theſe the law charges men with, ſets them before them, in their true light and proper colours; and convicts them of them, ſtops their mouths, and pronounces them guilty before God: moreover, this law entered in, over and above any other revelation God was pleaſed to make, that the offence might abound, Rom. v. 20. either that particular offence the ſin of Adam, the Apoſtle is there ſpeaking of; the heinous nature of which, its aggravated circumſtances, and the juſtneſs of its imputation to his poſterity, were more clearly diſcerned by this law; and ſo the Syriac verſion here renders it in the ſingular number, מטל מסטינותא, becauſe of tranſgreſſion; or all other offences and tranſgreſſions, which are increaſed through the multiplicity of precepts, and attended with more aggravating circumſtances, than if no law was given, and more eagerly purſued after, through the prohibition of them; ſuch being the corrupt nature of man, that the more any thing is forbidden, the more deſirous it is of it: add to all this, that the law was given for the puniſhing of tranſgreſſions, for which it curſes, and threatens with death, and inflicts it on Chriſtleſs ſinners: hence it is clear there can be no juſtification by it, and yet it is not uſeleſs and inſignificant: till the ſeed ſhould come, to whom the promiſe was made; either Chriſt the ſeed of the woman, and of Abraham, who was to come in the fleſh, and is come; and to whom the grand promiſe of life, and all the promiſes of the covenant were made; not for himſelf, but for thoſe he repreſented, and in whom they are all ſecure; until whoſe coming to finiſh tranſgreſſion, and bring in everlaſting righteouſneſs, the law was to continue in the form in which, and the uſe for which it was added, and then to ceaſe as the miniſtration of Moſes; for through the coming of Chriſt, it received its full accompliſhment, and came to an end; the ceremonial law was utterly aboliſhed, and the moral law ceaſed to be a covenant of works, though it continues a rule of walk and converſation; and the whole Moſaic œconomy was no more: or elſe the ſeed here, intends the ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham; particularly among the Gentiles, to whom the promiſe of bleſſedneſs, of juſtification, and eternal life was made; and the ſenſe be, that till ſuch time that a generation of faithful men, of believers in Chriſt, ſhould ariſe among the Gentiles, the law was to continue with the Jews; but when they ſhould ſpring up, the middle wall of partition ſhould be broken down, and Abraham's ſpiritual ſeed among Jews and Gentiles, make up one body, one people, and be fellow-heirs and partakers of the promiſe of God in Chriſt, through the Goſpel: and it was ordained by angels; not Moſes and Aaron, and Joſhua, as ſome ſay; for though Moſes was concerned in the giving of the law, yet not Aaron nor Joſhua, nor are any of them ever called angels; but the holy elect angels are here meant, the ten thouſands of ſaints, or holy ones, God came to mount Sinai with, and the Lord was among, in the holy place; ſee Deut. xxxiii. 2. Pſal. lxviii. 17. and ſo the Jews ſay[l], that the Lord appeared on mount Sinai glorioſly, עם כיתיה דמלאכיא, with companies, or troops of angels, to give the law to his people: and this may be ſaid to be ordained by them, inaſmuch as it might be written and ſpoken by them, as the inſtruments and miniſters God made uſe of; for though the tables are ſaid to be the work of God, and the writing the writing of God, and to be written with the finger of God, and he is ſaid to ſpeak all the words of it, yet this hinders not, but that all this might be done, by the means of angels; who might be employed in diſpoſing and fitting the ſtones in the form they were, and in writing the law upon them; hence it is ſaid to be given by the diſpoſition of angels, Acts vii. 53. and certain it is, that it was ſpoken by them, Heb. ii. 2. they forming in the air thoſe articulate and audible ſounds, when the law was delivered; who were alſo concerned in the thunderings and lightenings, and in the blowing of the trumpet, that waxed louder and louder at that time: in the hand of a mediator; not Chriſt, as many interpreters ancient and modern have thought; for though he was preſent at the giving of the law, as appears from Acts vii. 38. and Pſal. lxviii. 17, 18. and is the mediator between God and man, and had the law in his hand, out of which it went forth as the lawgiver; and as the ſurety of his people has fulfilled it, and by ſo doing put an end to it, and delivered them from the curſe and condemnation of it; yet he is the mediator of the new and better covenant, not the miniſtration of death, but of life; and ſo Moſes and Chriſt, the law and Goſpel, the old and the new covenant, are continually oppoſed to each other; beſides, the mediator here ſeems to be repreſented as inferior to the angels, and as receiving the law into his hands from them, by whom it was ordained; which to conceive of Chriſt, is very much to the demeaning and leſſening of him. Moſes is the mediator here meant, who ſtood between God and the people of Iſrael; not to make peace between them, but to ſhew the word of God from him to them, and this at their own requeſt; ſee Deut. v. 5, 23—27. and in his hand the tables of the law were, when he came down from the mount, and was a typical mediator of Chriſt. So the Jews ſay of him, that "he was, אמצעי, a mediator between them and God[m]."

Ver. 20. Now a mediator is not a mediator of one, &c.] A mediator ſuppoſes two parties he ſtands between, and theſe at a diſtance from, or diſagreeing with each other; where there is but one party, there can be no need of, nor any reaſon for a mediator; ſo Chriſt is the mediator between God and men, the day's man, that lays his hands upon them both; and Moſes, he was the mediator between God and the Iſraelites: but God is one; not in perſon, for there are three perſons in the Godhead, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghoſt, and theſe three are one, in nature and eſſence; ſo that though there are three perſons, there is but one God, and who is the God both of Jews and Gentiles; who is of one mind concerning them, and has taken them into one and the ſame covenant, and makes uſe of one and the ſame method in the juſtification of them: but the true ſenſe of the phraſe here is, that whereas a mediator ſuppoſes two parties at variance, God is one of the two, as the Ethiopic verſion reads the words; he is a party offended, that ſtands off, and at a diſtance, which the law given by angels in the hand of a mediator ſhews; ſo that that is rather a ſign of diſagreement and alienation, and conſequently that juſtification is not to be expected by it.

[l] Targum in 1 Chron. xxix. 11.

[m] Tzeror Hammor, fol. 136. 1, 2.

Ver. 21. Is the law then againſt the promiſes of God? &c.] If the law was added becauſe of tranſgreſſions, and curſes for them, and if the inheritance is not of it, but by promiſe, were it, it would not be by promiſe, then ſays an objector, it is againſt the promiſes: theſe are contrary to one another, and God in giving the one and the other, muſt contradict himſelf: to which it is replied, God forbid; a way of ſpeaking the Apoſtle uſes, when he would expreſs his abhorrence and deteſtation of any thing, as here; for though the law and promiſes are diſtinct things, and have their ſeparate uſes, yet they are not contradictory to each other; the law has its uſe, and ſo have the promiſes; the promiſes do not ſet aſide the law as uſeleſs on all accounts, nor does the law diſannul the promiſes, but is ſubſervient to them: for if there had been a law which could have given life, verily righteouſneſs ſhould have been by the law; but the law cannot give life, ſpiritual life to a dead ſinner; God only can do this, Father, Son, and Spirit; ſo far is the law from giving it efficiently, that it is not ſo much as the means of it; it is not made uſe of this way; God makes uſe of the law to kill, but not to make alive; he makes uſe of the law to ſtrike dead all a man's hopes of happineſs, by the deeds of it; but 'tis the Goſpel he uſes to quicken and comfort; that is the Spirit that giveth life. The law requires as much of a dead ſinner, as it did of Adam in innocence, but gives him no life, activity, and ſtrength to perform; could it quicken him, and enable him to do all its demands perfectly, then there would be righteouſneſs, and ſo juſtification by it, as by the promiſe; whence it appears, that there is no contrariety in the law to the promiſes: the reaſon why there is no righteouſneſs, is, becauſe it can't give life, ſpiritual life and ſtrength; and if ſo, then not eternal life; which is the free gift of God, and not the merit of mens works: this is directly contrary to a notion of the Jews, who cry up the law as a life-giving law; ſay they [n], "great is the law, "שהיא נותנת חיים לעושיה, for it giveth life to "them that do it, in this world, and in the world "to come:" and elſewhere [o], "the law is a tree "of life to all that ſtudy in it, למיהב לון חיי, to "give unto them life in this world, and to give unto "them life in the world to come."

Ver. 22. But the ſcripture hath concluded all under ſin, &c.] By the ſcripture is meant, either the writing of the law in particular, the killing letter, or the whole ſcripture, or God in it; and who by and in it, has ſhewn, declared, and proved, that all the individuals of human nature, Jews and Gentiles, and all that is in them, and done by them, are under the power and dominion of ſin, defiled by it, and involved in the guilt of it; for it is not παντας all perſons, but παντα all things, belonging to all perſons; all the members of their bodies, and faculties of their ſouls; all their thoughts, inclinations, and intentions; all their works and ſervices, even their beſt righteouſneſs, which is as filthy rags; all are declared to be ſinful and polluted, and men on account of them to be guilty before God, and liable to puniſhment; from whence there can be no eſcape, by the law of works; for they are like men concluded, or ſhut up in a priſon, from which there is no apparent likelihood of deliverance: now the Spirit of God, diſcovering to men this their wretched and deſperate condition, under the law and ſin, reveals Chriſt and his righteouſneſs to them, and enables and encourages them to believe in him, by whom only they can be juſtified from all things, they cannot by the law of Moſes, in which they ſee themſelves ſhut up, as in a priſon: that the promiſe by faith of Jeſus Chriſt might be given, to them that believe; by the promiſe is intended, the promiſe of life and ſalvation, and particularly of a juſtifying righteouſneſs; which is given, not merited; righteouſneſs is a gift, a gift of grace, a free gift, and ſo is eternal life; ſalvation in all its parts, is of free grace; Chriſt is a free gift, and ſo are all things along with him; yea, faith itſelf, by whom they are received, it is not of ourſelves, 'tis the gift of God; Chriſt is the author and finiſher, as well as the object of it; and therefore here called, the faith of Jeſus Chriſt; and ſuch that have it, to them the promiſe, or the things promiſed, righteouſneſs and life are given, which the law could not give; not to them that work, but to them that believe: thus the law is ſo far from being againſt the promiſes of God, that it is ſubſervient to them; for though the law has no tendency in itſelf to bring perſons to Chriſt, and to believe in him for righteouſneſs, yet this concluding men under ſin, ſhewing them their deſperate and hopeleſs and helpleſs condition, the Spirit of God takes occaſion from hence to reveal Chriſt unto them, and to enable them as periſhing creatures to venture on him, and lay hold on the hope ſet before them in the Goſpel; and ſo they come to enjoy the grand promiſe of it, even life and ſalvation by Chriſt.

Ver. 23. But before faith came, &c.] This is to be underſtood, not of the grace of faith, which was under the former diſpenſation, as now; the Old Teſtament ſaints had the ſame ſpirit of faith, and the ſame grace of faith, as for its nature, object, and uſe, as New Teſtament ſaints have; Adam, Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, &c. believed in Chriſt, and were juſtified by faith in his righteouſneſs, as we are. It is much better to underſtand it of the doctrine of faith, which though preached to Adam, and by Noah, and to Abraham, and by Iſaiah, and others, yet not ſo clearly, largely, and fully, as by Jeſus Chriſt and his Apoſtles; ſo that the times of the Goſpel may be called the times of faith, in compariſon of the times of the law, and which ſome think is here meant; but it is beſt to interpret it of Chriſt, the object of faith, who was to come, and is come in the fleſh, to fulfil the law; and by ſo doing, has put an end to it; and to redeem his people from under it, and to ſave them with an everlaſting ing ſalvation; for before this his coming in the fleſh, the people of the Jews, of whom the Apoſtle was one, were under the law: we were kept under the law; as perſons in a garriſon, as the word ſignifies; they were kept diſtinct and ſeparate from the reſt of the nations of the world, and had neither civil nor religious converſation with them; and ſo were preſerved in ſome meaſure both from their impieties and idolatries, which otherwiſe they were naturally prone to; and as a diſtinct people, unto the coming of the Meſſiah, who was to ariſe from among them; ſo that their being kept under the law in this ſenſe, was both for their honour and their ſafety: though the meaning may alſo be, that they were kept under it as perſons under a military guard, as the word likewiſe imports; and ſignifies, that the law kept a ſtrict guard and a watchful eye over them, as the Roman ſoldier had over Paul, that kept him, and held faſt the chain in his hand, with which he was bound, that he might not get looſe and eſcape from him; ſee Acts xxviii. 16, 20. to which the Apoſtle ſeems here to allude; the law kept them cloſe to the diſcharge of their duty, and held them faſt as priſoners; and which is more fully expreſſed in the next clauſe, ſhut up. The Syriac verſion reads this in connection with the former, thus, נמוסא נטר הוא לן כד חבישינן, the law kept us ſhut up, as in a priſon; and the ſame way reads the Arabic verſion; which ſhews the ſtate and condition the Jews were in under the law, and how they were treated by it; not as good and righteous perſons, but as perſons in debt, as criminals and malefactors; a priſon is made, and ſo the law for ſuch ſort of perſons; the law conſidered and uſed them as ſinners, as criminals convict and condemned; it did itſelf accuſe, convict, and pronounce them guilty, and adjudged them to puniſhment; and detained them as priſoners in its dark dungeon, where they had little light and comfort; and were as in a pit, wherein is no water; though they lay here as priſoners of hope, in expectation of the Meſſiah's coming; who was to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the priſon to them that are bound, and to ſay to the priſoners come forth, and to them that ſit in darkneſs ſhew yourſelves. Alſo the alluſion may be to the cuſtom of the Eaſtern nations, in the uſage of their ſlaves and captives; who in the day-time uſed to grind at a mill in a priſon-houſe, and in the night-time were put down into a pit and ſhut up, and a mill-ſtone put to the mouth of the pit [p]; and ſo deſcribes the ſtate of bondage and ſlavery the Jews were in under the law, who differed nothing from ſervants, to whom the ſaints under the Goſpel diſpenſation are oppoſed, ver. 26. as being the children of God by faith in Chriſt. And in this uncomfortable condition they continued, unto the faith which ſhould afterwards be revealed; that is, until Chriſt the object of faith came, who was to be revealed, or made manifeſt in the fleſh; who before his incarnation, not only lay in the boſom of the Father, but was in a great meaſure hid under the types and prophecies of the Old Teſtament; which though they gave ſome hints of him, yet but obſcure ones, in compariſon of the revelation made of him by his appearance in human nature; by the teſtimonies of his Father by a voice from heaven of angels, of John the Baptiſt, and others; and by his own doctrines and miracles, and by the Spirit of wiſdom and revelation in the knowledge of him.

Ver. 24. Wherefore the law was our ſchool-maſter unto Chriſt, &c.] So the words ſhould be read, as they are by the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions; for the words to bring us are a ſupplement of our tranſlators, and have nothing to anſwer to them in the original; and the ſenſe of the paſſage is, that the law performed this office of a ſchool-maſter until the coming of Chriſt; which ſhews that till that time the church was in its minority, that the Jews were but children in knowledge and underſtanding, and therefore ſtood in need, and were under the care of a ſchool-maſter, the law, by which the whole Moſaic adminiſtration is deſigned. They were taught by the moral law, the letter, the writing on the two tables, with other ſtatutes and judgments; their duty to God and men, what is to be done and to be avoided, what is righteouſneſs and what is not, the nature of ſin, its demerit and conſequences; but theſe gave them no inſtructions about a ſaviour, and life, and righteouſneſs by him. The ceremonial law gave them ſome hints of the Goſpel-ſcheme, and the way of ſalvation by Chriſt, but in a manner ſuited to their eſtate of childhood; by ſights and ſhows, by types and figures, by rites and ceremonies, by ſhadows and ſacrifices; it taught them by divers waſhings the pollution of their nature, their need of the blood of Chriſt to cleanſe from all ſin; by circumciſion, the neceſſity of regeneration, and the internal circumciſion of the heart; by the paſſover, the daily ſacrifice and other offerings, the doctrines of redemption, ſatisfaction and atonement; and by the brazen ſerpent, the neceſſity of looking to Chriſt for life and ſalvation, and by various other things in that branch of the legal œconomy: but beſides inſtruction the law gave, it made uſe of diſcipline as a ſchool-maſter does; it kept a ſtrict eye and hand over them, and them cloſe to the performance of their duty; and reſtrained them from many things their inclinations led them to, threatning them with death in caſe of diſobedience, and inflicting its penalties on delinquents; hence they that were under its diſcipline, were thro' fear of death it threatned them with, all their life-time ſubject to bondage: even the ceremonial law had ſomething awful and tremendous in it; every beaſt that was ſlain in ſacrifice, was not only an inſtruction to them that they deſerved to die as that creature did; but carried in it a tacit acknowledgment and confeſſion of their own guilt; and the whole was an hand-writing of ordinances againſt them. Moreover, the law being called a ſchool-maſter, ſhews that the uſe of it was but temporary, and its duration but for a time; children are not always to be under, nor deſigned to be always under a ſchool-maſter, no longer than till they are come to a proper age for greater buſineſs and higher exerciſes of life; ſo the law was to continue, and did continue, to be of this uſe and ſervice to the Jewiſh church during its minority, until Chriſt came, the ſubſtance of all it taught and directed to: both the Jeruſalem Targum and that of Jonathan ben Uzziel, on Numb. xi. 12. uſe the very Greek word the Apoſtle does here, concerning Moſes, rendering the words, as a pedagogue or ſchool-maſter bears a ſucking child into the land, &c. That we might be juſtified by faith; by Chriſt the object of faith, by his righteouſneſs, which faith looks unto and receives, and not by the law and the works of it; the people of the Jews were in ſuch a ſtate under the law, and the law of that uſe unto them before the coming of Chriſt, as above repreſented, that it might be made manifeſt, be a clear point, and out of all diſpute, that there is no ſuch thing as juſtification by the law; for how could ever ſuch a bleſſing be expected from it, when men were kept under it as under a military guard; when they were ſhut up in it as in a priſon, and were treated by it as malefactors, convicted and condemned; and when they were under the diſcipline of it, as a rigid and ſevere ſchool-maſter; this being their caſe till Chriſt came, when it ceaſed to be all this to them, he being the end of it for righteouſneſs, it became a thing ſelf-evident, that juſtification is only by him and his righteouſneſs, and ſo the end here mentioned was anſwered.

[p] Schindler. Lex. Pentaglott. in voce רוח, col. 1712.

Ver. 25. But after that faith is come, &c.] That is, ſince Chriſt the object of faith is come in the fleſh, and has fulfilled the law, and redeemed them that were under it from its bondage, curſe, and condemnation: we are no longer under a ſchool-maſter; under the law as ſuch; as no longer under it as a military guard, nor in it as a priſon, ſo neither under it as a ſchool-maſter; not needing its inſtructions, or its diſcipline; ſince Chriſt is come as a prophet to teach and inſtruct, as a prieſt to atone for ſin, and make interceſſion for tranſgreſſors, and as a king to rule and govern; in whoſe hands, and not in the hands of Moſes, the law now is, as a rule of walk and converſation.

Ver. 26. For ye are all the children of God, &c.] Not by nature, as Chriſt is the Son of God, for he is the only-begotten of the Father, and in ſuch ſenſe as neither angels nor men are the ſons of God; nor by creation, as Adam and all mankind, and the angels are; but by divine adoption, by an act of God's rich and ſovereign grace, putting them among the children; in ſaying this the Apoſtle directs himſelf to the Gentiles for their comfort, and ſays this of them all in a judgment of charity, they being under a profeſſion of faith; leſt they ſhould think becauſe they were not Abraham's ſeed according to the fleſh, nor were ever trained up under the law as a ſchool-maſter, that they were not the children of God: whereas they were ſuch not by the law, as none indeed are, but by faith in Chriſt Jeſus; not that faith makes any the children of God, or puts them into ſuch a relation; no, that is God's own act and deed; of his free rich grace and goodneſs, God the Father has predeſtinated his choſen ones to the adoption of children, and has ſecured and laid up this bleſſing for them in the covenant of grace; Chriſt by redemption has made way for their reception and enjoyment of it; the Spirit of God in conſequence of their ſonſhip, as a Spirit of adoption bears witneſs to it; and faith receives it, as it does all other bleſſings of grace made ready to its hand; and ſo ſuch perſons become evidently and manifeſtatively the children of God by faith in Chriſt; and which carries in it a ſtrong reaſon and argument, proving that they are not under the law as a ſchool-maſter, in which light it is here ſet by the Apoſtle; ſince they are ſons and not ſervants, and ſo free from the bondage of the law; they are ſons grown up into the faith of Chriſt, and are led and taught by the Spirit of God, as they are that are the children of God by faith; and as is promiſed to the ſaints under the Goſpel, that they ſhall be all taught of God; and therefore ſtood in no need of the law as a ſchool-maſter, which only was concerned with the Jews, whilſt they were children under age; and h[illegible] nothing to do with ſuch, whether Jews or Gentiles who believe in Chriſt, and are growing up into him their head, till they come to the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of him.

Ver. 27. For as many of you as have been baptized into Chriſt, &c.] Not that it is to be imagined that theſe churches of Galatia, or any of the primitive churches conſiſted of baptized and unbaptized perſons; for this would be acting contrary to the commiſſion of Chriſt and the order of the Goſpel: but this way of ſpeaking ſuppoſes that there might be ſome of them, who tho' baptized in water, yet not into Chriſt; and that thoſe who are truly and rightly baptized, who are proper ſubjects of it, and to whom it is adminiſtred in a proper manner, are baptized into Chriſt: not that by baptiſm they are brought into union with Chriſt, but into communion with him; for they are not merely baptized in his name, and by his authority, and according to his command, and into his doctrine, and a profeſſion of him; but into a participation of the bleſſings of grace which are in him, and come thro' his ſufferings and death; for they that are baptized into Chriſt are baptized into his death and reſurrection from the dead; they are led by faith to behold the cleanſing of their ſouls, and the remiſſion of their ſins by his blood, and their juſtification by his righteouſneſs; how he was delivered for their offences, died for their ſins, was buried in the grave, and their iniquities with him, and roſe again for their juſtification; of all which baptiſm, performed by immerſion, is a lively emblem; and this is to be baptized into Chriſt, namely being baptized believing in him, and calling on his name: and ſuch have put on Chriſt; both before and at baptiſm: before it they put him on as the Lord their righteouſneſs; his righteouſneſs is compared to a garment, is called the beſt robe, the wedding garment, fine linnen clean and white, the robe of righteouſneſs, a garment down to the feet; this is imputed to the elect of God by the Father, thro' a gracious act of his, and what they are cloathed and covered with by the Son, and is put upon them and applied unto them by the Spirit; and which faith receiving puts off its own rags of righteouſneſs, and makes uſe of this as its proper dreſs to appear in before the moſt high; and ſuch thro' divine grace are enabled to put off the old man and put on the new; that is, walk in their outward lives and converſation, not according to the dictates of corrupt nature, but according to the principles of grace, of the new man formed in the ſoul, for righteouſneſs and holineſs, and in imitation of Chriſt; having him for an example, and deſiring to walk as he walked; which is another ſenſe of putting on Chriſt, namely a following of him in the exerciſe of grace and diſcharge of duty; ſee Rom. xiii. 14. and ſuch perſons, as they are the proper ſubjects of baptiſm, who have believed in Chriſt for righteouſneſs, and walk worthy of him; ſo in baptiſm they may alſo be ſaid to put him on, as they thereby and therein make a publick profeſſion of him, by deeds as well as words, declaring him to be their Lord and king; and afreſh exerciſe faith upon him, as their ſaviour and redeemer, and imitate and follow him in it, as their pattern; who himſelf ſubmitted to it, leaving them an example that they ſhould tread in his ſteps; which when they do, they may be ſaid to put him on. The alluſion is either to the putting off and putting on of cloaths at baptiſm, which being performed by immerſion, required ſuch actions, which no other mode does; or to the prieſts putting off their common cloaths, and then bathing or dipping themſelves in water, and putting on the garments of the prieſthood before they entered on their ſervice; concerning which take the following rules preſcribed by the Miſnic doctors[q]; “ no man may enter the court for ſervice, “ tho' clean, עד שיטבול, until he dips himſelf “ five times, and waſhes his hands and feet ten “ times;” for every time he immerſed himſelf, he waſhed his hands and feet before and after: again, “ there is a vail of fine linen between him “ (the high-prieſt) and the people; he puts off his “ cloaths, ירד וטבל עלה, he goes down and dips “ himſelf, he comes up, and wipes himſelf; then “ they bring him the golden garments, and he “ puts them on, and waſhes his hands and his feet; “ then they bring him the daily ſacrifice, &c.” and a little after, “ they bring him (the high-prieſt “ on the day of atonement) to the houſe of Parvah, “ and in the holy place there was a vail of fine “ linen between him and the people; he waſhes “ his hands and his feet, and puts off his garments: “ R. Meir ſays, he puts off his garments, and “ then waſhes his hands and his feet; he goes down “ and dips himſelf, he comes up again, and wipes “ himſelf; then they bring him the white garments, “ and he puts them on, and waſhes his hands and “ his feet:” all which may ſerve to illuſtrate this paſſage, and point out to us what the Apoſtle alludes unto, as well as to obſerve to us the diſtinction the Jews made between the immerſion of the whole body, and a waſhing of a part of it.

Ver. 28. There is neither Jew nor Greek, &c.] Not but that there were ſuch in being, and in the churches of Chriſt, for the primitive churches conſiſted of both; but the meaning is, that there is no difference between them, the middle wall of partition being broken down, and that in the buſineſs of juſtification and ſalvation, it ſignified nothing whether a man was a Jew or a Greek; he was never the better for being a circumciſed Jew, nor never the worſe for being an uncircumciſed Gentile; both by nature are equally ſinners, and ſtand in need of the juſtifying righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and the regenerating grace of the Spirit. The Goſpel was equally preached to both, and was made uſeful to ſome of the one and of the other; and who believing in Chriſt, had a right to the ſame ordinances and priviledges of the Goſpel, and ſhared in the ſame bleſſings of grace. There is neither bond nor free. There were ſuch perſons in the world then, and in the churches too; nor does the Goſpel diſſolve the civil and natural relations and obligations men are in and under to one another, it confirms and ſecures them; but the ſenſe is, that God in calling, juſtifying and ſaving men, is no reſpecter of perſons, as being high and low, rich and poor, bond or free, ſervants or maſters: he calls, juſtifies, and ſaves men of every ſtation and condition of life; and bond-ſlaves and ſervants called by grace are Chriſt's free men, and have an equal right as thoſe that are free to all the immunities of the Goſpel: in ſome heathen nations bond-ſlaves and ſervants were not admitted, only freemen to be preſent at the ſacred ſervice, and worſhip of their deities[r]; but the Goſpel makes no ſuch diſtinction of men in its doctrine, worſhip and ordinances, which lie open to all ranks and orders of men: there is neither male nor female; among the heathens[s] alſo females were not admitted to ſome of their ſacred rites and ceremonies; and among the Jews the males only were concerned in many things both of a civil and religious nature; no female might be heir to an inheritance with a male[t]; females had no ſhare in the civil government, nor in the prieſthood; males were to appear three times a year before the Lord, and according to their oral law, women and ſervants were exempted[u]; the mark of circumciſion, the ſign of the covenant made with Abraham and his natural ſeed, was only upon the males; but now under the Goſpel-diſpenſation there is no diſtinction made between male and female as to divine things; as they are alike called by the grace of God, they have the ſame right to Goſpel-ordinances, baptiſm and the Lord's ſupper, and to every ſpiritual priviledge. The Apoſtle's deſign is to ſhew the common right of believers, of every nation, condition, and ſex, and to encourage the Gentiles, and demoliſh the pride, vanity, and boaſting of the Jews, their men eſpecially, who valued themſelves upon theſe three very things which the Apoſtle here makes no account of; as that they were Iſraelites and not Gentiles, freemen and not ſervants, men and not women; and in their public prayers they give thanks to God in this form, “ bleſſed be the Lord our “ God, the King of the world, that he hath made “ me an Iſraelite; bleſſed be the Lord, &c. who “ hath not made me a Gentile; bleſſed be the “ Lord, &c. who hath not made me a ſervant; “ bleſſed be the Lord, &c. who hath not made “ me a woman;” inſtead of which laſt the women ſay, “ bleſſed be the Lord, &c. who hath made “ me as he pleaſed:”[w] for ye are all one in Chriſt Jeſus; being alike choſen in him, united to him, redeemed by his blood, juſtified by his righteouſneſs, regenerated by his Spirit, the children of God by faith in him, and heirs of the ſame grace and glory, they make, both Jews and Gentiles, bond and free, male and female, as it were but one new man in him; one body of which he is the head, one ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham and of Chriſt.

Ver. 29. For if ye be Chriſt's, &c.] Or ſeeing ye are his, not by creation only, but by the Father's gift to him, by the purchaſe of his own blood, by the power of his grace, making them willing to give up themſelves to him; not only his by profeſſion, ſaying they are the Lord's, calling themſelves by his name; but by poſſeſſion, Chriſt dwelling in their hearts by faith, and they having his Spirit as a Spirit of regeneration and adoption: then are ye Abraham's ſeed; not his natural but his ſpiritual ſeed, the ſeed that ſhould come, and to whom the promiſes were made, ver. 16, 19. and ſo were upon an equal foot even with the Jews that believed: and heirs according to the promiſe; being the children of God, they are heirs of God; and being the ſpiritual children of Abraham, the children of the promiſe, which are counted for the ſeed, they are according to the promiſe made to Abraham and his ſpiritual ſeed, heirs of the bleſſings of the grace of life, and of the eternal inheritance; of the bleſſing of juſtification of life, and of everlaſting ſalvation; of this world and of the world to come; of all the ſpiritual bleſſings of the covenant of grace, and of the incorruptible and undefiled inheritance of the ſaints in light; to which they are begotten thro' the abundant mercy of God, for which they are made meet by the grace of Chriſt; and to which they have a right by his juſtifying righteouſneſs.

CHAP. IV.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle diſcourſes concerning the abrogation of the ceremonial law, under which the Old Teſtament ſaints were, being as children under tutors; blames the Galatians for returning to it when they were freed from it; puts them in mind of their former affection to him and to his miniſtry; deſcribes the falſe Apoſtles, who had been the occaſion of their departure from the truth, and by a beautiful allegory ſets forth the difference between the legal and Goſpel-diſpenſations. And whereas in the latter part of the preceding chapter he had compared the law to a ſchoolmaſter, under which the Jews were till Chriſt came; he here makes uſe of another ſimile to expreſs the ſame thing by, which is that of an heir whilſt under age being under tutors and governors, until the time fixed by the parents will, ver. 1, 2. an accommodation of which ſimile is in ver. 3. by which the Jews under the former diſpenſation are repreſented as children, and as in a ſtate of bondage to the ceremonial law, from which there is a deliverance by Chriſt at the appointed time of the Father, by whom he was ſent for that purpoſe; the act of ſending is aſcribed to God the Father; the perſon ſent is deſcribed as the Son of God; the time when is called the fulneſs of time; and the circumſtances under which he was ſent, were, that he was made of a woman, and made under the law, ver. 4. the ends of his being ſent were to redeem his people from it, who were under it; and that they might receive the adoption of children, the priviledge and ſpirit of it, ver. 5. Hence becauſe they were the ſons of God, and as a fruit and effect of the redemption of them by Chriſt, the Spirit of God is ſent down into their hearts, to make known and witneſs their adoption, ver. 6. and the benefits ariſing from hence are, that ſuch are or ſhould be no longer the ſervants of the law, but are children and free from it, and are heirs of God, ver. 7. and that the grace of God might appear the more illuſtrious in this privilege of ſonſhip, and the folly of the Galatians be more manifeſt in returning to the ceremonial law, notice is taken of what they were and did before converſion, and what they were inclined to now; that whereas whilſt they were ignorant of God, they ſerved nominal fictitious deities, ſuch as were not by nature Gods; and yet now tho' they knew God, and were known of him, ſeemed deſirous of being in a ſtate of ſervitude and bondage to the weak and beggarly elements of the ceremonial law, ver. 8, 9. of which inſtances are given in their obſerving days, months, times and years, ver. 10. which gave the Apoſtle a great deal of concern, fearing his labour among them was in vain, and to no purpoſe, ver. 11. wherefore he intreats them as his brethren to imitate him, who being a Jew, yet had relinquiſhed the obſervation of the ceremonial law, ver. 12. and then he reminds them of their former regard unto him; how that tho' he preached the Goſpel to them thro' much weakneſs, yet they did not deſpiſe him and reject him on account of his infirmities, but received him with all the tokens of reſpect imaginable, as if he had been an angel; yea, as if he had been Chriſt himſelf, ver. 13, 14. who then reckoned themſelves happy perſons on account of the Goſpel he preached to them, and then had ſuch an affection for him, that if it had been needful they would have given their eyes unto him; and yet now he was become their enemy for preaching the ſame truths he did then, juſtification by faith in Chriſt's righteouſneſs and the abrogation of the law, ver. 15, 16. next he gives an account of the falſe Apoſtles, who pretended a zealous affection for the Galatians; which was not a good one, nor with right views, ver. 17. tho' zeal in a good cauſe, and which continues, is very commendable, ver. 18. and ſuch a conſtant and hearty attachment had the Apoſtle to them; wherefore he calls them his little children, ſays he travailed in birth on their account, it being his earneſt deſire that Chriſt might appear to be formed in them, ver. 19. wherefore ſince he was in doubt and diſtreſs about them, he was very deſirous of being with them, and alter his way of arguing with them; and from the law, and not the Goſpel, ſhew them their miſtake and folly, ver. 20, 21. which he does in the following allegorical way, by obſerving that Abraham had two ſons, the one by a ſervant maid, the other by his lawful wife; the one was after the fleſh, the other by promiſe; which allegorically ſignified the two covenants of Sinai and of Sion, ver. 22, 23, 24. Agar the bond-maid repreſented the covenant made at mount Sinai in Arabia, under which the carnal Jews and their poſterity were in a ſtate of bondage; and Sarah the free woman, the covenant of grace under the Goſpel-diſpenſation and the Goſpel-church-ſtate, which is from above, free, fertile, and numerous, ver. 25, 26. which is confirmed, ver. 27. by a paſſage out of Iſ. liv. 1. and as theſe two women were typical of the two covenants, ſo their reſpective offſpring repreſented the two ſorts of profeſſors, legaliſts and evangelical chriſtians. True believers in Chriſt are like Iſaac the children of the promiſe; legaliſts are like Iſhmael, men after the fleſh, and of the ſame perſecuting ſpirit with him: wherefore as it was then, that carnal Iſhmael perſecuted ſpiritual Iſaac, ſo at this time the carnal Jews perſecuted the real chriſtians, ver. 28, 29. nevertheleſs for the comfort of the latter, 'tis obſerved out of the ſcripture that the former ſhall be caſt out, and not be heir with them, ver. 30. and the concluſion of the whole is, that the ſaints under the Goſpel-diſpenſation are not in bondage to the law, but are made free by Chriſt; to which freedom they are called, and in which they ſhould ſtand, ver. 31.

Ver. 1. Now I ſay, &c.] To illuſtrate what he had ſaid of the law's being a ſchool-maſter to the Jews until the coming of Chriſt, and then ceaſing as ſuch, he propoſes the caſe of an heir during his minority, till he come to the proper time of enjoying his eſtate: that the heir as long as he is a child; any one that is an heir to his father's eſtate, or another's, whilſt under age, being reckoned as a child, as he is from his infancy to his manhood, differeth nothing from a ſervant; he is not his own man, nor at his own diſpoſe; he can't do as he pleaſes; he is under reſtraint; he is kept to ſchool or to buſineſs, and is liable to correction and chaſtiſement according as he behaves; nor can he have the free uſe of his father's eſtate, tho' he be Lord of all; of all the ſervants, according to the Arabic verſion; or of the whole eſtate his father left him, of which he is Lord in right, but not in poſſeſſion; he is right heir to it, tho' as yet it is not in his hands, nor can he do with it as he will.

Ver. 2. But is under tutors and governors, &c.] The word rendered tutors, is adopted by the Jewiſh Targumiſts and Rabbins, into their language; and by the former is uſed [x] for any ruler and governour, civil or domeſtic; and by the latter, for ſuch as are guardians of infants, fatherleſs children, and ſuch as are under age, as it is here uſed; and who were either appointed by the will of the deceaſed, or by the Sanhedrim, of whom they ſay [y], אפוטרופא לדיקנני לא מוקמינן, we don't appoint a tutor or guardian, for a bearded perſon; that is, an adult perſon, one that is grown up to man's eſtate; but מוקמינן ליה אפוטרופא לינוקא, we appoint a guardian for an infant; and they had not uſed to appoint women or ſervants, or ſuch as were minors themſelves, or any of the common people; but men of ſubſtance, integrity and wiſdom [z]; a fatherleſs child had two tutors [a]; the power that guardians ſo appointed had, is at large deſcribed by Maimonides [b]. Governors were ſuch as acted under the tutors or guardians, and were employed by them for the improvement of their eſtates and minds, as ſtewards, ſchool-maſters, &c. until the time appointed of the father; by his laſt will and teſtament, which might be ſooner or later, as he pleaſed; but if he died inteſtate, the time of minority, and ſo the duration of tutors and guardians, were according to the laws of the nation; which with the Romans was until a man was twenty-five years of age; and with the Jews for a male, was until he was thirteen years of age and one day; and for a female, until ſhe was twelve years of age and one day, if the ſigns of ripeneſs of age appeared; but if they did not, the time was protracted until they were twenty, and even ſometimes till they were thirty-five years of age before the matter was determined [c].

Ver. 3. Even ſo we, &c.] Jews, for of ſuch the Apoſtle is only ſpeaking, and to whom he applies the above caſe of heirs in minority; it was to the Jews he had ſpoken of the law, as being a military guard, a priſon, and a ſchool-maſter to them; and then having addreſſed the Gentiles, as being the children of God, baptized into Chriſt, one in him, intereſted in him, the ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham, and heirs of all the bleſſings of grace and glory; he returns to the Jews, and repreſents their eſtate and condition under the law by the above ſimile, which he here makes an application of: when we were children; not in age, but in knowledge of divine, ſpiritual, and evangelical things; which muſt be underſtood not of every individual perſon among them, for there were ſome grown men, men of great faith, light, knowledge, and experience; but of the bulk and generality of the people of the Jews, and that alſo in compariſon of the clear underſtanding of the ſaints under the Goſpel-diſpenſation. The Jews were like children, peeviſh, froward and perverſe, and often ſtood in need of correction and chaſtiſement; and as children are pleaſed with pictures, ſhows, ſights, and gaudy amuſements, ſo they were taken with an external, pompous form of worſhip, and which they had, and was ſuited to their infant ſtate; and which infant ſtate of the Jewiſh church commenced from the time of their coming up out of Egypt, and laſted until the times of the Meſſiah; ſee Hoſea xi. 1, 3. Were in bondage under the elements of the world; by which are meant, not the four elements of fire, water, earth, and air; nor the angels, who by ſome are thought to preſide over them; nor the ſun and moon, according to whoſe revolutions the feſtivals of the Jews were regulated; but the ſeveral inſtitutions of the Moſaic œconomy, which were to the Jews, what an A B C, or an alphabet of letters, is to one that is beginning to learn; or what an accidence and grammar be to ſuch, who are learning any language, and which contain the rudiments of it; as the phyſical elements are the firſt principles of nature, and the general rules of ſpeech and language are the rudiments thereof, ſo the Moſaic inſtitutions, were the elements, rudiments, or firſt principles of the Jewiſh religion, taught them by the law, as their ſchool-maſter, and by which they were uſed as children: theſe are called elements, in alluſion to the firſt principles of nature and learning; and the elements of the world, becauſe they lay in outward worldly and earthly things, as meats, drinks, divers waſhings, &c. and becauſe that hereby God inſtructed the world, at leaſt a part of it, the world of the Jews: or as the word κοσμος may be rendered beauty, or elegancy, theſe were elegant elements, which in a moſt beautiful manner taught the people of the Jews, the firſt principles of the doctrine of Chriſt: but nevertheleſs, whilſt they were under the inſtructions and diſcipline of the law as a ſchool-maſter, they were in bondage; referring not to their bondage in Egypt, nor in the ſeveral captivities into which they were carried by their neighbours; nor to the bondage of ſin and ſatan, common to all men in a ſtate of nature; but to the bondage which the law naturally gendered, led them to, induced upon them, and kept them in, through its ſanctions and penalties; for through fear of death, they were under a ſervile diſpoſition, and were all their life-time ſubject to bondage; they carried a yoke of bondage upon their necks, and were under a ſpirit of bondage unto fear; they were like children cloſely kept to ſchool to learn their letters, ſay their leſſons, and perform their taſks; and if not, receive due correction, which kept them in continual fear and bondage.

Ver. 4. But when the fulneſs of time was come, &c.] The time agreed and fixed upon between God and his Son from all eternity, in the council and covenant of peace, when the Son of God ſhould aſſume human nature; which time was diligently ſearched into by the Prophets, was revealed unto them, and predicted by them; as more generally that it ſhould be before the civil government ceaſed from Judah, and before the deſtruction of the ſecond temple; and more particularly by Daniel in his prophecy of the ſeventy weeks, towards and about the cloſe of which there was a general expectation among the Jews of the Meſſiah's coming; and was the fullneſs of time here referred to, and what is ſometimes called the diſpenſation of the fullneſs of time, the end of the Moſaic diſpenſation and Jewiſh church-ſtate, the laſt days of that ſtate, and the end of the Jewiſh world, as to their eccleſiaſtical and civil polity. The Jews themſelves own that that time of the Meſſiah's coming is fixed, and that at the time he ſhall come, whether they are worthy or not, for ſo it is aſſerted in their Talmud [d]; " ſays R. " Jochanan, the ſon of David does not come, but " in an age which is all worthy, or all wicked; in a " generation which is all worthy, as it is written,

" Iſ. lx. 21. in a generation that is all wicked, as " it is written, Iſ. lxiii. 5. and it is written, for my " name ſake will I do it; ſays R. Alexander, R. " Joſhua ben Levi objects what is written, Iſ. lx. 22. " in its time; and it is written, I will haſten it; " if they are worthy I will haſten it, if they are " not worthy it ſhall be בעתה, in its time." And accordingly a more modern writer of theirs ſays [e], " our redemption upon all accounts ſhall be בזמנה, " in its time, whether worthy or wicked; but if " worthy its time will be haſtened;" it muſt be owned they do not always ſay ſo: this phraſe, the fulneſs of time, is an Hebraiſm, and is the ſame with מלאת ימי in Ezek. v. 2. which the Septuagint render την πληρωσιν των ημερων, the fulneſs of days, and we, when the days were fulfilled, when the time was up; and the ſame ſenſe it has here, and it is alſo the ſame with מועד, the appointed time, Hab. ii. 3. and anſwers to προθεσμια τȣ πατρος, the time appointed of the father, ver. 2. God ſent forth his ſon; God not abſolutely and eſſentially, but perſonally and relatively conſidered is here meant, namely God the father, as appears from the relation the perſon ſent ſtands in to him, his ſon; not by creation, as angels, Adam, and all men are the ſons of God; nor by adoption as ſaints are; or by office as magiſtrates be; or on account of his incarnation or reſurrection from the dead, for he was the Son of God before either; but by divine generation, being the only begotten of the Father, of his divine nature and eſſence, equal to him, and one with him: and who was ſent by him, not out of diſreſpect to him, but love to us; nor without his conſent or againſt his will, he readily and heartily agreeing to it; nor does it imply any local motion or change of place, but only deſigns the aſſumption of human nature; nor does it ſuppoſe any ſuperiority and inferiority, for tho' Chriſt as man, and in his office capacity, as mediator, is inferior to the Father, yet not as to his divine nature, or as the Son of God; but it ſuggeſts, that he exiſted before he was ſent, and that as a perſon, and as a diſtinct perſon from the Father, otherwiſe he could not with any propriety be ſaid to be ſent by him; and alſo that there was an entire harmony and agreement between them in this matter, the Father agreed to ſend his Son, and the Son agreed to be ſent; and that as to his taking upon him the office of mediator, and his aſſumption of human nature in order to obtain eternal redemption: all this was not of himſelf, but done in concert with his Father, from whom as mediator he had his miſſion and commiſſion: made of a woman; made, not created as Adam was; nor begotten by man, as men in common are; nor is he ſaid to be born, tho' he truly was, but made; which word the Holy Ghoſt chuſes, to expreſs the mighty power of God, in his myſterious incarnation, wonderful conception and birth; tho' ſome copies read, born of a woman; and ſo the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions: of a woman; whoſe ſeed he was from the beginning ſaid to be; of a woman, without a man; of a woman, a virgin, as was foretold; and not only made and formed in her, but of her, of her fleſh and blood, of which he took part; and which denotes the low eſtate and great humiliation of Chriſt, and ſhews that as ſin came into the world by the woman, the Saviour from ſin came alſo the ſame way: made under the law; under the civil and judicial law as a Jew, to which he was ſubject, paying tribute to the collectors of it; and which was neceſſary that it might appear he ſprung from that nation, to whom he was promiſed; and that he came before the civil government of that people was at an end; and to teach us ſubjection to the civil magiſtrate: and as a ſon of Abraham he was made under the ceremonial law, was circumciſed the eighth day, kept the ſeveral feaſts of tabernacles, paſſover, &c. and which was proper, ſince he was the principal end of it, in whom it centers, and for whoſe ſake it was made; and that he might compleatly fulfil it, and by ſo doing put a period to it: and he was made under the moral law, both as a man and the ſurety of his people, and was ſubject to all the precepts of it, and bore the penalty of it, death, in their room and ſtead, and thereby fulfilled it, and delivered them from its curſe and condemnation. So the Targumiſt [f], joins the incarnation of the Meſſiah and his ſubjection to the law together, as the Apoſtle here does; " the prophet ſaith to the houſe of David, " becauſe a child is born unto us, and a ſon is " given to us, וקביל אוריתא עלוהי למטרה, and " he hath took upon him the law to keep it, and his " name ſhall be called, &c."

Ver. 5. To redeem them that were under the law, &c.] By whom are meant chiefly the Jews, who are elſewhere repreſented as in and under the law, in diſtinction from the Gentiles who were without it; ſee Rom. ii. 12. 1 Cor. ix. 20, 21. the Gentiles indeed, tho' they were not under the law of Moſes, yet were not without law to God, they were under the law of nature. The law was given to Adam as a covenant of works, and not to him as a ſingle perſon, but as a fœderal head to all his poſterity; hence he ſinning, and they in him, they all came under its ſentence of condemnation and death, God's elect not excepted, and who are the perſons ſaid to be redeemed; for Chriſt was not ſent to redeem all that were under the law; for as all mankind were included in it as a covenant of works made with Adam, and all are tranſgreſſors of it, the whole world is pronounced guilty before God by it, and liable to the curſe of it; but not all mankind, only ſome out of every kindred, tongue, people and nation are redeemed by Chriſt, even all the elect whether among Jews or Gentiles. The choſen among the Jews ſeem to be here principally deſigned; the redemption of them, which is the end of Chriſt's being ſent, intends not only a deliverance of them from ſin and ſatan, and the world to whom they were in bondage, but from the law under which they were; from the bondage of the ceremonial, and from the curſe and condemnation of the moral law: that we might receive the adoption of children; by which may be meant, both the grace, bleſſing, and priviledge of adoption, and the inheritance adopted to; both are received and that in conſequence of redemption by Chriſt; and ſuch as receive the one will alſo receive the other. Adoption, as a bleſſing of grace, exiſts before it is received; nor does the reception of it add any thing to the thing itſelf; it was in God's deſignation from all eternity, who predeſtinated his choſen ones unto it by Chriſt, according to the good pleaſure of his will; it was provided, laid up, and ſecured for them in the everlaſting covenant; and is part of that grace given them in Chriſt before the world began; but ſin intervening whereby the law was broken, obſtacles were thrown in the way of God's elect receiving and enjoying this priviledge in their own perſons; wherefore Chriſt was ſent to redeem them from ſin and the law, and by ſo doing remove theſe obſtructions, that ſo they might receive ceive this priviledge in a way conſiſtent with the righteouſneſs and holineſs of God, as well as with his grace and goodneſs: receiving of it ſhews it to be a gift, a free grace gift, and not owing to any merit of the creature; faith is the hand which receives it, as it does all other bleſſings, as Chriſt himſelf, grace out of his fulneſs, righteouſneſs, pardon, &c. and has no more cauſal influence on this than on any of theſe; faith does not make any the ſons of God, or put them among the children; but receives the power, the authority, the priviledge from God thro' Chriſt, under the witneſſings of the Spirit of adoption; whereby they become ſuch, and have a right to the heavenly inheritance, which they ſhall hereafter enjoy.

Ver. 6. And becauſe ye are ſons, &c.] That is of God, ſo ſome copies read; and the Ethiopic verſion, inaſmuch as ye are his ſons; not in ſo high a ſenſe as Chriſt is the Son of God; nor in ſo low a ſenſe as all men are his offspring; nor in ſuch ſenſe as magiſtrates are the children of the moſt high; nor merely on account of a profeſſion of religion, as the ſons of God was a phraſe very early uſed of the worſhippers of the true God; but by virtue of adoption, and which is not owing to the merits of men, who are by nature children of wrath, but to the free rich ſovereign grace of God. 'Tis a priviledge and bleſſing of grace in which all the three perſons are concern'd. The Father has predeſtinated to it, and in the covenant has provided and laid it up; he ſet up his ſon as the pattern to which theſe ſons ſhould be conformed, and propoſed the glory of his own grace, as the end; by virtue of which act of grace they were conſidered as the children of God, as early as the gift of them to Chriſt; and ſo by him when he partook of their fleſh and blood, and died to gather them together who were ſcattered abroad; ſee Heb. ii. 13, 14. John xi. 52. The Son of God has alſo an hand in this affair; for thro' his eſpouſing their perſons, they become the ſons and daughters of the Lord God Almighty; and thro' his aſſumption of their nature they become his brethren, and ſo to be in the relation of ſons to God; thro' his redemption, they receive the adoption of children, and at his hands the priviledge, the power itſelf to become ſuch. The Spirit of God not only regenerates them, which is an evidence of their ſonſhip, but as a Spirit of adoption manifeſts it to them, works faith in them to receive it, and frequently witneſſes to the truth of it; all which ſhew how any come and are known to be the ſons of God. This is a priviledge that exceeds all others; it is more to be a ſon than to be a ſaint; angels are ſaints, but not ſons, they are ſervants; it is more to be a child of God, than to be redeemed, pardoned, and juſtified; it is great grace to redeem from ſlavery, to pardon criminals, and juſtify the ungodly; but it is another and an higher act of grace to make them ſons; and which makes them infinitely more honourable, than to be the ſons and daughters of the greateſt potentate upon earth; yea, gives them an honour which Adam had not in innocence, nor the angels in heaven, who tho' ſons by creation, yet not by adoption. The conſequence, and ſo the evidence of it follows, God hath ſent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying Abba father. The Syriac and Arabic verſions read, our father; all the three divine perſons here appear, as having a concern in this buſineſs as before obſerved; here are God and his Son, and the Spirit of his Son, ſaid to be ſent; by whom is deſigned not any work of his upon the heart, nor any of his gifts and graces; but he himſelf in perſon, even the ſame Spirit of God that moved upon the face of the waters at the creation of the world, and moved holy men of God to write the ſcriptures; who formed and filled the human nature of Chriſt, and deſcended on him as a dove; and by whom Chriſt and his Apoſtles wrought their miracles; and who is called the Spirit of his Son; as he is frequently by the Jews[g], רוחו של מלך משיח, the Spirit of the King Meſſiah; and ſometimes[h], רוח מימריה, the Spirit of his word, the eſſential word of God; becauſe he proceeds from him as from the Father, and becauſe he dwells in him, in an eminent manner as mediator, and is ſent by virtue of his mediation and interceſſion; and he is the rather mentioned under this character, becauſe adoption proceeds upon the natural ſonſhip of Chriſt, and is what is the peculiar office of the Spirit to teſtify. When he is ſaid to be ſent, it does not ſuppoſe any local motion or change of place in him, who is a Spirit infinite, immenſe and omnipreſent; nor any inferiority to the Father that ſends him, or to the Son whoſe Spirit he is; for he is one God with the Father and Son, and with the Father is the ſender of Chriſt, Iſ. xlviii. 16. but it regards his peculiar office in this affair of adoption, by agreement of all the three perſons; the Father predeſtinated to it, the Son redeems that it might be received, and the Spirit is ſent to diſcover, apply, and bear witneſs to it; which is a wondrous inſtance of the grace of God. The place where he is ſent is into the heart; where he is as a principle of ſpiritual life, and which he furniſhes and ſupplies with all grace; where he dwells as in his temple, and is the evidence of God's dwelling there, and alſo of intereſt in Chriſt; is there as a pledge and an earneſt of future glory; and the whole is a ſurprizing inſtance of condeſcending grace. The work he does there is various, and conſiſts of divers parts; as convincing of ſin, and righteouſneſs, working faith, and acting the part of a comforter; but what is here referred to, is the diſcharge of his office as a Spirit of adoption, crying Abba father. The word Abba is an Hebrew, or rather a Syriac or Chaldee word, ſignifying father; and which is added for explanation ſake; and its repetition may denote the vehemency of filial affection, the ſtrength of faith and confidence as to intereſt in the relation; and being expreſſed both in Hebrew and Greek, may ſhew that God is the father both of Jews and Gentiles, and that there is but one Father of all; and if it might not be thought too curious an obſervation, it may be remarked that the word Abba read backwards or forwards is the ſame pronunciation, and may teach us that God is the father of his people in adverſity as well as in proſperity. The act of crying, tho' it is here aſcribed to the Spirit, yet is not properly his, but the believers; and is attributed to him becauſe he excites, encourages, and aſſiſts them as a Spirit of adoption to call God their father; and may be underſtood, both of the ſecret internal crying of the ſoul, or exerciſe of faith on God as its father, and of an open outward invocation of him as ſuch, with much confidence, freedom, and boldneſs.

Ver. 7. Wherefore thou art no more a ſervant, &c.] This is a benefit reſulting from adoption, and the manifeſtation of it to the children of God, and ſuppoſes them to have been formerly ſervants; as whilſt in a natural ſtate they were the ſervants of ſin, the vaſſals of ſatan, ſlaves to the world, and the luſts of it, and in bondage to the law; but now being declared to be the ſons of God under the witneſſings of the Spirit, they are freed from the ſervitude of ſin, from the captivity of ſatan, from the ſlavery of the world, and particularly from the law, and that ſpirit of bondage which it brought upon them, which is chiefly deſigned; and from which they are delivered by the Spirit of adoption, enabling and encouraging them to cry Abba, Father; ſo that they are now no more under the former ſervile ſpirit, the ſpirit of a ſervant, but a ſon; whoſe ſpirit, ſtate, and caſe are vaſtly different from thoſe of a ſervant: the ſervant has not that intereſt in his maſter's affections as the ſon has; nor that liberty of acceſs to him; nor is he fed, and cloathed as he is, or ſhares in the ſame privileges he does; nor is his obedience performed in the ſame free generous manner, from a principle of love and gratitude, but in a ſervile and mercenary way; and tho' he may expect his wages, he can't hope for the inheritance; nor does he always abide in the houſe as the ſon does. He that is once a ſon, is always ſo, and no more a ſervant: predeſtination to Sonſhip is immutable; 'tis God's act to put any among the children, and none can put them out; the covenant of grace, in which this bleſſing is ſecured, is unalterable; union with Chriſt the Son of God, on which it is founded, is indiſſoluble; the Spirit of adoption, where-ever he witneſſes, abides as ſuch. They that are the ſons of God may be corrected and chaſtized, as they often are, in a fatherly way; but theſe corrections are proofs for, and not againſt their Sonſhip; they may indeed judge themſelves unworthy to be called the ſons of God, and may be in ſuch frames of ſoul as to conclude, at leaſt fear, they are not; but ſtill the relation abides, and ever will. They'll never more be ſervants, but always ſons. The very learned Mr. Selden [i] thinks the Apoſtle alludes to a cuſtom among the Jews, who allowed only freemen, and not ſervants and handmaids, to call any Abba, Father ſuch-an-one, or Imma, Mother ſuch-an-one: but this ſeems to proceed upon a miſtaken ſenſe, and rendering of a paſſage in the Talmud [k], which is as follows, עבדים ושפחות אין קורין אותם אבא פלוני ואמא פלנית; which he thus renders, neither ſervants nor handmaids uſe this kind of appellation, Abba, or Father ſuch-an-one, and Imma, or Mother ſuch-an-one; whereas it ſhould be rendered, ſervants and handmaids, they don't call them Abba, Father ſuch-an-one, and Imma, Mother ſuch-an-one; this is clear from what follows. The family of R. Gamaliel uſed to call them Father ſuch-an-one, and Mother ſuch-an-one; which in the other Talmud [l] is, the family of R. Gamaliel uſed to call their ſervants and their handmaids Father Tabi, and Mother Tabitha; which were the names of the ſervant and handmaid of Gamaliel. Rather therefore reference is had to a tradition [m] of theirs, that "a ſervant, who is carried "captive, when others redeemed him, if under the "notion of a ſervant, or in order to be one, he "becomes a ſervant; but if under the notion of a "freeman, לא ישתעבד, he is no more a ſervant." Or to the general expectation of that people, that when they are redeemed by the Meſſiah, they ſhall be ſervants no more; for ſo they ſay [n], "your "fathers, tho' they were redeemed, became ſer-"vants again, but you, when ye are redeemed, "עוד אין אתם משתעבדין, ſhall be no more ſervants;" which in a ſpiritual ſenſe is true of all that are redeemed by Chriſt, and thro' that redemption receive the adoption of children, and is what the Apoſtle here means. And if a ſon, then an heir of God thro' Chriſt; which is another benefit ariſing from adoption. Such as are the children of God, they are heirs of God himſelf; he is their portion and exceeding great reward; his perfections are on their ſide, and engaged for their good; all his purpoſes run the ſame way, and all his promiſes belong to them; they are heirs of all the bleſſings of grace and glory, of righteouſneſs, of life, of ſalvation, and a kingdom and glory; and ſhall inherit all things, and all thro' Chriſt: he is the grand heir of all things; they are joint heirs with him; their ſonſhip is thro' him, and ſo is their heirſhip and inheritance; their inheritance is in his poſſeſſion, it is reſerved ſafe in him; and by him, and with him they ſhall enjoy it. The Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, only read, an heir through God, and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion; and the Ethiopic verſion only, an heir of God.

[h] Targum in 2 Chron. ii. 6.

Ver. 8. Howbeit then, when ye knew not God, &c.] Whilſt in Gentiliſm, and in a ſtate of unregeneracy, they had no true knowledge of God; tho' they might know by the light of nature, and works of creation, that there was a God, yet they did not know who he was, but called either mortal men, or ſome one or other of the creatures, or ſtocks, and ſtones, and images of mens device, by this name; they knew not the God of Iſrael; they did not know God in Chriſt, and are therefore ſaid to be without him; and a common deſcription of them it is, that they knew not God: and whilſt this was their caſe, what follows was true of them, ye did ſervice unto them which by nature are no Gods; only by name, and in the opinion of men, but have no divinity in them, are only called Gods, mere nominal, fictitious deities, who have nothing of the nature and eſſence of God in them; for there is but one God by nature and eſſence, the Father, Son, and Spirit; all others have only the name and appearance, but not the truth of deity; and theſe the Gentiles in their times of ignorance did ſervice to, which is what the Jews call, עבודה זרה, ſtrange ſervice; that is, idolatry, concerning which there is a whole treatiſe in the Talmud, and which bears that name [o]. This ſervice lay in paying homage to them, worſhipping of them, and performing various rites and ceremonies in a way of adoration, and which they reckoned religious ſervice; and which, comparatively ſpeaking, whilſt in this ſtate of blindneſs, was excuſable in them; tho' it is a wonderful inſtance of grace that ſuch idolaters ſhould be the ſons of God.

Ver. 9. But now after that ye have known God, &c.] God in Chriſt, as their Covenant-God and Father, thro' the preaching of the Goſpel, and in the light of divine grace; God having cauſed light to ſhine in their dark hearts; and having given them the light of the knowledge of himſelf in the face of Chriſt, and having ſent down into their hearts the Spirit of his Son, crying Abba, Father. Or rather are known of God; for it is but little that the beſt of theſe, that have the greateſt ſhare of knowledge, know of him; and what knowledge they have, they have it firſt, originally, and wholly from him: that knowledge which he has of them is particular, diſtinct, and compleat; and is to be underſtood, not of his omniſcience in general, ſo all men are known by him; but of his ſpecial knowledge, joined with affection, approbation, and care: and the meaning is, that they were loved by him with an everlaſting love, which had been manifeſted in their converſion, in the drawing of them to himſelf, and to his Son; that he approved of them, delighted in them, had an exact knowledge, and took ſpecial care of them: but, oh, folly and ingratitude! how turn ye again to the weak and beggarly elements, whereunto ye deſire again to be in bondage? meaning the ordinances of the ceremonial law, he before calls the elements of the world, and here weak, becauſe they could not give life, righteouſneſs, peace, joy, comfort, and ſalvation; and ſince the coming of Chriſt were become impotent to all the uſes they before ſerved; and beggarly, becauſe they lay in the obſervation of mean things, as meats, drinks, &c. and which were only ſhadows of thoſe good things, the riches of grace and glory, which come by Chriſt. The Galatians are ſaid to turn again to theſe; not that they were before in the obſervation of them, except the Jews, but becauſe there were ſome likeneſs between theſe, and the ceremonies with which they carried on the ſervice of their idols; and by ſhewing an inclination to them, they diſcovered a good-will to come into a like ſtate of bondage they were in before; than which nothing could be more ſtupid and ungrateful in a people that had been bleſſed with ſo much grace, and with ſuch clear Goſpel light and knowledge.

Ver. 10. Ye obſerve days, and months, and times, and years.] Leſt the Apoſtle ſhould be thought to ſuggeſt, without foundation, the inclination of theſe people to be in bondage to the ceremonies of the law, he gives this as an inſtance of it; which is to be underſtood, not of a civil obſervation of times, divided into days, months, and years, for which the luminaries of the heavens were made, and into ſummer and winter, ſeeds time and harveſt, which is not only lawful, but abſolutely neceſſary; but of a religious obſervation of days, &c. not of the lucky and unlucky days, or of any of the feſtivals of the Gentiles, but of Jewiſh ones. By days are meant their ſeventh-day ſabbaths; for ſince they are diſtinguiſhed from months and years, they muſt mean ſuch days as returned weekly; and what elſe can they be but their weekly ſabbaths? Theſe were peculiar to the Iſraelites, and not binding on others; and being typical of Chriſt, the true reſt of his people, and he being come, are now ceaſed. By months are deſigned their new moons, or the beginning of their months upon the appearance of a new moon, which were kept by blowing trumpets, offering ſacrifices, hearing the word of God, abſtaining from work, and holding religious feaſts; and were typical of that light, knowledge, and grace the church receives from Chriſt, the ſun of righteouſneſs; and he, the ſubſtance being come, theſe ſhadows diſappeared. By times are intended the three times in the year, when the Jewiſh males appeared before the Lord at Jeruſalem, to keep the three feaſts of tabernacles, paſſover, and pentecoſt, for the obſervance of which there was now no reaſon; not of the feaſt of tabernacles, ſince the word was made fleſh, and tabernacled among us; nor of the paſſover, ſince Chriſt, our paſſover, is ſacrificed for us; nor of pentecoſt, or the feaſt of weeks, or of the firſt fruits of the harveſt, ſince the Spirit of God was poured down in a plenteous manner on that day upon the Apoſtles; and when the firſt-fruits of a glorious harveſt were brought in to the Lord, in the converſion of three thouſand ſouls. And by years are to be underſtood their ſabbatical years; every ſeventh year the land had a reſt, and remained untilled; there were no plowing and ſowing, and there was a general releaſe of debtors; and every fiftieth year was a jubilee to the Lord, when liberty to ſervants, debtors, &c. was proclaimed throughout the land: all which were typical of reſt, payment of debts, and ſpiritual liberty by Chriſt; and which having their accompliſhment in him, were no longer to be obſerved; wherefore theſe Galatians are blamed for ſo doing; and the more, becauſe they were taught to obſerve them, in order to obtain eternal life and ſalvation by them.

Ver. 11. I am afraid of you, &c.] Which ſhews the danger he apprehended they were in, by taking ſuch large ſteps from Chriſtianity to Judaiſm, and expreſſes the godly jealouſy of the Apoſtle over them; intimates he had ſome hope of them, and in the whole declares his great love and affection for them; for love is a thing full of care and fear: leſt I have beſtowed upon you labour in vain; in preaching the Goſpel among them with ſo much diligence and conſtancy, tho' ſo many afflictions and preſſures lay upon him. Faithful miniſters of the word are laborious ones; and ſuch an one was the Apoſtle; and who indeed laboured more abundantly than the reſt in all places where-ever he came; and ſuch will be concerned, as he was, leſt their labours ſhould be in vain, not to themſelves, but to the ſouls of others, whoſe everlaſting good and welfare they are ſeeking. But how is it that the Apoſtle ſhould fear that his labour in preaching the Goſpel would be in vain, and become of no effect thro' their obſervance of days, months, times, and years? becauſe that hereby the pure ſpiritual and evangelic worſhip of God was corrupted, they bringing into it that which God had removed, and ſo became guilty of will-worſhip; their chriſtian liberty was infringed, and they brought into bondage, a deliverance from which the Goſpel proclaims; the doctrine of free grace in pardon, juſtification, and ſalvation, was made void, they obſerving theſe things in order to procure them thereby; and it was virtually and tacitly ſaying, that Chriſt was not come in the fleſh, which is the main article of the Goſpel; for ſince theſe things had reſpect to him, and were to continue no longer than till his coming, to keep on the obſervation of them, was declaring that he was not come; which is in effect to ſet aſide the whole Goſpel, and the miniſtration of it; ſo that the Apoſtle might juſtly fear, that by ſuch a proceeding all his labour, and the pains he had took to preach the Goſpel, and ſalvation by Chriſt unto them, would be in vain.

Ver. 12. Brethren, I beſeech you, be as I am, &c.] Though they had gone ſo far backwards, yet ſtill hoping well of them that they would be reclaimed, he ſtiles them brethren; not in a carnal but ſpiritual relation, as being born of God, and belonging to his family; and out of his ſincere and hearty love for them as his brethren in Chriſt, he exhorts them to be as he was; which ſome underſtand of affection, as deſiring them to ſhew the ſame love to him as to themſelves, that he might be to them as another I, as a part of themſelves; ſo true friendſhip makes, and true friends look upon each other to be, as Jonathan and David, and the firſt chriſtians were, of one heart and ſoul. But this phraſe rather ſeems to have regard to likeneſs and imitation; and the ſenſe is, that he would have them to be as he was, and do as he did; to be as free from the law, and the ſervitude and bondage of it, as he was; to reckon themſelves dead unto it, as he did; and to relinquiſh the obſervance of days, and months, and times, and years, and any, and every part of the ceremonial law, and to account all theſe things as he had done, loſs and dung for Chriſt; and this he preſſes, not in an authoritative way, laying his commands as an Apoſtle upon them, but in a kind and gentle manner entreating them: and which he backs with the following reaſon or argument, for I am as ye are; as your very ſelves; I have the ſame love for you, you have for yourſelves; I love you as I do myſelf; this way go ſuch interpreters that underſtand the exhortation to regard love and affection: but rather the meaning is, be as I am, and do as I do, becauſe I was as you are; ſo the Syriac and Arabic verſions read the words. Some think that the Apoſtle particularly addreſſes the Jews in theſe churches; and that his ſenſe is, that he was born a Jew, as they were, was brought up in the Jewiſh religion, and in the obſervance of theſe things as they had been, and yet he had relinquiſhed them, therefore would have them do ſo likewiſe: or rather his intention is, that he had been as zealous for the obſervation of the ceremonial law, and all the rituals of it, as they now were; and tho' he was a Jew by birth, and had had a Jewiſh education, and ſo had been prejudiced in favour of theſe things, yet he had renounced them all; and therefore they who were Gentiles, and were never under obligation to them, ſhould never think of coming into bondage by them; and ſince he had accommodated himſelf to them, and had become all things to all, that he might gain ſome, whether Jews or Gentiles, ſo he hoped they would condeſcend to him, and follow his example: or this may have reſpect, not to his former but preſent ſtate, according to our verſion; and the ſenſe be, I am as you are, and you are as I am with reſpect to things ſpiritual; we are both alike in Chriſt, choſen in him, and redeemed by him; are equally regenerated by his Spirit, and are all the children of God by faith in him, and no more ſervants; are all equally Chriſt's free men, and have a right to the ſame privileges and immunities; and therefore be as I am, as free from obſerving the ceremonies of the law, and ſo from the bondage of it, ſince we are upon an equal foot, and upon the ſame foundation in Chriſt. Ye have not injured me at all; what injury they had done was to God, whoſe will it was that theſe things ſhould be aboliſhed; and to Chriſt, who had broken down the middle wall of partition; and to the Goſpel, which proclaimed liberty to the captives; and to their own ſouls, by entangling themſelves with the yoke of bondage; but no perſonal private injury was done to the Apoſtle by their compliance with the law. This he ſays, leſt they ſhould think that he ſpoke out of anger and reſentment, and on account of any perſonal affront offered to him; which leads him to take notice of their former kindneſs and reſpect to him, and which he deſigns as a reaſon why they ſhould pay the ſame deference to him now as then.

Ver. 13. Ye know how thro' infirmity of the fleſh, &c.] Meaning either their infirmity, to which the Apoſtle accommodated himſelf in preaching the Goſpel to them, delivering it in ſuch a manner as ſuited with their capacities, feeding them with milk, and not with ſtrong meat; or his own infirmity, reſpecting either ſome particular bodily infirmity and diſorder, as the head-ach, with which he is ſaid to be greatly troubled; or the weakneſs of his bodily preſence, the mean outward appearance he made, the contemptibleneſs of his voice, and the great humility with which he behaved; or rather the many reproaches, afflictions, and perſecutions which attended him, when, ſays he, I preached the Goſpel unto you at the firſt; not the law, but the Goſpel; and this he did at his firſt entrance among them, and was the firſt that preached it to them, and was the means of their converſion; and therefore being their ſpiritual father, they ought to be as he was, and follow him as they had him for an example.

Ver. 14. And my temptation which was in my fleſh, &c.] The ſame with the infirmity of his fleſh, and which was a trial of his faith and patience, and every other grace, as the afflictions of the ſaints be. The Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, and the Vulgate Latin verſion read, your temptation in my fleſh; that which was a trial of them, whether they would receive him or no. This ye deſpiſed not; nor the Apoſtle on the account of it, nor his miniſtry; they thought never the worſe of him, nor of the Goſpel he preached becauſe of this: nor rejected; him, nor the counſel of God declared by him, but received me; as they did, into their cities and places of worſhip, into their houſes, and into their hearts and affections: and that as an angel of God; with all that reverence and reſpect, that high eſteem, veneration, and affection, as if one of the celeſtial inhabitants had been ſent down from heaven to bring them the good tidings of the Goſpel: or as a meſſenger of God, as the phraſe may be rendered; as one that had his miſſion and commiſſion from God, which was not at all diſputed by them: but they looked upon him under that character, and regarded him as ſuch, even as Chriſt Jeſus; as his embaſſador, as perſonating him, as being in his ſtead; yea, if he had been perſonally preſent as man among them, they could not have ſhown greater reſpect to him as ſuch, than they did to the Apoſtle; for as for any religious worſhip and adoration, that they did not offer to him; and had they, he would have addreſſed them in like manner he did the inhabitants of Lyſtra, Acts xiv. 14, 15. Now ſince they ſhowed him ſo much reſpect, notwithſtanding all his infirmities, temptations, and afflictions, when he firſt preached the Goſpel; what ſhould hinder that they ſhould not pay the ſame regard to him now, by abiding in his doctrine and following his example, ſince he was the ſame man in his principles and practices now as then?

Ver. 15. Where is then the bleſſedneſs you ſpake of? &c.] Or, as ſome copies read, what was then your bleſſedneſs? what, and how great was it? meaning, when the Goſpel was firſt preached to them by him; when Chriſt was revealed to them as God's ſalvation; when the doctrines of free juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and full pardon by his blood, and atonement and ſatisfaction by his ſacrifice, were publiſhed among them; when the love of God was ſhed abroad in their hearts, and the Spirit of Chriſt was ſent thither, crying Abba, Father: but, alas! where was this bleſſedneſs now, ſince they were turning to the weak and beggarly elements of the ceremonial law, and were enclined to obſerve its ordinances, and bring themſelves thereby into a ſtate of bondage? They were happy perſons whilſt under the miniſtry of the Apoſtle; as a Goſpel-miniſtry, is a great happineſs to any that enjoy it; for this is the way to find eternal life, to have ſpiritual peace and pleaſure, joy and comfort, light and liberty, whereas a contrary doctrine leads to all the reverſe. The Apoſtle hereby puts them in mind how they were looked upon as happy perſons by himſelf at that time, whom they received with ſo much reſpect and reverence, and his miniſtry with ſo much readineſs and chearfulneſs, and to ſo much profit and advantage; and alſo by other churches who were ſenſible of the high favour they enjoyed, by having ſo great a preacher of the Goſpel among them; and even at that time they thought themſelves the happieſt perſons in the world, and that they could not have been more ſo, unleſs they had had Chriſt himſelf in perſon among them; ſo beautiful were the feet of this bringer of glad tidings to them: for I bear you record, that if it had been poſſible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes, and have given them to me; ſo fully perſuaded was the Apoſtle of their ſtrong and ſincere affection for him at that time, that he was ready to atteſt the truth of this in any form to any perſons; that were it a poſſible thing for them, and could it have been of any advantage to him, they would even have plucked out their eyes, than which nothing is dearer, or more uſeful to a man, and have parted with them to him, and for his ſake; and doubtleſs perſons ſo affected would chearfully have laid down their lives for him; but things had taken another turn ſince.

Ver. 16. Am I therefore become your enemy, &c.] Not that he was an enemy to them, he had the ſame cordial affection for them as ever; he had their true intereſt at heart, and was diligently purſuing it; but they, through the inſinuations of the falſe teachers, had entertained an ill opinion of him, and an averſion to him, and treated him as if he had been an enemy to them, and as if they had a real hatred of him: and that for no other reaſon, as he obſerves, but becauſe I tell you the truth; the Goſpel ſo called, becauſe it comes from the God of truth, is concerned with Chriſt, who is truth itſelf, and is dictated, revealed, and bleſſed by the Spirit of truth; and is oppoſed unto, and is diſtinct from the law, which is only an image and ſhadow, and not truth itſelf: it chiefly reſpects the great truths of ſalvation alone by Chriſt, and juſtification by his righteouſneſs; and may alſo regard what he had ſaid concerning the abrogation of the law, blaming them for the obſervance of it, and calling its inſtitutions weak and beggarly elements; all which he told or ſpoke publickly, plainly, honeſtly, fully, and faithfully, boldly, conſtantly, and with all aſſurance, conſiſtently, and in pure love to their ſouls; and yet it brought on him their anger and reſentment. Telling the truth in ſuch a manner often brings many enemies to the miniſters of Chriſt; not only the men of the world, prophane ſinners, but profeſſors of religion, and ſometimes ſuch who once loved and admired them.

Ver. 17. They zealouſly affect you, &c.] Or are jealous of you; meaning the falſe Apoſtles, whoſe names, in contempt, he mentions not, being unworthy to be taken notice of, and their names to be tranſmitted to poſterity. Theſe were jealous of them, not with a godly jealouſy, as the Apoſtle was, leſt their minds ſhould be corrupted from the ſimplicity of the Goſpel; but they were jealous, leſt they ſhould love the Apoſtle more than they, and therefore repreſented him in a very bad light, and expreſſed great love and kindneſs for them themſelves: but not well; their zeal and affection were not hearty, and ſincere, and without diſſimulation, but were all feigned, were only in word and in tongue, not in deed, and in truth: this zealous affection neither proceeded from right principles, nor with right views; they ſought themſelves, and their own carnal worldly intereſt, their own pleaſure and profit, and not the good and welfare of the ſouls of theſe Galatians: yea, they would exclude you; that is, either from the Apoſtle, from bearing any love unto, and having any reſpect for him. What they were wiſhing and ſeeking for was to draw off the minds and affections of theſe perſons from him; or they were deſirous of removing them from the Goſpel of Chriſt unto another Goſpel, and did all they could to hinder them from obeying the truth; and particularly were for ſhutting them out of their chriſtian liberty, and bringing them under the bondage of the law; yea, were for ſeparating them from the churches, that they might ſet up themſelves at the head of them. Some copies read us, inſtead of you; and then the meaning is, that they were deſirous of excluding the Apoſtle from their company, and from having any ſhare in their affections, which makes little alteration in the ſenſe: and others, inſtead of exclude, read include; and which is confirmed by the Syriac verſion, which renders the word, למחבשכון, but they would include you; that is, either they would include, or impriſon you under the law, and the bondage of it; or they would monopolize you, and engroſs all your love to themſelves; and which is alſo the ſenſe of the Arabic verſion: that you might affect them; love them, ſhew reſpect to them, be on their ſide, follow their directions, imbibe their doctrines, and give up yourſelves wholly to their care, and be at their call and command.

Ver. 18. But it is good to be zealouſly affected, &c.] A zealous affection when right is very commendable, as the inſtances of Phinehas, Elijah, John the Baptiſt, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt ſhew, and a contrary ſpirit is very diſagreeable. But then it muſt be expreſſed in a good thing; in a good cauſe, for God, and the things of Chriſt; for the Goſpel, and the ordinances of it, and for the diſcipline of God's houſe, and againſt immorality and prophaneneſs, errors and hereſies: and it ſhould be always; not at certain times, and upon ſome particular accounts, but it ſhould be conſtant, and always continue; it ſhould be ever the ſame towards God, Chriſt, and his miniſters: and not only when I am preſent with you; by which the Apoſtle ſuggeſts, that whilſt he was with them they were zealouſly attached to him and truth; but no ſooner was he gone from them, but their zealous affection abated, and was fixed on others, which diſcovered their weakneſs, fickleneſs, and inconſtancy; whereas he was always the ſame to them, and bore the ſame love to them, as the following words ſhew.

Ver. 19. My little children, &c.] A ſoft and tender way of ſpeaking, uſed by Chriſt to his diſciples, and frequently by that affectionate and beloved diſciple John. It is expreſſive of the Apoſtle's ſtrong love and affection for them, and points out their tenderneſs in the faith, and that ſmall degree of ſpiritual light and knowledge they had, as well as ſignifies that he had been, as he hoped, and in a judgment of charity believed, an inſtrument of their converſion, and was their ſpiritual parent: hence it follows, of whom I travail in birth again; he compares himſelf to a woman with child, as the church in bringing forth ſouls to Chriſt ſometimes is; and all his pains and labours in the miniſtry of the word to the ſorrows of a woman during the time of child-bearing, and at the birth. When he firſt came among them, he laboured exceedingly; he preached the Goſpel in ſeaſon, and out of ſeaſon; he followed his indefatigable endeavours with importunate prayers; and his miniſtry among them was attended with much weakneſs of body, and with many reproaches, afflictions, and perſecutions comparable to the birth-throws of a woman in travail: however, as he hoped he was the means of their being born again, of the turning of them from Heatheniſm to Chriſtianity, and from ſerving idols to ſerve the living God, and believe in his Son Jeſus Chriſt; but the falſe Apoſtles coming among them, had ſo ſtrangely wrought upon them, and they were ſo much gone back and degenerated, that they ſeemed to be like ſo many abortions, or as an informed fœtus; wherefore he laboured again with all his might and main, by writing to them, uſing arguments with them, ſometimes giving them good words, at other times rough ones, and fervently praying for them, if poſſible, to recover them from Judaiſm, to which they were inclined, to the pure Goſpel of Chriſt. Until Chriſt be formed in you; which is the ſame as to be created in Chriſt, to be made new creatures, or new men in him; or, in other words, to have the principle of grace wrought in the ſoul, which goes by the name of Chriſt formed in the heart; becauſe it is from him, he is the author of it, and it bears a reſemblance to him, and is that by which he lives, dwells, and reigns in the ſouls of his people. Now tho' as he hoped, this new man, new creature, or Chriſt was formed in them before, when he firſt preached the Goſpel to them; yet it was not a perfect man; particularly their knowledge of Chriſt, of his Goſpel, and Goſpel-liberty, was far from being ſo, in which they went backwards inſtead of forwards; and therefore he was greatly concerned, laboured exceedingly, and vehemently endeavoured, which he calls travailing in birth again, to bring them to the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God unto a perfect man, unto the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt. It is alſo the ſame as to be conformed to the image of Chriſt, which in regeneration is inſtamped upon the ſaints, and is gradually increaſed, and will be perfected in heaven; and that this might more manifeſtly appear, over which a vail was drawn, by their departure in any degree from the truths of the Goſpel, was what he earneſtly ſought after: once more, it is the ſame as to have the form of Chriſt; that is, of the Goſpel of Chriſt upon them, or to be caſt into the form of doctrine, and mould of the Goſpel, and to receive a Goſpel impreſſion and ſpirit from it; which is to have a ſpirit of liberty, in oppoſition to legal bondage; to live by faith on Chriſt, and not on the works of the law; to derive comfort alone from him, and not from any ſervices and duties whatever; to have repentance, and the whole courſe of obedience, influenced by the grace of God, and love of Chriſt; and to be zealous of good works, and yet have no dependance on them for juſtification and ſalvation. This is what the Apoſtle ſo earneſtly deſired, when, inſtead of it, theſe Galatians ſeemed to have the form of Moſes, and of the law.

Ver. 20. I deſire to be preſent with you now, &c.] His meaning is, either that he wiſhed he was perſonally preſent among them; that he had but an opportunity of ſeeing them face to face, and telling them all his mind, and in ſuch a manner as he could not in a ſingle Epiſtle; or that they would conſider him, when they read this Epiſtle, as if he was really among them; and as if they ſaw the concern of his mind, the agonies of his ſoul, the looks of his countenance, and heard the different tone of his voice: and to change my voice; when preſent with them, either by a different way of preaching; that whereas before he preached the Goſpel of the grace of God unto them, and his voice was charming to them like that of an angel, and even of Jeſus Chriſt himſelf; but they having turned their backs upon it, and ſlighted it, he would now thunder out the law to them they ſeemed to be ſo fond of; even that voice of words, which when the Iſraelites on mount Sinai heard, intreated they might hear no more; as theſe Galatians alſo muſt when they heard the true voice of it, which is no other than a declaration of wrath, curſe, and damnation; or by uſing a different way of ſpeaking to them, as neceſſity might require, either ſoftly or roughly, beſeeching or chiding them, which might more move and affect them than an Epiſtle could: for I ſtand in doubt of you. The Vulgate Latin reads it, I am confounded in you; and the Syriac, דתמיה, I am ſtupified; and to the ſame ſenſe the Arabic. He was aſhamed of them for their apoſtacy and degeneracy; he was amazed and aſtoniſhed at their conduct; or, as the word may be rendered, he was perplex'd on their account; he did not know what to think of them, and their ſtate; ſometimes he hoped well of them, at other times he was ready to deſpair; nor did he well know what courſe to take with them, whether to uſe them roughly or ſmoothly, and what arguments might be moſt proper and pertinent, in order to reclaim them.

Ver. 21. Tell me, ye that deſire to be under the law, &c.] Not merely to obey it, as holy, juſt, and good, from a principle of love, and to teſtify ſubjection and gratitude to God; ſo all believers deſire to be under the law: but theſe men ſought for juſtification and ſalvation by their obedience to it; they deſired to be under it as a covenant of works, which was downright madneſs and folly to the laſt degree, ſince this was the way to come under the curſe of it; they wanted to be under the yoke of the law, which is a yoke of bondage, an inſupportable one, which the Jewiſh fathers could not bear; and therefore it was egregious weakneſs in them to deſire to come under it: wherefore the Apoſtle deſires them to anſwer this queſtion, do ye not hear the law? meaning either the language and voice of the law of Moſes, what it ſays to tranſgreſſors, and ſo to them; what it accuſed them of, and charged them with; how it declared them guilty before God, pronounced them accurſed, and miniſtred ſententially condemnation and death unto them; and could they deſire to be under ſuch a law? or rather the books of the Old Teſtament, particularly the five books of Moſes, and what is ſaid therein; referring them, as Chriſt did the Jews to the ſcriptures, to the writings of Moſes, and to read, hear, and obſerve what is in them, ſince they profeſſed ſo great a regard to the law; from whence they might learn, that they ought not to be under the bondage and ſervitude of it. The Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, have ye not read the law? and ſo one of Stephens's copies; that is, the books of the law, if you have, as you ſhould, you might obſerve what follows.

Ver. 22. For it is written, &c.] In Gen. xvi. 15. and xxi. 2. that Abraham had two ſons, not two ſons only; for beſides the two referr'd to, he had ſix more, Gen. xxv. 2. but it being only pertinent to the Apoſtle's purpoſe to take notice of theſe two, he mentions no more, tho' he does not deny that he had any more. Theſe two ſons were Iſhmael and Iſaac: the one by a bondmaid. Iſhmael was by Hagar, Sarah's ſervant, who repreſented the covenant, the Jewiſh nation, was under the bondage of. The other by a free woman. Iſaac was by Sarah, Abraham's proper and lawful wife, who was miſtreſs of the family, and figured out the covenant, and Goſpel church-ſtate, and all believers, Gentiles as well as Jews, as under the liberty thereof.

Ver. 23. But he who was of the bond-woman, &c.] Iſhmael, who was begotten and born of Hagar, was born after the fleſh; after the common order and courſe of nature, thro' the copulation of two perſons, the one able to procreate, and the other fit for the conception of children; and was typical of the Jews, the natural deſcendants of Abraham, who, as ſuch, and upon that account, were not the children of God, nor heirs of the eternal inheritance: but he of the free woman was by promiſe; by a previous promiſe made by God to Abraham, that he ſhould have a ſon in his old age, when his body was now dead, and when Sarah his wife, who had always been barren, was now grown old and paſt the time of bearing children; ſo that Iſaac was born out of the common order and courſe of nature; his conception and birth were owing to the promiſe and power of God, and to his free grace and favour to Abraham. This ſon of promiſe was a type of the ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham, whether Jews or Gentiles, the children of the promiſe that are counted for the ſeed; who are born again of the will, power, and grace of God, and are heirs according to the promiſe, both of grace and glory, when they that are of the law, and the works of it, are not. All which is farther illuſtrated in the following verſes.

Ver. 24. Which things are an allegory, &c.] Or are allegorized: ſo Sarah and Hagar were allegorized by Philo the Jew [p], before they were by the Apoſtle. Sarah he makes to ſignify virtue, and Hagar the whole circle of arts and ſciences, which are, or ſhould be, an handmaid to virtue; but theſe things reſpecting Hagar and Sarah, the bond-woman and the free, and their ſeveral offspring, are much better allegorized by the Apoſtle here. An allegory is a way of ſpeaking, in which one thing is expreſſed by another, and is a continued metaphor; and the Apoſtle's meaning is, that theſe things point at ſome other things; have another meaning in them, a myſtical and ſpiritual one, beſides the literal; and which the Jews call, מדרש, Midraſh, a name they give to the myſtical and allegorical ſenſe of ſcripture, in which they greatly indulge themſelves. An allegory is properly a fictitious way of ſpeaking; but here it deſigns an accommodation of a real hiſtory, and matter of fact to other caſes and things, and ſeems to intend a type or figure; and the ſenſe to be, that theſe things which were literally true of Hagar and Sarah, of Iſhmael and Iſaac, were types and figures of things to come; juſt as what befel the Iſraelites were types and figures of things that would be under the Goſpel diſpenſation, 1 Cor. x. 11. for theſe are the two covenants, or teſtaments; that is, theſe women, Hagar and Sarah ſignify, and are figures of the two covenants; not the covenant of works, and the covenant of grace. Hagar was no figure of the covenant of works, that was made and broke before ſhe was born; beſides, the covenant ſhe was a figure of was made at mount Sinai, whereas the covenant of works was made in paradiſe: moreover, the covenant of works was made with Adam, and all his poſterity, but the covenant which Hagar ſignified was only made with the children of Iſrael; ſhe repreſented Jeruſalem that then was with her children. Nor was Sarah a figure of the covenant of grace, for this was made long before ſhe had a being, even from everlaſting; but they were figures of the two adminiſtrations of one and the ſame covenant, which were to take place in the world ſucceſſively; and which following one the other, are by the author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews called the firſt and the ſecond, the old and the new covenants. Now theſe are the covenants or teſtaments, the old and the new, and the reſpective people under them; which were prefigured by theſe two women, and their offspring. The one from the mount Sinai; that is, one of theſe covenants, or one of the adminiſtrations of the covenant, one diſpenſation of it, which is the firſt, and now called old, becauſe aboliſhed, took its riſe from mount Sinai, was delivered there by God to Moſes, in order to be communicated to the people of Iſrael, who were to be under that form of adminiſtration until the coming of the Meſſiah. And becauſe the whole Moſaic œconomy was given to Moſes on mount Sinai, it is ſaid to be from thence: hence, in Jewiſh writings we read, times without number, of הלכה למשה מסיני, a rite, cuſtom, conſtitution, or appointment given to Moſes from mount Sinai, the ſame phraſe as here. Sinai ſignifies buſhes, and has its name from the buſhes which grew upon it [q]; in one of which the Lord appeared to Moſes; for Horeb and Sinai are one and the ſame mount; one ſignifies waſte and deſolate, the other buſhy; as one part of the mountain was barren and deſert, and the other covered with buſhes and brambles; and may fitly repreſent the condition of ſuch that are under the law. Which gendereth to bondage; begets and brings perſons into a ſtate of bondage, induces on them a ſpirit of bondage to fear, and cauſes them to be all their life-time ſubject to it; as even ſuch were that were under the firſt covenant, or under the Old Teſtament diſpenſation: which is Agar; or this is the covenant, the adminiſtration of it, which Hagar, the bond-woman, Sarah's ſervant, repreſented.

Ver. 25. For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia, &c.] The Arabic verſion, inſtead of Arabia, reads Balca. The Syriac verſion makes Hagar to be a mountain, reading the words thus, for mount Hagar is Sinai, which is in Arabia: and ſome have been of opinion that Sinai was called Hagar by the Arabians. It is certain, that חגר, which may be pronounced Hagar, does ſignify in the Arabic language a ſtone or rock; and that one part of Arabia is called Arabia Petræa, from the rockineſs of it; the metropolis of which was, חגרת, or Agara, and the inhabitants Agarenes; and Hagar was the name of the chief city of Bahrein, a province of Arabia [r]: and it may obſerved, that when Hagar, with her ſon, was caſt out, they dwelt in the wilderneſs of Paran, Gen. xxi. 21. which was near to Sinai, as appears from Numb. x. 12. Deut. xxxiii. 2. ſo that it is poſſible that this mount might be ſo called from her, tho' there is no certainty of it; and near to it, as Grotius obſerves, was a town called Agra, mentioned by Pliny [s] as in Arabia. However, 'tis clear, that Sinai was in Arabia, out of the land of promiſe, where the law was given, and ſeems to be mentioned by the Apoſtle with this view, that it might be obſerved and teach us, that the inheritance is not of the law. It is placed by Jerom [t] in the land of Midian; and it is certain it muſt be near it, if not in it, as is clear from Exod. iii. 1. And according to Philo the Jew [u], the Midianites, as formerly called, were a very populous nation of the Arabians: and Madian, or Midian, is by [w] Mahomet ſpoken of as in Arabia; and it may be obſerved, that they that are called Midianites in Gen. xxxvii. 36. are ſaid to be Iſhmaelites, Gen. xxxix. 1. the name by which the Arabians are commonly called by the Jews. The Apoſtle therefore properly places this mountain in Arabia. But after all, by Agar, I rather think the woman is meant; and that the ſenſe is, that this ſame Agar ſignifies mount Sinai, or is a figure of the law given on that mount. And anſwereth to Jeruſalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children; that is, agrees with and reſembles the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, and of all the cities and towns in Judea; and ſhe being a bondwoman, repreſented that ſtate of bondage the Jews were in, when the Apoſtle wrote this, who were in a ſtate of civil, moral, and legal bondage; in civil bondage to the Romans, being tributaries to the empire of Rome, and under the juriſdiction of Cæſar; in moral bondage to ſin, to ſatan, to the world, and the luſts of it, whoſe ſervants they in general were; and in legal bondage to the ceremonial law, which was a yoke of bondage! they were in bondage under the elements or inſtitutions of it, ſuch as circumciſion, a yoke which neither they, nor their forefathers could bear, becauſe it bound them over to keep the whole law; the obſervance of various days, months, times, and years, and the multitude of ſacrifices they were obliged to offer, which yet could not take away ſin, nor free their conſciences from the load of guilt, but were as an hand-writing of ordinances againſt them; every ſacrifice they brought declaring their ſin and guilt, and that they deſerved to die as the creature did that was ſacrificed for them; and beſides, this law of commandments, in various inſtances, the breach of it, was puniſhable with death, thro' fear of which they were all their life long ſubject to bondage: they were alſo in bondage to the moral law, which required perfect obedience of them, but gave them no ſtrength to perform; ſhewed them their ſin and miſery, but not their remedy; demanded a compleat righteouſneſs, but did not point out where it was to be had; it ſpoke not one word of peace and comfort, but all the reverſe; it admitted of no repentance; it accuſed of ſin, pronounced guilty on account of it, curſed, condemned, and threatened with death for it, all which kept them in continual bondage: and whereas the far greater part of that people at that time, the Jeruſalem that then was, the Scribes, Phariſees, and generality of the nation, were ſeeking for juſtification by the works of the law, this added to their bondage; they obeyed it with mercenary views, and not from love but fear; and their comforts and peace roſe and fell according to their obedience; and perſons in ſuch a way muſt needs be under a ſpiritual bondage.

Ver. 26. But Jeruſalem which is above, &c.] This Sarah was a type and figure of; ſhe anſwered to, and agreed with this; which is to be underſtood, not of the church triumphant in heaven, but of the Goſpel church-ſtate under the adminiſtration of the new covenant; and that, not as in the latter day-glory, when the new Jeruſalem ſhall deſcend from God out of heaven, but as it then was in the Apoſtles time, and has been ſince. Particular reſpect may be had to the firſt Goſpel church at Jeruſalem, which conſiſted of perſons born from above, was bleſſed with a Goſpel ſpirit, which is a ſpirit of liberty, out of which the Goſpel went into all the world, and from among whom the Apoſtles and firſt preachers of the word went forth every where, and were the means of the converſion of multitudes, both among Jews and Gentiles; and ſo might be truly ſaid to be the mother of us all. The church in general, under the Goſpel, may be, as it often is, called Jeruſalem, becauſe of its name, the viſion of peace; being under the government of the prince of peace; the members of it are ſons of peace, who are called to peace, and enjoy it; the Goſpel is the Goſpel of peace, and the ordinances of it are paths of peace; and the new covenant, under the adminiſtration of which the ſaints are, is a covenant of peace. Jeruſalem was the object of God's choice, the palace of the great king, the place of divine worſhip, was compact together, and well fortified: the Goſpel church-ſtate conſiſts of perſons, who in general, are the elect of God, among whom the Lord dwells, as in his temple. Here his worſhip is obſerved, his word is preached, and his ordinances adminiſtred; ſaints laid on the foundation Chriſt, and being fitly framed together, grow up unto an holy temple in him, and are ſurrounded by him, as Jeruſalem was with mountains, and are kept by his power unto ſalvation. This is ſaid to be above, to diſtinguiſh it from the earthly Jeruſalem, the inhabitants of which were chiefly men of the world, carnal men; but this heavenly Jeruſalem, or Goſpel church-ſtate, chiefly conſiſts of perſons born from above, called with an heavenly calling, and who bear the image of the heavenly one, whoſe converſation is in heaven, who are ſeeking things above, and in a little time will be there themſelves; its conſtitution and form of government are from above, and ſo are its doctrines, and its ordinances. The Jews often ſpeak of ירושלם דלעילא, or עלאה, or של מעלה, Jeruſalem above [x], as diſtinguiſhed from Jeruſalem below: and to this diſtinction the Apoſtle ſeems to have reſpect here, who further ſays concerning this Jeruſalem, that ſhe is free; from the ſervitude of ſin, ſatan, and the world, from the yoke of the law, and from a ſpirit of bondage; having the Spirit of God, the ſpirit of adoption, who is a free ſpirit, and makes ſuch free that enjoy him; and where he is, there is true liberty. He adds, which is the mother of us all; that are born again, whether Jews or Gentiles, as particularly the church at Jeruſalem was, and the Goſpel church-ſtate in general may be ſaid to be; ſince here ſouls are born and brought forth to Chriſt, are nurſed up at her ſide, and nouriſhed with her breaſts of conſolation, the word and ordinances. This form of ſpeech is alſo Jewiſh: thus it is ſaid [y], that "Zion, אימן דישראל, the mother of Iſrael, "ſhall bring forth her ſons, and Jeruſalem ſhall re"ceive the children of the captivity." Again, explaining Prov. xxviii. 24. 'tis obſerved [z], that there is no Father, but the ever-bleſſed God, ואין אמו, and no mother, but the congregation of Iſrael. Some copies leave out the word all; and ſo do the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions, and only read, the mother of us, or our mother.

Ver. 27. For it is written, &c.] Iſ. liv. 1. which is cited to prove, that the heavenly Jeruſalem, or Goſpel church-ſtate, is the mother of us all, and has brought forth, and ſtill will bring forth, many ſouls to Chriſt, even many more than were under the legal diſpenſation by the Jewiſh church, tho' the Lord was an huſband to them, Jer. xxxi. 32. The words are, rejoice thou barren that beareſt not, break forth and cry thou that travaileſt not, for the deſolate hath many more children than ſhe which hath an huſband; by her that was barren, and bore not, and travailed not, and was deſolate, is not meant the Gentile world, which before the coming of Chriſt was barren and deſtitute of the knowledge of him, and from among whom very few were called by grace; but the Goſpel church in the firſt beginnings of it, in Chriſt's time, and eſpecially about the time of his death, and before the pouring forth of the Spirit on the day of Pentecoſt, when the number of its members were few; for the names of the diſciples together were but 120, when it ſeemed to be barren, and deſolate, and deprived of its huſband Chriſt, but was quickly to have a large acceſſion to it, both of Jews and Gentiles; and therefore is called upon to rejoice, break forth, and cry; that is, to break forth into ſongs of praiſe, and expreſs her ſpiritual joy, by ſinging aloud, and ſetting forth in hymns and ſpiritual ſongs, the glory of powerful and efficacious grace, in the converſion of ſuch large numbers of ſouls, the like of which had never been known under the former adminiſtration. Three thouſand were converted under one ſermon, and added to this firſt Goſpel-church; and the number of its members ſtill increaſed, and the number of the men that afterwards believed was about five thouſand; and after this we hear of more believers being added to the Lord, both men and women; and alſo, that a great company of the prieſts were obedient to the faith; and when out of this church, the Apoſtles, and other preachers of the Goſpel, went every where into the Gentile world, thouſands of ſouls were converted, and a large number of churches formed, and a ſpiritual ſeed has been preſerved ever ſince; and in the latter day, Zion will travail in birth, and bring forth a numerous offſpring; a nation ſhall be born at once, and the fulneſs of the Gentiles ſhall be brought in. Agreeable to this ſenſe the Jewiſh writers, Jarchi, Kimchi, and Aben Ezra underſtand this paſſage of Jeruſalem; as does alſo the Chaldee Paraphraſe, which renders it thus: "Praiſe, O Jeruſalem, which wer't as a barren woman that bringeth not forth; rejoice in praiſe, and be glad, who wer't as a woman which conceives not, for more are the children of Jeruſalem forſaken, than the children of the habitable city, ſaith the Lord."

Ver. 28. Now we, brethren, as Iſaac was, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion reads, you, brethren; and ſo one of Stephens's copies. As the two women, Hagar and Sarah might be, and are allegorized; ſo likewiſe their reſpective offſpring. Iſaac ſignified, and was a type and figure of Abraham's ſpiritual ſeed, whether Jews or Gentiles, under the Goſpel-diſpenſation: and as he was, ſo they are, the children of promiſe; as Iſaac was promiſed unto Abraham, ſo were this ſpiritual ſeed, when it was ſaid unto him, that he ſhould be the father of many nations, as he is the father of us all, even of all them that believe, be they of what nation ſo ever; and as Iſaac was born by virtue, and in conſequence of a promiſe made to Abraham of God's free good-will and pleaſure, and his generation and conception were beyond the ſtrength and courſe of nature, were the effects of a divine power, and were ſomething ſupernatural; ſo this ſpiritual ſeed are born again, by virtue, and in conſequence of a promiſe, not only made to Abraham, but to the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the head of the covenant, that he ſhould ſee his ſeed, enjoy a numerous offſpring, and which ſhould endure for ever; and alſo to the church, of whom it is ſaid, that this and that man ſhould be born in her; and particularly in conſequence of the promiſe cited in the foregoing verſe, from whence theſe words are an inference, deduction, or illuſtration: and theſe children of the promiſe, ſo called from hence, are born again, above and beyond the ſtrength of nature; not thro' the power and free will of man, but thro' the abundant mercy and ſovereign will of God, by his powerful and efficacious grace, and by the word of promiſe, the Goſpel, as a means. Moreover, to theſe children, or ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham, ſignified by Iſaac, do all the promiſes belong, as that of God, as a Covenant-God unto them; of Chriſt, as a ſaviour and redeemer; of the holy Spirit, as a ſanctifier and comforter; and of all good things, of temporal mercies, ſo far as are for their real good; and of all ſpiritual bleſſings, as righteouſneſs, peace, pardon, comfort, all ſupplies of grace, and eternal life: and theſe likewiſe receive theſe promiſes; the holy Spirit, as a Spirit of promiſe, opens and applies them to them, puts them into the hand of faith, and enables them to plead them with God, and to believe the performance of them; ſo that this character in all reſpects agrees with them.

Ver. 29. But as then, &c.] In the times of Abraham, when Hagar and Sarah, the types of the two diſpenſations of the covenant, and Iſhmael and Iſaac, the figures of the two different ſeeds, the natural and ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham, legaliſts and true believers, were living: he that was born after the fleſh; which was Iſhmael, who was a type, or an allegorical repreſentation of ſuch who were under the Sinai covenant, and were ſeeking for righteouſneſs by the works of the law; as he was born after the fleſh, according to the ordinary courſe of nature, and was, as he was born a carnal man; ſo are ſelf-juſticiaries, notwithſtanding all their pretenſions to religion and righteouſneſs, juſt as they were born; there is nothing but fleſh in them; they are without God, and Chriſt, and the Spirit, and have neither true faith, nor hope, nor love, nor any other grace; they have no internal principle of goodneſs in them; fleſh, or corrupt nature, has the government of them, is the reigning principle in them; their minds are fleſhly, and ſo are their tenets; and ſuch is their converſation, they truſt in the fleſh, in outward performances, in their own righteouſneſs, and ſo come under the curſe; for as many as truſt in an arm of fleſh, or are of the works of the law, are under the curſe of it: perſecuted him that was born after the Spirit; by whom is meant Iſaac, who, tho' he was not conceived under the over-ſhadowings of the holy Spirit, without the help of man, as Chriſt was; yet becauſe of the divine power which was ſo eminently diſplayed in his conception and generation, under all the difficulties, and diſadvantages, and ſeeming impoſſibilities of nature, he is ſaid to be born after the Spirit: and beſides, he was alſo regenerated by the Spirit of God, was a good man, and one that feared the Lord, as the whole account of him ſhews; and in this alſo fitly pointed out the ſpiritual ſeed, true believers, under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, who are born again of water, and of the Spirit, and are renewed in the ſpirit of their minds; in whom the work of the Spirit is begun, and grace is the governing principle; in whom the Spirit of God dwells and operates; and whoſe converſation is ſpiritual, and who walk not after the fleſh, but after the Spirit. The perſecution of Iſaac by Iſhmael, was by mocking him, Gen. xxi. 9. the Hebrew word there made uſe of, is in alluſion to Iſaac's name, which ſignifies laughter; and Iſhmael laughed at him, jeer'd and derided him. The Jewiſh doctors are divided about the ſenſe of this: ſome ſay that the word rendered mocking, is expreſſive of idolatry, according to Exod. xxxii. 6. and that Iſhmael would have taught Iſaac, and drawn him into it; others that it ſignifies uncleanneſs, according to Gen. xxxix. 17. and that he talked to him in a laſcivious and indecent manner, in order to corrupt his mind: others that it deſigns murder, according to 2 Sam. ii. 14. and that he intended to kill him, and attempted it [a]; it is pretty much received by them, that either he finding him alone, or they going out to the field together, he took his bow and drew it, and ſhot an arrow at him, with an intention to kill him [b], though he pretended it was but in play; and one of their writers on the text ſays [c], that the word uſed, by Gematry, that is, by the arithmetic of the letters, ſignifies להרוג, to ſlay; ſo that this perſecution was not by words only, but by deeds: but others [d] of them more rightly think, that it means a contention about the inheritance, which Sarah's words to Abraham ſeem to confirm; and that Iſhmael claimed the birthright, and deſpiſed Iſaac as the younger ſon; inſiſted upon the right to the inheritance, and mocked at the promiſe of God, with reſpect to Iſaac; and might threaten what he would do to him, ſhould he claim it thereupon: mocking has been always reckoned a ſpecies of perſecution; ſo the Old Teſtament ſaints, among other inſtances of perſecution, had trial of cruel mockings; thus our Lord was perſecuted, and alſo his Apoſtles: and even ſo it is now. The carnal Jews, who truſted in themſelves that they were righteous, and deſpiſed others, perſecuted the ſpiritual ſeed that believed in Chriſt, both by words and deeds; they confiſcated their goods, impriſoned their perſons, and even put them to death; and the falſe teachers, though they did not, and could not go ſuch lengths, yet as perſons fitly repreſented by Iſhmael, they derided the Apoſtles, and mocked at the doctrines of grace preached by them, and deſpiſed thoſe that embraced them; and pleaded that the inheritance belonged to them, upon the foot of the works of the law: and ſo it is at this day; though there is no perſecution of mens perſons and eſtates, yet there never was a greater perſecution of the doctrines of grace, and of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and the ſaints more mocked at and derided for maintaining them; and that by perſons juſt of the ſame complexion as thoſe in the Apoſtle's time, ſignified by Iſhmael, carnal profeſſors, and ſelf-righteous perſons.

Ver. 30. Nevertheleſs, what ſaith the ſcripture, &c.] This is a Talmudic form of citing ſcriptures, and anſwers to, מאי קראה, what ſays the ſcriptures [e]? the paſſage referred to, is Gen. xxi. 10. and which are the words of Sarah to Abraham; but inaſmuch as ſhe ſpake them under divine inſpiration, and they were approved of and confirmed by God, as appears from ver. 12. they are aſcribed to God ſpeaking in the ſcripture: caſt out the bond-woman and her ſon, for the ſon of the bond-woman ſhall not be heir with the ſon of the free-woman. There is very little difference in the citation, from the original. The Apoſtle omits the word this in both clauſes, which though very proper to be expreſſed by Sarah, to point out the perſon ſhe meant, and as being in a vehement paſſion, was not abſolutely neceſſary to be retained by the Apoſtle, ſince by the context there is no difficulty of knowing who is meant by her; though the Alexandrian copy has the word in it: and inſtead of with my ſon, with Iſaac, the Apoſtle ſays, with the ſon of the free-woman, Sarah; there ſpeaking of herſelf, whoſe character the Apoſtle gives, in oppoſition to the bond-woman: in like manner a Jewiſh writer [f] reads and interprets it, "for the ſon of this woman ſhall not "be heir, עם בן הגבירה, with the ſon of the miſ"treſs." The caſting of Hagar and Iſhmael out of Abraham's family, was a type and emblem of the rejection of the carnal and ſelf-righteous Jews, from the Goſpel-church ſtate; nor ought any carnal perſons, any that are after the fleſh, unregenerate ones, or that truſt to their own righteouſneſs, to be in a Goſpel church; as they will alſo be excluded and thruſt out of the kingdom of heaven, into which no unregenerate and unrighteous, or ſelf-righteous perſons ſhall enter. The Jews make this ejection of Hagar and her ſon, to be both out of this world, and that which is to come [g]. The reaſon given why the one ſhould not be heir with the other, perfectly agrees with the Jewiſh canons; which was not becauſe he was the ſon of a concubine, for the ſons of concubines might inherit, if they were Iſraelites, and free, but becauſe he was the ſon of a bond-woman, for thus they run [h]; "all that are near of kin, though by iniquity, are "heirs, as they that are legitimate; how? thus "for inſtance, if a man has a ſon that is ſpurious, "or a brother that is ſpurious, lo, theſe are as the "other ſons, and the other brethren for inheri"tance; but if, בנו מן שפחה, his ſon is by an "handmaid, or by a ſtrange woman, he is no ſon "in any of theſe matters, ואינו יורש כלל, and no "heir at all:" and again [i], "an Iſraelite that hath "a ſon by an handmaid, or by a Gentile, ſeeing he "is not called his ſon, he that he has after him by "an Iſraelitiſh woman, בכור בנחלה, is the firſt"born for inheritance, and takes the double por"tion." The reaſon aſſigned for non-inheritance in the text, implies that the children of the free-woman, the ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham, ſhall inherit the privileges of God's houſe, the bleſſings of grace, and eternal glory; they are children of the promiſe, and heirs according to it; when the children of the bond-woman, ſelf-righteous ones ſhall not; for the inheritance is not of the law, neither are they heirs who are of the works of it; nor is it to be enjoyed by mixing the law and Goſpel, grace and works, in the buſineſs of ſalvation.

Ver. 31. So then brethren, &c.] This is the concluſion of the whole allegory, or the myſtical interpretation of Agar and Sarah, and their ſons: we are not children of the bond-woman; the figure of the firſt covenant, which gendered to bondage, and typified the Jews in a ſtate, and under a ſpirit of bondage to the law; New Teſtament ſaints are not under it, are delivered from it, and are dead unto it: but of the free; of Sarah, that was a type of the new and ſecond covenant; and anſwered to the Goſpel church, which is free from the yoke of the law; and whoſe children believers in Chriſt are, by whom they are made free from all thraldom and ſlavery; ſo the children of the miſtreſs and of the maid-ſervant, are oppoſed to each other by the Jews [k]. The Vulgate Latin verſion adds to this verſe from the beginning of the next chapter, with the liberty wherewith Chriſt hath made us free; and the Ethiopic verſion, becauſe Chriſt hath made us free; and begin the next chapter thus, therefore ſtand, and be not entangled, &c. and ſo the Alexandrian copy, and three of Stephens's.

CHAP. V.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle exhorts to ſtand faſt in chriſtian liberty, and warns againſt the abuſe of it; and directs to ſhun various vices, and encourages to the exerciſe of ſeveral graces, and the obſervance of ſeveral duties; and concludes with a caution againſt vain glory, provocation to wrath, and envy: and whereas in the latter part of the preceding chapter, he had made it appear that the believers under the Goſpel diſpenſation were free from the bondage of the law, he begins this with an exhortation to continue ſtedfaſtly in the liberty of the Goſpel; and the rather, ſince it was what Chriſt obtained for them, and beſtowed on them; and to take care, that they were not again brought under the bondage of the ceremonial law, particularly the yoke of circumciſion, ver. 1. and diſſuades from ſubmitting to it, by obſerving, that it tended to make Chriſt unprofitable to them, ver. 2. and that it laid them under an obligation to keep the whole law, ver. 3. and that it made Chriſt wholly uſeleſs to them; and that ſuch who ſought for juſtification by obedience to the ceremonial law, were apoſtates from the Goſpel of the grace of God, ver. 4. as alſo by ſhewing, that it was contrary to the general faith and expectation of the ſaints, who were looking for, and expecting eternal glory and happineſs, not by the works of the law, but by faith in Chriſt, under the influence of the Holy Spirit, ver. 5. nor were circumciſion or uncircumciſion of any avail, but the true faith in Chriſt, which ſhews itſelf by love to him and to his people, ver. 6. and likewiſe by reminding them, how well they ſet out at their firſt converſion, and proceeded; nor had they any to hinder them from obeying the truth, and therefore it was ſhameful in them, to go back to the beggarly elements they had firſt relinquiſhed, ver. 7. nor was the preſent opinion they had imbibed, of God that called them, or what they received when firſt effectually called by grace, but what had been ſince taken up, ver. 8. and whereas it might be objected, that it was only in a ſingle article concerning the ceremonial law, and which was embraced only by a few perſons, and therefore not to be regarded, the Apoſtle puts them in mind of a proverb, that a little leaven leavens the whole lump, and therefore not to be connived at, ver. 9. however, a little to mitigate the ſharpneſs of his reproof, he expreſſes his good opinion and confidence of them, that upon a mature conſideration of things, they would not be otherwiſe minded than they formerly had been, or he now was; and lays the blame of all upon the falſe teacher, or teachers, that troubled them, and who ſhould bear their own judgment or condemnation, ver. 10. and whereas it was inſinuated, that the Apoſtle himſelf had preached up circumciſion as neceſſary to ſalvation, he removes this calumny by obſerving, that were it true, he would not ſuffer perſecution as he did, nor would the Jews be offended at his preaching as they were, ver. 11. and then out of zeal for the glory of God, and hearty affection to the Galatians, he wiſhes thoſe falſe teachers that troubled them with their pernicious doctrines, were cut off, either by the Lord, or from the church, ver. 12. and next he directs to the right uſe of chriſtian liberty, to which they were called, and cautions againſt the abuſe of it; that they ſhould not uſe it as an occaſion to the fleſh, but on the contrary, ſerve one another in love, ver. 13. giving this as a reaſon, becauſe love is the fulfilling of the law, ver. 14. whereas a contrary ſpirit and conduct, are attended with pernicious conſequences, even the deſtruction of each other, ver. 15. and therefore adviſes them to walk in the Spirit, whoſe fruit is love, and then they would not fulfil the luſt of the fleſh, ver. 16. for theſe two, fleſh and ſpirit, are contrary the one to the other, and the ſpirit hinders the performance of the luſts of the fleſh, ver. 17. beſides, ſuch who give up themſelves to the conduct of the Spirit, and are led thereby, are not under the law, the bondage of it, nor liable to its curſe, ver. 18. and having made mention both of fleſh and Spirit, he takes notice of the works and fruits of the one, and of the other, by which they are known; and as for the works of the fleſh he obſerves, that they are manifeſt, and gives an enumeration of them in ſeventeen particulars; and to deter from them declares, that whoever lives in the commiſſion of them, ſhall not inherit the kingdom of God, ver. 19, 20, 21. and as for the fruits of the Spirit, theſe are alſo well known by ſpiritual men, nine of which are particularly mentioned, and againſt which there is no law, ver. 22, 23. and from the whole concludes, that ſuch as are true believers in Chriſt, and are led by his Spirit, and have the fruits of it, have the fleſh with its affections and luſts crucified, ver. 24. and ends the chapter with ſome exhortations to walk in the Spirit, and not be ambitious of worldly honour, nor provoke one another to wrath, nor envy each others happineſs, ver. 25, 26.

Ver. 1. Stand faſt therefore in the liberty, &c.] There is the liberty of grace, and the liberty of glory; the former of theſe is here meant, and lies in a freedom from ſin; not from the indwelling of it, but from the dominion, guilt, and damning power of it; from the captivity and tyranny of ſatan, though not from his temptations and inſults; from the law, the ceremonial law, as an hand-writing of ordinances, a rigid ſevere ſchool-maſter, and a middle wall of partition, and from all its burdenſome rites and inſtitutions; from the moral law as a covenant of works, and as adminiſtered by Moſes; and from the curſe and condemnation of it, its bondage and rigorous exaction, and from all expectation of life and righteouſneſs by the deeds of it; but not from obedience to it, as held forth by Chriſt, and as a rule of walk and converſation; and from the judicial law, or thoſe laws which concerned the Jews as Jews: moreover, this liberty lies in the free uſe of things indifferent, as eating any ſort of food without diſtinction, ſo be it it be done in faith, with thankfulneſs to God, in moderation, and with temperance, and ſo as that the peace and edification of fellow-chriſtians are not hurt; alſo in the free uſe of Goſpel ordinances, which they that are fellow-citizens with the ſaints, have a right unto, but not to lay aſide or neglect at pleaſure; which is not to uſe, but to abuſe their liberty: again, another branch of it is acceſs to God, with freedom and boldneſs at the throne of grace, through the mediator, under the influences of the divine Spirit; to which may be added, a deliverance from the fears of death corporal, who is a king of terrors to Chriſtleſs ſinners, and which kept Old Teſtament ſaints, all their life-time ſubject to bondage; and eternal, or the ſecond death, by which Chriſt's freemen are aſſured they ſhall not be hurt: now in this liberty, the children of the free-woman, believers under the Goſpel diſpenſation, are very pertinently exhorted to ſtand faſt, in conſequence and conſideration of their character; that is, they ſhould highly prize and eſteem it, as men do their civil liberty; and maintain it and defend it, at all hazards; abide by the doctrine of it without wavering, and with intrepidity; not giving up any one part of it, however, and by whomſoever it may be oppoſed, maligned, and reproached; and keep up the practice of it, by obeying from the heart the doctrine of it, by becoming the ſervants of righteouſneſs, by frequent attendance at the throne of grace, and continual obſervance of the ordinances of Chriſt; and then ſhould take heed of every thing that tends to break in upon it, as any doctrine or commandment of men; particularly the doctrine of juſtification by works, and all ſorts of ſuperſtition and will-worſhip: and the rather, becauſe of the concern Chriſt has in this liberty, 'tis that wherewith Chriſt hath made us free; we are not free-born, but on the contrary home-born ſlaves, as Ephraim was; nor could this liberty in any of its branches be obtained by us, by any merit, righteouſneſs, act, or acts of ours, but is wholly of Chriſt's procuring for us, both by price and power; whereby he has ranſomed and delivered us out of the hands of all our ſpiritual enemies, ſin, ſatan, the law, and death; and it is of his proclaiming in the Goſpel, and of his applying by his Spirit, whom he ſends down into our hearts as a free Spirit, to acquaint us with it, and lead us into it, who works faith in us to lay hold upon, and receive this bleſſing of grace as others: and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage. The metaphor is taken from oxen put under a yoke, and implicated with it, from which they cannot diſengage themſelves: ſome of the members of this church had been Jews, who had formerly been under the yoke of the law, and ſeemed deſirous to return to their former ſtate of bondage, from which the Apoſtle diſſuades, and therefore uſes the word again; or elſe he may refer to the bondage of corruption and idolatry, in which they as Gentiles were in, before their converſion; and intimates, that to give in to the obſervance of Jewiſh rites and ceremonies, would be involving themſelves in a ſtate of bondage again; for by the yoke of bondage, he means the law, which the Jews frequently call, עול מצות, the yoke of the commandments [l]; particularly the ceremonial law, as circumciſion; which Peter, Acts xv. 10. repreſents as a yoke intolerable; the obſervation of days, months, times, and years; the multitude of ſacrifices, and which could not take away ſin; but proclaimed their guilt and obligation to puniſhment, and were an hand-writing of ordinances againſt them, and thereby they were held and kept in bondage: and ſuch a yoke is the moral law, as delivered by Moſes, requiring perfect obedience, but giving no ſtrength to perform, nor pointing where any is to be had; ſhewing a man his ſin and miſery, and ſo working wrath in his conſcience, but giving not the leaſt intimation of a ſaviour, or of life and righteouſneſs by another; accuſing, pronouncing guilty, curſing and condemning; hence ſuch as ſeek for righteouſneſs by it, are in a miſerable ſubjection to it, and are ſadly implicated and entangled with the yoke of it: every doctrine and ordinance of men, is a yoke of bondage which ſhould not be ſubmitted to; nay, any action whatever, performed in a religious way, and in order for a man's acceptance with God, and to obtain his favour, and according to his obſervance of which he judges of his ſtate, and ſpeaks peace and comfort to himſelf, or the reverſe, is a yoke of bondage; as for inſtance, prayer at ſuch and ſo many times a day, reading ſuch a number of chapters in the bible every day, faſting ſo many times in the week, and the like; ſo that what are branches of chriſtian liberty, ſuch as frequent prayer to God, reading the ſacred writings for inſtruction and comfort, and the free uſe of the creatures, are turned into a yoke of bondage, which ſhould be guarded againſt.

Ver. 2. Behold, I Paul ſay unto you, &c.] The Apoſtle proceeds to give ſome reaſons and arguments to enforce the above exhortation and diſſuaſion: the firſt of which is introduced with a note of attention, behold; what he was about to ſay being matter of great moment and importance; and alſo mentions himſelf by name, as the aſſertor of it; and that either becauſe his name was well known to them, and the rather becauſe of his apoſtolical authority; and to ſhew his full aſſurance of this matter, and his intrepidity, and that he was no ways aſhamed of it, they might if they pleaſed, ſay it to whomſoever they would, that Paul the Apoſtle affirmed, that if ye be circumciſed, Chriſt ſhall profit you nothing: he ſpeaks of circumciſion, not as when it was an ordinance of God, but as it was now aboliſhed by Chriſt; and that not as ſingly performed on ſome certain accounts, for he himſelf circumciſed Timothy for the ſake of the Jews; but as done in order to ſalvation, or as neceſſary unto it; which was the doctrine the falſe Apoſtles taught, and theſe Galatians were ready to give into: now circumciſion ſubmitted to on this conſideration, and with this view, rendered Chriſt unprofitable, made his death to be in vain, his ſacrifice of no effect, and his righteouſneſs uſeleſs: beſides, Chriſt is a whole ſaviour, or none at all; to join any thing with him and his righteouſneſs, in the buſineſs of juſtification and ſalvation, is interpreted by him as a contempt and neglect of him, as laying him aſide, and to ſuch perſons he is of no profit; and if he is not, what they have, and whatſoever they do, will be of no advantage; wealth and riches, yea, the whole world could it be gained, their works and righteouſneſs, whatever ſhow they make before men, God has declared ſhall not profit them; and truſting to theſe, render Chriſt unprofitable to them. This is directly contrary to the notions of the Jews, who think they ſhall be ſaved for their circumciſion, and that that will ſecure them from hell; they ſay [m] no circumciſed perſon goes down to hell, and that whoever is circumciſed, ſhall inherit the land; but there's none ſhall inherit the land, ſave a righteous perſon; but every one that is circumciſed, is called a righteous man [n]; ſo that circumciſion is their righteouſneſs, on account of which they expect heaven and happineſs.

Ver. 3. For I teſtify again to every man, &c.] This is the form of an oath, a calling God to witneſs, neſs, ſwearing by the living God, and declaring as in his preſence to every man, whether Jew or Gentile, whoever he be: that is circumciſed; in order to obtain ſalvation, and as neceſſary to it: that he is a debtor to do the whole law; and this it is that made circumciſion an inſupportable yoke, for that itſelf might be bore, and was bore by children of eight days old; but the fulfilling of the whole law cannot be done by any man; and yet every one that is circumciſed, in order to procure righteouſneſs and life, is bound to keep the whole law; becauſe the law is only his righteouſneſs, when he obſerves all that is required in it, and as the Lord has commanded; if he does not, he is pronounced accurſed: and this proves what was before ſaid, that Chriſt is of no profit to ſuch perſons; becauſe they reject him and his righteouſneſs, and as much as in them lie, make void his obedience, ſufferings, and death: hence the ſame thing is repeated, though not in the ſame words, in the next verſe.

Ver. 4. Chriſt is become of no effect unto you, &c.] Or ye are aboliſhed from Chriſt; or as others by an hypallage read the words, Chriſt is aboliſhed unto you; for by their ſeeking for juſtification by their own works, it was all one to them, as if there was no Chriſt, and no righteouſneſs in him, and no ſalvation by him; they had nothing to do with him, nor he with them: whoſoever of you are juſtified by the law; that is, who ſought to be juſtified by their obedience to the law, or who thought they were, and truſted in themſelves that they were righteous; for otherwiſe by the deeds of the law, no fleſh living can be juſtified: ye are fallen from grace; that is, either from that grace which they profeſſed to have; for there might be ſome in theſe churches, as in others, who were only nominal chriſtians, and formal profeſſors; who had declared, they ſaw themſelves loſt and undone ſinners, deſtitute of a righteouſneſs, and profeſſed to believe in Chriſt alone for righteouſneſs and ſtrength, but now truſted in themſelves, and in the works of the law: or from the ſcheme of grace in the whole of man's ſalvation, which will admit of no mixture of works; either 'tis one or the other, it can't be both; wherefore by their taking on the ſide of works, they ſhewed that they had entirely dropped the ſcheme of grace: or elſe from the Goſpel of the grace of God, from whence they were removed, through the influence of falſe teachers; particularly the doctrine of free juſtification by the grace of God, through the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; which was entirely ſet aſide by their ſeeking to be juſtified by the works of the law; and from this they might be ſaid to be fallen, who were on ſuch a bottom.

Ver. 5. For we through the Spirit wait, &c.] Who have believed in Chriſt, chriſtians in general, and the Apoſtle and the brethren with him in particular; who alſo were Jews born, and brought up ſuch; and yet they did not look for, and expect heaven and happineſs through circumciſion, or any of the works of the law, but through the righteouſneſs of Chriſt received by faith, under the influence and teſtimony of the Spirit of God, and therefore much leſs ſhould Gentiles: for the hope of righteouſneſs by faith; by which is meant, not the believer's juſtifying righteouſneſs, as if it was ſomething future he is waiting for; for this is already wrought out, and brought in by Chriſt, the end of the law for righteouſneſs; is revealed in the Goſpel from faith to faith; is diſcovered and applied to the ſaints by the Spirit of God; is put upon them, and imputed to them by the Father; and is what they now have, not in hope, but in hand; their faith having received it, as their juſtifying righteouſneſs; in which they will ever be found, living and dying: but eternal glory and felicity is here intended, called hope; becauſe it is the object of hope, or is what is hoped for; it is unſeen, as what is hoped for is; it is future, and what is to be enjoyed hereafter, and therefore hoped for; it is certain, poſſible to be enjoyed, though with difficulty; which gives room for hope, and exerciſes and tries that grace; the foundation and encouragement of hope, in it are the perſon, blood, ſacrifice, and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, who is our hope: and hence it is ſtiled the hope of righteouſneſs, becauſe none but righteous perſons ſhall enjoy it; and that by virtue, and in conſequence of their being juſtified by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which gives them their title to it; and hence they look for it, and ſhall enjoy it, on the foot of juſtice, as well as of grace and goodneſs: waiting for it, ſuppoſes it to be certain, real, ſolid, ſubſtantial, valuable, and worth waiting for; which when poſſeſſed, will be with the utmoſt pleaſure, and be abundantly ſatisfying; and that the perſons that wait for it, have knowledge, and at leaſt hope of intereſt in it; and do highly value and eſteem it, having their hearts ſet on it, and looking with contempt on the things of time and ſenſe, in compariſon of it: the manner in which they wait is, through the Spirit, and by faith; the Syriac verſion reads, through the Spirit, which is of faith; that is, by the Spirit received through faith; ſee ch. iii. 14. but it is beſt to conſider them apart; believers look and wait for heaven, under the influence and encouragement of the Spirit of God; who is the author of the faith by which they look for it, and of the hope which is concerned with it; and who is the revealer and applier of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, the foundation of it; and which gives ſome glimpſes of the heavenly glory to the ſaints, ſhews them their intereſt in it, witneſſes to their ſonſhip, and ſo to their heirſhip; and is the pledge and earneſt of their inheritance; all which gives great ſtrength and encouragement to faith, by which they alſo expect it; believing not only the reality of it, but their own intereſt in it; and ſo walk by faith in the believing views thereof, until they receive the end of it.

Ver. 6. For in Chriſt Jeſus, &c.] The Arabic verſion reads, in the religion of Chriſt; in the religion of Moſes, or of the Jews under the former diſpenſation, the things after mentioned were of ſome moment and conſideration; but are of no account in the chriſtian religion, and under the Goſpel diſpenſation: circumciſion and uncircumciſion make no difference in the church of Chriſt, or are any bar to communion with it; nor do they make any alteration in the love and favour of Chriſt, who is all in all to his people, whether Jews or Gentiles; nor have they any influence at all on ſalvation, Chriſt being a common Saviour to the circumciſed and uncircumciſed; nor are they any evidence for or againſt a perſon's being in Chriſt, or having an intereſt in him: neither circumciſion availeth any thing; not now as a command and ordinance of God, being aboliſhed by Chriſt; nor as a type, having its accompliſhment in him, and his people; nor as a privilege, giving any preference in any reſpect to the Jew above the Gentile; nor is it of any weight or conſequence, or has any concern in the buſineſs of ſalvation: nor uncircumciſion; it is no hindrance to the enjoyment of the Goſpel, to entrance into a Goſpel-church ſtate, or to admiſſion to the ordinances of it; nor to the participation of the bleſſings of grace, as juſtification, pardon, adoption, tion, and eternal life: but faith which works by love; faith has a concern in juſtification and ſalvation, not by way of cauſal influence, but as it is that grace which receives the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, through which we are ſaved, and kept by the power of God unto ſalvation; yet not any ſort of faith, but that which is operative, is attended with good works; and which works itſelf by love to God, to Chriſt, to his people, ways, worſhip, truths, and ordinances. The Syriac verſion renders it, דמתגמרא, which is perfected by love; that is, is ſhewed to be right, true, and genuine thereby; ſee James ii. 22.

Ver. 7. Ye did run well, &c.] In the chriſtian race; when they firſt ſet out in a profeſſion of religion, they embraced and held faſt, and were zealouſly attached to the truths of the Goſpel; they were in the lively exerciſe of grace on its proper object, and very diligent in the diſcharge of duty; they made great proficiency in the knowledge of divine things, and ran with chearfulneſs and without wearineſs in the ways of Chriſt, and in the paths of truth and holineſs. The metaphor is taken from runners in a race; ſee 1 Cor. ix. 24. ſo far this is ſaid to their commendation, but this ſhould have been perſiſted in: who did hinder you; not the Apoſtle, or any of his brethren; no, they encouraged them to go on, and gave them all the aſſiſtance they could, to help them forward; but it was the falſe Apoſtles that hindered them, who did all they could to remove them to another Goſpel, and turn them aſide out of the right way: that ye ſhould not obey the truth? of the Goſpel, particularly the truth of juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; which they did not ſo chearfully embrace, and ſhew ſuch a reſpect unto, they had formerly done; ſee ch. iii. 1. and which he ſays not by way of enquiry, but of complaint and concern; and with ſome indignation againſt the perſons who had been the means of hindering their chriſtian progreſs, and with a view to reclaim the Galatians if poſſible.

Ver. 8. This perſuaſion cometh not of him that calleth you.] That is, the opinion they were perſuaded to believe; and which the Syriac verſion renders, פיסכון, your perſuaſion; this is not of God, who had called them into the grace of Chriſt; nor of Chriſt, who had called them to the knowledge of himſelf, and communion with him; nor of the Spirit of Chriſt, who had called them with an holy calling, and who ſtill continued to call them to repentance; nor of any faithful miniſter of the Goſpel, who had been concerned as an inſtrument in their effectual vocation; meaning the notion they were perſuaded to give into, that circumciſion and the works of the law, were neceſſary to ſalvation, and that theſe were to be joined with the righteouſneſs of Chriſt for juſtification; ſuch a conceit as this could never be of God, nor any evangelical miniſter, but muſt be of ſatan or his emiſſaries, the falſe Apoſtles.

Ver. 9. A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump.] A proverbial expreſſion pretty much in uſe with the Jews; ſee 1 Cor. v. 6. reſpecting either perſons or things; and is in anſwer to, or prevents an objection that might be made, or ſomething that might be ſaid, in favour of theſe churches; that their caſe was not ſo bad, or the danger they were in ſo great, as was repreſented by the Apoſtle; ſince they were only a few perſons that propagated this notion, and but few that received it, at leaſt thoroughly gave into it; and that if it was an error, it was but a ſmall one, and only regarded a ſingle ritual, or a few rituals of the law; to which the Apoſtle replies, by ſuppoſing, but not granting this to be the caſe, ſince they were pretty generally declined, and the error was not a ſlight one, that as a little ſour leaven influences and ferments a large maſs, or lump of dough, and makes it of the ſame nature with it, ſo a ſmall error in doctrine, as it may be thought to be, increaſes to more ungodlineſs, and eats as doth a canker; and though a few hands may be firſt concerned in propagating it, and but few be infected with it, yet theſe may ſoon ſpread the contagion through the whole ſociety: wherefore errors and falſe teachers ſhould be nipped in the bud, and ſtopped in their beginnings, how inconſiderable ſoever they and their tenets may be judged to be.

Ver. 10. I have confidence in you through the Lord, &c.] Though the Apoſtle had ſaid many things which carried in them the appearance of roughneſs and ſeverity, yet he ſtill entertained hopes of them, that they were not ſo far gone, but that they might be brought back again; and he here expreſſes his confidence of it. This confidence in them is not of faith, for no truſt is to be put in men; no, not in the beſt; but of charity, or love, which hopes all things, and believes all things; and which proceeded upon a thorough perſuaſion he had, that there was ſome good thing in them; and therefore was confident, that he that had begun the good work, would perform it, and not ſuffer them to be carried away finally and totally, with the error of the wicked: and this confidence he had, through the Lord; either through the Spirit of the Lord, whoſe office it is to lead into all truth, as it is in Jeſus; and who had ſuggeſted this to the Apoſtle, and poſſeſſed him of this confidence; ſo that it was not a conjecture and fancy of his, but an intimation from the Spirit of the Lord: or through the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, or in the Lord, Chriſt, as the phraſe may be rendered; that is, on account of their being in Chriſt, which the Apoſtle hoped and believed; where they were ſafe and ſecure from a final and total ſeduction; he was confident, that whatever they might ſeem to be now, things would take a different turn in time: that you will be none otherwiſe minded; than he was, and they formerly were, when the Goſpel was firſt preached to them, and embraced by them; and particularly in the doctrine of juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which was the doctrine then called in queſtion, and in debate: but he that troubleth you; he ſeems to have reſpect to ſome particular perſon, who was the principal of the falſe teachers, and moſt famous for his learning, knowledge, gifts, and abilities; and who had done, and was likely to do the moſt miſchief among them; and was a troubler of God's Iſrael, and of the pure waters of the ſanctuary; he unſettled their minds, and cauſed them to halt between two, Moſes and Chriſt, law and Goſpel, and the doctrines of juſtification by works, and by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; the one being what gave true ſolid peace and comfort, the other introduced confuſion, diſtreſs, and fears: the Apoſtle threatens him, and declares that he ſhall bear his judgment; or condemnation, or damnation, his puniſhment in this, or the other world; for the judgment, or condemnation of ſuch that bring in damnable hereſies, and pernicious errors, lingreth not, will not be long delayed; and their damnation ſlumbreth not, but in a little time will ſeize upon them; when as they have rejected Chriſt as a ſinbearing and atoning ſaviour, and his righteouſneſs as the juſtifying one, they will, agreeable to their own doctrine, be left to bear their puniſhment themſelves, which will be intolerable, and to all eternity; nor ſhall any eſcape it, whoſoever he be; tho' ever ſo knowing and learned, and let his parts and abilities be what they will; or he be ever ſo famous among men, and cried up as a moſt excellent preacher.

Ver. 11. And I brethren, if I yet preach circumciſion, &c.] The Apoſtle was traduced by the falſe teachers, as a preacher of circumciſion himſelf in ſome places; and this they did partly to ſhew him to be a variable and inconſtant man, who preached one doctrine in one place, and another in another place, and ſo not to be attended to; and partly with others, to draw them into their ſcheme upon his authority: what might give them the handle, or at leaſt what they improved to this purpoſe, might be his circumciſing of Timothy; but tho' he did this as a thing indifferent, and for the ſake of the Jews to make them eaſy; yet he never preached it after his converſion, and much leſs as neceſſary to juſtification and ſalvation, as theſe men did. This calumny he refutes by putting the following queſtion or queſtions; why do I yet ſuffer perſecution? as is clear he did, for being againſt it, and preaching it down; great part of the perſecutions the Apoſtle endured was from the Jews, and that on account of his teaching them every where that were among the Gentiles to forſake Moſes, and that they ſhould not circumciſe their children, and walk after the cuſtoms of their nation; a clear point this, that he did not preach it, had he, perſecution from this quarter would not have followed him; and could he have done it with a good conſcience, he muſt act a very weak part in ſuffering perſecution on that account. The Arabic verſion gives the words a very different turn, and yet furniſhes an anſwer to the calumny; why do I perſecute him that uſes it? that is, if I am a preacher of it, why am I ſo warm and violent an oppoſer of thoſe that ſubmit to it? theſe things are ſo oppoſite that there is no reconciling them; to the ſame purpoſe is the Ethiopic verſion: then is the offence of the croſs ceaſed. The laſt mentioned verſion reads it, the croſs of Chriſt; and ſo the Alexandrian copy; meaning not the croſs of affliction, reproach, and perſecution, which Chriſt has enjoined every follower of his to take up and bear for his ſake, and is offenſive to the carnal man; nor the croſs on which he ſuffered, or the ſufferings of the croſs; but the doctrine of ſalvation by a crucified Chriſt, which was an offence and a ſtumbling block to the Jews: now if the Apoſtle had preached circumciſion as neceſſary to ſalvation, the other doctrine muſt have been dropped, and conſequently the offence taken at it muſt have ceaſed whereas it was not. The Syriac verſion reads by way of queſtion, is the offence of the croſs ceaſed? no it is not, a plain caſe then this, that the Apoſtle did not preach circumciſion, but only a crucified Chriſt, as neceſſary to ſalvation. Moreover, the Jews that believed, would not have been ſo offended as they were at his preaching, had he preached the one as well as the other; their offence was not that he preached Chriſt crucified, but that he preached, that by the croſs of Chriſt circumciſion and the other rituals of the ceremonial law were not aboliſhed.

Ver. 12. I would they were even cut off which trouble you.] Theſe words are a ſolemn wiſh of the Apoſtle's, with reſpect to the falſe teachers, or an imprecation of the judgment of God upon them; that they might be cut off out of the land of the living by the immediate hand of God, that they might do no more miſchief to the churches of Chriſt: this he ſaid not out of hatred to their perſons, but from a concern for the glory of God, and the good of his people. The word here uſed, anſwers to the Hebrew word קפח, and which is often made uſe of by the Jews in ſolemn imprecations; we read [o] of a righteous man מקפח את בניו, that cut off his children; the Gloſs upon it is, “ he “ uſed to ſay when he made any imprecation, “ אקפח את בני, may I cut off my children;” that is, may they die, may they be cut off by the hand of God, and I bury them; “ ſays R. Tarphon [p], “ may my children be cut off, if theſe books of “ hereticks come into my hands, that I will burn “ them; and ſays the ſame Rabbi [q], may I cut off my children, or may my children be cut off, if this ſentence or conſtitution is cut off, or ſhould periſh. There is another uſe of this word, which may have a place here, for it ſometimes ſignifies to confute a perſon, or refute his notion [r]. “ 'Tis “ a tradition of the Rabbins, that after the departure of R. Meir, R. Judah ſaid to his diſciples, “ let not the diſciples of R. Meir come in hither, “ for they are contentious; and not to learn the “ law do they come, but לקפחני בהלכות, to cut “ me off; (i. e. as the Gloſs ſays, to ſhew how “ ſharp they are that none can ſtand againſt them) “ to confute and overcome me, by their ſentences, “ or conſtitutions.” So the Apoſtle here might wiſh that the mouths of theſe falſe teachers were ſtopped, their notions refuted, that they might give them no more trouble; to which agrees the Arabic verſion; they that trouble you I wiſh they were dumb; or that their mouths were ſtopped, as ſuch vain talkers ſhould be; ſee Tit. i. 10, 11. or the ſenſe of the Apoſtle is, that it was his will and deſire that theſe men ſhould be cut off from the communion of the church; with which views he mentions the proverbial expreſſion in ver. 9. with which compare 1 Cor. v. 6, 7. or that they would cut themſelves off, by withdrawing from them, going out from among them, and leaving them, as theſe men ſometimes did.

Ver. 13. For brethren, ye have been called unto liberty, &c.] He calls them brethren, to teſtify his affection to them, and to put them in mind of their relation to one another, which required mutual love, a thing he is about to preſs them to; he aſſerts that they were called not merely externally, but internally, by the effectual grace of God, out of bondage to ſin, ſatan, and the law, unto the liberty of the Goſpel and of the grace of God; that liberty wherewith Chriſt had made them free, ver. 1. this he ſaid in a judgment of charity, hoping well of them: only uſe not liberty for an occaſion to the fleſh; corrupt nature, which in unregenerate men takes encouragement from, and makes an ill uſe of the beſt of things, as the mercy and patience of God; and not only takes an occaſion by the law, forbidding ſin to work and ſtir up all manner of concupiſcence; but alſo by the Goſpel, and the doctrines of it, ſuch as eternal election, free juſtification, &c. which tho' the ſource and fountain, the barrier and ſecurity of all true and real holineſs, are improved and abuſed by wicked minds, under the influence and inſtigation of ſatan to vile purpoſes; and tho' regenerate perſons are not in the fleſh, and don't live after it, yet that is in them, and there is a proneneſs in them to ſin; and ſatan is watching all opportunities and advantages againſt them; ſo that there is need for ſuch a caution as this, that they do not miſuſe their chriſtian liberty by indulging the fleſh and the luſts of it, which is apt to take an occaſion to cheriſh its luſts, and eſpecially when given: Chriſt's free men ſhould not do ſo, for that is to diſgrace the doctrine of chriſtian liberty, to enthral themſelves in bondage inſtead of uſing their liberty aright, and to give the enemy occaſion to blaſpheme: the doctrine of chriſtian liberty may be abuſed, or uſed as an occaſion to the fleſh, and to fulfil the luſts of it; when under a pretence thereof men think themſelves exempt from obedience to the civil magiſtrate, which is uſing this liberty as a cloke of maliciouſneſs; or that they are free from obedience to the law of God, as a rule of walk and converſation; or from ſubjection to the ordinances of the Goſpel; or when they uſe the creatures God has given them the free uſe of without thankfulneſs, and in an immoderate manner; and when they make things indifferent which are not, or uſe indifferent things to the prejudice of others; and their liberty becomes a ſtumbling-block to weak chriſtians, which the Apoſtle ſeems greatly to regard here; ſince he adds, but by love ſerve one another: the Vulgate Latin verſion reads, by the love of the Spirit; and ſo ſome copies; Goſpel liberty and the ſervice of the ſaints are not all inconſiſtent; as it becomes them to love one another, as the new command of Chriſt, their profeſſion of religion, and their relation to each other require, ſo they ſhould ſhew their love by their ſervice; as by praying one with and for another, by bearing each other's burdens, ſympathizing with and communicating to each other in things temporal and ſpiritual; in forbearing with and forgiving one another; by admoniſhing each other when there is occaſion for it, in a meek, tender, and brotherly way; by inſtructing and building up one another on their moſt holy faith, and by ſtirring up one another to all the duties of religion, private and publick.

Ver. 14. For all the law is fulfilled in one word, &c.] Not the ceremonial law, to which acts of mercy, kindneſs, and love are oppoſed, and from which they are diſtinguiſhed; but the law of the decalogue given to Moſes on mount Sinai, and by him to the people of the Jews; and intends either only the ſecond table of it, ſince only love to the neighbour is mentioned; or elſe the whole of it, both tables, ſince 'tis ſaid, all the law; which by Chriſt is reduced to two heads, love to God, and love to the neighbour; and tho' the former is not here expreſſed, it is implied as a cauſe in the effect, for the love of God is the cauſe, and ſo the evidence of love to the neighbour; nor can there be the one without the other. The two tables of the law conſiſt of עשרת הדברים, ten words; as the [s] Jews commonly call them, and we the decalogue, and yet they are fulfilled in one; that is, they are to be brought into ſuch a compendium, reduced to ſuch an head; or as the Apoſtle in a parallel place ſays, they may briefly be comprehended in this ſaying, Rom. xiii. 9. The Jews make the commandments of the law to be a very large number indeed, but at laſt reduce them to one, as the Apoſtle here does, "ſix hundred and thirteen commandments, "they ſay [t], were given to Moſes——David came "and reduced them to eleven, Pſal. xv. Iſaiah "came and reduced them to ſix, Iſ. xxxiii. 15. "Micah came and reduced them to three, Mic. vi. 8. "Iſaiah came and reduced them to two, Iſ. lvi. 1. "Amos came and reduced them to one, Amos v. 4. "but this being objected to, 'tis obſerved that "Habakuk came והעמידן על אחת, and reduced "them to one, Hab. ii. 4." that is faith, as here the Apoſtle reduces them to love: even in this, thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf: theſe words are taken out of Lev. xix. 18. and which R. Akiba ſays [u], agreeable with the Apoſtle, whoſe cotemporary he was, is כלל גדול בתורה, the grand general rule in the law; or the grand comprehenſive of the law: the object of love the neighbour, ſignifies not only as there the Jews explain it, thoſe of their own people, or proſelytes to their religion; but all ſorts of men, whether in a natural, civil, or ſpiritual relation; and whether thoſe that do us good or do us ill, friends or enemies: the meaſure or rule of love is, as thyſelf; and deſigns not an equality of affection, but a likeneſs of effects; that is, to do the ſame kind acts of love to others, one would chuſe to have done to ourſelves: and this is the fulfilling of the law; that is, ſo far as a man loves aright, ſo far he fulfills the law; not that he does it perfectly, for man in his fallen ſtate is unable to do that, for the law is exceeding broad, and reaches to thoughts, deſires, and inclinations, as well as to words and deeds; and beſides, love ſaid to be the fulfilling of it, is imperfect: hence then there can be no juſtification by works of charity, nor by any ſervices of men, which at beſt are imperfect; nor are they done in their own ſtrength, and without the grace of God; nor is there any that can be ſaid to have fulfilled the law perfectly but Chriſt, and to him muſt we look for a juſtifying righteouſneſs. Theſe words contain a reaſon engaging to love one another, and to do all kind of offices of love to each other; ſince 'tis a main and principal thing contained in the law, and to which that may be reduced.

Ver. 15. But if ye bite and devour one another, &c.] Another reaſon inducing to love, is taken from the pernicious conſequences of a contrary ſpirit and conduct. The alluſion is to beaſts of prey falling upon and devouring one another: for wolves or dogs to worry ſheep is not ſtrange; but for ſheep to diſtreſs one another, is unnatural. The Apoſtle does not ſay, if grievous wolves ſhould enter in among you and not ſpare the flock; but ſuggeſts if they themſelves ſhould act the part of wolves to one another; having reference to their controverſies about the law and circumciſion, and the neceſſity thereof to juſtification and ſalvation; which were managed with great heat and bitterneſs, occaſioned great contentions, and threatned them with diviſions, parties, and factions; and were attended with envy and malice, with reproachful words, biting ſarcaſms, ſcandalous invectives, and injurious actions, which muſt be of bad conſequence: hence he adds, take heed that ye be not conſumed one of another; that is, either beware leſt each others particular peace and comfort be deſtroyed, which is oftentimes done this way, tho' a perſon's ſtate and condition Godward may be ſafe; or leſt their church-ſtate ſhould be deſtroyed and come to nothing, ſince love is the cement of it, which being looſened, threatens a diſſolution; for as no civil community, either publick or private, divided againſt itſelf, can ſtand long, ſo no religious one; and for want of love the Lord threatens to remove, and ſometimes does remove the candleſtick out of its place.

[u] In Jarchi in Lev. xix. 18.

Ver. 16. This I ſay then, walk in the Spirit, &c.] The advice the Apoſtle thinks fit to give, and which he would have obſerved is, to walk in the Spirit, that is, either after the Spirit of God; making the word inſpired by him the rule of behaviour, which as it is the ſtandard of faith, ſo of practice, and is the lamp unto our feet, and the light unto our path; taking him himſelf for a guide, who not only guides into all truth, but in the way of holineſs and righteouſneſs unto the land of uprightneſs; and depending upon his grace and ſtrength for aſſiſtance throughout the whole of our walk and converſation: or in the exerciſe of the graces of the Spirit of God; as in the exerciſe of faith upon the perſon and grace of Chriſt, of which the Spirit is the author; and in love to God, Chriſt, and one another, which is a fruit of the Spirit; and in humility, lowlineſs of mind, meekneſs and condeſcenſion; all which is to walk in the Spirit, or ſpiritually, and ſtrengthens the argument for love the Apoſtle is upon: and this he encourages to by obſerving, and ye ſhall not fulfil the luſt of the fleſh; he does not ſay there ſhall be no fleſh, nor any luſt of the fleſh in them if they walk ſpiritually; or that the fleſh ſhould not act and operate in them; or that they ſhould do no ſinful action; all which is only true of Chriſt; and the contrary is to be found and obſerved in all true chriſtians, tho' ever ſo ſpiritual; but that they ſhould not fulfil or perfect the luſt of the fleſh; ſhould not give up themſelves entirely to the power and dictates of the fleſh, ſo as to be under it and at its command, and be obedient ſervants and ſlaves unto it; for in this ſenſe only, ſuch that are ſpiritual do not commit ſin, they don't make a trade of it, it is not their conſtant employ or courſe of converſation.

Ver. 17. For the fleſh luſteth againſt the Spirit, &c.] By fleſh is meant, not the carnal or literal ſenſe of the ſcripture, which is Origen's Gloſs, as militating againſt the ſpiritual ſenſe of it; nor the ſenſual part of man rebelling againſt his rational powers; but the corruption of nature, which ſtill is in regenerate perſons: and is ſo called becauſe it is propagated by carnal generation; has for its object carnal things; its luſts and works are fleſhly; and tho' it has its ſeat in the heart, it ſhews itſelf in the fleſh or members of the body, which are yielded as inſtruments of unrighteouſneſs; and it makes and denominates men carnal, even believers themſelves ſo far as it prevails: by the Spirit is meant the internal principle of grace in a regenerate man, and is ſo called from the author of it, the Spirit of God, whoſe name it bears, becauſe it is his workmanſhip; and from the ſeat and ſubject of it, the ſoul or ſpirit of man; and from the nature of it, it is ſpiritual, a new heart and a new ſpirit; its objects are ſpiritual, and it minds, ſavours, and delights in ſpiritual things: and the meaning of the luſting of the one againſt the other, for it is reciprocal, hence it follows, and the Spirit againſt the fleſh, is that the one wills, chuſes, deſires and affects what is contrary to the other; ſo the fleſh, or the old man, the carnal I, in regenerate perſons, wills, chuſes, deſires and loves carnal things which are contrary to the Spirit or principle of grace in the ſoul; and on the other hand, the Spirit or the new man, the ſpiritual I, wills, chuſes, deſires, approves and loves ſpiritual things, ſuch as are contrary to corrupt nature; and this ſenſe is ſtrengthened by the Oriental verſions. The Syriac verſion reads, for the fleſh deſires that דנכא which hurts, or is contrary to the Spirit; and the Spirit deſires that which hurts, or is contrary to the fleſh; and much in the ſame way the Arabic verſion renders it, for the fleſh deſires that which militates againſt the Spirit, and the Spirit deſires that which militates againſt the fleſh; to which the Ethiopic verſion agrees, reading it thus, for the fleſh deſires what the Spirit would not, and the Spirit deſires what the fleſh would not; the reaſon whereof is ſuggeſted in the next clauſe: and theſe are contrary the one to the other; as light and darkneſs, fire and water, or any two oppoſites can be thought to be; they are contrary in their nature, actings, and effects; there is not only a repugnancy to each other, but a continual war, conflict and combat, is maintained between them; the fleſh is the law in the members or force of ſin, which wars againſt the Spirit, the law in the mind, or the force and power of the principle of grace; theſe are the company of two armies, to be ſeen in the Shulamite, fighting one againſt the other. So the Jews ſay[w] of the good imagination, and of the evil one, by which they mean the ſame as here, that they are like Abraham and Lot; and that "tho' they are brethren, joined "in one body הם אויבים זה לזה, they are enemies "to one another:" hence it follows, ſo that ye cannot do the good that ye would; which may be underſtood both of evil things and of good things. The former ſeems to be chiefly the Apoſtle's ſenſe; ſince the whole of this text is a reaſon given why thoſe who walk ſpiritually ſhall not fulfil the luſts of the fleſh, becauſe they have a powerful governing principle in them, the Spirit or grace; which tho' the fleſh luſts againſt, and oppoſes itſelf unto, yet that alſo riſes up againſt the fleſh, and often hinders it from doing the works and luſts of it. There is in regenerate men a propenſity and inclination to ſin, a carnal I that wills and deſires ſin, and wiſhes for an opportunity to do it, which when it offers, the fleſh ſtrongly ſolicites to it; but the Spirit, or the internal principle of grace, oppoſes the motion; and like another Joſeph ſays, how can I commit this great wickedneſs and ſin againſt a God of ſo much love and grace? it is a voice behind and even in a believer, which when he is tempted to turn to the right hand or the left, ſays this is the way walk in it, and will not ſuffer him to go into crooked paths with the workers of iniquity; and ſo ſin cannot have the dominion over him, becauſe he is under grace, as a reigning principle; and the old man cannot do the evil things he would, being under the reſtraints of mighty grace. This is the Apoſtle's principal ſenſe, and beſt ſuits with his reaſoning in the context; but inaſmuch as the luſting and oppoſition of theſe two principles are mutual and reciprocal, the other ſenſe may alſo be taken in; as that oftentimes by reaſon of the prevalence of corrupt nature, and power of indwelling ſin, a regenerate man does the evil he would not, and cannot do the good he would; for he would always do good and nothing elſe, and even as the angels do it in heaven; but he cannot, becauſe of this oppoſite principle, the fleſh.

Ver. 18. But if ye be led by the Spirit, &c.] That is of God, who is the guide and leader of his people. 'Tis a metaphor taken from the leading of perſons that are blind; as ſuch are before converſion, and whom the Spirit of God leads in ways they knew not, and in paths they had not known: or from the leading of children, and teaching them to go; ſo the Spirit leads regenerate perſons and teaches them to walk by faith in Chriſt. This act of leading ſuppoſes life in the perſons led, for dead men can't be led; the Spirit is firſt a Spirit of life from Chriſt before he is a leader; and alſo it ſuppoſes ſome ſtrength, tho' a good deal of weakneſs; were there no ſpiritual ſtrength derived from Chriſt, they could not be led; and if there was no weakneſs, there would be no need of leading; it is an inſtance of powerful and efficacious grace upon them, yet not contrary to their wills, tho' they are led, they are not forced; they go freely, being led, as there is good reaſon for it; for the Spirit of God always leads for their profit and advantage, and for the ſpiritual delight, pleaſure and comfort of their ſouls; he leads out of the ways of ſin, and ſo of ruin and deſtruction, and from mount Sinai, and all dependance on a legal and moral righteouſneſs; he leads to Chriſt, to his perſon for ſhelter, ſafety and ſalvation, to his blood for pardon and cleanſing, to his righteouſneſs for juſtification, and to his fulneſs for every ſupply of grace; he leads into the preſence of God, and to his houſe and ordinances; he leads into the covenant of grace, to the bleſſings, promiſes and mediator of it; he leads into all truth as it is in Jeſus, in the ways of faith and truth, and in the paths of righteouſneſs and holineſs, and always in a right way, tho' ſometimes in a rough one, to the city of their habitation; he leads from one degree of grace to another, and at laſt to glory: all which he does gradually; he leads by little and little into a man's ſinfulneſs, and to ſee his intereſt in Chriſt, and by degrees into the doctrines of the Goſpel, and the everlaſting love of the three perſons; and proportionable to the ſtrength he gives, and as they are able to bear: now ſuch perſons as theſe have nothing to fear from the law of God: ye are not under the law; ſuch are not only delivered from the law in fact, but in their own apprehenſions; they have the comfortable knowledge and experience of it; the law is no terrifying law to them; it works no wrath in them; they are delivered from the ſpirit of bondage to fear, by the Spirit of God, by whom they are led; nor are they under it, nor do they need it as a preſſing forcing law to duty; they delight in it, and chearfully ſerve it, being conſtrained by love, and not awed by fear; nor are its accuſations and charges regarded, or to be regarded by ſuch who are led by the Spirit to Chriſt, the end of the law for righteouſneſs; and they are entirely freed from its curſe and condemnation, tho' they are under it, and deſire to be under it, as held forth by Chriſt the king of ſaints; and under the Spirit's influence and guidance, yield a chearful and evangelical obedience to it.

[w] Tzeror Hammor, fol. 15. 3.

Ver. 19. Now the works of the fleſh are manifeſt, &c.] By fleſh is meant, corrupt nature as before, and by the works of it, not only external acts of ſin, but inward luſts; for ſuch are here mentioned among its works, as hatred, wrath, envyings, &c. and both external and internal acts are ſo called, becauſe they ſpring from the fleſh, or corrupt nature, and are what that urges and ſolicites to, and are wrought thereby, and are what denominate and ſhew men to be carnal: theſe are ſaid to be manifeſt; not that they are all, and always publickly done, and are open to the ſight of men; for they are works of darkneſs, and often done in ſecret, tho' they are always manifeſt to God the ſearcher of hearts, and will be brought to light in the day of judgment; but they are known to be ſins in ſome meaſure by the light of nature, and eſpecially by the law of God; and a clear caſe it is, that they are contrary to the Spirit, both to the Spirit of God, and to the principle of grace he forms in the heart; and that ſuch who live in the commiſſion of them are not led by him, nor are under the influence of his grace: which are theſe; tho' all are not mentioned, only ſome of the chief, by which judgment may be made of the reſt: adultery; this is left out in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions, and in the Alexandrian copy; it is a defilement of the marriage-bed, and is the ſin of uncleanneſs committed by two perſons, one of which at leaſt is in a married ſtate, and is condemned by the law of God and light of nature: fornication; which tho' by many of the Gentiles was reckoned no ſin, or a very ſmall one, ſtands here among the works of the fleſh, that are manifeſt and to be avoided; it is the ſin of uncleanneſs committed by perſons in a ſingle ſtate: uncleanneſs; it is a general name for all unchaſtity, in thought, word, or action; and may here deſign more eſpecially all unnatural luſts, as ſodomy, ſelf-pollution, &c. laſciviouſneſs; or wantonneſs, all luſtful dalliance, every thing that leads on to acts of uncleanneſs, or attend them, as impure words, filthy geſtures, and the like.

Ver. 20. Idolatry, &c.] Which ſome underſtand of covetouſneſs, which is ſo called; but rather it means the worſhipping of other Gods, or of graven images: witchcraft; any real or pretended league and aſſociation with the devil, ſeeking to converſe with familiar ſpirits, to gain unlawful knowledge, or to do hurt to fellow-creatures; which as it is doing honour to ſatan, detracts from the glory of God, and rightly follows idolatry; conjuration, ſoothſaying, necromancy, and all kind of magic are included and condemned hereby: hatred; internal hatred of any man's perſon, even of our very enemies is forbidden; in the original text it is enmities, as the carnal mind is nothing elſe, but enmity againſt God and Chriſt, againſt law and Goſpel, and all good men, and every thing that is good: variance or contentions; fighting and quarrelling, by words ſcandalous and reproachful, what we commonly call ſcolding: emulations or zeals; not good, but bad; a boiling and riſing up of the ſpirits and paſſions, at the honour and happineſs of another: wrath or wraths; violent emotions of the mind, moving to revenge, and ſeeking the hurt and miſchief of others: ſtrife or ſtrifes; perpetual contradictions and cavillings, either expreſſed by words, or working in the mind; for this ſtrife may be in a man's heart, according to Jam. iii. 14, 16. ſeditions or diviſions; ſchiſms and factions, diſſentions in things domeſtic, civil, and religious: hereſies; bad principles and tenets, relating to doctrine, which are ſubverſive of the fundamentals of the Goſpel and the chriſtian religion; and are the produce of a man's own invention, and the matter of his choice, without any foundation in the word of God; and theſe are works of the fleſh, for they ſpring from a corrupt and carnal mind, and are propagated with carnal views, as popular applauſe, worldly advantage, and indulging the luſts of the fleſh.

Ver. 21. Envyings, &c.] Uneaſy diſtreſſing tortures of the mind, grieving at the good of others, that any ſhould be in an equal, or in a better condition than themſelves: murders; deſtroying of mens lives, which is often the conſequence of the above evils: drunkenneſs; exceſs in drinking of wine or ſtrong drink, whereby the ſtomach is overcharged, the mind is intoxicated, and the body enfeebled and unable to perform its office; this is often the ſource of many, or all of the works of the fleſh before-mentioned: revellings; exceſs in food, nocturnal riotings in eating, drinking, dancing, ſinging, chambering and wantonneſs. The Syriac verſion renders it, זמרא, laſcivious ſinging; and the Arabic verſion, ſongs; which are a part of the nightly revels: and ſuch like; which are of the ſame nature and kind; ſo the Apoſtle ſhuts up the account, it being too tedious to give an enumeration of all the works of the fleſh; nor was it neceſſary, judgment may be made of the reſt by theſe; nor might it be ſo proper, ſince the carnal heart is but the more pleaſed with, and irritated by, the mention of evil things: of the which I tell you before; before the judge comes and the awful judgment proceeds, when theſe will all be made manifeſt, and every man will be judged according to his works: this the Apoſtle did, as putting them in mind of the evil nature of theſe things, and aſſuring them of the bad conſequences that would follow, if grace prevented not: as I have alſo told you in time paſt; when he firſt preached among them, and warned them to flee from the wrath to come; he then laid before them the evil nature of theſe things, the dreadful effects of them, and ſhewed that there was no ſalvation from them, but by Chriſt: and that they which do ſuch things, ſhall not inherit the kingdom of God; by which is meant the heavenly glory, called a kingdom, becauſe of the grandeur and magnificence of that ſtate; and of God, becauſe it is of his preparing and giving, what he calls his to by his grace, and puts them into the poſſeſſion of, and where he reigns and will reign for ever, and ſhew forth the glory of his majeſty: this is poſſeſſed in a way of inheritance, which ſhews it to be a bequeſt of our heavenly Father's, a free-grace gift of his, and not to be obtained by the works of the law, or merits of men; but what belongs, and is peculiar to the children of God, who are ſo by adopting grace: now they that do ſuch works of the fleſh as before enumerated; that is, that live in the commiſſion of theſe things, whoſe whole lives are employed in ſuch work, living and dying in ſuch a ſtate, without repentance towards God and faith in Chriſt, ſhall never enjoy eternal life and happineſs; tho' ſuch who have done theſe things, being brought to a ſenſe of them, and to the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, for pardon and juſtification, for life and ſalvation; ſuch notwithſtanding the works of the fleſh done by them, ſhall thro' the free grace of God, and the propitiatory ſacrifice of Chriſt, inherit the kingdom and glory of God.

Ver. 22. But the fruit of the Spirit, &c.] Not of nature or man's free-will, as corrupted by ſin, for no good fruit ſprings from thence; but either of the internal principle of grace, called the Spirit, ver. 17. or rather of the holy Spirit, as the Ethiopic verſion reads it; the graces of which are called fruit and not works, as the actions of the fleſh are; becauſe they are owing to divine influence, efficacy and bounty, as the fruits of the earth are, to which the alluſion is; and not to a man's ſelf, to the power and principles of nature; and becauſe they ariſe from a ſeed, either the incorruptible ſeed of internal grace, which ſeminally contains all graces in it, or the bleſſed Spirit who is the ſeed that remains in believers; and becauſe they are in the excerciſe of them acceptable unto God thro' Chriſt, and are grateful and delightful to Chriſt himſelf, being his pleaſant fruits; which as they come from him, as the author of them, they are exerciſed on him as the object of them, under the influence of the Spirit; and becauſe they are profitable to them that are poſſeſſed of them, ſeeing the promiſe of this life and that which is to come is annexed to them; and the good works which are done in conſequence of them, are profitable to men: once more, as the works of the fleſh are the unfruitful works of darkneſs, and make men ſo, and therefore can't be called fruit properly; theſe, as they are fruits, and are rightly and properly ſo called, ſo they make men fruitful, and to abound in divine things, and are as follow: Love. This the Apoſtle begins with, it being the fulfilling of the law, the bond of perfectneſs, and without which a profeſſion of religion is inſignificant; it may be underſtood of love to God, of which every man's heart is deſtitute, being enmity againſt God, until regenerated by the Spirit of God; when he ſheds abroad the love of God in the heart, and which is the ground and reaſon of any man's truly loving God; and alſo of love to Chriſt, which the natural man feels nothing of till the Spirit of wiſdom and revelation, in the knowledge of Chriſt, opens his eyes to ſee the lovelineſs of his perſon, the ſuitableneſs of his grace, righteouſneſs and fulneſs, and the neceſſity of looking to him for life and ſalvation; and likewiſe of love to the ſaints, which a carnal man is a ſtranger to, until he is renewed by the Holy Ghoſt, who in regenerating him teaches him to love the brethren; and which is the evidence of his having paſſed from death to life, thro' the mighty power of his grace. Moreover, love to the houſe and worſhip of God, to the truths and ordinances of the Goſpel, all which men have naturally an averſion to may be included in this firſt fruit of the Spirit: the next follows, which is joy, even that which is in the Holy Ghoſt, and has him for its author. The object of it is God, not as an abſolute God, but as a covenant God and Father in Chriſt; as the God of ſalvation, as clothing with the robe of his Son's righteouſneſs, and as pardoning iniquity, tranſgreſſion and ſin, full atonement being made by the ſacrifice of Chriſt; who alſo is the object of this joy in his perſon, fulneſs, righteouſneſs, offices, relations, and when beheld, embraced, and enjoyed in a way of communion. This joy likewiſe, which is the produce of the Spirit, lies in ſpiritual things, and ariſes from an apprehenſion or good hope of intereſt in them, as juſtification, pardon, peace, adoption, and eternal glory; and is peculiar to ſuch who have the Spirit, for a ſtranger intermeddles not with this joy, nor can he form any judgment of it, and is even unſpeakable by the believer himſelf. Moreover, joy in the good of others, of fellow-creatures and fellow-chriſtians, in their outward and inward proſperity, in their temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal good, which as it is a grace of the Spirit, may well enough be thought to be at leaſt part of the ſenſe of the word here; ſince it follows upon, and is joined with love, and ſtands between that and peace, which is another fruit of the Spirit: and deſigns peace with God in a man's own conſcience, produced there by the Spirit of God, in conſequence of peace being made by the blood of Chriſt; and that thro' the application of the blood of Chriſt for pardon, and of his righteouſneſs for juſtification to the ſoul of a ſenſible ſinner by the bleſſed Spirit, the effect of which is peace, quietneſs and tranquillity of mind; alſo peace with men, with the ſaints, and with all others; for ſuch who are under a work of the Spirit of God, and are influenced and led by him, ſeek after the things which make for peace and edification among the brethren, and are deſirous if poſſible to live peaceably with all men: hence appears another grace in them, long-ſuffering; which intends not ſo much a patient waiting for good things to come, for more grace, and for glory, thro' the Spirit; but a patient bearing and enduring of preſent evils with joyfulneſs, being ſtrengthened by the Spirit with all might, according to his glorious power; being ſlow to anger, ready to forgive injuries, put up with affronts, and bear with, and forbear one another: and which is uſually accompanied with gentleneſs, humanity, affability, courteouſneſs, ſhewn both in words, geſtures, and actions; in imitation of the gentleneſs of Chriſt, and agreeable to that wiſdom, that heavenly doctrine of the Goſpel, which, among other things, is ſaid to be gentle, and eaſy to be intreated. To which is added goodneſs; and what elſe can come from the good Spirit of God, the author of the good work of grace upon the ſoul? and which diſpoſes it to acts of goodneſs unto men, in a natural, civil, moral, ſpiritual, and evangelic way, for the benefit both of ſoul and body; and which muſt here be underſtood, and which is well-pleaſing to God when done in the exerciſe of the following grace, faith; for tho' fidelity, both in words and actions, which is very ornamental to the Goſpel, and a profeſſion of religion may be meant; yet faith in Chriſt is not to be excluded, as it is generally by interpreters; for this is not of a man's ſelf, nor have all men it: it is a gift of God, the operation of his power, and the work of his Spirit, whence he is ſtiled the Spirit of faith; and which therefore muſt have a place among his fruits; and which lies and ſhews itſelf in believing in Chriſt for ſalvation, in embracing the doctrines of the Goſpel, and making a profeſſion of them, which is called the profeſſion of faith; all which, when right, comes from the Spirit of God.

Ver. 23. Meekneſs, &c.] Humility and lowlineſs of mind, of which Chriſt is an eminent example and pattern; and which the holy Spirit from him tranſcribes into the heart of a regenerate perſon; and lies in having mean thoughts of himſelf, in walking humbly with God, acknowledging every favour, being thankful for every bleſſing, and depending on his grace, and in behaving with modeſty and humility among men. The laſt of the fruits of the Spirit mentioned is temperance, or continence; and deſigns both chaſtity and ſobriety, and particularly moderation in eating and drinking. It may be obſerved, that theſe fruits of the Spirit are oppoſed to the works of the fleſh. So love is oppoſed to hatred; joy to emulations and envying; peace to variance, ſtrife and ſeditions; long-ſuffering, gentleneſs, goodneſs, and meekneſs to wrath and murders; faith to idolatry, witchcraft, and hereſies; and temperance to adultery, fornication, uncleanneſs, laſciviouſneſs, drunkenneſs, and revellings. Againſt ſuch there is no law; meaning, againſt ſuch fruits, graces, and good things; theſe being perfectly agreeable to the law of God, which is holy, juſt, and good, and ſpiritual; and are ſo far from being forbidden by it, that they are highly eſteemed and approved of by it: or againſt perſons that are poſſeſſed of ſuch fruits; for theſe appear to be in the Spirit, and to be led by the Spirit; and therefore are not under the law, and have nothing to fear from it, as a terrifying, accuſing, curſing, and condemning law. The works of the fleſh, and they that are of the fleſh, are ſuch that come under the notice and laſh of the law; and not the fruits of the Spirit, and they that are after the Spirit, as ſuch are who partake of his fruit.

Ver. 24. And they that are Chriſt's, &c.] Not all as yet that are ſecretly ſo, who are choſen in him, and by him, are given by the Father to him in covenant, and whom he has purchaſed by his blood, and conſiders as his people, his ſheep, and his children, tho' as yet they are not called by his grace; of theſe, as yet, what follows cannot be ſaid, and therefore muſt mean ſuch as are openly Chriſt's, whom he has laid hold on as his own in effectual vocation, who have his Spirit as a ſpirit of regeneration and ſanctification, who have truly believed in Chriſt, and have given up themſelves unto him. Have crucified the fleſh with the affections and luſts: by the fleſh is meant, not the natural body to be macerated and afflicted with faſtings, watchings, &c. but the corruption of nature, the old man and carnal heart. The Vulgate Latin verſion reads, their own fleſh; and ſo do the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions; their concern lying with their own, and not with the corruptions, affections, and luſts of others. By the affections and luſts are intended, not the natural affections and paſſions of the ſoul, and the deſires of it; but its vile and inordinate affections, its corrupt inclinations, evil deſires, and deceitful luſts; all which are crucified firſt with Chriſt, as the Arabic verſion reads; ſee Rom. vi. 6. and which are ſo aboliſhed, done away, and deſtroyed, by the ſacrifice of Chriſt, that the damning power of them over his people is entirely gone. And in conſequence of this crucifixion of the body of ſin, with Chriſt upon the croſs, when he finiſhed and made an end of it, ſin, with its paſſions and luſts, is crucified by the Spirit of God in regeneration and ſanctification; ſo that it loſes its governing power, and has not the dominion it had before: not but that the fleſh, or corrupt nature, with its evil affections, and carnal luſts, are ſtill in being, and are alive; as a perſon faſtened to a croſs may be alive, tho' he can't act and move as before, being under reſtraints, ſo the old man, tho' crucified, and under the reſtraints of mighty grace, and can't reign and govern as before, yet is alive, and acts, and operates, and oftentimes has great ſway and influence; but whereas he is deprived of his reigning power, he is ſaid to be crucified: and tho' this act is aſcribed to them that are Chriſt's, yet not as done by them in their own ſtrength, who are not able to grapple with one corruption, but as under the influence of the grace of Chriſt, and thro' the power of his Spirit; ſee Rom. viii. 13.

Ver. 25. If we live in the Spirit, &c.] Or by the Spirit, as all do that are ſpiritually alive. Sin has not only brought on men a corporal death, and made them liable to an eternal one, but has alſo induced upon them a ſpiritual or moral death; they are dead in treſpaſſes and ſin, nor can they quicken themſelves, nor can any creature give them life; not the miniſters of the word, nor the angels in heaven, only the bleſſed Spirit is the ſpirit of life from Chriſt; who entering into them, frees them from the law of ſin and death, and implants a principle of ſpiritual life in them, whereby they live a life of faith on Chriſt, of holineſs from him, and communion with him: and this the Apoſtle makes uſe of, as an argument with believers to walk after the Spirit, let us alſo walk in the Spirit; or by the Spirit; by his help and aſſiſtance, according to the rule of his word, and under his influence and direction as a guide, to which he had before adviſed in ver. 18.

Ver. 26. Let us not be deſirous of vain glory, &c.] Ambitious of being thought wiſer, and richer, and more valuable than others; of having the pre-eminence in the management of all affairs, and of having honour, eſteem, and popular applauſe from men: this may well be called vain-glory, ſince it is only in outward things, as wiſdom, riches, ſtrength, and honour, and not in God the giver of them, and who can eaſily take them away; and therefore is but for a time, and is quickly gone, and lies only in the opinion and breath of men. Provoking one another; not to good works, which would be right, but to anger and wrath, which is contrary to chriſtian charity, or true love; which, as it is not eaſily provoked, ſo neither will it provoke others to evil things. The Syriac verſion renders it by מקלין, ſlighting, or deſpiſing one another; and the Arabic verſion, inſulting one another; vices to which men, and even chriſtian brethren in the ſame communion, are too prone. Envying one another; their gifts and abilities, natural and ſpiritual; their rank and ſtation in the world, or in the church. Theſe were ſins the Galatians very probably were ſubject to; and where they prevail, there's confuſion, and every evil work, and therefore to be watched and guarded againſt.

CHAP. VI.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle exhorts to the exerciſe of various things, which greatly become profeſſors of religion, ſuch as meekneſs towards backſliders, love to the ſaints, modeſty in themſelves, and beneficence to others; expoſes the hypocriſy and ambition of the falſe teachers, in order that the Galatians might beware of them, and not be enſnared by them; and gives an account of his own diſpoſition, conduct, and ſufferings, as a rule and example to them, and by which they might judge of the difference between him and the falſe Apoſtles; and concludes the Epiſtle with his apoſtolical ſalutation and benediction. Having mentioned the fruits of the Spirit in the preceding chapter, he ſingles out ſome of them, and a little enlarges upon them; and begins with meekneſs, as that ſhould be uſed by ſpiritual men to fallen believers, which he perſuades to, not only becauſe they are brethren, and but men, and have been overtaken in ſin unawares; but becauſe, tho' they themſelves are ſpiritual, yet ſhould conſider they are liable to be tempted, ver. 1. And next he adviſes to ſhow their love to one another, by bearing each others burdens, which he enforces by this argument, it being a fulfilling the law of Chriſt, ver. 2. And whereas pride and haughtineſs lie in the way of ſuch a deportment, he diſſuades from a vain opinion of a man's ſelf, that being no other than ſelf-deception, ver. 3. and obſerves, that a man will have the beſt view of himſelf, and ſee what occaſion he has for glorying, when he conſiders himſelf ſimply and nakedly, and not in compariſon with others, ver. 4. and there is good reaſon why he ſhould do ſo, ſeeing every man muſt give an account of his own actions, be judged according to them, and receive his reward or puniſhment, ver. 5. Hence the Apoſtle paſſes to liberality and beneficence, and firſt to teachers of the word, to whom, ſuch as are taught by them, ſhould communicate, and that in good things, and in all good things, ver. 6. The arguments uſed to enforce this exhortation are, that to do otherwiſe is a deception of themſelves, and is a mocking of God; and beſides, they ſhall be treated according to their actions, the uſe or abuſe of what God has given them, ſignified by a proverbial expreſſion, what a man ſows that ſhall he reap, ver. 7. which is enlarged upon and illuſtrated, by obſerving, that he that ſpends his ſubſtance merely on himſelf, and on carnal pleaſures, and to indulge the fleſh, the iſſue of things to him will be ruin, temporal and eternal; but he that lays out his ſubſtance on ſpiritual things, and for ſpiritual purpoſes, the iſſue will be life everlaſting, ver. 8. Wherefore the Apoſtle renews the exhortation to be bountiful without wearineſs, ſeeing there is a reaping time a coming, ver. 9. and then points out the perſons in general to whom good is to be done as opportunity offers, even all men, but eſpecially ſuch as are believers in Chriſt, are of his family, and particularly ſtewards there, as miniſters of the Goſpel are, ver. 10. And thus the Apoſtle having finiſhed what he chiefly intended in this Epiſtle, obſerves to the Galatians the great regard he had to them, ſhown in writing to them ſo long a letter, and that with his own hand, ver. 11. And as his chief view was to detect the falſe Apoſtles, he can't conclude without taking ſome further notice of them, which he does by expoſing their hypocriſy and ambition; they only made a ſhow of religion outwardly, and obliged others to do that, which they did not chuſe themſelves, namely, to be circumciſed; and their ends in all this were, that they might be free from perſecution, and have matter of glorying in the proſelytes they made, ver. 12, 13. but the Apoſtle was of a quite different temper and diſpoſition; ſo far was he from glorying in his own fleſh, or others, that his determination was to glory only in Chriſt, and in his croſs, and that for this reaſon, becauſe the world thereby was crucified to him, and he unto the world, ver. 14. as alſo, becauſe circumciſion, which the falſe teachers obliged to, and gloried in, and likewiſe uncircumciſion, were of no avail in religious, ſpiritual, and eternal affairs, but a new creature, ver. 15. and this is what every one ought to attend unto as the rule of his walk and conduct, ſince upon ſuch ſhall be mercy and peace, as upon the Iſrael of God, ver. 16. And whereas the falſe Apoſtles boaſted of the fleſh, and circumciſion in it, the Apoſtle oppoſes thereunto the marks of his ſufferings for Chriſt, which he bore in his body; and therefore with great gravity and authority charges, that no man ſhould give him any further trouble about what had been the ſubject-matter of this Epiſtle, ver. 17. and cloſes it with his uſual ſalutation, expreſſing his affection for the Galatians, as his brethren, wiſhing the beſt of bleſſings for them, the grace of Chriſt, and that this might be in their hearts, and with their ſpirits, ver. 18.

Ver. 1. Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, &c.] Or be taken before in one; not as Grotius thinks, before this Epiſtle ſhould come to them, which is a very jejune and empty ſenſe of the words; nor before the converſion of the man, becauſe ſins before converſion don't come under the notice and cognizance of a church, or are liable to its reproofs and cenſures; but before the man is aware, thro' negligence and imprudence, for want of caution and circumſpection, and ſo is carried away, either thro' the treachery of his own heart, and the power of corruption; or thro' the temptations of ſatan, who goes about, and comes on the back of them, lays ſnares for them, and attacks them unawares, and takes all advantages of them; or by the ill examples of others, whereby they are drawn aſide, and into ſin. The Apoſtle has no particular particular reſpect by a fault to ſchiſms in the church, or to any errors or hereſies in doctrine, tho' the reſtoration of ſuch in meekneſs ſhould be endeavoured; but rather to immorality in life and converſation, and indeed to any of the works of the fleſh mentioned in the preceding chapter; and eſpecially he means any fall of profeſſors, as the word uſed ſignifies, into ſin, thro' inadvertency and want of care and watchfulneſs, in diſtinction from a wilful, obſtinate, and continued courſe of ſinning; and intends not any man in the world, for thoſe that are without, churches, and members of churches, have nothing to do with in a church-way; but any man that is a brother, a church-member, that ſtands in ſuch a relation to them, when he falls into ſin, is to be taken notice of by them. And ſo the Syriac verſion reads, any one of you; as does one of Stephens's copies. Ye that are ſpiritual; meaning not ſuch who had greater ſpiritual gifts than others, their miniſters, paſtors, and eccleſiaſtical governors, though theſe may be ſo called; and to them it belongs to reprove and rebuke, recover and reſtore backſliders, which they ſhould do in gentleneſs and meekneſs; but the Apoſtle here addreſſes the brethren in general, the ſeveral members of the church, even all but thoſe that were fallen: nor does he mean ſuch as have more ſpiritual knowledge than others, in oppoſition to babes; nor regenerate perſons, and ſuch as had the Spirit of God, in diſtinction from carnal men; but ſuch as live and walk in the Spirit, and are ſtrong, and ſtand by the power and grace of the Spirit of God, as oppoſed to the weak, and who were fallen thro' the prevalency of the fleſh, and force of temptation; whoſe duty it is, and on whom it lies, to reſtore ſuch an one, that is overtaken and fallen. The alluſion is to the ſetting of bones that are broken, or out of joint, which is done with great care and tenderneſs. Profeſſors fallen into ſin, are like broken and diſlocated bones; they are out of their place, and loſe both their comfort and uſefulneſs, and are to be reſtored by gently telling them of their faults, and mildly reproving them for them; and when ſenſible of them, and troubled for them, by ſpeaking comfortably to them, and by bringing them again, and reſettling them in their former place in the church, and reſtoring them to their former uſefulneſs and good conduct: and which is to be done in the ſpirit of meekneſs; in the exerciſe of that grace which is a gift and fruit of the Spirit of God; or with a meek and humble ſpirit, not bearing hard upon them, and treating them in a ſupercilious and haughty manner, upbraiding them with their faults, aggravating them, and uſing them roughly, and with ſharpneſs, which in ſome caſes is neceſſary, but not in this: conſidering thyſelf, leſt thou alſo be tempted; a ſpiritual man ſhould conſider himſelf as in the body, and as carrying about with him a body of ſin, a corrupt and treacherous heart, that is full of deceitful luſts, by which he may be tempted alſo, and drawn away and enticed; and as being liable to the temptations of ſatan, and of being overcome by them, againſt which he ſhould watch and pray; and ſhould think with himſelf what he would chuſe, and ſhould deſire to be done to him in ſuch a caſe, and do the like to others that are in it. This is a reaſon enforcing the exhortation; and indeed almoſt every word in the text carries an argument engaging to it. The relation the ſaints ſtand in to one another, as brethren, ſhould excite them to ſeek each other's welfare, and to reſtore any that are fallen, and to abſtain from all roughneſs and ſeverity. The perſons addreſſed are ſpiritual, and therefore ſhould behave as ſuch as have the fruits of the Spirit, and among the reſt that of meekneſs; and ſince they are ſtrong, ſhould help the weak, and raiſe up the fallen: the perſons recommended to them, as the objects of their pity, care, and concern, are not ſuch who have given up themſelves to ſin, but are circumvented by it, and overtaken in it, ſuddenly, and at unawares. And beſides, are men, frail ſinful men, liable to ſin, encompaſſed with infirmities, and expoſed to ſnares and temptations, which are common to human nature, and therefore ſhould be uſed gently and tenderly. The Apoſtle having given an enumeration in the foregoing chapter, of the works of the fleſh, and fruits of the Spirit, directs ſuch as are in the exerciſe of the latter, how to behave towards thoſe that fall into the commiſſion of any of the former, which may be expected, ſince there is fleſh as well as ſpirit in the beſt.

Ver. 2. Bear ye one another's burdens, &c.] Which may be underſtood either of ſins, which are heavy burdens to ſenſible ſinners, to all that are partakers of the grace of God; Chriſt is only able to bear theſe burdens, ſo as to remove them and take them away, which he has done by his blood, ſacrifice, and ſatisfaction; ſaints bear one another's, not by making ſatisfaction for them, which they are not able to do, nor by conniving at them, and ſuffering them upon them, which they ſhould not do, but by gently reproving them, by comforting them when over-preſſed with guilt, by ſympathizing with them in their ſorrow, by praying to God for to manifeſt his pardoning grace to them, and by forgiving them themſelves, ſo far as they are faults committed againſt them: or elſe the frailties and infirmities of weak ſaints, which are troubleſome, and apt to make uneaſy, are meant; and which are to be bore by the ſtrong, by making themſelves eaſy with them, and by accommodating themſelves to their weakneſs, and by abridging themſelves of ſome liberties, which otherwiſe might be lawfully taken by them; or afflictions may be deſigned, which are grievous to the fleſh, and are bore by others, when they adminiſter help and relief under them, whether in a temporal or ſpiritual way; and when they condole them, and ſympathize with them, bear a part with them, and make others griefs and ſorrows their own: and ſo fulfil the law of Chriſt; which is the law of love to one another, John xiii. 34, 35. in oppoſition to the law of Moſes, the judaizing Galatians were ſo fond of, and by which Chriſt's diſciples may be diſtinguiſhed from thoſe of Moſes, or any others. This is a law or doctrine which Chriſt has clearly taught, and recovered from the falſe gloſſes of the Phariſees; it is his new commandment, which he has ſtrengthened and enforced by his own example in dying for his people, and which he, by his Spirit, inſcribes upon their hearts. The Jews ſpeak of the law of the Meſſiah as preferable to any other. "The law, "they ſay [x], which a man learns in this world is "vanity, in compariſon of, תורתו של משיח, the "law of the Meſſiah, or Chriſt;" by fulfilling it is meant, doing it, acting in obedience to it, and not a perfect fulfilling it, which can't be done by ſinful creatures.

Ver. 3. For if a man think himſelf to be ſomething, &c.] Of himſelf; to have any thing of himſelf, to do any thing of himſelf, and of himſelf to attain to life and ſalvation: when he is nothing; of himſelf; not even as a creature, but owes his being and preſervation, and all the mercies of life, to another, even to God; has no grace nor gifts of himſelf, but what he has received, and can do no good thing, not think a good thought, or perform a good action of himſelf, and much leſs of himſelf procure eternal life and ſalvation: he deceiveth himſelf; and will find himſelf ſadly miſtaken, and wretchedly diſappointed another day; or whoever thinks himſelf to be ſome famous and excellent perſon, to be ſomething more, and better than others, of a more excellent nature, and of greater abilities, that he is free from ſin, or at leaſt holier than others, and not liable to fall as others, whom he looks upon with diſdain and contempt, wanting that charity which the law, and new commandment of Chriſt, requires, when he is nothing but ſin and vanity, he's deſtitute of the grace of God, he deceives himſelf, and the truth is not in him. This the Apoſtle ſays to depreſs pride, and a ſwelling conceit of themſelves, and all uncharitable, rough, and ſevere uſages of others. A ſaying like this the Jews have[y]; "whoever he is that is ſomething, "or thinks in himſelf that he is, כלום, ſomething, "it would be better for him if he had never been "created."

[x] Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 83. 1.

Ver. 4. But let every man prove his own work, &c.] Not concern himſelf about the actions and works of others; let him review his own heart and actions; let him examine, try, and prove his whole conduct in life by the rule of God's word, when he'll find enough at home, without bearing hard upon, and cenſuring others: and then ſhall he have rejoicing in himſelf alone, and not in another; which is either ironically ſaid, he'll then ſee what reaſon he has to rejoice and glory in his own works, and vaunt over others, and to boaſt of his performances, and deſpiſe others; ſo far from it, that he'll have reaſon to be aſhamed of himſelf, and to own and acknowledge his unworthineſs and unprofitableneſs: or if upon ſuch a review, examination, and probation of his works, it ſhall appear that he has had his converſation in the world, by the grace of God, in ſimplicity and godly ſincerity, this teſtimony of his conſcience will be his rejoicing; ſee 2 Cor. i. 12. He may rejoice in himſelf, in his own works, as the fruits of grace, but not as the effects of his own power and ſtrength; and may glory and boaſt of them before men, in vindication of his cauſe and character, and as evidences of the truth of grace, but not before God, as if they were the matter of his juſtification and acceptance: and not in another; that is fallen into ſin; making uſe of his ſins and faults to ſet off himſelf, and to encreaſe his own praiſe and commendation; rejoicing in this, that he is better than others, and is not as the Phariſee ſaid, as other men are, as wicked as they, or has not fallen into ſuch ſins as others have done. He'll have no occaſion to take ſuch a method as this, if his converſation will bear the teſt; he'll have rejoicing in the teſtimony of his own conſcience, and will have no need to compare himſelf with others; his glorying will be on account of his own actions, and not thro' a compariſon of other mens. This no ways contradicts a man's glorying in God, and rejoicing in Chriſt Jeſus alone, in the buſineſs of ſalvation. It only regards a man's glorying before men, in a modeſt and humble manner, of what he is enabled to do, by the grace of God, without fetching in the characters of other men that are wicked, or have fallen, to illuſtrate his own.

Ver. 5. For every man ſhall bear his own burden.] That is, either do his own work which God has allotted him to do, whether in a more publick or private ſtation of life; which becauſe it is generally troubleſome to the fleſh, is called a burden, and his own, being peculiar to himſelf, and in which no other is concerned; and which he ſhould patiently bear, chearfully attend to, and conſtantly and faithfully perform whilſt in this world: or he ſhall give an account of his own actions, and not another's, to God, in the other world; he ſhall be judged according to his own works, what they are in themſelves, and not by a compariſon of other mens who have been more wicked than he; which will be no rule of judgment with God, nor of any advantage to man. Every wicked man will bear his own burden; that is, the puniſhment of his own ſins, and not another's; ſo the judgments of God, inflicted on men in this world, are often called, משא, a burden; ſee Iſ. xiii. 1. and xv. 1. and xvii. 1. and xix. 1. and xxi. 1. 11. and ſo may the puniſhment of the wicked in another world, which will be grievous and intolerable. The ſaints will be exempt from bearing this burden, becauſe Chriſt has bore it for them, even all their ſins, and all the puniſhment due unto them; but another burden, if it may be ſo called, even an exceeding and eternal weight of glory ſhall be bore by them; and every man ſhall receive his own reward, and not another's, and that according to his own works and labour, and not another's; not indeed for his works, but according to them, the nature of them, according to the grace of God, from whence his works ſpring, and by which they are performed. This the Apoſtle ſays to take off men from dwelling upon, and cenſuring the actions of others, and from making uſe of them to ſet off their own, and buoy themſelves up with vain hopes, becauſe they are better than others; and alſo to engage them to attend ſtrictly to their own actions, and conſider them ſimply and abſolutely as in themſelves, and not as compared with other mens, ſince they will be accountable for their own actions, and not other mens; and will be judged according to their own works, and not in a comparative view to others.

Ver. 6. Let him that is taught in the word, &c.] Inſtructed in the knowledge of the word, either of the eſſential Word, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, of his perſon, office, and grace; or rather of the written word, particularly the Goſpel, which is ſometimes called the word, without any additional epithet, which diſtinguiſhes it, and directs to the ſenſe of it; and ſometimes with ſuch, as the word of truth, the word of faith, the word of righteouſneſs, the word of reconciliation, and the word of this ſalvation, ſo called from the nature, uſe, and ſubject-matter of it. He that is taught in this, is according to the original word uſed here, a catechumen; and which deſigns not one that is juſt beginning to learn the firſt principles of the oracles of God, but any one that is inſtructed in it, as this word is rendered in Rom. ii. 18. whether more or leſs, or whether internally or externally; one that is internally taught in and by the word, is one that has been taught to know himſelf, and his loſt ſtate by nature; to know Chriſt, and ſalvation by him; to know the truths of the Goſpel, and to deny ungodlineſs, and worldly luſts, and to live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly. It may include every one that is only outwardly taught, that is but an external hearer; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders the clauſe, דשמע מלתא, he that hears the word: of which there are many ſorts, and on whom it is an incumbent duty to communicate to him that teacheth; who is commiſſioned, and qualified, and ſent forth by Chriſt, and whoſe office in the church is to teach the word, to preach the Goſpel, to inſtruct men in the truths of it, and teach them their duty alſo to God and men, ſuch are to be communicated to; that is, ſuch as are under their inſtructions ought to impart of their worldly ſubſtance to them, for their honourable and comfortable ſupport and maintenance; for ſince they ſpend their time, and make uſe of their talents, gifts, and abilities, for their inſtruction in ſpiritual things, it is but reaſonable, and no ſuch great matter, that they partake of their carnal things; and eſpecially ſince it is the will and ordinance of Chriſt, that they that preach the Goſpel ſhould live of it. The Apoſtle adds, in all good things; which may be either connected with the word teacheth, and ſo be deſcriptive of the teacher, as the Arabic verſion reads, him that teacheth all his good things; good doctrines, excellent truths, the wholeſome words of Chriſt, which he is entruſted with, has a knowledge and experience of; and who freely and faithfully imparts them, and conceals and keeps back nothing, but declares the whole counſel of God, all that he knows, and that is good and profitable; and carries in it a very ſtrong argument why he ſhould be communicated to: or elſe with the word communicate; and the ſenſe either be, let him be a partaker of, and join with him in every thing he ſays or does that is good, but not in any thing that is evil, which is a ſenſe ſome give into; or rather let him impart of his temporal good things unto him: temporal things are good as they are of God, and in themſelves, and when rightly uſed anſwer good purpoſes; all a man's good things are not to be communicated, only a part, according to his ability, and in proportion to others; and yet the communication ſhould be large and liberal, ſufficient to ſupport the teacher in an honourable manner, and to ſupply him with all the neceſſaries of life, that his mind may be free from ſecular cares, and he be at leiſure to attend to the inſtructing of others.

[y] Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 79. 1.

Ver. 7. Be not deceived, &c.] By falſe teachers, who in order to engroſs all to themſelves, diſſuaded the Galatians from communicating to their honourable paſtors, and faithful miniſters of the word; or by themſelves, who being of a tenacious and covetous diſpoſition, deviſed various things to excuſe them from performing this their duty to the preachers of the Goſpel; as that they had families of their own to maintain, that their circumſtances were ſuch that they could give little or nothing this way, and that others, who were of better abilities in life, ought to bear this charge; and with ſuch like things endeavoured to ſatisfy their conſciences in the neglect of their duty: but this was all ſelf-deception, for God is not mocked; nor will he be; men may deceive themſelves, and others, with ſuch excuſes and falſe appearances, yet they cannot deceive God, who knows their hearts as well as their worldly ſubſtance, and that the omiſſion of their duty ariſes not from want of ability, but from a covetous temper; and who looks upon with-holding from his miniſters that which is due unto them, as a mocking of him, and which he will not ſuffer with impunity: for whatſoever a man ſoweth, that ſhall be alſo reap; as to kind, quality and quantity, generally ſpeaking; if he ſows wheat he reaps wheat, if he ſows barley he reaps barley; no man can expect to reap another ſort than what he ſows; and if it is good ſeed he may hope for a good crop; and if he ſows bountifully, he ſhall reap bountifully; but if he ſows ſparingly, he ſhall reap ſparingly; and if he ſows nothing, he can never reap any thing. This is a proverbial expreſſion, and may be applied to all actions, good and bad, and the reward and puniſhment of them, and particularly to acts of beneficence, and the enjoying of the fruits thereof; ſee the note on 2 Cor. ix. 6.

Ver. 8. For he that ſoweth to his fleſh, &c.] Not that taking due care of a man's body, ſeeking the preſervation of its health, providing proper food and raiment for himſelf, and all neceſſaries for the good and ſupport of his family, is to be called ſowing to his fleſh, nor is he to be called a carnal ſower; but he is ſuch an one that pampers his fleſh, gratifies and indulges the luſts of it, who minds the things of the fleſh, lives after it, and does the works of it, who ſpends his ſubſtance in a luxurious way upon himſelf and family; or whoſe whole bent, and ſtudy, and employment is to increaſe his worldly riches, to aggrandize himſelf and poſterity, to the neglect of his own ſoul, the intereſt of religion, the poor of the church, and miniſters of the Goſpel: ſhall of the fleſh reap corruption; ſhall by ſuch carnal methods procure for himſelf, in this world, nothing but what is corruptible, as ſilver and gold be, and ſuch treaſure as moth and ruſt corrupt; ſuch ſubſtance as will not endure, but is periſhing, and may be by one providence or another taken from him; ſo that all his care in ſowing comes to nothing, and is of no advantage to himſelf, nor to his poſterity; ſee Hagg. i. 4, 5, 6. and ſhall fall into the pit of corruption, and be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction, and die the ſecond death in the world to come. But he that ſoweth to the Spirit; not his own, but the Spirit of God; or that ſoweth ſpiritual things, that minds and ſavours the things of the Spirit, lives in the Spirit, and walks in the Spirit; that lays out his worldly ſubſtance in promoting ſpiritual things, in encouraging the ſpiritual miniſters of the word, in ſupporting the intereſt of ſpiritual religion, in relieving the poor of Chriſt's churches, in contributing to the ſpread of the Goſpel, and the adminiſtration of the word and ordinances in other places, as well as where he is more immediately concerned: ſhall of the Spirit reap life everlaſting; in the uſe of ſuch ſpiritual means, tho' not as meritorious, or as cauſes, he ſhall attain to, and enjoy eternal happineſs in the other world; or of, and by the Spirit of God, by whoſe grace and ſtrength he ſows, and does all the good things he does, by and of him ſanctifying him, and making him meet for it, and not of himſelf, or any works of righteouſneſs done by him, ſhall he inherit eternal life; which is the pure gift of God thro' Jeſus Chriſt, and beſtowed as a reward of his own grace.

Ver. 9. And let us not be weary in well doing, &c.] This may be underſtood of well doing, or doing good works in general, of every ſort; which are ſuch as are done according to the will of God, from a principle of love to him, in faith, and in the name and ſtrength of Chriſt, and with a view to the glory of God: or elſe acts of beneficence to Chriſt's miniſters and poor in particular; which are agreeable to the mind of God, and well pleaſing in his ſight; and in doing which, men ſhould not be weary; nor are they, when their ſpiritual ſtrength is renewed, and grace is in exerciſe, though they may meet with many things which tend to diſcourage and make them weary; ſuch as change in their own circumſtances, loſſes in the world, the multitude of objects, the ungratefulneſs of ſome, and unworthineſs of others: for in due time we ſhall reap; either in this world, ſooner or later; in proper time, in God's own time, by enjoying an increaſe of the fruits of righteouſneſs; for the ſeed ſown, ſhall ſpring up again; the bread that is caſt on the waters, will be found after many days; and ſuch as honour the Lord with their ſubſtance, ſhall be bleſſed with plenty of temporal good things, either they or theirs: or elſe in the other world, or at the end of this; which will be the harveſt-time, the reaping-time, the time of enjoying eternal life: if we faint not; but continue to the end, perſevere conſtantly in doing acts of beneficence, and patiently wait as the huſbandman does, for the precious fruits of the earth; for there muſt be a diſtance of time between ſowing and reaping; men muſt not expect to reap as ſoon as they ſow; and therefore ſhould not be weary of ſowing, nor impatient in waiting, though they don't ſee as yet the appearance of the fruits thereof; for in their ſeaſon, they'll be ſeen and enjoyed.

Ver. 10. As we have therefore opportunity, &c.] Or ability, ſo the phraſe is ſometimes uſed[z]; as occaſion requires, objects offer, as there is ability of well doing, and that continues; while the time of life laſts, which is the time for ſowing, or doing good works: let us do good unto all men; not only to our relations, friends, and acquaintance, but to all men; to them that are ſtrangers to us, of whatſoever nation, Jew or Gentile; and of whatſoever religion or ſect, yea, even to our very enemies: eſpecially unto them who are of the houſhold of faith; the children of God, that belong to his family, are true believers in Chriſt, hold the doctrine of faith, make a profeſſion of it, and keep it faſt; theſe are more eſpecially, to be the objects of chriſtian beneficence and liberality. The Apoſtle may have ſome reference to a practice among the Jews, who took a particular care of the children of good men that were poor; "there were two chambers "in the temple, the one was called the chamber "of ſecrets, and the other the chamber of veſſels: "into the chamber of ſecrets, religious men uſed "to put privately, whereby were privately maintained, the poor, בני טובים, of the children of "good men[a]." The Targumiſt on Jer. v. 3. has a phraſe much like to this applied to God, paraphraſing the paſſage thus; is it not, O Lord, revealed before thee, לאוטבא לעבדי הימנותא, to do good to the ſervants of faith?

Ver. 11. Ye ſee how large a letter, &c.] Whether it be read as imperative, ſee ye, obſerve, take notice; or as indicative, ye ſee, ye do ſee, or you may ſee with your own eyes, it is of no great conſequence: how large a letter, or with what letters; which ſome underſtand of the largeneſs of the characters he wrote in; others of the deformity of them, he not writing a good hand, being an Hebrew, and not uſed to writing Greek; others of the grand and ſublime matter which it contained; tho' neither of theſe ſeem to be the Apoſtle's meaning; but he intends the length of the epiſtle, the prolixity of his writing; and which he mentions, as an inſtance and expreſſion of his love to them, care of them, and concern for them; inaſmuch as he took ſo much pains, to write ſo long a letter to them, in order to ſet things right in their view, and recover them from error: not but that he had ſent as long, or longer letters to other churches, as to the Romans, the Corinthians, and Hebrews: but then it is to be obſerved what follows, I have written unto you with my own hand. The epiſtle to the Romans was written by Tertius, though dictated by the Apoſtle, Rom. xvi. 22. as very likely the others were by Timothy, or ſome other Amanuenſis. The Apoſtle only put his name, and wrote his ſalutation, which was his token in all his epiſtles, of the truth and genuineneſs of them; 2 Theſſ. iii. 17. but this was not only dictated by him, but wrote with his hand, which very probably the Galatians knew; and ſince it was not uſual for him to do ſo, it was the greater proof of his affection for them; that amidſt ſo much work, and ſuch labours he was employed in, he ſhould ſit down and write ſo long an epiſtle to them with his own hand, in order to expoſe the errors of the falſe teachers, and reclaim them.

Ver. 12. As many as deſire to make a fair ſhew in the fleſh, &c.] By whom are meant the falſe Apoſtles, who are here deſcribed, and their views, aims, and ends opened and expoſed. Theſe were very deſirous to carry a good face of things outwardly, of appearing outwardly righteous before men, and to be accounted ſo by them; and therefore did all they did to be ſeen of them, and gain applauſe from them. They were ſuch as the Syriac verſion renders the words, as deſired, דנשתבהרון, to glory in the fleſh; in their carnal deſcent and privileges, in their being Hebrews, the ſeed of Abraham, of the ſtock of Iſrael; and in the circumciſion of their fleſh; or in their external gifts, their natural parts, acquired abilities, learning, eloquence, and the like: moreover, as the Vulgate Latin verſion reads, they were willing to pleaſe in the fleſh; to pleaſe carnal men, Iſrael after the fleſh, in carnal and fleſhly things; they ſought not to pleaſe God or Chriſt, but men, and ſo were not the ſervants of either. They were deſirous, as the Arabic verſion renders the words, that honour ſhould be done them in the fleſh; they ſought external glory from men, and to be outwardly and publickly honoured by them; and all their religion was a mere outward ſhow, a piece of pageantry; which lay in the obſervation of carnal ordinances, ſuch as reſpected meats and drinks, circumciſion in the fleſh, and other carnal commandments: they conſtrain you to be circumciſed; not by uſing any outward force and violence; but either by their example, which had great influence, as that has both with reſpect to the embracing of evil principles, and giving in to bad practices: or by their doctrine; the arguments they made uſe of to perſuade them to it, being formed and managed with great art and ſubtlety, wrought ſtrongly upon them: or rather by overawing them, with threatnings of hell and damnation; affirming, that unleſs they were circumciſed, they could not be ſaved: and their end was, only leſt they ſhould ſuffer perſecution for the croſs of Chriſt, or by the croſs of Chriſt; meaning either the manner in which perſecution might be ſuffered, as by being reproached, ill uſed, and ſuffering death as Chriſt did; or by bearing the croſs of affliction and tribulation Chriſt has appointed for, and calls his followers to; or elſe the object for which it is endured, the preaching of the croſs, or the Goſpel of ſalvation by a crucified Chriſt; for this doctrine, and the preaching and profeſſing of it, and living a life anſwerable to it, always bring perſecution with them: and that perſecution which is more eſpecially here regarded, was what came from the Jews, who in general, were greatly offended at the preaching of a crucified Chriſt; and particularly from the profeſſing part among them, who though they believed in Chriſt, and were not diſpleaſed at preaching in his name; yet were greatly affronted at, and highly reſented, and as much as in them lay, by reproaches and hard cenſures, and the like, perſecuted thoſe who oppoſed circumciſion, and the ceremonies of the law; and to avoid the ill-will, contempt, and perſecution of theſe, the falſe teachers preached up circumciſion, and obliged their people to ſubmit to it.

[a] Miſn. Shekalim, c. 5. §. 6.

Ver. 13. But neither they themſelves that are circumciſed, &c.] That is, the pleaders for, and preachers of circumciſion, whether they themſelves were actually circumciſed, or no; it means thoſe that were of the circumciſion, on that ſide of the queſtion, whether heartily or not: keep the law; of circumciſion, as perſons may preach up that, which they themſelves don't practice; as did the Phariſees, the predeceſſors of theſe men; or if they did keep the law, and ſubmit to it, yet this might be done, not out of regard unto it, and zeal for it, but for ſome other end; as Simon Magus ſubmitted to baptiſm, and others preached Chriſt of envy and contention, and not of good-will; or if they did do it in obedience to the law, yet this was not keeping the whole law, which circumciſion obliged to; and which unleſs they did ſo keep it, would ſignify nothing; and this no man is capable of keeping perfectly, and conſequently no righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation, can be had hereby: beſides, though theſe men were ſo zealous for the lighter matters of the law, the rites and ceremonies of it, as circumciſion, &c. they diſregarded the weightier and more material parts of it, as judgment, mercy, and faith; theſe they kept not, nor attended to; and many of them lived very diſſolute lives and converſations, at leaſt ſecretly, if not openly; which abundantly proved, that they were far from keeping the law; and that their pleading for it, and ſubmitting to ſome of the rituals of it, were not out of pure love and ſtrict regard to it, but for ſome other end: but deſire to have you circumciſed, that they may glory in your fleſh; that is, in the circumciſion of it; or as the Ethiopic verſion, in your bodies. Their view in bringing perſons to ſubmit to circumciſion was, that they might have occaſion to glory among the Jews, and boaſt to them of the numbers of proſelytes they brought, and of the ſervice they did to Judaiſm, and ſo increaſe their fame and glory among them.

Ver. 14. But God forbid that I ſhould glory, &c.] The Apoſtle on the contrary, expreſſes his averſion to glorying in any thing theſe men did; not in his outward carnal privileges as a Jew; nor in his moral, civil, and legal righteouſneſs; nor in his gifts and attainments; nor in his labours and ſucceſs, as of himſelf; nor in the fleſh of others, or in any outward corporal ſubjection to any ordinance, legal or evangelical; his glorying and rejoicing, were rather in the ſpirituality, the faith, hope, love, patience, order, and ſtedfaſtneſs of the ſaints, than in any thing in the fleſh, either his own or others: and indeed, he choſe not to glory in any thing, ſave in the croſs of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; meaning either the infirmities, reproaches, tribulations, and perſecutions, which he endured for the ſake of Chriſt, and the preaching of his Goſpel; or the Goſpel, the doctrine of the croſs of Chriſt, and ſalvation by it; or rather a crucified Chriſt himſelf, whom he preached; though counted fooliſhneſs by ſome, and was a ſtumbling to others: he gloried in him, and determined to know, and make known none but him, in the buſineſs of ſalvation; he gloried in him as crucified, and in his croſs; not in the wood of the croſs, but in the effects of his crucifixion; in the peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, life, ſalvation, and eternal glory, which come through the death of the croſs; he gloried in Chriſt as his wiſdom, righteouſneſs, ſanctification, and redemption: by whom the world is crucified to me; ſo that he feared not the worſt men, and things in it, any more than he would one that was faſten'd to a croſs, or dead; ſince Chriſt by his crucifixion and death, had overcome the world, the prince of it, the men and malice of it, the ſin that was in it, and had made him more than a conqueror alſo; his faith in a crucified Chriſt, overcame the world likewiſe; ſo that he looked upon it as the Iſraelites ſaw the Egyptians, dead on the ſea-ſhore; nor did he affect and love, but trampled upon and deſpiſed, as crucified perſons generally are, thoſe things in it which are the moſt alluring to the fleſh, the luſts of it; the doctrine of grace, of a crucified Chriſt, taught him to deny the riches, honours, pleaſures, profits, and applauſe of the world; which were to him as droſs, in compariſon of the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus his Lord: the ceremonial law alſo, the elements of the world, were dead unto him, being nailed to the croſs of Chriſt, to be of no further uſe and ſervice unto men: and I unto the world; that is, am crucified to the world, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions expreſs it; that is, he was deſpiſed by the world for the ſake of a crucified Chriſt, as the world was by him, in compariſon of him; the world had no affection for him, as he had none for the world; and as the ceremonial law was dead to him, ſo he was dead to that, through the body of Chriſt, and had nothing to do with theſe beggarly elements, nor they with him, which ſenſe is confirmed by the following words.

Ver. 15. For in Chriſt Jeſus, &c.] Theſe words are omitted in the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions; ſee the note on ch. v. 6. and 1 Cor. vii. 19. they contain a reaſon why the Apoſtle gloried in a crucified Chriſt, and looked upon the world as dead to him, and he to that, in every ſenſe of it; particularly as it may deſign the worldly ſanctuary of the Jews, and all the rites and ceremonies appertaining to it; and among the reſt circumciſion, which availeth not any thing; neither as a command, type, or privilege; or in the buſineſs of ſalvation, being aboliſhed by Chriſt: nor uncircumciſion; being now no bar to the Goſpel, Goſpel ordinances, or a Goſpel church-ſtate; or to any of the bleſſings of the everlaſting covenant, which come upon the uncircumciſion, as well as the circumciſion. But to apply theſe words to baptiſm and non-baptiſm, is a wretched perverſion, and making a very ill uſe of them, whereby the minds of men are worked up to an indifference to a chriſtian inſtitution; for though baptiſm is of no avail in the buſineſs of ſalvation, yet it can't be ſaid of it, as of circumciſion, that it avails not any thing as a command, for it is a ſtanding ordinance of Chriſt; or as an emblem and ſign, for it is ſignificative of the death and burial, and reſurrection of Chriſt; or as a privilege, for it is of uſe to lead the faith of God's people to his blood and righteouſneſs, for pardon and juſtification; for he that believes and is baptized, ſhall be ſaved; and it is neceſſary to church communion: and on the other hand, it can't be ſaid that non-baptiſm avails not; it is a bar to church fellowſhip; and a neglect of baptiſm in thoſe who are the proper ſubjects of it, is reſented by Chriſt, and is a rejecting of the counſel of God againſt themſelves; which was the caſe of the Phariſees, in the times of John the Baptiſt: but a new creature. The phraſe is Rabbinical; ſee the note on 2 Cor. v. 17. by which is meant, not a new creation of a man, as a man, of the members of his body, or of the faculties of his ſoul; nor of an external reformation, or a walking in newneſs of life, which is the fruit and effect of this new creation work; but an internal principle of grace, a good work of God begun in the ſoul, called the hidden man of the heart, the new man, Chriſt formed in us, of which faith that works by love is a part: this is called a creature, and ſo not of man, but God; for none can create but himſelf; and in which work man is purely paſſive, as the heavens and the earth were in their creation: 'tis but a creature, and therefore needs divine ſupport, freſh ſtrength from God, and frequent ſupplies of grace to maintain and preſerve it; nor is it to be truſted in, but the grace which is in Chriſt, from whence it comes, and by which it is ſecured. This is a new creature, in oppoſition to the old man; and becauſe it is a principle in man, which never was there before; it conſiſts of a new heart and ſpirit, of new eyes, ears, hands, and feet, expreſſive of new principles and actions, of new light, life, love, deſires, joys, comforts, and duties: now this is of avail; 'tis a branch of the new covenant of grace, which God has therein promiſed to beſtow on his people; 'tis an evidence of intereſt in Chriſt, the new and living way to the Father, and eternal life; ſuch are new-born babes, regenerated perſons, and have a right and meetneſs for the kingdom of God; ſhall poſſeſs the new Jeruſalem, ſhall dwell in the new heavens and new earth; they are called by the Lord's new name, the adopted children of God; and have a new ſong put into their mouths, which none but redeemed and new-born ſouls can ſing; and ſhall drink the new wine of endleſs joys and everlaſting pleaſures, with Chriſt in his Father's kingdom. Theſe words are ſaid to be taken out of the Apocalypſe of Moſes, a ſpurious book, but without any foundation.

Ver. 16. And as many as walk according to this rule, &c.] Or canon; meaning not the canon of the ſcriptures in general, which is the perfect rule, and only ſtandard of faith and practice; according to which we are to walk, believe and act; but either the doctrine of juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, the ſubject of this epiſtle, the truth the Apoſtle had been explaining, vindicating, and confirming; and which to depart from, is going out of the way of truth; and an abiding by it, is walking in it; and is a good rule and ſtandard, by which to diſtinguiſh between truth and error; for whatever is contrary to that article of faith, cannot be true: or elſe the rule delivered in the preceding verſe, declaring circumciſion and uncircumciſion to be of no avail in ſalvation, but a new creature; and to walk according to this rule, is to renounce all truſt in, and dependance upon any outward things; to believe alone in Chriſt, for righteouſneſs and life; to live by faith upon him, and to walk in newneſs of life, under the influences of his Spirit and grace: peace be on them, and mercy. This is the Apoſtle's godly wiſh, unfeigned deſire, and hearty prayer for all ſuch perſons, be they who they will; Jews or Gentiles, circumciſed or uncircumciſed: by peace he means, a view of their peace with God, made by the blood of Chriſt; peace in their own conſciences, which paſſes all underſtanding, and ariſes from a comfortable ſenſe of juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, of pardon by his blood, and atonement by his ſacrifice; and which is enjoyed in a way of believing; and alſo peace with one another, among themſelves as brethren, which is a very deſirable bleſſing: in ſhort, it includes all proſperity and happineſs, inward and outward, temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal: and by mercy, he deſigns the love and grace of God, to ſinful miſerable creatures in themſelves, which is the ſpring and fountain of all peace and proſperity; and which is diſplayed in the covenant of grace, and all the bleſſings of it; in the miſſion and incarnation of Chriſt, and redemption by him; in regeneration, forgiveneſs of ſin, and compleat ſalvation; and intends a freſh diſcovery, manifeſtation, and application of the mercy of God to his children; who often ſtand in need thereof, being diſtreſſed with the guilt of ſin; or are under deſertions or afflictive providences, at which time to have mercy ſhewed them, is exceeding ſuitable and agreeable: when the Apoſtle wiſhes theſe to be on them, it ſignifies that theſe bleſſings come from above, as every good gift does; that they deſcend as a cloud, and reſt upon them, and abide with them, refreſhing, comforting, and protecting them: he adds, and upon the Iſrael of God; which is a further deſcription of the perſons, for whom he prays for theſe bleſſings; and is not to be underſtood by way of diſtinction from them, but as an amplification of their character; and as pointing out the Iſrael, by way of emphaſis, the Iſrael, or Iſraelites indeed, the ſpiritual Iſrael, as diſtinct from Iſrael according to the fleſh; ſee 1 Cor. x. 18. The Iſrael of God, or as the Arabic verſion reads it, Iſrael the propriety of God; which he has a right unto, and a claim upon; who are choſen by him, Iſrael his elect; who are redeemed by him, out of every kindred, tongue, people, and nation; who are called by his grace, and are ſtiled Iſrael his called; who are juſtified in his Son, and by his righteouſneſs; and for whoſe ſake he is exalted as a prince and a ſaviour, to give them repentance and remiſſion of ſin; and who are, or will be ſaved by him, with an everlaſting ſalvation; and is a name that includes all God's elect, whether Jews or Gentiles: though it may have a particular reſpect to ſuch of the Iſraelites, or Jews, God had foreknown and reſerved for himſelf; and who believed in Chriſt, and walked as new creatures, without confidence in the fleſh. The Jews themſelves own, that ſtrangers, or proſelytes, ſhall be called by the name of Iſrael; ſo they [b] explain Iſa. xliv. 5. latter part.

Ver. 17. From henceforth let no man trouble me, &c.] Having ſo clearly ſtated and explained the doctrine of juſtification, and ſo largely proved that it is not by works, but by faith, and that circumciſion, and other rituals of the ceremonial law were not neceſſary to it, he deſires, nay, in an authoritative way he requires, that they give him no further trouble on that head; ſignifying, that he expected they would be ſatiſfied with what he had wrote, and abide by the truth and obey it, as they had formerly done; that he ſhould hear no more objections from them, or complaints of them: nor need they further enquire his ſenſe of theſe things; by this they would fully know his faith and practice; as indeed they might alſo, by his ſuffering perſecutions on the account of his faith, and his preaching the Goſpel of Chriſt, and particularly this part of it: for I bear in my body, the marks of the Lord Jeſus; by which he means, not the marks in Chriſt's hands, feet, and ſide; but the reproachful characters the Apoſtle was ſtigmatized with; or the real ſcars in his body, made by beating, ſcourging, and ſtoning of him; or his ſufferings and perſecutions in general, which he endured for the ſake of Chriſt and his Goſpel; ſee 2 Cor. xi. 23—28. The alluſion is either to ſervants and ſoldiers, who when taken into ſervice, uſed to have ſome particular mark put upon them, that they might be known to be ſuch an one's ſervant, or ſoldier[c]; as the Hebrew ſervant, who was willing to ſerve his maſter, had his ear bored through with an awl, Exod. xxi. 6. ſo the Apoſtle was known to be a firm and faithful ſervant, and a good ſoldier of Chriſt, by the reproaches and afflictions which he underwent for his ſake; or elſe to thoſe marks, which by way of reproach and puniſhment, were made upon fugitive ſervants, or ſoldiers, that deſerted; as the ſufferings of the Apoſtle were deſigned as reproaches to him, and puniſhments of him, for preaching the Goſpel of Chriſt; but theſe he gloried in, and bore and carried as trophies and marks of honour. Juſt as veteran ſoldiers, ſhow their ſcars and wounds they have received in battle, as tokens of their valour and courage, in facing and fighting the enemy in greateſt danger: theſe he is ſaid to bear in his body; not in the bodies of others, he gloried not in their fleſh, as the falſe Apoſtles did; nor in the circumciſion of his own fleſh, the ſcar that left there the mark of Moſes and of a Jew; but in thoſe things which were marks of his being a diſciple of Chriſt, and not of Moſes, and which he bore for his ſake: and ſince therefore it was ſo eaſy to diſcern on which ſide of the queſtion he was, from his ſuffering perſecution for the croſs of Chriſt; and ſince he had ſo many and ſuch great trials and exerciſes, he with apoſtolical gravity and authority, commands them to give him no more trouble from the time of their reception of the epiſtle, hence forward.

Ver. 18. Brethren, &c.] So he calls them, to teſtify his affection for them, notwithſtanding their infirmity and inſtability, and the roughneſs with which he had treated them; and to ſhew his great humility and condeſcenſion in owning the relation, and putting them on a level with himſelf, which the pride of the falſe teachers would not ſuffer them to do. The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with your ſpirit; which is his concluding benediction and uſual ſalutation and token in all his epiſtles: he wiſhes, that more gifts of grace might be beſtowed upon them; that the Goſpel of the grace of God might be continued with them; that the love of Chriſt might be ſhed abroad in their hearts; that they might receive out of his fulneſs, grace for grace; that there might be an increaſe of grace in their ſouls; that it might abound in them, and they grow in the exerciſe of it: he does not pray that the law of Moſes, or the righteouſneſs of works, but that the grace of Chriſt might be with them; not in the mere notion of it, but in the ſpiritual experience of it; that it might be in their hearts, and with their ſpirits, quickening, comforting, and ſtrengthening them; making them more ſpiritual and evangelical in their frames and duties, and freeing them from a carnal and legal ſpirit: to all which he ſets his Amen; ſignifying his deſire that ſo it might be, and his faith that ſo it would be. The ſubſcription of the letter follows, unto the Galatians, written from Rome; where perhaps he was then a priſoner; the Arabic verſion adds, by Titus and Luke; who might be ſent with it, but the ſubſcriptions of the epiſtles are not to be depended on.

AN
EXPOSITION, &c.

The Epiſtle of PAUL the Apoſtle to the EPHESIANS.

THE city of Epheſus is, by Pliny [a], called the other light of Aſia; Miletus was one, and Epheſus the other: it was the metropolis of the leſſer Aſia, and one of the twelve cities of Ionia, and the firſt and chief of them: it is ſaid to be built by the Amazons [b]: it was famous for the magnificent temple of Diana; and the inhabitants of it were very much given to ſuperſtition and idolatry, and even to deviliſh arts, Acts xix. 19. It abounded with orators and philoſophers, and men of great wiſdom and learning [c]; and was formerly a very rich, trading, flouriſhing city, but now a village, and a poor deſolate place; it retains the name of Eſeſo, tho' the Turks call it Aia Salik. Hither the Apoſtle Paul firſt went after he had been at Corinth, tho' he then made but a ſhort ſtay; when he came thither again, he found twelve diſciples, and was the inſtrument of making a great many more: here he continued two or three years, and formed a Goſpel-church, very large and flouriſhing, to whom he writes this Epiſtle; and which was written by him when he was a priſoner at Rome, as appears by ſeveral paſſages in it, ch. iii. 1. and iv. 1. and vi. 20. and ſeems to have been written much about the ſame time as were the Epiſtles to the Philippians, and to the Coloſſians, and to Philemon. Dr. Hammond thinks it was written about the year 58, and Dr. Lightfoot places it in 59, and the fifth year of Nero. The occaſion of it was the foreſight the Apoſtle had of falſe teachers that would ſpring up in this church, after his death, and ſpread their pernicious doctrines, and draw away diſciples after them, and do great miſchief in the church; wherefore the deſign of this Epiſtle is to eſtabliſh the ſaints in the doctrines of the Goſpel, that ſo they might not be carried away with the errors of the wicked: the ſubject-matter of it is moſt excellent; it treats of the moſt ſublime doctrines of grace, of divine predeſtination, and eternal election, of redemption by Chriſt, and of peace and pardon by his blood, of converſion by the power of efficacious grace, and of ſalvation by the free grace of God, in oppoſition to works: it alſo very largely treats of the nature and uſefulneſs of the Goſpel-miniſtry, and of gifts qualifying for it, and of the ſeveral duties of religion incumbent on chriſtians; and the method which is uſed is exceeding apt and beautiful, for the Apoſtle firſt begins with the doctrines of the Goſpel, which he diſtinctly handles and explains, and then proceeds to enforce the duties belonging to men, both as men and chriſtians.

CHAP. I.

IN this chapter are contained the inſcription of the Epiſtle, the ſalutation of the perſons to whom it is written, the Apoſtle's thankſgiving for bleſſings received by him, and them; in which the efficient, moving, procuring, and final cauſes of ſalvation are taken notice of, and the ſeveral parts and branches of it obſerved; and the whole is concluded with prayers for the Epheſians; in which mention is made of various things to the comfort of the ſaints, and to the glory of Chriſt. The inſcription is in ver. 1. in which the author of the Epiſtle puts his name, declares his office, and how he came into it; and deſcribes the perſons to whom he wrote it, by their religious characters, and the place of their abode. The ſalutation is in ver. 2. which is common to all his Epiſtles; and in ver. 3. is the thankſgiving to God, as the God and Father of Chriſt, for ſpiritual bleſſings in Chriſt in general; and then he proceeds to particulars, and begins with election, which is repreſented as an act of God the Father, as of particular perſons, as done in Chriſt, and from the foundation of the world, the end of which is perfect holineſs and love, ver. 4. and which is further illuſtrated under the name of predeſtination; the bleſſing which that is an appointment to, is the adoption of children; the moving cauſe of it, is the good pleaſure of the divine will; the inſtrumental cauſe or means, is Chriſt Jeſus; the end with God is for himſelf, ver. 5. and which, in the next verſe, is explained of the glory of his grace; to which grace, acceptance with him in Chriſt is owing; and which is another ſpiritual bleſſing, or a branch of election and predeſtination, ver. 6. To which is added another, and that is redemption; the author of which is Chriſt; the price, or procuring and meritorious cauſe of it is his blood; a branch of which is forgiveneſs of ſins; and the whole is according to the plenteous and free grace of God, ver. 7. the entire plan and ſcheme of which is the produce of abundant wiſdom and prudence, ver. 8. and is no other than the myſtery of the will of God revealed in the Goſpel, according to his ſovereign will and purpoſe, ver. 9. which lay hid within himſelf until the fulneſs of times, or the Goſpel-diſpenſation, in which Chriſt being ſent, has gathered all together in himſelf, ver. 10. thro' whom the ſaints enjoy the inheritance they are adopted to in predeſtination, which is the effect of an unfruſtrable purpoſe, and a wiſe counſel and will, ver. 11. The end of which is, that thoſe predeſtinated, redeemed, and adopted ones, ſhould be to the praiſe and glory of God, ver. 12. and who are deſcribed as ſuch, who firſt truſted in Chriſt upon hearing the Goſpel; and after they had believed in him, were ſealed by the holy Spirit, ſaid to be the Spirit of promiſe, ver. 13. and who is alſo ſpoken of as the earneſt and pledge of the ſaints inheritance, and who will continue ſo until all the people of God are redeemed from the grave in the reſurrection-morn, which will alſo iſſue in the praiſe and glory of God, ver. 14. and now on account of all theſe bleſſings of predeſtination, adoption, redemption, vocation, and the ſealing of the Spirit; as alſo, becauſe of their faith in Chriſt, and love to the ſaints, theſe believers were poſſeſſed of, the Apoſtle gave thanks, and continued to give thanks to God in his prayers to him, ver. 15, 16. The object of his prayers is deſcribed, as the God of Chriſt, and Father of glory; the petitions to him are for an increaſe of knowledge of Chriſt from the Spirit, as a Spirit of wiſdom and revelation, ver. 17. and that they might have a clearer view of the nature of that glory they were called unto, and were hoping for, ver. 18. and obſerve the wonderful diſplay of the power of God in their converſion and faith; which is illuſtrated, by comparing it with that power which was ſhewn in raiſing Chriſt from the dead, ver. 20. which leads the Apoſtle to take notice of the exaltation of Chriſt at the right hand of God in heaven, conſequent on his reſurrection; where he is advanced above angels and men, and has all things in ſubjection to him for the good of his church, of which he is the head, and which is his body and fulneſs, ver. 21, 22, 23.

The perſons reſiding there, to whom the Epiſtle is written, are deſcribed by their character, as ſaints; being ſeparated by the grace of God the Father in eternal election; whoſe ſins were expiated by the blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt; and to whom he himſelf was made ſanctification; and who were internally ſanctified by the Spirit of God, and lived holy lives and converſations. The Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, and the Vulgate Latin verſion read, to all the ſaints; whether officers of the church, or private members, whether rich or poor, bond or free, ſtrong or weak believers, of greater or leſſer abilities. And to the faithful in Chriſt Jeſus; who were in Chriſt, not only by electing grace, but were openly and manifeſtatively in him, thro' converting grace; and abode in him as branches in the vine; continued conſtant, and perſevered in faith and holineſs; and were faithful to the cauſe and intereſt of Chriſt, and to his Goſpel and ordinances; and were hearty and ſincere in the profeſſion of their faith in Chriſt, and love to him and his: or, as the Arabic verſion renders it, and to them that believe in Jeſus Chriſt; with all their hearts, to the ſaving of their ſouls; who look unto him, venture on him, rely upon him, and truſt in him for life and ſalvation, and who ſhall certainly be ſaved; of ſuch the church at Epheſus conſiſted, to whom this Epiſtle was written: of the church there, ſee the note on Acts xx. 17.

Ver. 2. Grace be to you, and peace from God, &c.] See the note on Rom. i. 7.

Ver. 3. Bleſſed be the God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, &c.] God, the firſt perſon in the Trinity, is the God of Chriſt, as Chriſt is man and mediator; he choſe and appointed him to be the mediator, and made a covenant with him as ſuch; he formed and prepared an human nature for him, and anointed it with the Holy Ghoſt above meaſure, and ſupported it under all its trials and ſufferings, and at laſt glorified it: and Chriſt, as man, prayed to him as his God, believed, hoped, and truſted in him as ſuch, and loved him as in ſuch a relation to him, and chearfully obeyed his commands. And the ſame is the Father of Chriſt, as Chriſt is God; as ſuch he is the Son of God; not by creation, as angels and Adam, nor by adoption as ſaints, but by natural generation; he being the only-begotten of the Father, his own proper Son, of the ſame nature and perfections with him, and equal to him. Now to bleſs God is neither to invoke nor confer a bleſſing on him; for there is none greater than he to be called upon; nor does he need any thing, nor can he receive any thing from his creature; but it is either to congratulate his greatneſs and goodneſs, to aſcribe bleſſing, glory, and honour to him, or to give thanks unto him, both for temporal and ſpiritual mercies. And the reaſons why he is bleſſed, or praiſed by the ſaints as the God and Father of Chriſt, are; becauſe theſe are his New Teſtament titles, under which he is more clearly made known, and in which he delights; and becauſe he is their God and Father in Chriſt; nor can they come to him in any other way, but thro' him; and becauſe it is thro' him that all their bleſſings come to them, and therefore all their praiſes muſt go this way, as follows: who hath bleſſed us with all ſpiritual bleſſings in heavenly places in Chriſt; God is the author and giver of all bleſſings; and he bleſſes his people with them, as he is the God and Father of Chriſt, and as he is their Covenant-God and Father in Chriſt; and he only can bleſs, if he bleſſes not, none can; and if he bleſſes, they are bleſſed indeed: the us that are bleſſed, are ſuch who deſerve, according to the tenor of the law, to be curſed; and are not all men, but ſome diſtinct from others; and who are before deſcribed as ſaints, and faithful in Chriſt Jeſus; and include both Jews and Gentiles, who belong to the election of grace. And the bleſſings ſuch are bleſſed with are ſpiritual, ſo called to diſtinguiſh them from temporal bleſſings. The Jews have the like diſtinction of טובות זמניות, temporal bleſſings, and טובות רוחניות, ſpiritual bleſſings [d]; which latter are ſolid, ſubſtantial, and laſting bleſſings; and which concern the good of the ſoul or ſpirit of man; and are agreeable to, and deſired by a ſpiritual man; and are applied by the holy Spirit of God; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, with every bleſſing of the holy Spirit: and which are very comprehenſive, and take in all the fulneſs of grace in Chriſt; all the bleſſings, and ſure mercies of the everlaſting covenant; all things pertaining to life and godlineſs, ſuch as juſtification, peace, pardon, adoption, ſanctification, and eternal life: and with theſe the ſaints are bleſſed in heavenly places; God that bleſſes them is in heaven, and ſo is Chriſt in whom they are bleſſed; and the completion of their bleſſedneſs will be in heaven, where their hope is laid up, and their inheritance is reſerved: and this phraſe may denote the ſafety of them, being out of the reach of any enemy, ſin, ſatan, or the world, to deprive them of them, as well as the nature of them; for it may be read, in heavenly things, and ſo diſtinguiſhes theſe bleſſings from ſuch as are of an earthly kind; and points at the original of them, being ſuch as deſcend from above, come down from heaven; and alſo the tendency of them, which is to heaven; and being what give a right unto, and a meetneſs for the kingdom of heaven: and theſe they are bleſſed with in Chriſt; as he is their head and repreſentative, and as they are members in him, and partakers of him; thro' whom, and for whoſe ſake they are conveyed unto them, and who himſelf is the ſum and ſubſtance of them. Agreeable to this way of ſpeaking the Targumiſt, Jonathan ben Uzziel on Numb. vi. 27. paraphraſes the laſt clauſe thus, I will bleſs them, במימרי, in my word. The date of theſe bleſſings, hath bleſſed us, may reſpect either firſt converſion, when the diſcovery and application of the bleſſings of grace are made to God's people; or the making of the covenant with Chriſt, their head, to whom all grace was then given, and to them in him, and their election was in Chriſt, as follows.

Ver. 4. According as he hath choſen us in him, &c.] This choice cannot be underſtood of a national one, as Iſrael of old were choſen by the Lord; for the perſons, the Apoſtle writes to, were not a nation; nor does he addreſs all the inhabitants of Epheſus, only the ſaints and faithful in Chriſt that reſided there; nor are they all intended here, if any of them. However, not they only, ſince the Apoſtle includes himſelf, and perhaps ſome others, who did not belong to that place, nor were of that country: nor does this choice regard them as a church; for though the ſaints at Epheſus were in a church-ſtate, yet the Apoſtle does not write to them under that formal conſideration, but as ſaints and faithful; nor are theſe perſons ſaid to be choſen to church privileges, but to grace and glory, to be holy and blameleſs: beſides, from ver. 3. to ver. 12. incluſive, the Apoſtle ſeems to ſpeak of himſelf, and ſome others, who firſt truſted in Chriſt, as diſtinct from the believers at Epheſus, ver. 13. nor is this choice of perſons to an office, for all that are here intended were not Apoſtles, or paſtors, or deacons: nor can it deſign effectual vocation, or the call of perſons in time by efficacious grace; becauſe this was before the foundation of the world, as follows: but it intends an eternal election of particular perſons to everlaſting life and ſalvation; and which is the firſt bleſſing of grace, and the foundation one, upon which all the reſt proceed, and according to which they are diſpenſed; for according to predeſtination are vocation, juſtification, and glorification. The author of this choice is God, God the Father, who is diſtinguiſhed from Chriſt, in whom this act is made; and it is according to his fore-knowledge, and is an act of his grace, and is entirely ſovereign: the objects of it, us, are not angels, but men, conſidered as unfallen with reſpect to the end, and as fallen with reſpect to the means; and theſe not all mankind: to chuſe, implies the contrary; and they that are choſen are diſtinguiſhed from others, and are repreſented as few; nor do all men partake either of the means or end appointed in the decree of election; and yet ſome of all nations, Jews and Gentiles, are included in it; tho' none for any previous qualifications in them, as not for their good works, faith, holineſs, or perſeverance therein; for theſe are fruits and effects of election, and therefore can't be cauſes or conditions of it: and this choice is made in Chriſt; and the perſons choſen are choſen in him, and by being choſen they come to be in him; for this refers not to their open being in him at converſion, as believers, but to their ſecret being in him before time. Chriſt, as mediator, is the object of election himſelf; and all the elect were choſen in him as their head, in whoſe hands their perſons, grace, and glory are, and ſo are ſafe and ſecure in him: the Arabic verſion renders it, by him; not as the meritorious cauſe, for Chriſt's merits are not the cauſe of election, tho' they are of redemption and ſalvation; but as the means, in order to the end: the Ethiopic verſion renders it, to him; to ſalvation by him, and to the obtaining of his glory; as if he and his benefits, being the end of this choice, were intended; which was made before the foundation of the world: and that it was ſo early, is certain, from the love of God to his people, which this is the effect of, and which is an everlaſting love; and from the covenant which was made with Chriſt from everlaſting, on account of theſe choſen ones, when Chriſt was ſet up as the head and repreſentative of them; and from the proviſion of all ſpiritual bleſſings for them in it, which proceed according to this choice; and from the preparation of a kingdom for them from the foundation of the world; and from the nature of God's decrees, which are eternal; for no new will, or act of will, can ariſe in God, or any decree be made by him, which was not from eternity: God's fore-knowledge is eternal, and ſo is his decree, and is no other than himſelf decreeing. The end of this choice follows, that we ſhould be holy, and without blame, before him in love; the objects of it are not choſen becauſe they were holy, but that they might partake of the ſanctification of the Spirit; that they might be ſanctified by him here, and be perfectly holy hereafter; and be without fault and blame, both in this life, as juſtified by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and as waſhed in his blood; and in the life to come, being entirely freed from all ſin, and without ſpot, or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing; and appear ſo in the ſight of Chriſt, who will preſent them to himſelf, and in the ſight of his Father, to whom they will alſo be preſented by him, even in the ſight of divine juſtice: and this will be all in love; or through love, as the Syriac verſion renders it; or thro' his love, as the Arabic verſion; for the love of God is the ſource and ſpring of election itſelf, and of holineſs and happineſs, the end of it; and which is ſhed abroad in the hearts of God's people now; and will be more fully comprehended and enjoyed in the other world; and which cauſes love again in them to him. A phraſe ſomewhat like this is uſed by the Targumiſt on Eccl. xi. 6. where, ſpeaking of a man's children, ſays; “ it is not known unto thee “ which of them, אתבחר למהוי טב, is choſen to “ be good, this, or that, or both of them, to be “ alike good.” Some copies put the ſtop at before him; and read the phraſe, in love, in connexion with the words following, thus, in love, or by love hath predeſtinated us; ſo the Syriac verſion.

Ver. 5. Having predeſtinated us, &c.] Predeſtination, taken in a large ſenſe, includes both election and reprobation, and even reaches to all affairs and occurrences in the world; to the perſons, lives, and circumſtances of men; to all mercies, temporal or ſpiritual; and to all afflictions, whether in love or in wrath: and indeed providence, or the the diſpenſations of providence, are no other than the execution of divine predeſtination; but here it is the ſame with election, and is concerned with the ſame perſons, and has regard to a ſpecial bleſſing, the elect are appointed to, as follows; unto the adoption of children by Jeſus Chriſt unto himſelf; by which is meant, either the grace of adoption, which is an act of the Father's love, a bleſſing provided and ſecured in the covenant of grace; and is of perſons to an inheritance, to which they have no legal right; and is entirely free, there being no need on the adopter's part, and no worth on the part of the adopted: or rather the inheritance they are adopted to; which exceeds all others, is incorruptible, undefiled, and fades not away; and lies among the ſaints in light, and belongs to all the children of God: and this they are predeſtinated unto by God the Father, who takes them into his family, puts them among the children, and gives them a goodly heritage: and that by Jeſus Chriſt; or through him; for both the grace of adoption, and the kingdom and glory they are adopted to, come by and through him as mediator; through his eſpouſing their perſons, aſſuming their nature, and redeeming them from under the law and its curſes; through his giving them a power and privilege, openly to be the ſons of God; and through faith in him, whereby they are manifeſtatively ſuch: the phraſe unto himſelf, either refers to God the Father, who has choſen, ſet apart, formed and reſerved his people and children for himſelf, for his peculiar treaſure, and for his own glory; or to Jeſus Chriſt, that he might have ſome brethren, and they be conformed to him, and he be the firſt-born among them, and in all things have the preeminence; and that they might be with him, and behold his glory, and he be glorified in them: and this act of divine predeſtination, was according to the good pleaſure of his will: the will of God is the rule of all his actions, and of all his acts of grace and goodneſs; and the good-pleaſure of it appears, in the predeſtination of men to grace and glory: and from hence it is manifeſt, that foreſeen faith, holineſs, and good works, are excluded from being the moving cauſes of predeſtinating grace; and that it is wholly to be reſolved into the good-will and pleaſure of God; the view in it being entirely as follows,

Ver. 6. To the praiſe of the glory of his grace, &c.] The grace of God manifeſtly appears, in the predeſtination of men to adoption; in that God had no need of ſons, he having a dear and well-beloved one, in whom he is well pleaſed; and in that thoſe he adopts, are ſo unworthy of the relation; and in that men and not angels, ſhould be taken by him into his family; and that ſome, and not others of the ſame race; and that this ſhould be before the world was; and in providing Chriſt as a redeemer, to open the way for the reception of this grace and happineſs; and in appointing the grace of faith to be the receiver of it: and the glory of the grace of God appears herein; the glory of God, is the ſupreme end of all he does; and the glory of his grace, and not his power, or other perfections of his, and the manifeſtative glory of that is here intended; yea, the praiſe of that glory: and this end is anſwered, when the children of God aſcribe their adoption to the free grace of God; and when they admire it, and are thankful for it, and walk worthy of the relation they are brought into: wherein he hath made us accepted in the beloved; the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions read, his own beloved Son, and ſo the Claromontane exemplar; the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is the beloved of God the Father; and was ſo from everlaſting, and will be ſo to everlaſting; which has appeared by his nearneſs to him, lying in his boſom; by his being privy to all his counſels, purpoſes, and deſigns; in putting all things into his hands, and in ſhewing him all that he does; and by his giving him honour and glory, as man and mediator: and he is the beloved of the ſaints, for the tranſcendent excellencies that are in him, and for his love to them, and for what he has done for them, and is unto them; and in him is their acceptance: which is to be underſtood of the acceptance of their perſons, as founded in the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and ſo of their ſervices in him; of God's act of delight and complacency in them, as conſidered in Chriſt; who looks upon them, and is well pleaſed with them, and reſts in his love towards them; which is an amazing inſtance of grace: it was grace that gave them a being in Chriſt, and which has provided in predeſtination every thing to make them grateful to God; and the very act of acceptance is of mere grace; for internal grace, or grace infuſed, is not here meant, but the free favour of God: ſome read not in which, but which εχαριτωσεν, he freely gave us in the beloved; ſo the Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, and the Syriac and Arabic verſions.

Ver. 7. In whom we have redemption through his blood, &c.] Redemption ſuppoſes captivity and ſlavery, and is a deliverance out of it; God's elect by nature, are in bondage to ſin, ſatan, and the law; through the grace of Chriſt, they are redeemed from all iniquity; ranſomed out of the hands of him that is ſtronger than they; and are freed from the law, its bondage, curſe, and condemnation, and from every other enemy: and this benefit Chriſt is the author of; he was called to be the redeemer of his people from all eternity; and he was ſent in the fulneſs of time, to procure the redemption of them; to which he had a right, being their near kinſman; and for which he was every way fit, being God as well as man; and which he has obtained by his obedience, ſufferings, and death: and in whom it reſides, as in its proper ſubject and author; who by imputation, is made redemption to all the choſen ones; for not angels but men, ſhare in this redemption; and not all men, but elect men; ſuch as are choſen in Chriſt, predeſtinated to the adoption of children by him, and who are accepted in the beloved: and this comes to them through the blood of Chriſt, which was freely ſhed on the croſs to procure it; and was a ſufficient ranſom, or redemption price; it being not only the ſame blood with thoſe who are redeemed, but the blood of an innocent perſon; and not of a mere man, but of one who is truly and properly God, as well as man; ſee more of this in the note on Col. i. 14. A branch of this redemption follows, or a bleſſing that comes by it, and along with it, the forgiveneſs of ſins; of all ſins, original and actual, paſt, preſent, and to come; and this is through the blood of Chriſt, which was ſhed for the ſame: and yet is according to the riches of his grace; for God of his rich grace found the ranſom price, and gave his Son, as well as he gave himſelf, his life, a ranſom for many; and how much ſoever it coſt Chriſt to procure redemption and pardon, they are free to his people; who are redeemed without money and price of theirs, and whoſe ſins are forgiven freely for Chriſt's ſake.

Ver. 8. Wherein he hath abounded toward us, &c.] That is, in the grace which is ſo abundantly diſplayed in redemption and forgiveneſs of ſin, through the blood of Chriſt: in all wiſdom and prudence; this may be underſtood, either of the aboundings of grace in the Goſpel; which may be called all wiſdom and prudence, becauſe it is the wiſdom of God; it is the produce of his wiſdom, and a diſplay of it; the doctrines it contains are full of wiſdom, and are the means of communicating it to men, and of making them wiſe unto ſalvation; and it may be ſo called, to ſet forth the excellency and perfection of it, as greatly tranſcending all human wiſdom; and in this the grace of God has much abounded, for the Goſpel is a declaration of the free grace of God, in the ſalvation of ſinners by Chriſt; in the free juſtification of them by his righteouſneſs; and in the full pardon of their ſins through his blood; and is a kind invitation and free promiſe of grace, to all ſenſible ſinners: or elſe of the aboundings of grace in converſion; all men by nature are fooliſh and unwiſe; in converſion God makes men to know wiſdom in the hidden part, which he puts there; and for which purpoſe, the Spirit is given as a Spirit of wiſdom; and ſome part of the work of ſanctification, lies in ſpiritual light, knowledge, and underſtanding; and the Syriac verſion reads the laſt clauſe, and in all ſpiritual underſtanding; and faith particularly may be intended, which is ſometimes expreſſed by knowledge; and now the grace of God is exceeding abundant with faith and love, in regeneration, ſanctification, and converſion: or rather this may be underſtood of the diſplay of divine wiſdom, in the work of redemption and ſalvation by Chriſt; and which is to be ſeen, in pitching upon a proper perſon to be the mediator, to become a ſacrifice, and make interceſſion, who is the Son of God, truly God and man, and ſo every way able to perform the buſineſs of ſalvation; and in the manner of its being effected, in a way wherein grace and mercy are highly exalted, and yet in no wiſe reproachful to the holineſs of God, or injurious to his juſtice, but to the honour of them, in which ſatan is greatly mortified, and ſin is condemned, and yet the ſinner ſaved; and in the ſeveral parts of it, in the juſtification of the ungodly without works, by the righteouſneſs of another, in pardoning their ſins in a way of juſtice and faithfulneſs, and yet according to the riches of grace, and in the ſecurity of the perſons of God's elect, and of their grace and glory in Chriſt; and in the ſubjects of this ſalvation, who are the fooliſh things of this world, ungodly ſinners, the chief of ſinners; and laſtly, in making faith the receiver of all the bleſſings of ſalvation, that ſo it might appear to be all of grace.

Ver. 9. Having made known unto us the myſtery of his will, &c.] The Goſpel, which is a myſtery, a hidden myſtery, the myſtery of God and of Chriſt, and the myſtery of the Goſpel; the ſeveral doctrines of it, are called the myſteries of the kingdom of heaven; ſuch as are concerning the Trinity of perſons in the Godhead, the union of the two natures in Chriſt, his ſonſhip and incarnation, the ſaints union and communion with him, the work of the Spirit of God upon the ſoul, the calling of the Gentiles, and the converſion of the Jews, the reſurrection of the dead, and the change of living ſaints: and the Goſpel is the myſtery of the will of God; of his will in ſaving ſinners by Chriſt; and it declares that he does all things in ſalvation, according to his ſovereign will and pleaſure; chooſes, redeems, juſtifies, pardons, and calls whom he pleaſes; and this is made known by the miniſtry of the word, and by the Spirit, as a Spirit of wiſdom and revelation, in the knowledge of Chriſt and his Goſpel: the diſcovery of which is, according to his good pleaſure, which he hath purpoſed in himſelf; both with reſpect to the perſons to whom it is made known, and with reſpect to the time when he makes it known; both theſe are as he pleaſes, and as he has purpoſed in his own breaſt; the Goſpel is ſent when and where he has determined within himſelf it ſhall go; and perſons are called by it according to his purpoſe and grace.

Ver. 10. That in the diſpenſation of the fulneſs of times, &c.] Or according to the diſpenſation, &c. as the Alexandrian copy reads; the fulneſs of time appointed by God, and fixed in the prophets; after many times and ſeaſons were elapſed, from the creation of the world; at the moſt ſuitable and convenient time, when a new œconomy or diſpenſation began, within which all this was to be effected, hereafter mentioned: he might gather together in one all things in Chriſt; this ſuppoſes, that all things were once united together in one; angels and men were united to God by the ties of creation, and were under the ſame law of nature, and there were peace and friendſhip between them; and this union was in Chriſt, as the beginning of the creation of God, in whom all things conſiſt: and it ſuppoſes a diſunion and ſcattering of them; as of men from God, and from good angels, which was done by ſin; and of Jews and Gentiles from one another; and of one man from another, every one turning to his own way; and then a gathering of them together again: the word here uſed, ſignifies to reſtore, renew, and reduce to a former ſtate; and ſo the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions render it; and according to this ſenſe, it may ſeem to have reſpect to the times of the reſtitution of all things, the reſtoration and renovation of the univerſe; when there will be new heavens and a new earth, and new inhabitants in them: the word is alſo uſed to recapitulate, or ſum up the heads of a diſcourſe; and according to this ſenſe, it may intend the meeting together, and ſumming up of all things in Chriſt, that had been before; as of all the promiſes and bleſſings of the covenant; of all the prophecies and promiſes of the Old Teſtament; of all the types and ſhadows, and ſacrifices of the former diſpenſation; yea, all the ſins of Old Teſtament ſaints, and all the curſes of the law, met on him: the word is likewiſe uſed for the collection of numbers into one ſum total; and Chriſt is the ſum total of elect angels and men; or the whole number of them is in him; God has choſen a certain number of perſons unto ſalvation; theſe he has put into the hands of Chriſt, who has a particular and perſonal knowledge of them; and the exact number of them will be gathered and given by him: once more, it ſignifies to reduce, or bring under one head; and Chriſt is an head of eminence and of influence, both to angels and men; and there is a collection of theſe together in one, in Chriſt; by virtue of redemption by Chriſt, and grace from him, there is an entire friendſhip between elect angels and elect men; they are ſocial worſhippers now, and ſhall ſhare in the ſame happineſs of the viſion of God and of Chriſt hereafter: hence it follows, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in him; by things in heaven are not meant, the ſouls of ſaints in heaven; though it is true, that the ſouls of departed ſaints are in heaven; and that the ſaints in heaven and on earth were gathered together in Chriſt, and repreſented by him, when he hung upon the croſs; and that they all make up one body, of which Chriſt is the head; and that they will be all collected together one day; and that their ſouls which are in heaven, and their bodies which are in the earth, will come together and be re-united, and dwell with Chriſt for ever; but rather the angels are meant, whoſe original is heaven; where they have their reſidence, and from whence they never fell; and whoſe employment is in heaven, and of an heavenly nature: and by things on earth, are not intended every creature on earth, animate and inanimate; nor all men, but all elect men, whether Jews or Gentiles; and ſome of all ſorts, ranks, and degrees; whoſe origin is of the earth, and who are the inhabitants of it: all theſe angels in heaven, and elect men on earth, are brought together under one head, even in him, in Chriſt Jeſus, and by him; and none but he was able to do it, and none ſo fit, who is the creator of all, and is above all; and was typified by Jacob's ladder, which reached heaven and earth, and joined them together, and on which the angels of God aſcended and deſcended.

Ver. 11. In whom alſo we have obtained an inheritance, &c.] Or a part and lot; that is, have obtained one in Chriſt, in his perſon, and in his fulneſs of grace, in the bleſſings and promiſes which are in him; or have obtained to be the Lord's clergy, or heritage, to be his portion and inheritance; or rather to have an inheritance in him by lot, meaning the incorruptible and eternal inheritance of glory and happineſs in heaven; to which elect men are choſen in Chriſt, and are begotten to a lively hope of through his reſurrection from the dead; and which his righteouſneſs gives a right unto, and his grace a meetneſs for; and which is now in his hands, and will be given to them thro' him: and this is ſaid to be obtained by lot, as the word ſignifies, in alluſion to the land of Canaan, which was divided by lot to the children of Iſrael; and to ſhew, that it is not by works of righteouſneſs done by men, but by the ſovereign diſpoſal of God; and that every one ſhall have his ſhare, and that certainly; for this is not deſigned to repreſent it as a caſual, or contingent thing. The Alexandrian copy reads, in whom alſo we are called; and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion, in whom alſo we are called by lot; and the Syriac verſion, in him, or by him, we are choſen, which agrees with the next clauſe: being predeſtinated according to the purpoſe of him, who worketh all things after the counſel of his own will; predeſtination is not only to ſonſhip, but to an inheritance; it not only ſecures the grace of adoption, but prepares and provides an heavenly portion: and this act of predeſtination, proceeds according to a purpoſe; according to a purpoſe of God, which can never be fruſtrated; and according to the purpoſe of that God, as one of Stephens's copies reads; that is the author of all things but ſin; of the works of creation and of providence, and of grace and ſalvation; and who works all theſe according to his will, juſt as he pleaſes, and according to the counſel of it, in a wiſe and prudent manner, in the beſt way that can be deviſed; for he is wonderful in counſel, and excellent in working; wherefore his counſel always ſtands, and he does all his pleaſure: and hence the inheritance which the ſaints obtain in Chriſt, and are predeſtinated to, is ſure and certain.

Ver. 12. That we ſhould be to the praiſe of his glory, &c.] This is the end of predeſtination to the inheritance; and the ſenſe is, either that the praiſe of the glory of God in his grace and goodneſs, might be diſcovered and made known unto the ſaints, as it is diſplayed in election, redemption, juſtification, pardon, adoption, regeneration, and eternal ſalvation; or that they ſhould praiſe and glorify him on account of theſe things, by aſcribing all to his grace, and nothing to themſelves; by giving him thanks for all his benefits; by ordering their converſations aright, as become the Goſpel; and by doing all things, with a view to his glory: who firſt truſted in Chriſt; the Jews, the Apoſtle, and others of the Jewiſh nation; who before hoped in Chriſt, as the words may be rendered; who hoped in Chriſt before the Gentiles did; and indeed, the people of Iſrael hoped for Chriſt before he came; the promiſes of the Meſſiah were made to them, and he was the peculiar hope and expectation of that people; and to them he firſt came, and to them the Goſpel was firſt preached; and ſome of them firſt believed in Chriſt, and truſted in him, and not in their own righteouſneſs, ſtrength, wiſdom, and riches, nor in their own hearts, nor in any mere creature, nor in their carnal privileges; all which they renounced confidence in, and dependance on, when they came to the knowledge of Chriſt; in whoſe perſon they truſted for acceptance, and in his righteouſneſs for juſtification, and in his blood for pardon, and in his fulneſs for ſupply, and in his power for protection and perſeverance: this ſuppoſes knowledge of him, and a ſenſe of the frailty and vanity of all other objects; and was a betaking themſelves to him, a leaning and ſtaying on him, a committing all unto him, and an expectation of all good things from him.

Ver. 13. In whom ye alſo truſted, &c.] The Gentile believers, the Epheſians, whom the Apoſtle now particularly addreſſes; and who participated of the ſame grace and privileges with the believing Jews; the ſame promiſe belonged to all that God called, whether afar off or nigh; and the ſame common ſalvation was ſent to one, as to another; and the ſame faith was wrought in one, as in the other; and they were intereſted in the ſame Chriſt, and were heirs of the ſame inheritance; the Alexandrian copy reads we: after that ye heard the word of truth; the Goſpel; and which is ſo called, on account of its divine original, coming from the God of truth, who cannot lye; and becauſe of the concern which Chriſt has in it, who is truth itſelf, and was the author, ſubject, and preacher of it, and who confirmed it by his miracles, and his death; and on account of the Spirit of God, the dictator of it, and who leads into all truths, and owns and bleſſes them for converſion and comfort; and becauſe it contains nothing but truth, and particularly that eminent one, ſalvation alone by Chriſt, for the chief of ſinners; and in contradiſtinction from the law, which was typical and ſhadowy; מלה דקשוט, the word of truth, is a phraſe uſed by the Jews[*], for ſublime and heavenly doctrine: now by the hearing of this, faith came; and this the Epheſians heard, not only externally, but internally; ſo as to underſtand, approve, and believe it, and to put it in practice: and which is alſo called the Goſpel of your ſalvation; becauſe it is a declaration and publication of ſalvation by Chriſt, and gives an account of the author of ſalvation, of his ability and willingneſs to ſave, and of the nature of this ſalvation, and deſcribes the perſons who ſhall be ſaved; and becauſe it is the means of ſalvation, when attended with the Spirit and power of God; and the inſtrument in God's hand, of ſhewing to ſouls their ſpecial and particular intereſt in ſalvation: in whom alſo after that ye believed; which may refer either to the Goſpel of ſalvation, in which they believed upon hearing it; or rather to Chriſt, the ſaviour revealed, in whom they believed to the ſaving of their ſouls: and this ſhows, that the ſealing work of the Spirit after mentioned, and with which this ſtands in connexion, is a diſtinct thing from faith, or indeed any other work of the Spirit; as illumination, regeneration, ſanctification, &c. it is what follows believing, and is a work that paſſes upon the ſoul after it; and ſo is ſomething over and above, and more than faith, at leaſt than firſt believing: and from hence it alſo appears, that there may be true faith, where this is not as yet; and that none but believers in Chriſt, enjoy the following privilege: ye were ſealed with that Holy Spirit of promiſe. This cannot have reſpect to the Father's ſealing his people in election, with the ſeal of his foreknowledge, 2 Tim. ii. 19. for that is before faith, and is within himſelf, and not on them, and is diſtinct from the Spirit's work; and for the ſame reaſons it cannot deſign the Son's affection to them, ſetting them as a ſeal on his arm and heart, Cant. viii. 6. or his aſſerting his property in them, and the ſecurity and protection of them, Cant. iv. 12. Rev. vii. 3. nor the Spirit's finiſhing and compleating his own work of grace upon the ſoul, in which ſenſe the word is uſed, Rom. xv. 28. for this as yet was not done upon theſe believing Epheſians; nor the confirming the Goſpel, and the ſaints in it, by the extraordinary effuſion of the Spirit on the day of pentecoſt, or by his extraordinary works, which attended the miniſtry of the word, to the eſtabliſhing of it, and the faith of men in it; ſince theſe were not common to believers, nor did they continue; whereas the believing Epheſians in common, were ſealed; and the Spirit of God continues ſtill as a ſealer of his people, and as an earneſt and pledge of their inheritance until the day of redemption; but it is to be underſtood of the confirming, certifying, and aſſuring the ſaints, as to their intereſt in the favour of God, and in the bleſſings of grace, of every kind, and their right and title to the heavenly glory; ſee the note on 2 Cor. i. 22. and the ſeal of theſe things is not circumciſion, nor baptiſm, nor the Lord's ſupper, nor even the graces of the Spirit; but the Spirit himſelf, who witneſſes to the ſpirits of believers, the truth of theſe things, and that as a Spirit of promiſe: ſo called, both becauſe he is the Spirit promiſed, as the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions render it, whom the Father and Chriſt had promiſed, and who was ſent by them; and becauſe he uſually ſeals, or certifies believers of the truth of the above things, by opening and applying a word of promiſe to them: and which he does alſo, as the Holy Spirit; for this ſealing work of his, leaves a greater impreſs of holineſs upon the ſoul, and engages more to acts of holineſs; wherefore the doctrine of aſſurance, is no licentious doctrine; no perſons are ſo holy, as thoſe who are truly poſſeſſed of that grace; and as for ſuch who pretend unto it, and live in ſin, it is a certain thing that they in reality know nothing of it.

[*] Zohar in Num. fol. 76. 3.

Ver. 14. Which is the earneſt of our inheritance, &c.] The incorruptible and never fading one in heaven, or the heavenly kingdom; this is the Father's gift, his bequeſt, and belongs only to children; it comes to them through the death of the teſtator, Chriſt, and is for ever; and of this, the Spirit of God is the pledge and earneſt: an earneſt, is what confirms an agreement, and aſſures the right to the thing agreed to, and is a part of it, and leſſer than it, and is never returned; ſo the Spirit of God certifies the right to the heavenly inheritance, as well as gives a meetneſs for it; he is the firſt-fruits of eternal glory and happineſs, and of the ſame kind with it; and as he is enjoyed in meaſure by the ſaints now, is leſſer than the communion which they ſhall have with him, and with the Father, and the Son, hereafter, for the beſt things are reſerved till laſt; and being once given into the heart as an earneſt, he always continues, he never removes more, or is ever taken away: until the redemption of the purchaſed poſſeſſion, or of the peculiar people; ſee 1 Pet. ii. 9. for this is not to be underſtood of heaven, which is never ſaid to be purchaſed, nor can it with any propriety be ſaid to be redeemed; but of ſaints, of the church of God, who are bought with a price, and are purchaſed with his blood; and who, as they were redeemed from ſin, ſatan, and the law, when they were purchaſed, ſo will be redeemed again in the reſurrection-morn, which is called the day of redemption, ch. iv. 30. ſee Luke xxi. 28. and which will be a redemption of them from the weakneſs, corruption, and mortality of the body; from their preſent ſtate of abſence and pilgrimage; from the body of ſin and death; from all ſorrows and afflictions, both inward and outward; from the reproaches and perſecutions of men; from a tempting devil, and an unbelieving heart; from all doubts and fears; and from death and the grave: and ſo the Syriac verſion very juſtly renders it, until the redemption of them that are ſaved. Now till ſuch time, the Spirit of God abides as an earneſt, even until the whole felicity is enjoyed both in ſoul and body; and this ſhews the perpetuity of the Spirit's inhabitation, and grace, the final perſeverance of the ſaints, and the ſecurity of the inheritance to them. Unto the praiſe of his glory; as to the glory of the Father, by whom the ſaints are choſen and predeſtinated, ver. 6. and to the glory of the Son, by whom they are redeemed, in whom they obtain the inheritance, and in whom they truſt, ver. 12. ſo to the glory of the holy Spirit, by whom they are ſealed, and who is their earneſt; for he muſt have his ſhare of glory in the ſalvation of the elect, as well as the other two perſons.

Ver. 15. Wherefore I alſo, &c.] As well as others: after I heard of your faith in the Lord Jeſus; who is the immediate object of faith, and a very proper and ſuitable one; having every thing in him that is agreeable to the caſe and circumſtances of thoſe that truſt in him. And the grace of faith, which terminates on him, is a ſeeing him, a beholding the glory of his perſon, and the fulneſs of his grace; a going to him, and venturing on him; a laying hold upon him, and embracing of him; a committing all unto him, and a leaning and depending on him, and a living upon him, and a walking on in him. And love unto all the ſaints; whether Jew or Gentile, rich or poor, greater or leſſer believers, of meaner gifts, or larger abilities; and which love was unfeigned, fervent, active, and laborious; and which is the evidence of regeneration, and without which a profeſſion is in vain. Theſe two graces, faith and love, are inſeparable; they always go together, and are to be found in the ſame perſons; and where they are, they can't be hid, as they were not in theſe Epheſians; their faith was profeſſed by them, and was made public, and their love ſhewed itſelf in deeds, as well as in words, to the ſaints: hence the Apoſtle came to hear of them both, upon the certain relation of others; for theſe things were come abroad, and were talked of; ſee the notes on Col. i. 3, 4. and Philem. ver. 4, 5.

Ver. 16. Ceaſe not to give thanks for you, &c.] On account of their faith and love; which were gifts of grace beſtowed upon them, and not the produce of their own free-will and power; and therefore thanks are given to God for them: making mention of you in my prayers; which ſhews the Apoſtle to be a praying perſon, and that he was conſtant at the throne of grace, where he prayed for others as well as for himſelf; and it points out the time and way, when, and in which he gave thanks to God for them; and is mentioned, not only to teſtify his great affection for them, but alſo to excite them, by his example, to the practice of thoſe duties themſelves.

Ver. 17. That the God of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, &c.] In what ſenſe God the Father is the God of Chriſt, ſee the note on ver. 3. The Father of glory; or the glorious Father; who is glorious in himſelf, in the perfections of his nature, and in the works of his hands; and as a Father, he is a glorious Father to Chriſt, and is a Father to him, as he is to none elſe; and has been honoured and glorified by Chriſt, and from whom Chriſt as man has received much honour and glory: and he is a glorious Father to the ſaints, to whom he has ſhewn inexpreſſible love, by adopting them into his family; and pities them, as a father does his children; takes care of them, and protects them, and makes a glorious proviſion for them; not only of good things now, but of an eternal inheritance hereafter: and he may be ſo called, becauſe he is the author and giver of eternal glory and happineſs; and becauſe all glory is due unto him: the Arabic verſion reads, God, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Father of glory, making all theſe epithets to belong to Chriſt: may give unto you the ſpirit of wiſdom and revelation, in the knowledge of him; this was one part of the Apoſtle's prayers for the ſaints at Epheſus, that they might increaſe in divine knowledge; either in the knowledge of God, as the God of Chriſt, and the Father of glory, and as their God and Father in Chriſt, or of God, as conſidered in Chriſt the mediator; or elſe of Chriſt himſelf: and deſigns not a notional and ſpeculative knowledge of Chriſt, but what is practical and experimental; and which is joined with love of him, faith in him, and obedience to him; and which is not only approbative, but fiducial and appropriating; and though it is but imperfect, yet is progreſſive; and for the progreſſion of it, the Apoſtle prays; for it is certain, that theſe ſaints had a knowledge of Chriſt, but this was not perfect; and a larger meaſure of it was deſireable: and in order to this, he prays for the Spirit, as a Spirit of wiſdom; who implants ſpiritual wiſdom in the hearts of men, and inſtructs them in the Goſpel, the hidden wiſdom of God, leads them into all truths, and opens to them the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge, which are hid in Chriſt, the wiſdom of God; and as a Spirit of revelation; who reveals Chriſt, and the things of Chriſt, at firſt converſion; and afterwards reveals him and his righteouſneſs, and other benefits of his more largely, even from faith to faith; and gives a clearer view of intereſt in them: hence it appears, that the Spirit is the gift of God; and that all ſpiritual light and knowledge, and the increaſe of it, are owing to him.

Ver. 18. The eyes of your underſtanding being enlightened, &c.] By the Spirit of God already, to ſee the exceeding ſinfulneſs of ſin; the inſufficiency of their own righteouſneſs; the beauty, glory, fulneſs, and ſuitableneſs of Chriſt, as a ſaviour; the excellency, truth, and uſefulneſs of the doctrines of the Goſpel; in which their underſtandings were before dark, but now had light into them: wherefore theſe words are not to be conſidered as part of the Apoſtle's petitions, but rather as what was taken for granted by him; and are to be put into a parentheſis, and the following words to be joined in connexion with the preceding verſe; unleſs it ſhould be thought, that the Apoſtle prays for greater illuminations, and for more ſpiritual light, and that the eyes of their underſtandings might be more and more enlightened: the phraſe, עין השכל, ομμα της διανοιας, the eye of the underſtanding, is Rabbinical, and often to be met with in Jewiſh writings [f]; the Alexandrian copy, and ſeveral others, the Complutenſian edition, the Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions read, the eyes of your heart; and ſo, עיני הלבבות, the eyes of the hearts, or minds, is a phraſe uſed by the Jewiſh writers [g]: that ye may know what is the hope of his calling; by which is meant, the effectual vocation of the ſaints; which is not a call to an office, or a call merely by the external miniſtry of the word; but which is internal, ſpecial, powerful, high, and heavenly: and this is the calling of God, of which he is the author; who calls with an holy calling, unto eternal glory by Chriſt Jeſus; and which is without repentance: and the hope of this calling, is either eternal happineſs, which is the thing hoped for; or Chriſt, who is the ground and foundation of it; or the grace of hope, which is exerciſed on both; or all three: for hope of eternal glory, as it is founded on Chriſt, may be ſaid to be the hope of the calling of God, becauſe it is wrought in the ſoul at the time of effectual vocation, and what ſaints are then called to the exerciſe of; and calling grace, is an encouragement to hope for eternal life; ſince whom God calls, he juſtifies and glorifies: and now the Apoſtle prays, that theſe ſaints who were called by the grace of God, might know more of Chriſt, the foundation of their hope; and what that is they are hoping for; and more and more what it is to hope for the ſame, upon the view of Chriſt's perſon, blood, and righteouſneſs: and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the ſaints; the ſaints themſelves are the Lord's portion, and the lot of his inheritance, in whom he is, and will be abundantly glorified; but here it rather ſeems to deſign the heavenly inheritance before ſpoken of, of which the Spirit is the earneſt; and this is the Lord's, it is of his preparing, and it is his gift, and a very rich and glorious inheritance it is: hence it is not only ſignified by manſions, and everlaſting habitations, by an houſe, and by a city, but by a kingdom; the riches of grace are preparatory to it, and the riches of glory are comprized in it; and this is in, or among the ſaints, who only have a right unto it, and a meetneſs for it; and what this inheritance is, with the riches and glory of it, will not be fully known in this life; and indeed but little of it is known; ſo that ſuch a petition as this is always proper and pertinent.

[g] Bechinat Olam, p. 260.

Ver. 19. And what is the exceeding greatneſs of his power to us-ward who believe, &c.] The objects of the divine power here intended, are believers in Chriſt; which diſtinguiſhes this power from that which was put forth in creation, and from that which will be diſplayed in the reſurrection of the dead, and from the power of divine wrath, which will appear in the damnation of ſinners; and ſhews, that this power is that which is exerted in the implantation of faith, and in the continuance of it, and in the finiſhing of that work; and that this is a great power, an exceeding great one, a ſupereminent one; which is attended with energy and efficacy, and is irreſiſtible and inſuperable: the greatneſs of this power as diſplayed in the work of converſion and faith appears, if it be conſidered what the work itſelf is called, a creation, a reſurrection from the dead, a regeneration, and a tranſformation of the man into another man, which muſt needs require almighty power; as well as what is then done, ſome things are removed, ſatan is diſpoſſeſſed, the ſtony heart is taken away, the enmity is ſlain, the old man is put down from his throne, and put off with his deeds; and there are ſome things wrought, Chriſt is formed in the ſoul, his grace is implanted, his image is inſtamped, a new heart is given, and principles of light and life, of grace and holineſs are put; the underſtanding is enlightened, the will is ſubdued, the affections are ſet on other objects, and the mind and conſcience are cleanſed and purified; and the means of this are the miniſters, and miniſtry of the word, which are weak, fooliſh, and contemptible, in the eyes of men; to which may be added, the oppoſition made both from within and from without, from a ſinful heart, a tempting devil, and an enſnaring, reproaching, and perſecuting world: ſo that this work of faith cannot be aſcribed to any thing ſhort of the exceeding greatneſs of divine power; and which is ſeen in ſupporting faith when it is wrought, under great diſcouragements; in delivering believers out of divers temptations; in aſſiſting them to diſcharge their duty, and in their final perſeverance: and to increaſe the idea of this power it is added, according to the working of his mighty power, or according to the energy of the might of his power; the ſtrength of his power, in all the mighty energy of it, is exerted towards and upon believers; and which they ſhould know, own, and acknowledge, to the glory of the grace of God: and this is in proportion, and agreeable to that power,

Ver. 20. Which he wrought in Chriſt, when he raiſed him from the dead, &c.] There are many articles of faith contained in this paſſage; as that Chriſt died, that he is raiſed from the dead, that he was raiſed from the dead by God the Father, and that his reſurrection was by the power of God: the reſurrection of any perſon is an inſtance of great power, but Chriſt's reſurrection from the dead was an inſtance of peculiar and ſpecial power; for he was raiſed from the dead as a publick perſon, repreſenting all his people, for whom he became a ſurety; and he was raiſed again for their juſtification, and to great glory in himſelf, after he had been brought into a very low eſtate indeed: moreover, this paſſage in connexion with the preceding verſe ſuggeſts, that there is ſome proportion between the power put forth on Chriſt in raiſing him from the dead, and that which is exerted in the work of converſion and faith: there is ſome likeneſs between the things themſelves, as well as in the diſplay of power in them; Chriſt's reſurrection is called a begetting, and he is ſtiled the firſt-begotten from the dead, and the regeneration of men is ſignified by a reſurrection from the dead; as Chriſt's body was really dead, lifeleſs, and without motion, antecedent to his reſurrection, ſo men previous to converſion, are dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, and are deſtitute of ſpiritual life and motion; and as Chriſt's human nature could not help itſelf, could not raiſe itſelf, ſo neither can dead ſinners convert themſelves, or bring themſelves out of that ſtate and condition, in which they are by nature; and as the reſurrection of Chriſt was the pure work of God, and a diſplay of his almighty power, ſo the work of faith, of grace and converſion, is the entire work of God, which is begun, carried on, and finiſhed wholly by his power; and as Chriſt's reſurrection was in order to his glorification, ſo is the regeneration and converſion of men, in order to their enjoyment of the heavenly inheritance, as it follows: and ſet him at his own right hand in the heavenly places; which is expreſſive of the great honour conferred upon the human nature of Chriſt, ſuch as never was given to any of the angels, and of the glory it is exalted to; and ſhews that he has done his work on earth with acceptance, which he came about; and therefore is ſet down at his Father's right-hand, where he enjoys reſt and eaſe from his labours, and is out of the reach of every enemy; will never die more, but live for ever, to intercede for his people, to aſſiſt and protect them, and bring them where he is; and in whom as their head and repreſentative, they are already ſet down in the ſame heavenly places.

Ver. 21. Far above all principality and power, &c.] Good angels and bad angels, and civil magiſtrates, who alſo may be intended by the following words: and might and dominion; good angels may be ſo called, becauſe of their employment under God in the affairs of providence, and the government of this world; and Chriſt is not only above them, as he is God, being their creator, who has made them, and on whom they depend, and is the Lord whom they ſerve, and is the object of their worſhip and adoration, and as he is mediator, to whom they miniſter, and ſo is above them in nature, name, and office; but alſo as he is man, in union with the ſon of God; and chiefly he here is ſaid to be above them on account of place, being at the right-hand of God, where they are not, Heb. i. 13. And evil angels may be ſo called, becauſe of the government which ſubſiſts among themſelves, and the power and influence they have over mankind; Chriſt was above them when here on earth, as appears by his reſiſting the temptations of ſatan, and defeating him in them; by his diſpoſſeſſing devils from the bodies of men; by his ſpoiling and deſtroying them and their works at his death; and by his leading them captive, and triumphing over them at his aſcenſion; and by delivering ſouls out of his hands at converſion, through his power attending the miniſtration of his Goſpel; and his being above them will ſtill be more manifeſt, in the binding of ſatan a thouſand years, and in the final condemnation of him, and of all his angels under him: civil magiſtrates are ſometimes called by theſe names, and Chriſt is above them; they receive their governments from him, they rule by him, and are accountable to him, and are ſet up and put down at his pleaſure; all theſe ſenſes may be taken in; but the firſt ſeems chiefly deſigned: 'tis added, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but alſo in that which is to come; perſons of authority and dignity, of fame and renown, whether in earth or heaven; as emperors, kings, princes, nobles, generals of armies, &c. in this world, and cherubim, ſeraphim, &c. in the other world: this phraſe denotes both the extenſiveneſs of Chriſt's kingdom, and the eternity of it; as reaching to both worlds, and being over every thing in them, and as laſting to the end of this, and unto that which is to come.

Ver. 22. And hath put all things under his feet, &c.] Theſe words are taken out of Pſal. viii. 6. ſee the note on 1 Cor. xv. 27. And gave him to be the head over all things to the church; the Vulgate Latin verſion reads, and gave him to be the head over every church, or all the church; the Ethiopic verſion, the whole church; which intends not barely profeſſors of religion, or a family of faithful perſons, or a particular congregation, in which ſenſe the word is ſometimes uſed; but the whole body of God's elect, the church, which is built on Chriſt the rock, for which he gave himſelf, and which is the general aſſembly and church of the firſt-born, whoſe names are written in heaven: Chriſt is an head to this church; in what ſenſe he is ſo, ſee the note on 1 Cor. xi. 3. And this headſhip of Chriſt, is the gift of God; and it is an honourable gift to him, as mediator; it is a glorifying of him, and a giving him in all things the pre-eminence; and it is a free grace gift to the church, and a very ſpecial, valuable, and excellent one, and of infinite benefit and advantage to it; and which is expreſſed in his being head over all things to it; to over-rule all things for its good; to communicate all good things to it; and to perform all the good offices of an head for it: the Syriac verſion reads, and him who is above all things, he gave to be the head to the church; even him who is God over all, bleſſed for evermore.

Ver. 23. Which is his body, &c.] That is, which church is the body of Chriſt; as an human body is but one, conſiſting of various members, united to each other, and ſet in an exact proportion and ſymmetry, and in a proper ſubſervience to one another, and which muſt be neither more nor fewer, than they are; ſo the church of Chriſt is but one general aſſembly, which conſiſts of many perſons, of different gifts and uſefulneſs, and are all united together under one head Chriſt, whoſe name they bear, and are made to drink of the ſame Spirit; and theſe are placed in ſuch order, as to throw a glory and comelineſs on each other, and to be uſeful to one another, ſo that it cannot be ſaid of the meaneſt member, that there is no need of it; and the number of them can neither be increaſed nor diminiſhed; and this is Chriſt's body, his myſtical body, which becomes his by the Father's gift to him, and by his own purchaſe; to which he is united, and of which he is the only head; and which he loves as his own body, and ſupplies, directs, and defends: the fulneſs of him that filleth all in all; beſides the perſonal fulneſs which Chriſt has as God, and his fulneſs of ability and fitneſs for his work as mediator, and his diſpenſatory fulneſs, which dwells in him for the uſe of his people, the church is his relative fulneſs, which fills him, and makes up Chriſt myſtical; and which is filled by him, and is compleat in him: and then will the church appear to be Chriſt's fulneſs, when all the elect, both Jews and Gentiles, ſhall be gathered in; and when theſe are all filled with the grace deſigned for them; and when they are all grown up to their full proportion, or are arrived to the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt; which will be a glorious ſight to ſee, and very deſireable: and this ſhews the certainty of the ſaints perſeverance and ſalvation; for if any one member, even the meaneſt, could be loſt, the church would not be the fulneſs of Chriſt: and this may be further concluded, from its being his fulneſs, who filleth all in all; which may be underſtood either more extenſively; for he fills both worlds with inhabitants; he fills all places with his omnipreſence, and all creatures with proper food and ſuſtenance: or with a limitation to the church and people of God; he fills all his churches and ordinances with his gracious preſence; and he fills the ſeveral ſocieties of his ſaints, with members and with officers; and theſe with the gifts and graces of his Spirit, ſuitable to their place and ſtation; he fills all and every of the ſaints, all the veſſels of mercy, whether greater or leſſer, all ſorts of them, of larger or meaner capacities; he fills all the powers and faculties of their ſouls, their hearts with joy, their minds with knowledge, their conſciences with peace, their wills with ſpiritual deſires, ſubmiſſion and reſignation, and their affections with love to himſelf and people: in ſhort, he fills them with all grace and goodneſs, and the fruits of righteouſneſs; and ſo makes them meet for uſefulneſs here, and for happineſs hereafter: the fulneſs of the earth in Pſal. xxiv. 1. is by the Jews interpreted of the ſouls of the righteous, and of the congregation of Iſrael[h].

CHAP. II.

THE deſign of the Apoſtle in this chapter, is to magnify the riches of divine grace, in the effectual vocation and ſalvation of ſinners, by Chriſt Jeſus; in order to which, he deſcribes the ſad eſtate they are in by nature, and before converſion, even God's elect among the Jews, and eſpecially among the Gentiles; and then obſerves how peace is made for and between them both, by Chriſt the peace-maker; and the various privileges and bleſſings which both enjoy, in conſequence of it: he begins with the Epheſians, and expreſſes the former ſtate they were in by a death, which is aſcribed to treſpaſſes and ſins, ver. 1. and repreſents their walk and converſation to have been according to the world, and after ſatan; who is deſcribed by his dominion over other devils that dwell in the air, and by his influence upon diſobedient men, ver. 2. and that it might not be thought that the caſe of theſe Gentile Epheſians was worſe than others, the Apoſtle obſerves of himſelf, and other ſaints among the Jews, that their converſation before converſion was among the men of the world, and ſo according to the courſe of it, as the Gentiles; and that it was a very carnal converſation they had ſpent, in fulfilling the deſires and luſts of the fleſh; and that they were as deſerving of, and as liable to the wrath of God in themſelves, as other perſons, ver. 3. to which former ſtate he oppoſes their preſent one;

[h] Zohar in Gen. fol. 50. 2. & in Exod. fol. 21. 2.

they were not now dead in ſin, but were quickned; which is aſcribed to God as the efficient cauſe, and to his rich mercy and great love as the moving cauſe; and to Chriſt as the meritorious and procuring cauſe, by whoſe grace they were ſaved, and in whom they were not only quickened, but raiſed, and made to ſit together in heavenly places; and the final cauſe and end of all this was, to ſhew forth the abundant grace and kindneſs of God, through Chriſt, ver. 4, 5, 6, 7. The doctrine of ſalvation by grace, the Apoſtle takes up again from ver. 5. and to the moving cauſe of ſalvation, the grace of God, he adds the mean, or inſtrument by which it is received and enjoyed, which is faith; and that is denied to be owing to the power of men, but is ſaid to be a gift of God, ver. 8. and the end in view, in putting ſalvation upon the foot of grace and not works, is to prevent boaſting in the creature, ver. 9. and that works cannot be the cauſes of ſalvation, either efficient, moving, or procuring, is evident; ſince though they are to be performed as being agreeable to the purpoſing, as well as commanding will of God, yet they are effects, both of the work of grace upon the ſoul in time, called a creation, and of the decrees of God from eternity, ver. 10. when the Apoſtle goes on to put the Epheſians in mind of their former ſtate in unregeneracy, with the ſame view as before, to magnify the grace of God, but in a different manner; not as common to them with the Jews, but as peculiar to them as Gentiles; as that they were had in contempt by the Jews, and were in a ſtate of alienation, not only from them, but from God and Chriſt, and the enjoyment of various privileges, ver. 11, 12. wherefore the grace of God was the more conſpicuous in their preſent ſtate of nearneſs both to God and to his people, brought about by the blood of Chriſt, ver. 13. who as the peace-maker, not only made peace by the blood of his croſs between God and them, but between them and the true Iſrael of God among the Jews; which was done, partly by aboliſhing the ceremonial law, which occaſioned enmity, and kept up a diviſion among them, ver. 14, 15, 16. and partly by ſending, and preaching the Goſpel of peace to them both, ver. 17. and by opening a way of acceſs for them both unto the Father thro' himſelf, under the direction and influence of the Spirit, ver. 18. from all which it appeared, that they were not in a ſtate of diſtance and alienation as before, but all belonged to the ſame city and family, and were built on the ſame foundation, and were united together in the ſame corner-ſtone, Jeſus Chriſt, ver. 19, 20. and as the Apoſtle compares Chriſt to a foundation, and a corner-ſtone, ſo the church of Chriſt, conſiſting of Jews and Gentiles, to a temple; which being fitly put together, becomes an holy one in the Lord, and a ſuitable habitation for God through the Spirit, ver. 21, 22.

Ver. 1. And you hath he quickned, &c.] The deſign of the Apoſtle in this and ſome following verſes, is to ſhew the exceeding ſinfulneſs of ſin, and to ſet forth the ſad eſtate and condition of man by nature, and to magnify the riches of the grace of God, and repreſent the exceeding greatneſs of his power in converſion: the phraſe hath he quickned, is not in the original text, but is ſupplied from ver. 5. where it will be met with and explained: here thoſe who are quickned with Chriſt, and by the power and grace of God, are deſcribed in their natural and unregenerate eſtate, who were dead in treſpaſſes and ſins; not only dead in Adam, in whom they ſinned, being their federal head and repreſentative; and in a law ſenſe, the ſentence of condemnation and death having paſſed upon them; but in a moral ſenſe, through original ſin, and their own actual tranſgreſſions: which death lies in a ſeparation from God, Father, Son, and Spirit, ſuch are without God, and are alienated from the life of God, and they are without Chriſt, who is the author and giver of life, and they are ſenſual, not having the Spirit, who is the Spirit of life; and in a deformation of the image of God, ſuch are dead as to their underſtandings, wills, and affections, with reſpect to ſpiritual things, and as to their capacity to do any thing that is ſpiritually good; and in a loſs of original righteouſneſs; and in a privation of the ſenſe of ſin and miſery; and in a ſervitude to ſin, ſatan, and the world: hence it appears, that man muſt be in himſelf unacceptable to God, infectious and hurtful to his fellow-creatures, and uncapable of helping himſelf: ſo it was uſual with the Jews, to call a wicked and ignorant man, a dead man; they ſay [i], "there is no death like "that of thoſe that tranſgreſs the words of the "law, who are called, מתים, dead men, and "therefore the ſcripture ſays, turn and live." And again [k], "no man is called a living man, but he "who is in the way of truth in this world.—— "And a wicked man who does not go in the way "of truth, is called, מת, a dead man." And once more [l], whoever is without wiſdom, lo, he "is, כמת, as a dead man; ſee the note on 1 Tim. v. 6. The Alexandrian and Claromontane copies, and one of Stephens's, and the Vulgate Latin verſion read, dead in your treſpaſſes and ſins; and the Syriac verſion, dead in your ſins and in your treſpaſſes; and the Ethiopic verſion only, dead in your ſins.

Ver. 2. Wherein in time paſt ye walked, &c.] Sins and tranſgreſſions are a road or path, in which all unconverted ſinners walk; and this path is a dark, crooked, and broad one, which leads to deſtruction and death, and yet is their own way, which they chuſe, approve of, and delight to walk in; and walking in it, denotes a continued ſeries of ſinning, an obſtinate perſiſting in it, a progreſs in iniquity, and pleaſure therein: and the time of walking in this path, being ſaid to be in time paſt, ſhows that the elect of God before converſion, walk in the ſame road that others do; and that converſion is a turning out of this way; and that when perſons are converted, the courſe of their walking is altered, which before was according to the courſe of this world; meaning this world, in diſtinction from the world to come, or the preſent age, in which the Apoſtle lived, and deſigns the men of it; and the courſe of it is their cuſtom, manner, and way of life; to which God's elect, during their ſtate of unregeneracy, conform, both with reſpect to converſation and religious worſhip: great is the force that prevailing cuſtoms have over men; it is one branch of redemption by Chriſt, to deliver men from this preſent evil world, and to free them from a vain converſation in it; and it is only the grace of God that effectually teaches to deny the luſts of it; and it is only owing to the prevalent interceſſion and power of Chriſt, that even converted perſons are kept from the evil of it: according to the prince of the power of the air; which is not to be underſtood of any ſuppoſed power the devil has over the air, by divine permiſſion, to raiſe winds, &c. but of a poſſe, or body of devils, who have their reſidence in the air; for it was not only the notion of the Jews [m], that there are noxious and accuſing ſpirits, who fly about באויר, in the air, and that there is no ſpace between the earth and the firmament free; and that the whole is full of a multitude of them; but alſo it was the opinion of the Chaldeans [n], and of Pythagoras [o], and Plato [p], that the air is full of Dæmons: now there is a prince who is at the head of theſe, called Beelzebub, the prince of devils, or the lord of a fly, for the devils under him, are as ſo many flies in the air, Matt. xii. 24. and by the Jews called [q], רבהון דרוחיא, the prince of ſpirits; and is here ſtiled, the ſpirit that now worketh in the children of diſobedience; by which ſpirit is meant, not the leſſer devils that are under the prince, nor the ſpirit of the world which comes from him, and is not of God; but ſatan himſelf, who is a ſpirit, and an evil and an unclean one; and who operates powerfully in unbelievers, for they are meant by children of diſobedience, or unbelief; juſt as, בני מהימנותא, children of faith [r], in the Jewiſh dialect, deſign believers; and over theſe ſatan has great influence, eſpecially the reprobate part of them; whoſe minds he blinds, and whoſe hearts he fills, and puts it into them to do the worſt of crimes; and indeed, he has great power over the elect themſelves, whilſt in unbelief, and leads them captive at his will; and theſe may be ſaid in their unregeneracy to walk after him, when they imitate him, and do his luſts, and comply with what he ſuggeſts, dictates to them, or tempts them to.

Ver. 3. Among whom alſo we all had our converſation in times paſt, &c.] What the Apoſtle ſays of the Gentile Epheſians before converſion, he ſays of himſelf and other Jews; and this he does, partly to ſhow that it was not from ill-will, or with a deſign to upbraid the Gentiles, that he ſaid what he did; and partly to beat down the pride of the Jews, who thought themſelves better than the ſinners of the Gentiles; as well as to magnify the grace of God in the converſion of them both: the ſenſe is, that the Apoſtle and other Jews in the time of their unregeneracy, had their converſation according to the cuſtoms of the world, and to the prince of the air, and among unbelievers, as well as the Gentiles; and that they were equally ſinners, and lived a like ſinful courſe of life: in the luſts of our fleſh; by fleſh is meant, the corruption of nature; ſo called, becauſe it is propagated by natural generation; and is oppoſed to the Spirit, or principle of grace; and has for its object fleſhly things; and diſcovers itſelf moſtly in the body, the fleſh; and it makes perſons carnal or fleſhly: and this is called our, becauſe it belongs to human nature, and is inherent in it, and inſeparable from it in this life: and the luſts of it, are the inward motions of it, in a contrariety to the law and will of God; and are various, and are ſometimes called fleſhly and worldly luſts, and the luſt of the fleſh, and the luſt of the eyes, and the pride of life: and perſons may be ſaid to have their converſations in theſe, when theſe are the ground of their converſation, when they are ſolicitous about them, and make proviſion for the fulfilling of them, and conſtantly employ themſelves in obedience to them, as follows: fulfilling the deſires of the fleſh, and of the mind; or the wills of them; what they incline to, will, and crave after: various are the degrees of ſin, and its ſeveral motions; and univerſal is the corruption of human nature; not only the body, and the ſeveral members of it, are defiled with ſin, and diſpoſed to it, but all the powers and faculties of the ſoul; even the more noble and governing ones, the mind, underſtanding, and will, as well as the affections; and great is the power and influence which luſt has over them: and were by nature children of wrath, even as others; by which is meant, not only that they were wrathful perſons, living in malice, hateful, and hating one another; but that they were deſerving of the wrath of God, which comes upon the children of diſobedience, among whom they had their converſation; and which is revealed from heaven againſt ſuch ſins they were guilty of, though they were not appointed to it: and they were ſuch by nature; really, and not in opinion, and by and from their firſt birth: ſo a Jewiſh commentator [s] on theſe words, thy firſt father hath ſinned, Iſa. xliii. 27. has this note; "how can'ſt thou ſay thou haſt not "ſinned? and behold thy firſt father hath ſinned, "and he is the firſt man, for man, מוטבע בחטא, "is naturally in ſin;" or by nature a ſinner, or ſin is naturally impreſſed in him; and hence being by nature a ſinner, he is by nature deſerving of the wrath of God, as were the perſons ſpoken of: even as others; as the reſt of the world, Jews as well as Gentiles; and Gentiles are eſpecially deſigned, in diſtinction from the Jews, the Apoſtle is ſpeaking of; and who are particularly called in the Jewiſh dialect, אחרים, others; ſee the note on Luke xviii. 11.

Ver. 4. But God, who is rich in mercy, &c.] Mercy is a perfection of the divine nature, and is eſſential to God; and may be conſidered with reſpect to the objects of it, either as general, extending to all men in a providential way; or as ſpecial, reaching only to ſome in a way of grace; for though mercy is his nature, yet the diſplay and exertion of it towards any object, is the act of his will; and ſpecial mercy, with all the bleſſings and benefits of it, is only exhibited in Chriſt Jeſus: and God is ſaid to be rich in it, becauſe he is free and liberal in diſpenſing it, and the effects of it; and that to a large number of perſons, in great abundance and variety, by various ways, and in divers inſtances; as in the covenant of grace, in the miſſion of Chriſt, in redemption by him, in regeneration, in pardon of ſin, and in eternal ſalvation; and yet it is inexhauſtible and perpetual; and this ſets forth the excellency and glory of it: for his great love wherewith he loved us; the love of God to his choſen people is very great, if it be conſidered who it is that has loved them, God and not man; who is an infinite, unchangeable, and ſovereign being; and his love is like himſelf, for God is love; it has heights and depths, and lengths and breadths immeaſurable; it admits of no variation nor alteration; and is altogether free, ariſing from himſelf, and not from any motives and conditions in men: and if the perſons themſelves are conſidered, who are the objects of it, men, ſinful men, unworthy of the divine notice and regard; and that theſe are loved perſonally, particularly, and diſtinctly, and not others; nakedly, and not theirs, or for any thing in them, or done by them, and that notwithſtanding their manifold ſins and tranſgreſſions: to which may be added, that this love is repreſented as a paſt act; and indeed it is from everlaſting, and is antecedent to their being quickned, and was when they were dead in treſpaſſes and ſins; and is the ſource and ſpring of the bleſſing next mentioned: ſo the divine love is often called in the Cabaliſtic writings of the Jews [t], אהבה רבה, great love.

Ver. 5. Even when we were dead in ſins, &c.] See the note on ver. 1. Hath quickned us together with Chriſt; which may be underſtood either of regeneration, when a ſoul that is dead in a moral or ſpiritual ſenſe, is quickned and made alive; a principle of life is infuſed, and acts of life are put forth; ſuch have their ſpiritual ſenſes, and theſe in exerciſe; they can feel the load and weight of ſin; ſee their loſt ſtate and condition, the odiouſneſs of ſin, and the beauty of a Saviour, the inſufficiency of their own righteouſneſs, and the fulneſs and ſuitableneſs of Chriſt's; breathe after divine and ſpiritual things; ſpeak in prayer to God, and the language of Canaan to fellow-chriſtians; move towards Chriſt, exerciſe grace on him, act for him, and walk on in him: and this life they have not from themſelves, for previous to it they are dead, and in this quickning work are entirely paſſive; nor can regenerate perſons quicken themſelves, when in dead and lifeleſs frames, and much leſs unregenerate ſinners; but this is God's act, the act of God the Father; though not excluſive of the Son, who quickens whom he will; nor of the Spirit, who is the Spirit of life from Chriſt; and it is an inſtance of the exceeding greatneſs, both of his power and love; and this may be ſaid to be done with Chriſt, becauſe he is the procuring and meritorious cauſe of it, by his death and reſurrection from the dead; and is the author and efficient cauſe of it; and he is the matter of it, it is not ſo much the quickned perſons that live, as Chriſt that lives in them, and it is the ſame life he himſelf lives; and becauſe he lives, they ſhall live alſo; it is in him as in the fountain, and in them as in the ſtream: or elſe this may be underſtood of juſtification; men are dead in a law ſenſe, and on account of ſin, are under the ſentence of death; though they naturally think themſelves alive, and in a good ſtate; but when the Spirit of God comes, he ſtrikes dead all their hopes of life by a covenant of works; not merely by letting in the terrors of the law upon the conſcience, but by ſhewing the ſpirituality of it, and the exceeding ſinfulneſs of ſin; and how uncapable they are of ſatisfying the law, for the tranſgreſſions of it; and then he works faith in them, whereby they revive and live; they ſee pardon and righteouſneſs in Chriſt, and pray for the one, and plead the other; and alſo lay hold and live upon the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, when the Spirit ſeals up the pardon of their ſins to them, and paſſes the ſentence of juſtification on them, and ſo they reckon themſelves alive unto God; and this is the juſtification of life, the ſcripture ſpeaks of; and this is in conſequence of their being quickned with Chriſt, at the time of his reſurrection; for when he roſe from the dead, they roſe with him; when he was juſtified, they were juſtified in him; and in this ſenſe when he was quickened, they were quickned with him: by grace ye are ſaved; the Claromontane copy, and the Vulgate Latin verſion read, by whoſe grace; and the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions, by his grace; either by the grace of him that quickens, or by the grace of Chriſt with whom they were quickned; the Syriac verſion renders it, by his grace he hath redeemed us; which ſeems to refer to the redeeming grace of Chriſt; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion, and hath delivered us by his grace; and there is a change of the perſon into us, which ſeems more agreeable to what goes before, and follows after; ſee the note on ver. 8.

Ver. 6. And hath raiſed us up together, &c.] Which refers either to a ſpiritual reſurrection, to a reſurrection from a death in ſin, to a ſpiritual life; and which is the effect of almighty power, and of rich grace and mercy; and in which Chriſt is concerned: he is the efficient cauſe of it, he raiſes the dead in this ſenſe, and quickens whom he will; and his reſurrection is the virtual cauſe of it; and alſo the exemplar, between which there is a great likeneſs; both bear the ſame name; both are a declaration of ſonſhip; and both the firſt ſtep to glory in Chriſt and in his people; and both are inſtances of the exceeding greatneſs of God's power: or it may refer to a corporal reſurrection, ſaid to be already, becauſe it is in faith and hope, and becauſe of the certainty of it; and to be together with Chriſt, becauſe of the conformity of it to his reſurrection, and to the influence of which it is owing; and chiefly becauſe that when Chriſt roſe from the dead, all his people roſe in him, and with him, as their head and repreſentative, he being the firſt-fruits of them that ſlept; ſo called, in alluſion to the firſt-fruits of the harveſt under the law, which repreſented and ſanctified the whole: and made us ſit together in heavenly places in Chriſt Jeſus; Chriſt is entered into heaven as the forerunner, to take poſſeſſion of it for his people, in their name; and to prepare manſions of glory for them, and in theſe they ſit; which imports honour, pleaſure, reſt from labour and wearineſs, and ſafety and ſecurity: and what adds to the happineſs of this is, that it is together with all the ſaints, and with Chriſt himſelf; and in theſe they are made to ſit already; which is ſo ſaid, becauſe of the certainty of it, for the ſame glory Chriſt has, they ſhall have; and becauſe of their right to ſuch a bleſſing; and chiefly becauſe Chriſt their head is ſet down therein, who ſuſtains their perſons, bears their names on his heart, and repreſents them.

Ver. 7. That in the ages to come, &c.] This is the end of God's permitting ſin, in which men are morally dead; and of his ſuffering them to go on in ſin, in a ſtate of unregeneracy; and of his quickning them with Chriſt, and raiſing them up, and cauſing them to ſit together with him: namely, that he might ſhew the exceeding riches of his grace; riches being added to grace, denote the valuableneſs of it, as well as its plenty and abundance; and alſo the freeneſs and liberality of God in giving it; and likewiſe the enriching nature of it: and theſe riches are exceeding; they exceed the riches of this world, in the immenſeneſs of them, being unſearchable; and in the inexhauſtibleneſs of them, for though ſuch large treaſures have been expended upon ſuch numbers of perſons, yet there is ſtill the ſame quantity; and in the duration of them, they laſt for ever; and in the profit and ſatisfaction they yield, when other riches fade away, are not profitable nor ſatisfying; and they exceed the conception, knowledge, and comprehenſion of men; and intend the utmoſt ſtretch of the grace of God: and which are evidently and remarkably diſplayed, in his kindneſs towards us through Chriſt Jeſus; in providing him as a Saviour for his people; in the miſſion of him into this world; in not ſparing, but giving him up as a ſacrifice to juſtice for their ſins; and in bleſſing them with all ſpiritual bleſſings in him: all which God deſigned to ſhew forth, in the ages to come; meaning either the ages following to the end of time, in diſtinction from the ages that were paſt: hence it appears, that the world was not expected to be immediately at an end; and that the writings of the New Teſtament were to be continued, and the Goſpel preached unto the end of time, in which the riches of divine grace are held forth to view; and that theſe ages to come, are ſeaſons and days of grace; for a day of grace will never be over, as long as the Goſpel of grace is preached; and that the inſtances of grace through Chriſt, and in the times of the Apoſtles, are encouraging to men in ages ſucceeding; and that the ſame grace that was diſplayed then, is ſhewn forth in theſe: or elſe the world to come is meant, which will take place at the end of this; and may lead us to obſerve, that there will be ages in the other world; and that God has not only prepared a great deal of grace and glory for his people, but he has appointed ages enow for them to enjoy it in; and that their riches lie in another world, and are in ſome meaſure hid; and that theſe are the produce of the grace of God; and that the exceeding riches of that will be then manifeſted, when it will alſo appear that God's giving grace to men, is not only with a view to his own glory, but is an act of kindneſs to them; and that eternal happineſs will be heartily and freely beſtowed upon them, and that through Jeſus Chriſt their Lord: the Syriac verſion renders it, that unto ages to come he might ſhew, &c. that is, to men in ages to come; the ſenſe is much the ſame.

Ver. 8. For by grace are ye ſaved, &c.] This is to be underſtood, not of temporal ſalvation, nor of preſervation in Chriſt, nor of providential ſalvation in order to vocation, and much leſs of being put in a way of ſalvation, or only in a ſalvable ſtate; but of ſpiritual ſalvation, and that actual; for ſalvation was not only reſolved upon, contrived and ſecured in the covenant of grace, for the perſons here ſpoken to, but it was actually obtained and wrought out for them by Chriſt, and was actually applied unto them by the Spirit; and even as to the full enjoyment of it, they had it in faith and hope; and becauſe of the certainty of it, they are ſaid to be already ſaved; and beſides, were repreſentatively poſſeſſed of it in Chriſt their head: thoſe intereſted in this ſalvation, are not all mankind, but particular perſons; and ſuch who were by nature children of wrath, and ſinners of the Gentiles; and it is a ſalvation from ſin, ſatan, the law, its curſe and condemnation, and from eternal death, and wrath to come; and includes all the bleſſings of grace and glory; and is entirely owing to free grace: for by grace is not meant the Goſpel, nor gifts of grace, nor grace infuſed; but the free favour of God, to which ſalvation in all its branches is aſcribed; as election, redemption, juſtification, pardon, adoption, regeneration, and eternal glory: the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read, by his grace, and ſo ſome copies; and it may refer to the grace of all the three perſons; for men are ſaved by the grace of the Father, who drew the plan of ſalvation, appointed men to it, made a covenant with his Son, in which it is provided and ſecured, and ſent him into the world to obtain it; and by the grace of the Son, who engaged as a ſurety to effect it, aſſumed human nature, obeyed and ſuffered in it for that purpoſe, and has procured it; and by the grace of the Spirit, who makes men ſenſible of their need of it, brings it near, ſets it before them, and applies it to them, and gives them faith and hope in it: hence it follows, through faith, and that not of yourſelves, it is the gift of God; ſalvation is through faith, not as a cauſe or condition of ſalvation, or as what adds any thing to the bleſſing itſelf; but it is the way, or means, or inſtrument, which God has appointed, for the receiving and enjoying it, that ſo it might appear to be all of grace; and this faith is not the produce of man's free-will and power, but it is the free gift of God; and therefore ſalvation through it, is conſiſtent with ſalvation by grace; ſince that itſelf is of grace, lies entirely in receiving grace, and gives all the glory to the grace of God: the ſenſe of this laſt clauſe may be, that ſalvation is not of ourſelves; it is not of our deſiring, nor of our deſerving, nor of our performing, but is of the free grace of God: though faith is elſewhere repreſented as the gift of God, John vi. 65. Phil. i. 29. and it is called the ſpecial gift of faith, in Wiſdom iii. 14.

Ver. 9. Not of works, &c.] Of any kind, moral or ceremonial, before or after converſion, done without faith or in it, nor of theſe in any ſenſe; works are neither the moving cauſes, nor the procuring cauſes, nor the helping cauſes, nor cauſa ſine qua non, or conditions of ſalvation; the beſt works that are done by men, are not done of themſelves, but by the grace of God, and therefore can never merit at his hand: and ſalvation is put upon ſuch a foot, leſt any man ſhould boaſt; of his works before God, and unto men; wherefore he has denied works any place in juſtification and ſalvation, in order to exclude all boaſting in man; and has fixed it in a way of grace, and has choſen and called poor ſinful worthleſs creatures to enjoy it, that whoever glories, may glory in the Lord.

Ver. 10. For we are his workmanſhip, &c.] Not as men only, but as chriſtians; not as creatures merely, but as new creatures; the work of grace upon the ſoul ſeems chiefly deſigned, which like a poem, as the word may be rendered, is a very curious work; the king's daughter is all glorious within, for this is an internal work, and is a good and excellent one; it is not indeed perfected at once, but is gradually carried on, till the finiſhing ſtroke is given to it by that hand which begun it; the author of it is God, it is not man's work; nor is it the work of miniſters, no, nor of angels, but it is God's work: ſometimes it is aſcribed to the Spirit, who regenerates and ſanctifies; and ſometimes to the Son of God, who quickens whom he will; and ſometimes to the Father, who reveals his Son, and draws men to him, and who ſeems to be meant here: the ſubjects of this divine operation, are the perſons deſcribed in ver. 1, 2, 3. and include both Jews and Gentiles; and expreſs the diſtinguiſhing grace of God, that they and not others, and who were by nature children of wrath as others, ſhould be his workmanſhip: and this is mentioned to ſhew, that ſalvation cannot be by any works of men, ſince all their works are either wrought for them, or in them, by God; ſalvation is a work wrought for them, without them; and ſanctification is a work wrought in them by God, of his good pleaſure; and all their good works are fruits of his grace, as follows: created in Chriſt Jeſus unto good works; the work of grace is a creation, or a creature, a new creature; not a new vamp of old Adam's principles, but an infuſion of new ones, and is a work of almighty power; and ſuch who have it wrought in them, are ſaid to be created in Chriſt; becauſe as ſoon as a man becomes a new creature, he is openly and viſibly in Chriſt; and by theſe new principles of grace which are created in him, he is fit and ready, and in a capacity to perform good works; the new man formed in him, is formed for righteouſueſs and true holineſs; the internal principle of grace both excites unto, and qualifies for, the performance of righteous and holy actions: which God hath before ordained that we ſhould walk in them, or has before prepared; for the

the preparation of good works to be performed by ſaints, and the preparation of them for the performance of them are both from the Lord; God has appointed good works to be done by his people, and in his word he has declared what they are he would have done; and it is his will not only that they ſhould do them, but continue to do them; not only that they ſhould do a ſingle act or more, but walk in them; their converſation and courſe of life ſhould be one continued ſeries of good works; but the intention is not that they ſhould be ſaved by them, but that they ſhould walk in them; and this being the pre-ordination of God, as it ſhews that predeſtination is not according to good works, ſince good works are the fruits and effects of it, ſo likewiſe that it is no licentious doctrine; ſeeing it provides for the performance of good works, as well as ſecures grace and glory.

Ver. 11. Wherefore remember that ye being in time paſt, Gentiles in the fleſh, &c.] This with what follows in the next verſe, the Apoſtle puts the converted Epheſians in mind of, in order to magnify the grace of God in their converſion; and to humble them in a view of their former ſtate and condition; and to teach them that they could never be ſaved by any works of theirs: particularly he would have them call to mind, that they were in time paſt Gentiles; which does not ſo much regard the nation and country they were of, for in that ſenſe they were Gentiles ſtill; but their ſtate and condition; they had been very blind and ignorant, were Gentiles that knew not God; they had been very wicked and profligate ſinners of the Gentiles; and they had been Gentiles in the fleſh; not according to the fleſh, or by birth, for ſo they were then; but in the time of their unregeneracy they were carnal, and minded the things of the fleſh, walked after it, and fulfilled the luſts, and did the works of it; particular reſpect ſeems to be had to their uncircumciſion in the fleſh, to which circumciſion in the fleſh is oppoſed in the next clauſe: who are called uncircumciſion by that which is called circumciſion in the fleſh made by hands; that is, they were by way of reproach and contempt called uncircumciſed perſons; than whom none were more abominable to the Jews, and hated by them, who were called circumciſed perſons from that circumciſion which is outward, in the fleſh, in a particular part of the body; and which is done by the hands of a man, who was called מוהל, the circumciſer; which any one might be, except a Gentile[u]; an Iſraelite adult and ſkilful was preferred; yet theſe were not circumciſed perſons with that circumciſion that is inward, and is of the heart, in the Spirit, and is made without the hands of men, and by the Spirit and power of God.

Ver. 12. That at that time ye were without Chriſt, &c.] Or ſeparate from him: they were choſen in him and were preſerved in him, and were redeemed by him before; but they were without any knowledge of him, faith in him, love to him, communion with him, or ſubjection to him, his Goſpel, government, laws, and ordinances; and particularly they were without any promiſes of him, or prophecies concerning him, which were peculiar to the Jews; hence the Meſſiah is called, משיחא דישראל, the Chriſt of Iſrael[w], and who as he was promiſed, ſo he was ſent only to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael: hence it follows, being aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael; both from their civil and church-ſtate; the Gentiles might not dwell among them, nor have any dealings with them in things civil, unleſs they conformed to certain laws; nor might the Jews go into any, nor eat or converſe with any, that were uncircumciſed; ſo great an alienation and diſtance were there between theſe two people; and much leſs might they eat the paſſover and join with them in religious worſhip: the word for commonwealth here uſed, Harpocratian ſays[x], is commonly uſed by Greek writers for a democracy; tho' the original conſtitution of the Iſraelites was properly a theocracy: ſtrangers to the covenants of promiſe; to the covenant of circumciſion given to Abraham; and to the covenant at mount Sinai, made with Iſrael; and to the diſpenſation of the covenant of grace to that people, ſometimes called the firſt covenant and the old covenant, and which peculiarly belonged to them, Rom. ix. 4. one copy reads, ſtrangers to the promiſes of the covenant; which is natural enough; the Vulgate Latin verſion joins the word promiſe to the next clauſe, and reads, having no hope of the promiſe; of the promiſed Meſſiah: having no hope; of the Meſſiah and ſalvation by him, of the reſurrection of the dead, of a future ſtate, and of eternal life; none that is ſure and ſteadfaſt, that is purifying, and makes not aſhamed; or which is a good hope thro' grace, is the gift of God, the fruit of his love, and the effect of his power; and this is to be in a miſerable condition: Philo the Jew[y] obſerves, that "the Chaldeans call "a man Enos, as if he only was truly a man that "expects good things, and ſupports himſelf with "good hopes; and adds, hence it is manifeſt that "one without hope is not reckoned a man, but a "beaſt in an human form; ſince he is deſtitute of "hope, which is the property of the human ſoul;" and without God in the world; without the knowledge of God in Chriſt; without the image of God, which was defaced by ſin; without the grace and fear of God; and without communion with him, and the worſhip of him; and whilſt they were ſo they were in the world, among the men of it, and were a part of it, not being yet called out of it: the word ſignifies atheiſts; ſo ſome of the Gentiles were in theory, as they all were in practice; and they were by the Jews reckoned no other than atheiſts; it is a common ſaying with them[z], that "he that dwells without the land (of Iſrael) is like "one שאין לו אלוה, who has no God."

Ver. 13. But now in Chriſt Jeſus, &c.] Being openly and viſibly in Chriſt, created in him, and become believers in him; as they were before ſecretly in him, as choſen and bleſſed in him before the foundation of the world: ye who ſometimes were far off; who in their ſtate of unregeneracy were afar off from God, and from his law, and from any ſpiritual knowledge of him and fellowſhip with him; and from Jeſus Chriſt, and from the knowledge of his righteouſneſs, and the way of ſalvation by him; and from the Spirit, and any acquaintance with the things of the Spirit, and from minding them, and from walking after him; and from the ſaints and people of God, and from any love to them, and communion with them; and from any ſolid hopes of happineſs, or real peace and comfort; which diſtance was owing both to Adam's ſin and to their own tranſgreſſions: it is an obſervation of a Jewiſh writer[a] on Gen. iii. 9. where art thou? he (God) knew where he was, but he ſaid ſo to ſhew him that he was מרוחק, afar off from God by his ſin:

ſee Iſ. lix. 2. and yet are made nigh by the blood of Chriſt; ſo as to have nearneſs of acceſs to and communion with God, Father, Son, and Spirit, and the ſaints, in virtue of the blood of Chriſt; which gives boldneſs and ſpeaks peace; by which their perſons are juſtified, the pardon of their ſins is procured, reconciliation is made, and their garments are waſhed, and made white; and ſo they draw nigh with confidence by the faith of him.

Ver. 14. For he is our peace, &c.] The author of peace between Jew and Gentile: there was a great enmity of the Jew againſt the Gentile, and of the Gentile againſt the Jew; and chiefly on account of circumciſion, the one being without it, and the other inſiſting on it, and branding one another with nick names on account of it; but Chriſt has made peace between them by abrogating the ceremonial law, which was the occaſion of the difference, and by ſending the Goſpel of peace to them both, by converting ſome of each, and by granting the like priviledges to them all, as may be obſerved in the following verſes: and Chriſt is the author of peace between God and his people; there is naturally in man an enmity to God; ſin has ſeparated chief friends; nor can man make his peace with God; what he does, or can do, will not do it, and what will he cannot do; Chriſt is the only fit and proper perſon for this work, being a middle perſon between both, and is only able to effect it, being God as well as man; and ſo could draw nigh to God, and treat with him about terms of peace, and agree to them, and perform them; and which he has brought about by his blood, his ſufferings and death; and which is made on honourable terms, by a full ſatiſfaction to the law and juſtice of God; and ſo is a laſting one, and attended with a train of bleſſings: moreover, Chriſt is the donor of peace, of external peace in his churches, and of internal peace of conſcience, and of eternal peace in heaven: this is one of the names of the Meſſiah with the Jews[b]; "ſays R. Joſe the Galilean, even the name of the "Meſſiah is called שלום, peace; as it is ſaid, "Iſ. ix. 6. the everlaſting father, the prince of "peace;" ſee Mic. v. 5. where it is ſaid, and this man ſhall be the peace; which the Jewiſh[c] writers underſtand of the Meſſiah: who hath made both one; Jews and Gentiles, one people, one body, one church; he united them together, and cauſed them to agree in one, and made them to be of one mind and judgment by the above methods; as well as he gathered them together in one, in one head, himſelf, who repreſented them all: and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; the ceremonial law, which was made up of many hard and intolerable commands, and diſtinguiſhed, and divided, and kept up a diviſion between Jews and Gentiles: ſo the Jews call the law a wall, if ſhe be a wall, cant. 8, 9. זו תורה, this is the law, ſay they[d]; and hence we read of חומת התורה, the wall of the law[e]; and ſometimes the phraſe, a partition wall, is uſed for a diviſion or diſagreement; ſo R. Benjamin ſays[f], that between the Karaites and Rabbanites, who were the diſciples of the wiſe men, there was מחיצה, a middle wall of partion; a great difference and diſtance; and ſuch there was between the Jew and Gentile, by reaſon of the ceremonial law; but Chriſt removed it, and made up the difference: the alluſion ſeems to be to the wall which divided the court of Iſrael from the court of the Gentiles, in the temple, and which kept them at a diſtance in worſhip.

Ver. 15. Having aboliſhed in his fleſh the enmity, &c.] The ceremonial law, as appears by what follows, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; which conſiſted of many precepts, and carnal ordinances; and is ſo called becauſe it was an indication of God's hatred of ſin, by requiring ſacrifice for it; and becauſe it was an occaſion of ſtirring up the enmity of the natural man, it being a burden and a wearineſs to the fleſh, by reaſon of its many and troubleſome rites; and becauſe it was the cauſe of enmity between Jew and Gentile: the Jews ſay[g], that Sinai the mount on which the law was given, ſignifies hatred; and that it is ſo called becauſe from it deſcended שנאה, hatred or enmity to the nations of the world: now this Chriſt aboliſhed, in his fleſh, or by it; not by his incarnation, but by the ſacrifice of his fleſh, or human nature, and that as in union with his divine nature; but not until he had fulfilled it in himſelf, which was one end of his coming into the world; and then he aboliſhed it, ſo as that it ought not be, and ſo as that it is not, and of no uſe and ſervice; and that becauſe it was faulty and deficient, weak and unprofitable, as well as intolerable; and becauſe there was a change in the prieſthood; and becauſe it was contrary to a ſpirit of liberty, the great bleſſing of the Goſpel; and that there might be a reconciliation and a coalition between Jew and Gentile, as follows: for to make in himſelf of twain one new man, ſo making peace; which explains what is meant before by making both one; and expreſſes the ſtrictneſs of the union between Jew and Gentile, they became as one man; and points at the manner in which they became ſo ſtrictly united; and that is by being made new men, or new creatures, by having a work of grace upon their ſouls, and ſo baptized into one body, and made to drink of one and the ſame Spirit; the foundation of which union is in himſelf; for Jew and Gentile, male and female, bond and free, are all one in Chriſt Jeſus; he is the corner ſtone in which they all meet, and the head to which the whole body is joined.

Ver. 16. And that he might reconcile both unto God, &c.] This is another end of the abrogation of the ceremonial law: the Jews had run up a long ſcore againſt the ceremonial law, as well as againſt the moral law; and Chriſt by fulfilling it for them, and thereby abrogating it, reconciled them; and the Gentiles could not be reconciled together with them, without the abrogation of it: and this reconciliation of them is made to God, who was the perſon offended; and who yet firſt ſet on foot a reconciliation, in which his glory is greatly concerned; and reconciliation with others depends upon reconciliation with him: and this is made in one body by the croſs; by which body is meant, the human body of Chriſt, which the Father prepared for him, and he aſſumed, and that in order to make reconciliation for his people; and is ſaid to be one body, becauſe it was in one and the ſame body, in which he reconciled both Jews and Gentiles unto God, and in or by one ſacrifice of that body; reconciliation being ſo effectually made by it that there is no need of a reiteration: or the ſenſe is, he reconciled them, into one body; into one myſtical body, the church, of which he is head; and this he did by the croſs, that is, by his blood ſhed on the croſs, or by his ſuffering the death of the croſs; which ſhews that reconciliation is made in a way of ſatisfaction to the law and juſtice of God, by Chriſt's bearing the penalty of the law, and ſuffering the ſtrokes of juſtice on the croſs; and expreſſes the efficacy of his blood and ſacrifice, and the greatneſs of his condeſcenſion and love: having ſlain the enmity thereby; the ceremonial law, as before; and the ſlaying it is the ſame with aboliſhing it; unleſs the enmity between God and man is meant, which was ſlain by removing the cauſe of it ſin; and which laid a foundation for the ſlaying of it in the hearts of his people in regeneration, when ſin is made odious to them, and they are reconciled to God's way of ſalvation; hence being ſlain in both ſenſes, peace with God can never be broken.

Ver. 17. And came and preached peace to you which were afar off, &c.] Which is to be underſtood not of Chriſt's coming in the fleſh; for when he came in the fleſh, he came only to the Jews that were nigh, and preached the Goſpel in his own perſonal miniſtry to them, and not to the Gentiles, who are the perſons afar off; ſee ver. 12, 13. but of his coming by his Spirit in the miniſtry of his Apoſtles, to whom he gave a commiſſion after he had made peace and reconciliation by the blood of his croſs, to go into all the world and preach the Goſpel to the Gentiles in the furtheſt parts of the earth; and on whom he beſtowed gifts, qualifying them for ſuch ſervice, and ſucceeded them in it by his power and grace: and the ſubject of their miniſtry was peace, Chriſt who is our peace, and peace made by his blood, and the Goſpel of peace which declares both theſe; and it is the means of making perſons of peaceable diſpoſitions; its doctrines and promiſes when powerfully applied, give peace to diſtreſſed minds, and quiet to doubting ſaints; and it ſhews the way to eternal peace: and to them that were nigh; to the Jews, to whom the Goſpel of peace was preached in the firſt place, not only by Chriſt and his Apoſtles, before his death; but by his Apoſtles after his reſurrection, and after the commiſſion was given to preach it to the Gentiles; tho' they are mentioned laſt, becauſe the Apoſtle was ſpeaking to Gentiles; and this alſo verifies what Chriſt ſays, the firſt ſhall be laſt, and the laſt firſt: the Alexandrian copy, ſome others, and the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions read, peace, in this clauſe, as in the former; the Apoſtle ſeems to have reſpect to Iſ. lvii. 19. a like deſcription and diſtinction of Jews and Gentiles may be obſerved in the writings of the Jews[h]; ſo they ſay, "the Iſraelites are near unto the holy king, and "the reſt of the nations are far from him."

Ver. 18. For thro' him we both have an acceſs, &c.] That is, both Jews and Gentiles; the Arabic verſion reads, we both factions: being made one, and reconciled unto God, and having the Goſpel of peace preached to both, they have thro' Chriſt freedom of acceſs and boldneſs in it: by one ſpirit unto the father; they may come to God as the Father of ſpirits, and of mercies, who has made their ſouls or ſpirits, and beſtowed his mercies on them in great abundance; and as the Father of Chriſt, and as their God and Father in Chriſt: and the rather they ſhould conſider him in this relation to them, in order to command in them a reverence and fear of him; to ſecure a freedom and liberty in their approach to him; and to encourage an holy boldneſs, and a fiducial confidence in him; and to teach them ſubmiſſion to his will: and their acceſs to him is thro' Chriſt; who has made peace for them, and atonement for their ſins; who has ſatisfied law and juſtice, and brought in an everlaſting righteouſneſs for them; ſo that there is nothing lies in their way to hinder them; and beſides, he takes them as it were by the hand, and leads them into the preſence of his Father, and preſents their petitions for them, on whoſe account they have both audience and acceptance with God: and this acceſs is alſo by one Spirit; the holy Spirit, as the Ethiopic verſion reads; and who is neceſſary in acceſs to God, as a ſpirit of adoption, to enable and encourage ſouls to go to God as a Father; and as a ſpirit of ſupplication, to teach both how to pray, and for what, as they ſhould; and as a free ſpirit to give them liberty to ſpeak their minds freely, and pour out their ſouls to God; and as a ſpirit of faith to engage them to pray in faith, and with holy boldneſs, confidence, and importunity: and he is ſaid to be one, both with reſpect to the perſons to and by whom acceſs is had, the Father and Chriſt, for he is the one and the ſame ſpirit of the Father and of the Son; and with reſpect to the perſons who have this acceſs, Jews and Gentiles, who as they make up one body, are actuated and directed by, and drink into one and the ſame Spirit: hence this acceſs to God is of a ſpiritual kind; it is a drawing nigh to God with the heart, and a worſhipping him in Spirit; and is by faith, and may be with freedom, and ſhould be with reverence, and ought to be frequent; and is a peculiar priviledge that belongs to the children of God; and who have great honour beſtowed upon them, to have acceſs to God at any time, as their Father, thro' Chriſt the mediator, and under the influence, and by the direction and aſſiſtance of the holy Spirit: this is a conſiderable proof of a Trinity of perſons in the Godhead, of their deity and diſtinct perſonality.

Ver. 19. Now therefore ye are no more ſtrangers, &c.] Alluding to the name נכרי, a ſtranger, by which the Jews called the Gentiles; meaning that they were not now ſtrangers to God, to the grace of God, the love of God, and communion with him, nor to the throne of his grace; nor to Chriſt, to his perſon, his work and office, to his righteouſneſs, to his voice, and to believing in him; nor to the holy Spirit, as an enlightner, a comforter, the Spirit of adoption, and as a ſeal and earneſt of future glory; nor to their own hearts, the corruption and deceitfulneſs of them; nor to the devices of ſatan; nor to the covenant of grace, its bleſſings and promiſes: and foreigners; in the commonwealth of Iſrael, in the church of God; but fellow-citizens with the ſaints: the city they belong to is either the church below, which is the city of God, of his building, and where he dwells, of which Chriſt is the foundation, which is ſtrongly fortified with the walls and bulwarks of ſalvation, is delightfully ſituated by the river of divine love, and is endowed with various priviledges; or heaven above, which is a city of God's preparing and building alſo, and where he has his reſidence, and which is the habitation of angels and ſaints; of this city in either ſenſe ſaints are citizens; ſuch who are ſaints by ſeparation, who are ſet apart by the Father's grace, and by imputation, or thro' Chriſt's being made ſanctification to them, and by the regenerating grace of the bleſſed Spirit; and theſe, as they have a right to a name and a place in the church on earth, have alſo their citizenſhip in heaven; and which they have not by birth, nor by purchaſe, but by the free grace of God, which gives them both a right and a meetneſs; and believing Gentiles are upon equal foot of grace and privilege with believing Jews: and of the houſhold of God; and which is ſometimes called the houſhold of faith, the church of God conſiſting of believers, the family in heaven and in earth named of Chriſt; in which family or houſhold God is the Father, Chriſt is the firſt-born, miniſters are ſtewards; and here are ſaints of various growth and ſize, ſome fathers, ſome young men, ſome children: and to this family all believers belong, whether Gentiles or Jews; and which they come into, not by birth, nor by merit, but by adopting grace; and happy are they that belong to this city and houſe! they are freed from all ſervitude and bondage; they can never be arreſted, or come into condemnation; they have liberty of acceſs to God, and ſhare in the fulneſs of grace in Chriſt; they are well taken care of; they are richly clothed, and have plenty of proviſions; and will never be turned out, and are heirs of a never-fading inheritance.

[h] Zohar in Numb. fol. 89. 3.

Ver. 20. And are built upon the foundation of the Apoſtles and prophets, &c.] The prophets of the Old Teſtament, and the Apoſtles of the New, who agree in laying miniſterially the one and only foundation, Jeſus Chriſt; for not the perſons of the Apoſtles and prophets, nor their doctrines merely, are here meant; but Chriſt who is contained in them, and who is the foundation on which the church, and all true believers are built: he is the foundation of the covenant of grace, of all the bleſſings and promiſes of it, of faith and hope, of peace, joy, and comfort, of ſalvation and eternal happineſs; on this foundation the ſaints are built by Father, Son, and Spirit, as the efficient cauſes, and by the miniſters of the Goſpel as inſtruments: theſe lie in the ſame common quarry with the reſt of mankind, and are ſingled out from thence by efficacious grace; they are broken and hewn by the word and miniſters of it, as means; and are miniſterially laid on Chriſt the foundation, and are built up thereon in faith and holineſs; yea, private chriſtians are uſeful this way to build up one another: Jeſus Chriſt himſelf being the chief corner ſtone; which cements and knits together angels and men, Jews and Gentiles, Old and New Teſtament ſaints, ſaints above, and ſaints below, ſaints on earth, in all ages and places, and of every denomination; and which is the beauty and glory, as well as the ſtrength of the building, which keeps all together; and Chriſt is the chief, the head ſtone of the corner, and who is ſuperior to angels and men. This phraſe is uſed by the Jews to denote excellency in a perſon; ſo a wiſe ſcholar is called, אבן פינה, a corner ſtone [l]; ſee Pſal. cxviii. 22. Iſ. xxviii. 16. Zech. x. 4. It may be rendered, the chief cornering ſtone; it being ſuch an one that is a foundation-ſtone, as well as a corner ſtone; and reached unto, and lay at the bottom of, and ſupported the four corners of the building; for the foundation and corner ſtone in this ſpiritual building, is one and the ſame ſtone, Chriſt: it is ſaid of the temple of Latona at Buto in Egypt, that it was made, εξ ενος λιϑȣ, of one ſtone, as Herodotus [k], an eye-witneſs of it, atteſts.

Ver. 21. In whom all the building fitly framed together, &c.] This building is to be underſtood of all the ſaints, and people of God; of the whole univerſal church, which is God's building; and is a building of a ſpiritual nature, and will abide for ever: and this is fitly framed together; it conſiſts of various parts, as a building does; ſome ſaints are comparable to beams, ſome to rafters, others to pillars, &c. and theſe are joined and united to one another, and are ſet in an exact ſymmetry and proportion, and in a proper ſubſerviency to each other; and ſo as to make for the good, the ſtrength, and beauty of the whole. And it all centers in Chriſt; he has a great concern in this building; he is the maſter-builder, and the foundation and corner ſtone; and it being knit together in him, groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord: it grows by an acceſſion of new ſtones, or of ſouls called by grace, and added to it; for this building is not yet openly and viſibly compleated, as it will be; in order to which the miniſtry of the word, and adminiſtration of ordinances are continued; and this will be in the latter day, when the number of God's elect, among Jews and Gentiles, ſhall be gathered in: and this growth may be underſtood alſo of an increaſe of thoſe, who are openly laid in the building; of their ſpiritual growth into their head; Chriſt, and of an increaſe of grace in them; which the word and ordinances are means of, under a divine bleſſing: and this building grows unto an holy temple, the Goſpel church-ſtate, called a temple, in alluſion to the temple at Jeruſalem; whoſe materials were ſtones made ready and hewn, before they were brought thither; and whoſe magnificence, beauty, and glory, were very great; and it was the place of publick worſhip, and of the divine abode, and was a very ſignificant emblem of the church of God; ſee 2 Cor. vi. 16. which is an holy one, ſet apart for holy uſes, and internally ſanctified by the Spirit of God; and which is diſcovered by external holineſs of life, and converſation in the members of it: and this is ſaid to be in the Lord; which phraſe may refer to the word groweth, and denotes that growth and increaſe, both of perſons and grace, the church has in, and from the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; or to the word holy, and intimates, that the holineſs of the church, and every member of it, is alſo in and from the Lord; or to the word temple, which is built for him to dwell in.

Ver. 22. In whom you alſo are builded together, &c.] As the church univerſal, ſo every particular church is a building that is compact together, in and upon Chriſt, as the church at Epheſus was: God is the builder of it; Chriſt is the foundation; true believers are the proper materials; the door, or entrance into it, is Chriſt, and faith in him; the miniſters of the Goſpel are pillars in it; the ordinances are its windows; its furniture is of various ſorts, there are veſſels of ſmall, and of great quantity; and its proviſions are large and entertaining. A church is a building compact together; it conſiſts of many parts; and theſe are joined together, by agreement, and are knit and cemented in love; and being thus joined together, they are deſigned for ſocial worſhip, and their great concern ſhould be to edify one another. The phraſe, in whom, may either refer to the holy temple before ſpoken of, the church univerſal, of which a particular church is a part; or to Chriſt, who is the maſter-builder, by whom they are built together, and the foundation on whom they are built, and the corner ſtone in whom they meet and are united. And the end of their being thus built together is, for an habitation of God thro' the Spirit; which may be underſtood of God the Father, since he is diſtinguiſhed from Chriſt, in whom, and from the holy Spirit, thro' whom, they are built for this purpoſe, tho' tho' not to the excluſion of either of them; for a particular church is an habitation of Father, Son, and Spirit: and it being the habitation of God, ſhews his great grace and condeſcenſion, and the great value and regard he has for it; and this makes it a deſirable, delightful, and pleaſant habitation to the ſaints; and hence it is a ſafe and a quiet one, and they are happy that dwell in it; and hither ſhould ſouls come for the enjoyment of the divine preſence: and whereas it is ſaid to be ſuch through the Spirit; hence it appears, that the Spirit is concerned with the other two perſons in the building of it; and that hereby it becomes a ſpiritual houſe; and is, thro' his grace, a fit habitation for the holy God to dwell in; and that God dwells in his churches by his Spirit.

CHAP. III.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle hints at his ſtate and condition as a priſoner, and at the afflictions he endured for the ſake of the Goſpel; and whereas he knew theſe would be objected to his miniſtry, and be diſcouraging to the ſaints, he chiefly inſiſts on theſe two things; namely, to aſſert his office of Apoſtleſhip, and obſerve the knowledge of divine myſteries, and gifts of grace beſtowed on him, which he does with all modeſty and humility; and alſo to exhort the ſaints to conſtancy and perſeverance, notwithſtanding his tribulations; for which purpoſe he puts up ſeveral petitions for them; and the whole is concluded with a doxology, or an aſcription of glory to God. In ver. 1. he declares himſelf a priſoner of Chriſt, for the ſake of the Epheſians; and which was no objection to his being an embaſſador of Chriſt, and an Apoſtle of his, ſeeing he had a commiſſion from him to diſpenſe the word of his grace, ver. 2. of which, his knowledge in the myſtery of Chriſt, he had by revelation, was an evident proof, ver. 3. which might eaſily be underſtood by what he had written in the former part of his Epiſtle, ver. 4. and was ſuch as had not been given to the ſaints in former times, as it was to him, and others, now, ver. 5. particularly the knowledge of the myſtery of the calling of the Gentiles by the Goſpel, ver. 6. of which Goſpel to the Gentiles he was made a miniſter, through the gift of grace, and the energy of divine power, ver. 7. of which high honour he was unworthy, being, in his own eſteem, the meaneſt of all the people of God; and the grace and favour was the greater, inaſmuch as it was the unſearchable riches of Chriſt he was ſent to publiſh, and that among the Gentiles, ver. 8. and to give men light into a myſterious affair, which from eternity had been hid, and kept a ſecret in the heart of God, the creator of all things, ver. 9. but was now committed to him with this view, not only to be made known to the church, but by that to the heavenly principalities and powers, even that wiſe ſcheme of things which diſplays the manifold wiſdom of God, and was formed according to an eternal purpoſe in Chriſt, ver. 10, 11. thro' whom a way of acceſs is opened to God, with boldneſs, faith, and confidence, as the Goſpel declares, ver. 12. Wherefore, tho' he endured much tribulation for the ſake of preaching this Goſpel, this ſhould not at all ſink their ſpirits, or move them away from the hope of it; but they ſhould rather glory that they had ſuch a faithful preacher and defender of it, ver. 13. And as he deſired their perſeverance, ſo he prays for it, and for ſeveral things in order to it: the poſture in which he prayed was by bowing the knee; the perſon to whom he prayed is deſcribed by his relation to Chriſt, as his Father, of whom, or of Chriſt, the whole family of God in heaven and earth are named, ver. 14, 15. The petitions made by him are for internal ſtrength from the Spirit of God, that ſo they might be enabled to perſevere, ver. 16. and alſo, that Chriſt might continue to dwell in their hearts by faith, which would keep them from falling; and likewiſe, that they might have a lively ſenſe, and a full perſuaſion of their intereſt in the love of God; even ſo as to comprehend with others its breadth, length, depth, and heighth, which would engage them to preſs forward, and to hold on, and out, and not faint at tribulations, ver. 17, 18. And particularly he prays, that they might know more of the love of Chriſt, which is not fully to be known, and which would conſtrain them to follow him, and cleave to him with full purpoſe of heart; and that they might have a full ſupply of all grace to ſupport, influence, and aſſiſt them, ver. 19. and for his own, and their encouragement, with reſpect to having the petitions made, the Apoſtle aſcribes glory to God by Chriſt, as it ſhould be done in the church throughout all ages of time, under this conſideration, as being able to do for his people abundantly more than they are able to aſk of him, or can think of aſking of him, or receiving from him, ver. 20, 21.

Ver. 1. For this cauſe I Paul, the priſoner of Jeſus Chriſt, &c.] Not actively, whom Chriſt had apprehended by his grace, and made a priſoner of hope; but paſſively, who was made a priſoner for Chriſt, on account of preaching Chriſt, and his Goſpel: he was not a priſoner for any capital crime, as theft, murder, &c. and therefore he was not aſhamed of his bonds, but rather gloried in them; and a priſon has often been the portion of the beſt of men in this world: from hence we learn, that this Epiſtle was written when the Apoſtle was a priſoner at Rome; and the conſideration of this his condition ſerves much to confirm the truths he had before delivered, ſeeing they were ſuch as he could, and did ſuffer for; and which muſt engage the attention of the Epheſians to them, and eſpecially ſince his ſufferings were on their account: for you Gentiles; becauſe he preached the Goſpel to the Gentiles, which the Jews forbid, that they might not be ſaved; and becauſe he taught them, that circumciſion and the reſt of the ceremonies of the law were not binding upon them; which gave great offence to the Jews, who were the means of bringing of him into theſe circumſtances, and particularly the Aſiatic Jews, the Jews of Epheſus; who having ſeen and heard him there, knew him again when in the temple at Jeruſalem, and raiſed a mob upon him, having bore a grudge againſt him for his miniſtry at Epheſus, by which means he became a priſoner; ſo that he might truly ſay, he was a priſoner for the ſake of them; ſee Acts xxi. 27—33. One of Stephens's copies adds, am an ambaſſador, as in ch. vi. 20. and another of them, glory, or rejoice; ſee Phil. ii. 16, 17.

Ver. 2. If ye have heard of the diſpenſation of the grace of God, &c.] Not the free love and favour of God in his heart towards his people; nor internal grace wrought in the heart of the Apoſtle; but either the gift of grace, as in ver. 7. qualifying him for the work of the miniſtry; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, if ye have heard the gift of the grace of God; or rather the doctrine of grace, the Goſpel, the ſubject-matter of which is the grace of God; it is a declaration of the free grace of God in the ſalvation of men; and it is the means of conveying the grace of God into their hearts. Now the Apoſtle had a diſpenſation to preach this Goſpel committed to him; he acted by authority, and as a ſteward of the myſteries of God; and which he faithfully diſpenſed to the family of Chriſt, who appointed him this ſervice: this the Epheſians had heard of, from the relations of the Apoſtle, and others, and knew it themſelves, having often heard him preach, for he was with them for the ſpace of three years; wherefore this is not ſaid as if he queſtioned, whether they had heard or no, but as taking it for granted that they had: if, or ſeeing ye have heard, &c. which is given me to youward; it was not for his own private uſe, that the Goſpel was committed to him, or gifts were given him to qualify him for the diſpenſation of it, but for the ſake of others, eſpecially the Gentiles, and particularly the Epheſians.

Ver. 3. How that by revelation he made known unto me the myſtery, &c.] Or is made known unto me; ſo the Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, and the Vulgate Latin verſion. The Goſpel, which is ſometimes called a myſtery, the myſtery of the Goſpel, the myſtery of godlineſs, and the myſtery of faith: the ſeveral doctrines of the Goſpel are the myſteries of the kingdom of heaven; ſuch as a Trinity of perſons in the Godhead, the union of the two natures in Chriſt, the ſaints union to Chriſt, and communion with him, the reſurrection of the dead, and the change of living ſaints, and the whole doctrine of ſalvation by Chriſt, of juſtification by his righteouſneſs, pardon by his blood, and atonement by his ſacrifice; and this was made known to the Apoſtle, not in a mere notional and ſpeculative way, but in a ſpiritual and ſaving manner; not by men, for he was not taught by men, nor did he receive it from them, but had it by the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt, and by the Spirit of wiſdom and revelation in the knowledge of him: as I wrote afore in few words; in the two firſt chapters of this Epiſtle, which are a compendium of the myſtery of the Goſpel, in its ſeveral parts; as predeſtination, election, redemption, regeneration, and ſalvation by free grace.

Ver. 4. Whereby when ye read, &c.] The above chapters, and ſeriouſly conſider what is contained in them: ye may underſtand my knowledge in the myſtery of Chriſt; of his perſon, office, and grace; and which knowledge was very large indeed.

Ver. 5. Which in other ages was not made known unto the ſons of men, &c.] That is, which myſtery of Chriſt, and of the Goſpel, was not made known to men in general, nor ſo clearly as under the Goſpel-diſpenſation. Some hints were given of it to Adam, immediately after his fall; and the Goſpel was before preached to Abraham, Moſes, and David, and others knew ſomething of it; and it was ſtill more fully diſpenſed in the times of the prophet Iſaiah, and other following prophets: but then the knowledge of it was not ſo extenſive, nor ſo clear as now; it lay hid in types and ſhadows, in obſcure prophecies, and ſhort hints. Moreover, this may have reſpect particularly to the calling of the Gentiles, as appears from the following words; this was, in ſome meaſure, made known, as that in Chriſt all the nations of the earth ſhould be bleſſed; that when Shiloh came, to him ſhould the gathering of the people be; that the Meſſiah ſhould be an enſign of the people, and to him ſhould the Gentiles ſeek; that he ſhould be the covenant of the people, and a leader and a commander of them; and that there ſhould be great flockings to him; but then this was not known to many, and the time, mode, and circumſtances of it were but little underſtood, and comparatively ſpeaking, it was not known: however, it was not ſo known, as it is now revealed unto his holy Apoſtles and prophets by the Spirit; the Apoſtles and prophets were the ſuperior officers in the Goſpel-diſpenſation; the former deſign the twelve Apoſtles of Chriſt, and the latter ſuch who had the gift of interpreting the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, and of foretelling things to come, having received gifts from Chriſt to fit them for ſuch offices, ſome Apoſtles, ſome prophets; and to theſe a revelation was made of the myſtery of the Goſpel in general, and of the calling of the Gentiles in particular, by the Spirit, who ſearches the deep things of God, and reveals them, and leads into all truth; and who, by falling upon the Gentiles, as upon Cornelius and his family, and by the ſucceſs which he gave to the Goſpel in the Gentile world, made their calling clear and manifeſt. The Complutenſian edition reads, by the holy Spirit; and ſo the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions.

Ver. 6. That the Gentiles ſhould be fellow heirs, &c.] With the Jews, of all the bleſſings of grace, of everlaſting ſalvation, and of the eternal, incorruptible, and never-fading inheritance in heaven; that they ſhould be heirs of God, and joint heirs with Chriſt Jeſus, and inherit all things: and heirs they are by being Chriſt's, and on account of their ſpecial adoption thro' him, and their juſtification by his righteouſneſs; and which appears by their regeneration to a lively hope of the inheritance reſerved for them in heaven: and of the ſame body; coaleſce in one and the ſame church-ſtate, with the believing Jews, under one and the ſame head, Chriſt Jeſus, and participate of the ſame grace from him, being all baptized into one body, and made to drink of the ſame Spirit, and enjoy the ſame privileges and immunities. And partakers of his promiſe in Chriſt by the Goſpel; as of God, being their Covenant-God, which is the great promiſe of the covenant; or of the Spirit, his gifts and graces, called the promiſe of the Spirit; or of eternal life and happineſs, as the gift of grace thro' Chriſt. Now all theſe promiſes, and all others, are in Chriſt, yea and amen, ſafe and ſecure; and it is thro' being in Chriſt that any come to partake of them; and that by the means of the Goſpel, as theſe Gentiles were to do, and did: the Goſpel is a declaration of what God has promiſed in covenant to his people; this was carried among the Gentiles, and was made effectual to their participation of the things contained in it.

Ver. 7. Whereof I was made a miniſter, &c.] That is, of the Goſpel, not by men, but by God: and he is a true miniſter of the Goſpel who is called of God to the work of the miniſtry, and is qualified by him with grace and gifts for it; and who faithfully diſcharges it according to the ability God has given; and ſuch an one was the Apoſtle: according to the gift of the grace of God given unto me; not according to his natural capacity, his liberal education, or acquired learning; but according to a gift, a miniſterial gift beſtowed upon him, for ſuch ſervice: for this gift of grace does not deſign the grace of God wrought in his ſoul; nor the doctrines of grace, the ſubject of the Goſpel miniſtry; nor the efficacious grace of God, which makes that ſucceſsful and uſeful to the ſouls of men; but a gift of interpreting the ſcriptures, and of explaining the truths of the Goſpel to the edification of men; and which is a diſtinct thing from natural abilities, human learning, or internal grace; for there may be all theſe, and yet a man not fit to be a miniſter of the Goſpel; what qualifies men for that is the above gift, which God, of his ſovereign good-will and pleaſure, gives to ſome of the ſons of men: by the effectual working of his power; the power of God is ſeen in working grace in the hearts of men, thereby making them believers in Chriſt; and it is alſo diſplayed in the gifts of the Spirit beſtowed on men, which is called a being endued with a power from on high; thereby making men, and not angels, and theſe oftentimes the meaneſt and weakeſt, miniſters of Chriſt; and likewiſe in aſſiſting them in their work, and in carrying them thro' it, and in making them ſucceſsful in it, to the converſion of ſinners, and the edification of ſaints.

Ver. 8. Unto me who am leſs than the leaſt of all ſaints, &c.] This is an inſtance of the great humility of the Apoſtle; and indeed the greateſt ſaints are, generally ſpeaking, the moſt humble ſouls, as Abraham, Jacob, Moſes, David, and others; theſe have the meaneſt thoughts of themſelves, and the beſt of others; they rejoice in the grace of God manifeſted to others; they are willing to receive inſtruction, nay admonition, from the meaneſt believer; they have the leaſt opinion of their own works, and are the greateſt admirers of the grace of God; and do moſt contentedly ſubmit to the ſovereign will of God: the reaſons of their great humility are; becauſe they have the largeſt diſcoveries of the love and grace of God and Chriſt, which are of a ſoul-humbling nature; they are the moſt ſenſible of their own ſinfulneſs, vileneſs, and unworthineſs, which keeps them low in their own ſight; they are commonly the moſt afflicted with ſatan's temptations, which are ſuffered to attend them, leſt they ſhould be exalted above meaſure; they are the moſt fruitful ſouls, and boughs laden with fruit hang loweſt; and they are the moſt conformable to Chriſt, who is meek and lowly. The phraſe ſeems to be Jewiſh: there was one R. Joſe the little, who was ſo called, 'tis ſaid, becauſe he was, קטן חסידים, the leaſt of ſaints [l]: but the Apoſtle uſes a ſtill more diminutive word, and calls himſelf leſs than the leaſt of them; and adds, is this grace given; that is, the gift of grace, as before, the miniſterial gift: that I ſhould preach among the Gentiles the unſearchable riches of Chriſt; the riches of Chriſt, as God, lie in the perfections of his nature, in the works of his hands, in his empire and dominion over all, and in the revenues of glory, which reſult from thence; and theſe riches are underived and incommunicable, and are ineffable, yea inconceivable: his riches, as mediator, lie in the perſons of the elect, in the grace that is laid up in him for them, called the riches of grace, and in the inheritance he is poſſeſſed of for them, called the riches of glory; and theſe rich things are communicable, as well as ſolid, ſatisfying, and laſting; and they are unſearchable to the natural man, and can't be fully inveſtigated by believers themſelves; they will be telling over to all eternity: and they will appear unſearchable, when it is conſidered, what they have procured, and what bleſſings have been diſpenſed according to them; what a large family Chriſt has maintained by them, and how richly and fully he has provided for them, and to what honour and grandeur he raiſes them all. Now it was great grace to entruſt the Apoſtle with ſuch a miniſtry, to put ſuch treaſure into an earthen veſſel; it was great grace that qualified him for it; and it was great grace in particular to the Gentiles, that he ſhould be appointed to publiſh theſe among them; and ſo the Apoſtle eſteemed it, and himſelf unworthy of ſuch honour.

Ver. 9. And to make all men ſee what is the fellowſhip of the myſtery, &c.] Or the diſpenſation of the myſtery, as the Complutenſian, and ſeveral copies, and the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions read. The myſtery is the Goſpel; the fellowſhip of it is the communication of grace by it, a participation of the truths and doctrines of it, communion with Father, Son, and Spirit, which the Goſpel calls and leads unto, and that equal concern and intereſt which both Jews and Gentiles have in the privileges of it. Now men are naturally in the dark about theſe things, and the miniſtry of the word is the means of enlightening them, and is indeed the grand deſign of it; and the miniſters of the Goſpel do inſtrumentally enlighten perſons, tho' it is God only that does it efficiently; and for this, gifts of grace were beſtowed upon the Apoſtle, even for the enlightening of all men, not every individual perſon in the world, but ſome of all ſorts, particularly Gentiles, as well as Jews. The word πανlας, rendered all men, is left out in the Alexandrian copy. Which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God; in the heart of God, in his counſel and covenant; which ſhows the original and ſource of the Goſpel, and expreſſes the richneſs and valuableneſs of it, as well as its ſafety and ſecrecy: here it was hid in ſome meaſure from the elect angels, and from Old Teſtament ſaints, and altogether from natural men, and eſpecially from the Gentiles, whoſe times of ignorance God winked at, or over-looked: and this was kept ſo from ages paſt, from the beginning of time, till now, and was laid up in the breaſt of God from all eternity; for it was ordained before the world for the glory of his people. What the Apoſtle ſays of the Goſpel, the Jews ſay of the law, that it was hid and treaſured up two thouſand years before the world was created [m]; yea, they ſay [n], that many ages before the creation of the world it was written and left, בחיקו של הק"בה, in the boſom of God: and he is here deſcribed, as he who created all things by Jeſus Chriſt; not as an inſtrument, but as a coefficient cauſe: and this is to be underſtood, not of the new creation, but of the old, and of all things in it; for without Chriſt, was not any thing made that is made. The phraſe, by Jeſus Chriſt, is left out in the Alexandrian and Claromontane copies, and in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions.

Ver. 10. To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places, &c.] By whom are meant, not civil magiſtrates, much leſs evil angels, but the good angels, the angels in heaven; ſee the note on ch. i. 21. might be known by the church the manifold wiſdom of God; not the perfection of wiſdom, nor Jeſus Chriſt the wiſdom of God, nor the holy ſcriptures; but the Goſpel, which is the pure produce of the wiſdom of God; which is gloriouſly diſplayed in the ſeveral doctrines of it; as in election, in chuſing men in Chriſt for the ſecurity of their perſons, in founding it not upon their works, but his own grace, for the ſecurity of his purpoſe, and in pitching on ſuch perſons he has, for the magnifying of his grace: and in redemption, which is ſeen in the perſon of the redeemer, who is both God and man; and in the manner in which it is effected, being both for the glory of God's grace and mercy, and for the honour of his juſtice and holineſs; and wherein ſatan is mortified, ſin is condemned, and the ſinner ſaved: and in juſtification, whereby ſinful men become juſt with God; God is juſt, and yet the juſtifier of him that believes; the ungodly is juſtified, and yet not juſtified in his ungodlineſs, but from it: and in the pardon of ſin, in which iniquity is forgiven, and yet vengeance is taken on mens inventions; it is an act of mercy, and yet of juſtice; it is by price, and yet of free grace; and the like may be obſerved of all other doctrines of the Goſpel. And it may be called manifold, becauſe of its various doctrines and promiſes, and becauſe of the various inſtances of wiſdom in them, and the various perſons to whom it is made known, and the various times in which it is diſplayed: and now under the Goſpel this is more clearly known, or made known to the angels by the church of God, thro' the miniſtry of the word in it, on which angels attend, being deſirous to look more diligently into the myſteries of it; and by the diſplays of the wiſdom and grace of God unto his church and people.

Ver. 11. According to the eternal purpoſe, &c.] The whole of ſalvation, in which is diſplayed the great wiſdom of God, is according to a purpoſe of his; the ſcheme of it is fixed in the council of peace; the thing itſelf is effected in purſuance of it; Chriſt, the redeemer, was ſet forth in it; his incarnation, the time of his coming into the world, his ſufferings and death, with all their circumſtances, were decreed by God; and the perſons for whom Chriſt became incarnate, ſuffered, and died, were appointed unto ſalvation by him; and the application of it to them is according to his purpoſe; the time when, the place where, and the means whereby ſouls are converted, are all ſettled in the decrees of God; the Goſpel itſelf, the preaching of it by ſuch and ſuch perſons, its uſe to make men ſee the myſteries of grace, and the fellowſhip of them, and to make known theſe things to the angels of heaven, are all according to a divine purpoſe: and this purpoſe is eternal, or was in the mind of God from all eternity; for no new will can ariſe in him; no purpoſe, reſolution, or decree can be made by him in time, which was not in his breaſt from everlaſting; and his purpoſe concerning the ſalvation of men muſt be eternal, ſince a council of peace was held, a covenant of peace was made, a promiſe of life was given, perſons were fixed upon to be ſaved, a ſaviour was appointed for them, and grace, and the bleſſings of it were put into his hands before the world began. Which he purpoſed in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord; the conſtitution of it was in him; God was in Chriſt contriving the ſcheme of ſalvation; his eye was upon him, his thoughts centred in him, and in him are all his promiſes, and bleſſings of grace deſigned and provided for his people; and the execution of this purpoſe is by him; tho' ſome refer this clauſe to the church in ver. 10. which he has made in Chriſt, or by Chriſt, has built upon him, and united to him; and others, to the manifold wiſdom of God diſplayed in Chriſt, who is the wiſdom of God, and in whom all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge are hid.

Ver. 12. In whom we have boldneſs and acceſs, &c.] Into the holy of holies, to the throne of grace there, and to God the Father, as ſeated on it: Chriſt is the way of acceſs; union to him gives right of acceſs; through his mediation his people have audience of God, and acceptance with him, both of perſon and ſervice: and this acceſs is with boldneſs; which denotes liberty of coming, granted by God, and a liberty in their own ſouls to ſpeak out their minds plainly and freely; and an holy courage and intrepidity of ſoul, being free from ſervile fear, or a ſpirit of bondage; which is owing to the heart being ſprinkled from an evil conſcience, to an act of faith, on the perſon, blood, and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and to a view of God, as a God of peace, grace and mercy: and this acceſs may be had with confidence by the faith of him; with confidence of intereſt in the everlaſting love of God; of relation to him, as a Covenant-God and Father; of his power, faithfulneſs, and willingneſs to fulfil his promiſes; of his hearing and anſwering prayer; of the fulneſs of Chriſt, the prevalence of his mediation, and of the acceptance of perſons and performances thro' him; and of the work of grace being carried on till the day of Chriſt; and of entrance at laſt into the heavenly glory: and this acceſs is not local, but ſpiritual; it is by faith, and ſo is peculiar to believers; and the confidence with which it may be had, ariſes from its being by the faith of Chriſt; not that faith which Chriſt himſelf had, and exerciſed as man, but that of which he is both the object and author; or that by which ſouls believe in him for acceptance, for righteouſneſs, for pardon, for every ſupply of grace, and for eternal life and happineſs.

Ver. 13. Wherefore I deſire that ye faint not at my tribulations for you, &c.] The Apoſtle was a man attended with many tribulations, and great afflictions, which he did not ſuffer as an evil doer, either from God or men; wherefore he was not aſhamed of them, but gloried in them; yea, he took pleaſure in them, having much of the preſence of God in them; they did not come to him unawares, he always expected them, and was helped to look to the glory which ſhould follow them, the view of which greatly ſupported him under them; and theſe tribulations were endured for the ſake of the elect, for Chriſt's body's ſake the church, and among others, for the Epheſians, for the ſake of preaching the Goſpel among them, and for the confirmation of their faith in it; and yet they were a ſtumbling to them, they were ready to faint at them; but he deſires they would not, ſince they were on account of the Goſpel, which he had ſuch a diſtinct knowledge of, and ſo clear a call to; and ſince they were for their ſakes, and ſince he and they had ſuch nearneſs of acceſs to God by the faith of Chriſt, with ſo much boldneſs and confidence; and ſeeing alſo they turned to their account: which is your glory; meaning either that it was matter of glorying to them, and what they might boaſt of, that the Apoſtle's afflictions were not for any crime that was found in him, but for preaching the Goſpel to them, and that it was an honour to ſuffer in ſuch a cauſe; or that their perſeverance and conſtancy in the doctrines of the Goſpel, notwithſtanding the ſcandal of the croſs, would be an honour to them.

Ver. 14. For this cauſe I bow my knees unto the Father, &c.] That is, pray unto him for the perſeverance of the ſaints; for nothing is more deſirable to the miniſters of Chriſt than that; which is the pure gift of God, and is what he has promiſed, and therefore ſhould be prayed to for it; for what God has deſigned and promiſed to his people, he will be ſought to; and the Apoſtle's view might be alſo to ſtir up theſe ſaints to pray for themſelves: the geſture he uſed in prayer was bowing the knees; a man is not tied to any particular geſture or poſture in prayer, the main thing is the heart; mere poſtures and geſtures are inſignificant things with God; tho' where the mind is affected, the body will be moved; and this geſture may be expreſſive of reverence, humility, and ſubmiſſion in prayer: the object he prayed unto is the Father; that is, as follows, of our Lord Jeſus; tho' theſe words are wanting in the Alexandrian copy, and Ethiopic verſion, yet are rightly retained in others; for God is the Father of Chriſt, not by creation, nor adoption, but by generation, being the only-begotten of the Father; and as ſuch he is rightly prayed to, ſince not only Chriſt prayed to him as ſuch; but he is the Father of his people in and thro' Chriſt; and there is no other way of coming to him but by Chriſt; and all ſpiritual bleſſings come thro' Chriſt, and from God, as the Father of Chriſt.

Ver. 15. Of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named.] This may refer either to God, the Father of Chriſt; who is the Father of the whole family in heaven and in earth; not only the Father of Chriſt, but the Father of ſpirits, of angelic ſpirits, as well as of the ſouls of men; and the Father of all the ſaints by adopting grace, whether above or below; they are all the houſhold of God: or elſe to Jeſus Chriſt, who is the everlaſting Father, the Son over his own houſe, and the firſt-born among many brethren: and this family conſiſts either of elect angels and elect men, who are both under one head, Chriſt, and are in one family, only with this difference, the one are ſervants, the other ſons; or elſe only of elect men, of ſaints in heaven and in earth, who all make up but one family; and that part of it, which is on earth, conſiſts of perſons of various ſizes and growth, as fathers, young men and children, tho' they are all the children of God, and partake of the ſame privileges: and this family is named of Chriſt; they are called Chriſtians from him, and he is the maſter and governour of them; they have their laws, directions, and inſtructions from him; and he is the great provider for them, and the ſupport of them; they have their food and clothing from him, as well as are called by his name. Frequent mention is made in the Jewiſh writings [a] of the family of the holy angels, and of the family above, and the family below, to which here may be ſome reference.

Ver. 16. That he would grant you according to the riches of his glory, &c.] Or according to, and out of that rich, plenteous, and glorious fulneſs of grace and ſtrength in Chriſt Jeſus. To be ſtrengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; this is the petition which the Apoſtle put up on his bended knees to the Father of Chriſt, that he would ſtrengthen theſe ſaints, that ſo they might not faint at the tribulations which either he or they endured. Believers in Chriſt need freſh ſupplies of ſtrength to enable them to exerciſe grace, to perform duties, to reſiſt ſatan and his temptations, to oppoſe their corruptions, and to bear the croſs, and undergo afflictions chearfully, and to hold on and out to the end: this is a bleſſing that comes from God, and is a gift of his free grace; a grant from him who is the ſtrength of the lives of his people, of their ſalvation, of their hearts, and of the work of grace in their hearts: the means whereby the ſaints are ſtrengthened by God, is his Spirit; who ſtrengthens them by leading them to the fulneſs of grace and ſtrength in Chriſt, by ſhedding abroad the love of God in their hearts, by applying the promiſes of the Goſpel to them, and by making the Goſpel itſelf, and the ordinances of it, uſeful to them, cauſing them to go from ſtrength to ſtrength in them: the ſubject of this bleſſing is the inner man, or the ſpirit, or ſoul of man, which is the ſeat of grace; and this ſhows that this was ſpiritual ſtrength which is here deſired, which may be where there is much bodily weakneſs, and for which there ſhould be the greateſt concern; and that this ſtrength is not naturally there, it muſt be given, or put into it. This laſt phraſe, in the inner man, is joined to the beginning of the next verſe in the Arabic, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions, in the inner man Chriſt may dwell, &c.

Ver. 17. That Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith, &c.] This is another petition put up by the Apoſtle for the Epheſians, which is for the inhabitation of Chriſt in them: the inhabitant Chriſt is he who dwells in the higheſt heavens, who dwells in the Father, and the Father in him, in whom all fulneſs dwells, the fulneſs of the Godhead, and the fulneſs of grace; ſo that thoſe in whoſe hearts he dwells cannot want any good thing, muſt be in the greateſt ſafety, and enjoy the greateſt comfort and pleaſure: and this inhabitation of Chriſt prayed for is not to be underſtood in ſuch ſenſe, as he dwells every where, being the omnipreſent God; or as he dwells in the human nature; nor of his dwelling merely by his Spirit, but of a perſonal indwelling of his; and which is an inſtance of his ſpecial grace: he dwells in his people, as a king in his palace, to rule and protect them, and as a maſter in his family to provide for them, and as their life to quicken them; it is in conſequence of their union to him, and is expreſſive of their communion with him, and is perpetual; where he once takes up his reſidence, he never totally and finally departs: the place where he dwells ~~is not~~ their heads, nor their tongues, but their hearts; and this is where no good thing dwells but himſelf and his grace; and where ſin dwells, and where he is often ſlighted, oppoſed, and rebelled againſt: the means by which he dwells is faith; which is not the bond of union to Chriſt, nor the cauſe of his being and dwelling in the hearts of his people; but is the inſtrument or means by which they receive him, and retain him, and by which they have communion with him: that ye being rooted and grounded in love; either in love to God, and one another; for faith and love go together; and love is ſometimes weak, and needs eſtabliſhing; and what ſerves to root and ground perſons in it, are the diſcoveries of God's love, views of Chriſt's lovelineſs, the conſideration of bleſſings received, and the communion they have with God, and Chriſt, and one another, and a larger inſight into the doctrines of the Goſpel: or rather in the love of God to them; which is the root and foundation of ſalvation; this is, in itſelf, immoveable and immutable; but ſaints have not always the manifeſtations of it, and ſometimes call it in queſtion, and have need to be rooted and grounded in it; which is to have a lively ſenſe of it, and to be perſuaded of intereſt in it, and that nothing ſhall be able to ſeparate from it.

[a] Targ. in Cant. i. 15. T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 17. 1. Zohar in Exod. fol. 105. 4. Raziel, fol. 42. 1. & 45. 2. Caphtor, fol. 58. 2. Shaare Ora, fol. 14. 3.

Ver. 18. May be able to comprehend with all ſaints, &c.] This is the end of their being rooted and grounded in love, that they, together with the reſt of the ſaints intereſted in it, might have a larger and more comprehenſive view of what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; not of God himſelf, who is incomprehenſible by finite minds, and is not to be found out to perfection; ſee Job xi. 7, 8, 9. but either of the great myſtery of ſalvation, particularly the myſtery of the calling of the Gentiles mentioned in the beginning of the chapter; or of the ſpiritual building the church, the dimenſions of which are given, Rev. xxi. 15, 16. or rather of the love of God, which in its length reaches from one eternity to another; in its breadth to all the elect, in all ages, places, and nations; and in its depth to ſaints in the loweſt ſtate of life; and in its height to bring them to an exalted ſtate in glory.

Ver. 19. And to know the love of Chriſt, which paſſeth knowledge, &c.] The love of Chriſt to his own, to his church and people, is ſpecial and peculiar; free and ſovereign; as early as his Father's love, and is durable and unchangeable; the greateſt love that ever was heard of; it is matchleſs and unparalleled; it is exceeding ſtrong and affectionate, and is wonderful and ſurprizing: the inſtances of it are, his engaging as a ſurety for them; his eſpouſing both their perſons, and their cauſe; his aſſumption of their nature; his dying in their room and ſtead; his payment of their debts, atoning for their ſins, and bringing in for them an everlaſting righteouſneſs; his going to prepare a place for them in heaven; his interceſſion for them there; his conſtant ſupply of all their wants, and the freedom and familiarity he uſes them with. The ſaints have ſome knowledge of this love, ſome taſtes of it; their knowledge is a feeling and experimental one, fiducial and appropriating, and what influences their faith, and love, and chearful obedience, but it is but imperfect; tho' the knowledge they have of it is ſuper-eminent, it exceeds all other knowledge, yet this love paſſes knowledge; not only the knowledge of natural men, who know nothing of it, but the perfect knowledge of ſaints themſelves, in the preſent life, and of angels alſo, who deſire to look into it, and the myſteries of it; and eſpecially it is ſo as to ſome inſtances of it, ſuch as the incarnation of Chriſt, his becoming poor who was Lord of all, being made ſin, and a curſe, and ſuffering, the juſt for the unjuſt. Now the Apoſtle prays, that theſe ſaints might know more of this love; that their knowledge, which was imperfect, might be progreſſive. That ye might be filled with all the fulneſs of God; this is the laſt petition, and is to be underſtood, not of a full comprehenſion of the divine being, nor of a communication of his divine perfections, nor of having in them the fulneſs of grace, which it has pleaſed God ſhould dwell in Chriſt; but either of that fulneſs of good things, which they may receive from God in this life; as to be filled with a ſenſe of the love and grace of God; with ſatisfying views of intereſt in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; with the Spirit, and the gifts and graces thereof; with full proviſions of food for their ſouls; with ſpiritual peace, joy, and comfort; with knowledge of divine things, of God in Chriſt, of Chriſt, of the Goſpel, and of the will of God; and with all the fruits of righteouſneſs, or good works ſpringing from grace; or elſe of that fulneſs which they ſhall receive hereafter, even compleat holineſs, perfection of knowledge, fulneſs of joy and peace, entire conformity to God and Chriſt, and everlaſting communion with them.

Ver. 20. Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly, &c.] This is the concluſion of the Apoſtle's prayer, in which the power of God is celebrated, a perfection which is eſſential unto God, and is very large and extenſive; it reaches to all things, to every thing that he wills, which is his actual or ordinative power; and to more things than he has willed, which is his abſolute power; and to all things that have been, are, or ſhall be, and to things impoſſible with men; tho' there are ſome things which God cannot do, ſuch as are contrary to his nature, inconſiſtent with his will, his decrees and purpoſes, which imply a contradiction, and are foreign to truth, which to do would be to deny himſelf: but then he can do above all that we aſk or think; he can do more than men aſk for, as he did for Solomon: God knows what we want before we aſk, and he has made proviſions for his people before they aſk for them; ſome of which things we never could, and others we never ſhould have aſked for, if he had not provided them; and without the Spirit of God we know not what to aſk for, nor how to aſk aright: this affords great encouragement to go to God and aſk ſuch things of him, as we want, and he has provided; and who alſo can do more than we can think, imagine, or conceive in our minds. According to the power that worketh in us; either in believers in common, meaning the Spirit of God, who is the finger and power of God, who begins, and carries on, and will finiſh the work of grace in them, and which is an evidence of the exceeding greatneſs of the power of God; or in the Apoſtles in particular, in fitting and furniſhing them for their work, and ſucceeding them in it; which is another proof and demonſtration of the abundant power of God, and ſhows what he can do if he pleaſes.

Ver. 21. Unto him be glory in the church by Chriſt Jeſus, &c.] This is a doxology, or an aſcription of glory to God, with which the Apoſtle concludes his prayer: glory is to be given to God on account of his perfections, which are to be celebrated; and on account of the works of creation and providence, which are to be commended and acquieſced in; and on account of temporal mercies, for which thanks ſhould be given; and eſpecially for ſpiritual mercies, and above all for Jeſus Chriſt: the glory of ſalvation, from firſt to laſt, is to be aſcribed to his free grace; and his worſhip is to be regarded, and conſtantly attended on; faith is to be exerciſed on him, as a promiſing and covenant-keeping God; and our lives and converſations are to be ordered aright according to his word; and we are chearfully and patiently to ſuffer for his cauſe and intereſt, in all which inſtances he is glorified: and the place where this glory is to be given, is the church; for the church, and true believers, only know the bleſſings and myſteries of divine grace; and they only know how to glorify God aright; and beſides, glory muſt be given to God by believers, not only ſeparately and apart, but conjunctly and together, in a church-ſtate; becauſe there the Lord appears glorious, grants his preſence, and diſplays his mighty grace: and this is to be done by Chriſt Jeſus, or in him; and may refer either to the church, which is in Chriſt; or to him as the medium by whom praiſe and glory are to be given to God; for all bleſſings are in Chriſt, and come to us thro' him, and he is the only way of acceſs to God; nor can our praiſes and thankſgivings be acceptable unto God, but thro' him: and this glory is to be given throughout all ages, world without end, Amen; for the church will abide for ever, in which it is to be given; the bleſſings of grace will be for ever diſpenſing, for which it is to be given; and Jeſus Chriſt, the mediator, will continue for evermore, by whom it is given: to all which is added the word Amen, ſignifying his wiſh, that ſo it might be, and his faith, that ſo it would be.

CHAP. IV.

THE Apoſtle having in the three former chapters treated of the doctrines of grace, and explained and eſtabliſhed them, proceeds in the three following to exhort to the duties of religion; and in this adviſes to a becoming converſation in general, and to brotherly concord and unity in particular; and dehorts from ſeveral vices, and encourages to the contrary virtues. And inaſmuch as theſe Epheſians were called with an holy calling, he intreats them if they had any regard for him as a priſoner of Chriſt, that they would walk worthy of it, ver. 1. and directs to the manner in which they ſhould act becoming it, with all humility, patience, forbearance, and love; ſeeking to preſerve a ſpiritual harmony, unity, and peace, one among another, ver. 2, 3. for the encouragement of which, he makes uſe of various arguments, taken from the unity of the body, of which they were members; from their being quickned and influenced by one and the ſame Spirit; from having the ſame hope of eternal happineſs, to which they were called; from their having one Lord over them, who is Chriſt; from their having the ſame like precious faith in him; from their being baptized with the ſame baptiſm in him; and from their having one and the ſame God and Father, ver. 4, 5, 6. and from all of them having gifts, though different, for mutual uſefulneſs; which gifts are deſcribed by the author and donor of them, Chriſt, ver. 7. which is proved, ver. 8. out of a paſſage in Pſal. lxviii. 18. which is explained of the humiliation and exaltation of Chriſt, of his deſcent from heaven, and aſcenſion thither; the end of which latter, was to fill all things, or perſons, with gifts, ver. 9, 10. of which a particular enumeration is given, ver. 11. the deſign of which is, to fit men for the work of the miniſtry, and by them to convert ſinners, and edify ſaints, ver. 12. which miniſtry is to be continued, until all the ſaints arrive to a perfection of ſpiritual knowledge, and make up one perfect man, or body of men in Chriſt, ver. 13. for the uſe and end of the Goſpel miniſtry is not, that ſuch who are converted by it, ſhould continue children, be in ſuſpenſe about truth, and under the deceptions of men, ver. 14. but that through ſpeaking the truth in love, they ſhould grow up into Chriſt their head; from whom ſupplies of grace are communicated, for the increaſe and edification of every member of the body, ver. 15, 16. and ſeeing theſe Epheſians to whom the Apoſtle writes, were ſeparated in effectual vocation from the reſt of the Gentiles, they ought not to walk as the others did; whoſe minds were vain, their underſtandings darkened, and their hearts blinded, hardened, and ignorant; and had no ſenſe of things, but were given up to all manner of wickedneſs, ver. 17, 18, 19. whereas they had learned Chriſt, and through hearing had been taught the truth of the Goſpel, as it was in him, ver. 20, 21. wherefore it became them in their converſation, not to follow the dictates of corrupt nature, called the old man, that being full of luſts, corrupt and deceitful, but to act becoming the renewing work of the Spirit upon their ſouls, and agreeable to the new principles of the grace of God created in them, in order to righteouſneſs and holineſs, ver. 22, 23, 24. and in particular it became them to avoid lying, and on the contrary to ſpeak truth to one another; and that for this reaſon, becauſe they were members of the ſame body, and of one another, ver. 25. and likewiſe to abſtain from ſinful anger, and not continue a wrathful diſpoſition, ver. 26. nor was it adviſeable to yield to the ſuggeſtions, ſolicitations, and temptations of ſatan, ver. 27. nor to commit theft, but on the other hand give themſelves to manual labour at ſome commendable calling, that they might have for their own uſe, and others too, ver. 28. and it was alſo right to be careful, not to ſuffer corrupt and unchaſte words to come out of their mouths, but ſuch as would be grateful and uſeful to others, ver. 29. and the rather this, and all the reſt of the things mentioned, and likewiſe what follows, ſhould be attended to; ſince by ſuch evil luſts, words, and actions, the holy Spirit of God is grieved, who ſhould not, ſince he is the ſealer of the ſaints unto the day of redemption, ver. 30. And the chapter is concluded with a dehortation from ſeveral vices of the mind and tongue, reſpecting wrath and revenge; and an exhortation to the contrary virtues, kindneſs, tenderneſs, and forgiveneſs; to which encouragement is given, by the example of God, who forgives for Chriſt's ſake, ver. 31, 32.

Ver. 1. I therefore the priſoner of the Lord, beſeech you, &c.] Or in the Lord; that is, for the Lord's ſake; ſee the note on ch. iii. 1. Some connect this phraſe, in the Lord, with the following word, beſeech, as if the ſenſe was, that the Apoſtle intreated the believing Epheſians, in the name of the Lord, and for his ſake, to take heed to their walk and converſation, that it be as became the calling by grace, and to glory, with which they were called: and this exhortation he enforces from the conſideration of the ſtate and condition in which he was, a priſoner, not for any wickedneſs he had been guilty of, but for the Lord's ſake, which ſeems to be the true ſenſe of the word; and that, if they would not add afflictions to his bonds, as ſome profeſſors by their walk did, he beſeeches them, as an embaſſador in bonds, that they would attend to what he was about to ſay; and the rather, ſince ſuch doctrines of grace had been made known to them, which have a tendency to promote powerful godlineſs; and ſince they were made partakers of ſuch privileges as laid them under the greateſt obligation to duty, which were made mention of in the preceding chapters. That ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called; by which is meant, not that private and peculiar ſtate and condition of life, that the ſaints are called to, and in; but that vocation, by the grace of God, which is common to them all; and is not a mere outward call by the miniſtry of the word, with which men may be called, and not be choſen, ſanctified, and ſaved; but that which is internal, and is of ſpecial grace, and by the Spirit of God; by whom they are called out of darkneſs into light, out of bondage into liberty, out of the world, and from the company and converſation of the men of it, into the fellowſhip of Chriſt, and his people, to the participation of the grace of Chriſt here, and to his kingdom and glory hereafter; and which call is powerful, efficacious, yea irreſiſtible; and being once made is unchangeable, and without repentance, and is holy, high, and heavenly. Now to walk worthy of it, or ſuitable to it, is to walk as children of the light; to walk in the liberty wherewith Chriſt, and his Spirit make them free; to walk by faith on Chriſt; and to walk in the ways of God, with Chriſt, the mark, in their view, and with the ſtaff of promiſes in their hands; and to walk on conſtantly, to go forward, and hold out unto the end: for this walking, tho' it refers to a holy life and converſation, a ſeries of good works, yet it does not ſuppoſe that theſe merit vocation; rather the contrary, ſince theſe follow upon it; and that is uſed as an argument to excite unto them: but the phraſe is expreſſive of a fitneſs, ſuitableneſs, and agreeableneſs of a walk and converſation to ſuch rich grace, and ſo high an honour conferr'd on ſaints.

Ver. 2. With all lowlineſs and meekneſs, &c.] In the exerciſe of humility, which ſhows itſelf in believers, in entertaining and expreſſing the meaneſt thoughts of themſelves, and the beſt of others; in not envying the gifts and graces of others, but rejoicing at them, and at every increaſe of them; in a willingneſs to receive inſtruction from the meaneſt ſaints; in ſubmiſſion to the will of God in all adverſe diſpenſations of providence; and in aſcribing all they have, and are, to the grace of God: and ſo to behave, is to walk agreeable to their vocation of God; and what the conſideration of that may engage them to, when they obſerve the low eſtate and condition out of which they are called, in which they were before vocation; and that in effectual calling they have nothing but what they have received; and that others are called with the ſame calling that they are: and to walk humbly before God and man, is to walk according to the will of God that calls; and 'tis walking as Chriſt walked, who is meek, and lowly; and is agreeable to the bleſſed Spirit, one of whoſe fruits is meekneſs; and is what is very ornamental to the ſaints, and is well-pleaſing in the ſight of God. With long-ſuffering; bearing much and long with the infirmities of each other; without being eaſily provoked to anger by any ill uſage; and not immediately meditating and ſeeking revenge for every affront given, or injury done; and ſo to walk, is to walk worthy of the grace of calling, or agreeable to it, to God that calls by his grace, who is long-ſuffering both with wicked men, and with his own people. Forbearing one another in love; overlooking the infirmities of one another, forgiving injuries done, ſympathizing with, and aſſiſting each other in diſtreſſed circumſtances, the ſpring of all which ſhould be love; by that ſaints ſhould be moved, influenced, and engaged to ſuch a conduct, and which ſhould be ſo far attended to, as is conſiſtent with love; for ſo to forbear one another, as to ſuffer ſin to be on each other, without proper, gentle, and faithful rebukes for it, is not to act in love.

Ver. 3. Endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit, &c.] That is, a ſpiritual union: there is an union between God and his people, and between Chriſt and his members, and between ſaints and ſaints, and the bond of each union is love; and that it is which knits and cements them together; and it is the laſt of theſe which is here intended: the ſaints are united under one head, and are members of one and the ſame body, and ſhould be of the ſame mind and judgment, and of one accord, heart, and affection: and this may be called the unity of the Spirit; becauſe it's an union of ſpirits, of the ſpirits or ſouls of men, and that in ſpiritual affairs, in the ſpiritual exerciſes of religion; and it is effected by the Spirit of God, by whom they are baptized into one body. Now to endeavour or ſtudy to keep and preſerve this, ſuppoſes that this union does already exiſt; that it is very valuable, as making much for the glory of God, the mutual comfort and delight of ſaints, and is worth taking ſome pains about; and that it is very difficult to ſecure, there being ſo many things which frequently ariſe, and break in upon it, thro' the devices of ſatan, and the corruptions of mens hearts: but tho' it is difficult, and may ſometimes ſeem to be impoſſible, yet it becomes the ſaints to be diligent in the uſe of means to keep it up, and continue it; and which they may be ſaid to endeavour after, when they abide with one another, and don't forſake each other upon every occaſion; when they perform all offices of love to one another, and ſtir up each other to the like: and the way and manner in which this is to be kept, is in the bond of peace; the Arabic verſion reads, by the bond of love and peace; by maintaining peace among themſelves, and ſeeking thoſe things which tend to, and make for peace, and ſpiritual edification; and which is called a bond, in alluſion to the Greek word uſed, which comes from one that ſignifies to knit, join, and bind together, and becauſe it is of a knitting and uniting nature. Now ſo to act is to walk worthy of calling grace, or agreeable to it: peace is what the ſaints are called unto in effectual vocation; and is what is ſuitable to God, who is the God of peace; and to Chriſt, who is the prince of peace; and to the holy Spirit, whoſe fruit is peace; and to the Goſpel, which is the Goſpel of peace; and to the character which the ſaints bear, which is that of ſons of peace.

Ver. 4. There is one body, &c.] The church; in what ſenſe that is a body, and compared to one, ſee the note on ch. i. 23. It is called one with relation to Jews and Gentiles, who are of the ſame body, and are reconciled in one body by Chriſt, and are baptized into it by the Spirit; and with reſpect to ſaints above and ſaints below, who make up one general aſſembly; and with regard to ſeparate ſocieties; for tho' there are ſeveral particular congregations, yet there is but one church of the firſt-born, whoſe names are written in heaven; and ſaints of different ages, places, ſtates, and conditions, are all one in Chriſt Jeſus, who is the one, and only head of this body: and this is an argument to excite the ſaints to unity of ſpirit; ſince they are, as one natural body is, members one of another, and therefore ſhould not bite and devour one another; they are one political body, one kingdom, over which Chriſt is ſole king and lawgiver, and a kingdom divided againſt itſelf cannot ſtand; they are one œconomical body, one family, they are all brethren, and ſhould not fall out by the way. And one Spirit; the holy Spirit of God, who animates, quickens, and actuates the body: there is but one Spirit, who convinces of ſin, enlightens, regenerates, and makes alive; who incorporates into the body, the church; who comforts the ſaints; helps them in their acceſs to God through Chriſt; makes known the things of Chriſt to them, is a Spirit of adoption, and the ſeal and earneſt of the heavenly glory; and the conſideration of this ſhould engage to unity, becauſe a contrary conduct muſt be grieving to the Spirit of God, unſuitable to his genuine fruits, and very unlike the true ſpirit of a chriſtian: and by one ſpirit may be meant the ſpirit of themſelves, who, as the firſt chriſtians were, ſhould be of one heart, and of one ſoul, of the ſame mind, and having the ſame affections for one another; which ſenſe is favoured by the Syriac and Arabic verſions; the former rendering the words, that ye may be one body and one ſpirit, making this to be the iſſue and effect of their endeavours after union and peace; and the latter reads them as an exhortation, be ye one body and one ſpirit; that is, be ye cordially and heartily united in your affections to one another: even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; that is, the glory hoped for, and which is laid up in heaven, and will be enjoyed there, to which the ſaints are called in effectual vocation, is one and the ſame: there are no degrees in it; it will be equally poſſeſſed by them all; for they are all loved with the ſame love, choſen in the ſame head, and ſecured in the ſame covenant; they are bought with the ſame price of Chriſt's blood, and are juſtified by the ſame righteouſneſs; they are all equally the ſons of God, and ſo heirs of the ſame heavenly inheritance; and are all made kings and prieſts unto God, and there is but one kingdom, one crown, one inheritance for them all; and the holineſs and beatific viſion of the ſaints in heaven will be alike; and therefore they ſhould be heartily affected to one another here on earth, who are to be partners together in glory to all eternity. So the Jews ſay [p], that in the world of ſouls, all, ſmall and great, ſtand before the Lord; and they have a ſtanding alike; for in the affairs of the ſoul, it is fit that they ſhould be all, שוים, equal, as it is ſaid Exod. xxx. 15. the rich ſhall not give more.

Ver. 5. One Lord, &c.] The Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who, by right of creation, is Lord of all; and by right of marriage, and redemption, is the one and only Lord of his church and people; he has betrothed them to himſelf, and is their huſband, and ſo their Lord, whom they are to worſhip and obey; he has redeemed them, he has bought them with the price of his blood, and therefore they are not their own, but his, and ſhould glorify him both with their bodies and ſouls, which are his; he is the head of his body the church, the king of ſaints, and father and maſter of the family named of him, and therefore they ought to agree among themſelves, and not be many maſters, and uſurp a domination over one another. The Ethiopic verſion reads, one God, but that is expreſſed in the following verſe. One faith; there is but one grace of faith; there are indeed different ſorts of faith; there is the faith of miracles, and an hiſtorical, temporary faith, but there is but one true grace of faith; and which, tho' it is in different ſubjects, and its degrees and acts are various, yet as to its nature, it is like precious faith in all; and has the ſame author and object Jeſus Chriſt, and ſprings from the ſame cauſe, the free grace of God, and has equally in all everlaſting ſalvation connected with it, and conſequent upon it: and there is but one doctrine of faith; the Goſpel is ſo called, becauſe it conſiſts of things to be believed, is the means of implanting faith, it propoſes the object to be believed in, and requires the exerciſe of it upon it, and ſhould be mixed with faith whenever heard. Now this is but one, and is all of a-piece, and conſiſtent with itſelf, and ſo ſhould the profeſſors of it be, and love one another in the faith. One baptiſm; there were divers baptiſms under the law, but there is but one baptiſm under the Goſpel; for John's and Chriſt's are the ſame: there are beſides, figurative or metaphorical ones, which are ſo in an improper ſenſe, as the baptiſm of the Spirit, and the baptiſm of blood, or of ſufferings; but there is but one baptiſm, literally and properly ſo called, which is water-baptiſm; and which is to be adminiſtred in one and the ſame way, by immerſion in water; and on one and the ſame ſubjects, believers in Chriſt; and in one and the ſame name, the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt; and to be performed but once, when rightly adminiſtred.

Ver. 6. One God and Father of all, &c.] That there is but one God is the voice of nature and of revelation; and may be concluded from the perfections of deity, for there can be but one eternal, infinite, immenſe, omnipotent, all-ſufficient, perfect, and independent being; and from one firſt cauſe of all things, and the relations he ſtands in to his creatures: there is but one God, who is truly, and really, and properly God, in oppoſition to all nominal and figurative deities, and which are not Gods by nature, and to the fictitious deities and idols of the nations; and there is but one God of Jews and Gentiles; nor is the unity of the Godhead inconſiſtent with a Trinity of perſons in it: and this one God is the Father of all; the Father of all mercies, and of all ſpirits, both angels and ſouls of men; and he is the Father of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and of all the elect in him: and ſeeing that they have all one Covenant-God and Father, who has predeſtinated them to the adoption of children, and who has put them among the children, and adopted them into his family, and ſtand in the ſame relation to him, and enjoy the ſame privileges, they ought to love as brethren: who is above all; which may denote the ſuper-excellency of his nature not above his Son and Spirit, who are of the ſame nature with him, but above angels and men; and the extenſiveneſs of his government, over all creatures in general, and over his church and people in particular: and through all; the Arabic verſion renders it, taking care of all; which may have reſpect to his providence, which is either univerſal, and reaches to all creatures, his hands have made; or ſpecial, and concerns his own choſen people, who belong to his family, and to whom he ſtands in the relation of a Covenant-God and Father: or this clauſe may refer to the perfections of his nature, which appear thro' the whole of the ſalvation of all the choſen ones; as his wiſdom, love, grace, mercy, juſtice, holineſs, truth, and faithfulneſs: and in you all; which is to be underſtood, not of his being in his creatures, by his powerful preſence, which is every where ſupporting them; but of the gracious union there is between him and his people, and of his gracious inhabitation in them by his Spirit. The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions, the Complutenſian edition, and ſome copies, read, in us all; and the Alexandrian copy, and the Ethiopic verſion, read only, in all.

Ver. 7. But unto every one of us is given grace, &c.] Which may refer to the ſaints in common, and may be interpreted of juſtifying, pardoning, adopting, ſanctifying, and perſevering grace, beſtowed upon them all, freely and liberally, not grudgingly, nor niggardly, and without motive and condition in them; or to the miniſters of the Goſpel, and ſo deſign gifts fitting for the miniſtry, which every one has, tho' differing one from another, and all of free grace: according to the meaſure of the gift of Chriſt; either according to the gift of grace to Chriſt before the world began, and the meaſure of it, which he communicates to them in time, even grace for grace; or according to that meaſure of gifts which Chriſt received from men at his aſcenſion: it may be obſerved that every member of Chriſt and miniſter of his, receive more or leſs grace and gifts from him; and that what they receive is all of free grace, and in meaſure; and tho' they may have gifts differing one from another, yet all are uſeful; ſo that there is no room for pride, envy, and contempt, which would break in upon the unity of the Spirit; for what is ſaid from ver. 3. contains ſo many arguments to ſtir up the ſaints to endeavour to preſerve that.

Ver. 8. Wherefore he ſaith, &c.] God in the ſcripture, Pſal. lxviii. 18. when he aſcended up on high; which is not to be underſtood of Moſes's aſcending up to the firmament at the giving of the law, as ſome Jewiſh writers[q] interpret it; for tho' Moſes aſcended to the top of mount Sinai, yet it is never ſaid that he went up to the firmament of heaven; nor of David's going up to the high fortreſſes of his enemies, as another of thoſe writers[r] would have it; nor of God's aſcent from mount Sinai, when he gave the law, of which there is no mention in ſcripture; but of the Meſſiah's aſcenſion to heaven, which may very well be ſignified by this phraſe, on high; ſee Pſal. cii. 19. and Jer. xxv. 30. and which aſcenſion is to be taken not in a figurative, but literal ſenſe, and as real, local, and viſible as Chriſt's aſcenſion to heaven was; being from mount Olivet, attended by angels, in the ſight of his Apoſtles, after he had converſed with them from the time of his reſurrection forty days; and which aſcenſion of his was in order to fulfil the type of the high-prieſt entering into the moſt holy place; and to make interceſſion for his people, and to ſend down the Spirit with his gifts and graces to them, and to make way and prepare manſions of glory for them, and receive the glory promiſed and due to him: in the Hebrew text it is, thou haſt aſcended; there the pſalmiſt ſpeaks to the Meſſiah, here the Apoſtle ſpeaks of him; tho' the Arabic and Ethiopic read there, he aſcended, as here: he led captivity captive; which is expreſſive of Chriſt's conqueſts and triumph over ſin, ſatan, the world, death and the grave; and indeed, every ſpiritual enemy of his and his people, eſpecially the devil, who leads men captive at his will, and is therefore called captivity, and his principalities and powers, whom Chriſt has ſpoiled and triumphed over; the alluſion is to the public triumphs of the Romans, in which captives were led in chains and expoſed to open view[s]: and gave gifts unto men; meaning the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, and particularly ſuch as qualify men for the work of the miniſtry; theſe he received באדם, in man; in human nature, in that nature in which he aſcended to heaven; באדם הידוע למעלה, in the man that is known above[t], as ſay the Jews; and theſe he beſtows on men, even rebellious ones, that the Lord God might dwell among them, and make them uſeful to others: wherefore the Jews have no reaſon to quarrel with the verſion of the Apoſtle as they do[u]; who inſtead of received gifts for men, renders it, gave gifts to men; ſince the Meſſiah received in order to give, and gives in conſequence of his having received them; and ſo Jarchi interprets the words, לתתם, to give them to the children of men; and beſides, as a learned man has obſerved[w], one and the ſame Hebrew word ſignifies to give and to receive; to which may be added that their own Targum renders it יהבתא, and haſt given gifts to the children of men; and in like manner the Syriac and Arabic verſions of Pſal. lxviii. 18. render the words; very likely the Apoſtle might uſe the Syriac verſion, which is a very ancient one: it was cuſtomary at triumphs to give gifts to the ſoldiers[x], to which there is an alluſion here.

Ver. 9. Now that he aſcended, &c.] Theſe words are a concluſion of Chriſt's deſcent from heaven, from his aſcenſion thither; for had he not firſt deſcended from thence, it could not have been ſaid of him that he aſcended; for no man hath aſcended to heaven but he that came down from heaven, John iii. 13. and they are alſo an explanation of the ſenſe of the Pſalmiſt in the above citation, which takes in his humiliation as well as his exaltation; which humiliation is ſignified by his deſcent into the earth: what is it but that he alſo deſcended firſt into the lower parts of the earth? this the papiſts underſtand of his deſcent into a place they call Limbus Patrum, which they make to be contiguous to hell; and where they ſay the patriarchs were detained till Chriſt's coming; and that he went thither to deliver them out of it; and that theſe are the captivity he led captive; all which is fictitious and fabulous: for certain it is, that the place where Abraham was with Lazarus in his boſom was not near to hell, but afar off, and that there was a great gulf between them, Luke xvi. 23, 26. and the ſpirits or ſouls of the patriarchs returned to God that gave them, when ſeparated from their bodies, as the ſouls of men do no now, Eccleſ. xii. 7. nor did Chriſt enter any ſuch feigned place at his death, but went to paradiſe, where the penitent thief was that day with him; nor were the patriarchs, but the principalities and powers Chriſt ſpoiled, the captivity he led captive and triumphed over: ſome interpret this of Chriſt's deſcent into hell, which muſt be underſtood not locally, but of his enduring the wrath of God for ſin, which was equivalent to the torments of hell, and of his being in the ſtate of the dead; but it may rather deſign the whole of his humiliation, as his deſcent from heaven and incarnation in the virgin's womb, where his human nature was curiouſly wrought in the loweſt parts of the earth; and his humbling himſelf and becoming obedient unto death, even the death of the croſs, when he was made ſin and a curſe for his people, and bore all the puniſhment due to their tranſgreſſions; and his being in Hades, in the ſtate of the dead, in the grave, in the heart of the earth, as Jonas in the whale's belly: reference ſeems to be had to Pſal. cxxxix. 15. where the lower parts of the earth, is interpreted by the Targum on the place of כריסא דאמא, his mother's womb; and ſo it is by Jarchi, Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and Ben Melec. The Alexandrian copy and the Ethiopic verſion, leave out the word firſt in this clauſe.

Ver. 10. He that deſcended is the ſame alſo that aſcended, &c.] It was the ſame divine perſon the Son of God, who aſſumed human nature, and ſuffered in it, which is meant by his deſcent, who in that nature aſcended up to heaven: this proves that Chriſt exiſted before he took fleſh of the virgin; and that tho' he has two natures, yet he is but one perſon; and diſproves the popiſh notion of the deſcent of Chriſt's ſoul into Limbus or hell, locally taken; taken: and this aſcenſion of his was, up far above all heavens; the viſible heavens, the airy and ſtarry heavens; Chriſt aſcended far above theſe, and went into the third heaven, the holieſt of all; and this is expreſſive of the exaltation of Chriſt, who is made higher than the heavens: and the end of his aſcenſion was, that he might fill all things, or fulfil all things; that were types of him, or predicted concerning him; that as he had fulfilled many things already by his incarnation, doctrine, miracles, obedience, ſufferings, death and reſurrection from the dead; ſo he aſcended on high that he might accompliſh what was foretold concerning his aſcenſion to heaven, and ſeſſion at the right hand of God, and anſwer to the type of the high-prieſt's entering once a year into the holieſt of all: or that he might compleat, perfect and fill up all his offices; as the remainder of his prieſtly office, his interceſſion for his people; and more fully his prophetic office by the effuſion of his Spirit; and more viſibly his kingly office, by ſending forth the rod of his ſtrength out of Zion, and ſubduing the people under him: or that he might fill all places; as God he fills all places at once, being infinite, immenſe, and omnipreſent; as man one after another; at his incarnation he dwelt with men on earth; at his crucifixion he was lifted up between heaven and earth; at his death he deſcended into the lower parts of the earth, into hell, Hades, or the grave; and at his reſurrection ſtood upon the earth again, and had all power in heaven and in earth given him; and at his aſcenſion he went thro' the airy and ſtarry heavens, into the higheſt heaven; and ſo ſucceſſively was in all places: or rather that he might fill all perſons, all his elect, both Jews and Gentiles; and ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, that he might fill all creatures; as the Gentiles were called; particularly that he might fill each and every one of his people with his grace and righteouſneſs, with his Spirit, and the fruits of it, with ſpiritual knowledge and underſtanding, with food and gladneſs, with peace, joy and comfort; and all his churches with his gracious preſence, and with officers and members, and all with gifts and graces ſuitable to their ſeveral ſtations and work.

Ver. 11. And he gave ſome Apoſtles, &c.] That is, he gave them gifts by which they were qualified to be Apoſtles; who were ſuch as were immediately called by Chriſt, and had their doctrine from him, and their commiſſion to preach it; and were peculiarly and infallibly guided by the Spirit of God, and had a power to work miracles for the confirmation of their doctrine; and had authority to go every where and preach the Goſpel, and plant churches, and were not confined to any one particular place or church; this was the firſt and chief office in the church, and of an extraordinary kind, and is now ceaſed; and tho' the Apoſtles were before Chriſt's aſcenſion, yet they had not received till then the fulneſs of the Spirit, and his extraordinary gifts to fit them for their office; nor did they enter upon the diſcharge of it in its large extent till that time; for they were not only to bear witneſs of Chriſt in Jeruſalem, in Judea and Samaria, but in the uttermoſt part of the earth: and ſome prophets; by whom are meant, not private members of churches, who may all propheſy or teach in a private way; nor ordinary miniſters of the word; but extraordinary ones, who had a peculiar gift of interpreting the ſcriptures, the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, and of foretelling things to come; ſuch were Agabus and others in the church of Antioch, Acts xi. 27. and xiii. 1. and ſome evangeliſts; by whom are deſigned, not ſo much the writers of the Goſpels, as Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, ſome of which were alſo Apoſtles; as preachers of the Goſpel, and who yet were diſtinct from the ordinary miniſters of it; they were below the Apoſtles, and yet above paſtors and teachers; they were the companions of the Apoſtles, and aſſiſtants to them, and ſubſerved them in their work; ſuch were Philip, Luke, Titus, Timothy, and others; theſe were not fixed and ſtated miniſters in any one place, as the following officers be, but were ſent here and there, as the Apoſtles thought fit: and ſome paſtors and teachers, or doctors; theſe may be thought to differ, but not ſo much on account of the place where they perform their work, the one in the church, the other in the ſchool; nor on account of the different ſubject of their miniſtry, the one attending to practical, the other to doctrinal points; but whereas the paſtors are the ſhepherds of the flock, the overſeers of it, and the ſame with the biſhops and elders, and the teachers may be the gifted brethren in the church, aſſiſtants to the paſtors, bare miniſters of the word; ſo the difference lies here, that the one has the overſight, and care, and charge of the church, and the other not; the one can adminiſter all ordinances, the other not; the one is fixed and tied to ſome certain church, the other not: tho' I rather think they intend one and the ſame office, and that the word teachers is only explanative of the figurative word paſtors or ſhepherds; and the rather becauſe if the Apoſtle had deſigned diſtinct officers, he would have uſed the ſame form of ſpeaking as before; and have expreſſed himſelf thus, and ſome paſtors, and ſome teachers; whereas he does not make ſuch a diſtribution here as there; tho' the Syriac verſion reads this clauſe diſtributively as the others; and among the Jews there were the ſingular men or wiſe men, and the diſciples of the wiſe men, who were their companions and aſſiſtants; and it is aſked [y], "who is a ſingular man? and who is a "diſciple? a ſingular man is every one that is fit to "be appointed a paſtor or governor of a congrega"tion, and a diſciple is one, that when he is queſtioned "about any point in his doctrine, gives an anſwer:" wherefore if theſe two, paſtors and teachers, are different, it might be thought there is ſome reference to this diſtinction, and that paſtors anſwer to the wiſe men, and teachers to their diſciples or aſſiſtants; and ſo Kimchi in Jer. iii. 15. interprets the paſtors there of פרנסים ישראל, the paſtors of Iſrael, which ſhall be with the King Meſſiah, as is ſaid in Micah v. 5. and undoubtedly Goſpel-miniſters are meant: from the whole it may be obſerved, that as there have been various officers, and offices in the Goſpel-diſpenſation, various gifts have been beſtowed; and theſe are the gifts of Chriſt, which he has received for men, and gives unto them; and hence it appears that the work of the miniſtry is not an human invention, but the appointment of Chriſt, for which he fits and qualifies, and therefore to be regarded; and that they only are the miniſters of Chriſt, whom he makes miniſters of the New Teſtament, and not whom men or themſelves make and appoint.

Ver. 12. For the perfecting of the ſaints, &c.] The choſen ones, whom God has ſanctified or ſet apart for himſelf in eternal election: the miniſtry of the word is deſigned for the compleating the number of theſe in effectual vocation; and for the perfecting of the whole body of the church, by gathering in all that belong to it, and of every particular ſaint, who is regenerated and ſanctified by the Spirit of God: for the beſt of ſaints are imperfect; for tho' there is a perfection in them as that deſigns ſincerity, in oppoſition to hypocriſy, and as it may be taken comparatively with reſpect to what others are, or they themſelves were; and tho' there is a perfection of parts of the new man in them, yet not of degrees; and tho' there is a compleat perfection in Chriſt, yet not in themſelves, their ſanctification is imperfect, as their faith, knowledge, love, &c. ſin is in them, and committed by them, and they continually want ſupplies of grace; and the beſt of them are ſenſible of their imperfection, and own it: now the miniſtration of the word is a means of carrying on the work of grace in them unto perfection, or for the reſtoring or jointing in of the ſaints; the elect of God, were diſjointed in Adam's fall and ſcattered abroad, who were repreſentatively gathered together in one head, even in Chriſt, in redemption; and the word is the means of the viſible and open jointing of them into Chriſt, and into his churches, and alſo of reſtoring them after backſlidings: for the work of the miniſtry; gifts are given unto men by Chriſt to qualify them for it: the preaching of the Goſpel is a work, and a laborious one, and what no man is ſufficient for of himſelf; it requires faithfulneſs, and is a good work, and when well performed thoſe concerned in it, are worthy of reſpect, eſteem, and honour; and it is a miniſtring work, a ſervice and not dominion: for the edifying the body of Chriſt; not his natural body the Father prepared for him; nor his ſacramental body in the ſupper; but his myſtical body the church; and gifts are beſtowed to fit them for the preaching of the Goſpel, that hereby the church, which is compared to an edifice, might be built up; and that the ſeveral ſocieties of chriſtians and particular believers might have ſpiritual edification, and walk in the fear of the Lord, and in the comforts of the Holy Ghoſt, and their numbers be increaſed, and their graces be in lively exerciſe.

[y] T. Bab. Taanith, fol. 10. 2.

Ver. 13. Till we all come in the unity of the faith, &c.] Theſe words regard the continuance of the Goſpel-miniſtry in the church, until all the elect of God come in: or to the unity of the faith; by which is meant, not the union between the ſaints, the cement of which is love; nor that which is between Chriſt and his people, of which his love; and not their faith, is the bond; but the ſame with the one faith, ver. 5. and deſigns either the doctrine of faith, which is uniform, and all of a-piece; and the ſenſe is, that the miniſtration of the Goſpel will continue until the ſaints entirely unite in their ſentiments about it, and both watchmen and churches ſee eye to eye: or elſe the grace of faith, which as to its nature, object, author, ſpring and cauſe is the ſame; and it uſually comes by hearing; and all God's elect ſhall have it; and the work and office of the miniſtry will remain until they are all brought to believe in Chriſt; and of the knowledge of the Son of God; which is but another phraſe for faith in Chriſt, for faith is a ſpiritual knowledge of Chriſt; it is that grace by which a ſoul beholds his glory and fulneſs, approves of him, truſts in him, and appropriates him to itſelf; and ſuch an approbatory, fiducial, appropriating, practical, and experimental knowledge of Chriſt is here intended; and which is imperfect in thoſe that have it, and is not yet in many who will have it; and inaſmuch as the Goſpel-miniſtry is the means of it, this will be continued until every elect ſoul partakes of it, and arrives to a greater perfection in it: for it follows, unto a perfect man; meaning either Chriſt, who is in every ſenſe a perfect man; his human nature is the greater and more perfect tabernacle, and he is perfectly free from ſin, and has been made perfect thro' ſufferings in it; and coming to him may be underſtood either of coming to him now by faith, which the Goſpel-miniſtry is the means of, and encourages to; or of coming to him hereafter, for the ſaints will meet him, and be ever with him, and till that time the Goſpel will be preached: or elſe the church being a compleat body with all its members is deſigned; for when all the elect of God are gathered in and joined together, they will be as one man; or it may reſpect every individual believer, who tho' he is comparatively perfect, and with regard to parts, but not degrees, and as in Chriſt Jeſus, yet is in himſelf imperfect in holineſs and knowledge, tho' hereafter he will be perfect in both; when he comes unto the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt; not of Chriſt's natural body, but of his myſtical body the church, which will be his fulneſs when all the elect are gathered in; and when they are filled with his gifts and graces, and are grown up to their proportion in it, they will be come to the meaſure and ſtature of it: or it may be underſtood of every particular believer, who has Chriſt formed in him; who when the work of grace is finiſhed in him, will be a perfect man in Chriſt, and all this will be true of him; till which time, and during this imperfect ſtate, the Goſpel-miniſtry will be maintained: the phraſe is taken from the Jews, who among the forms and degrees of propheſy which the prophets arrived to, and had in them the viſion of God and angels, make שעור קומה, the meaſure of the ſtature[z], a principal one; and is here uſed for the perfection of the heavenly ſtate in the viſion, and enjoyment of God and Chriſt.

Ver. 14. That we henceforth be no more children, &c.] Meaning not children of men, for grace does not deſtroy natural relations; nor children of God, which is a priviledge, and always continues; nor indeed children of diſobedience, tho' the ſaints ceaſe to be ſuch upon converſion; but in ſuch ſenſe children, as they were when firſt converted, new born babes, little children: there are ſome things in which they ſhould be children ſtill, namely with reſpect to an ardent and flaming love to God and Chriſt, and to the ſaints; and with regard to their eager deſire after the ſincere milk of the word; and as to pride, malice, envy, evil ſpeakings, guile and hypocriſy; in theſe things it becomes them to be children: but not in underſtanding; they ſhould not always remain ignorant, imprudent, or be always fed with milk, and not able to digeſt meat; nor be unable to go unleſs led, and be tender and uncapable of bearing hardſhips for Chriſt and his Goſpel, and of defending it, and his cauſe and intereſt; but ſhould play the man, and quit themſelves as ſuch and be ſtrong, which the Goſpel-miniſtry is a means of, and encourages to: toſſed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine; falſe doctrine, which may be compared to wind for its lightneſs and emptineſs, and for its ſwelling and puffing nature, and for the noiſe and bluſter it makes, and for its rapidity and force, with which it ſometimes comes and bears all before it, and for its infectiouſneſs, which is the nature of ſome winds; and to be toſſed to and fro, and carried about with it, is expreſſive of much ignorance and want of a diſcerning ſpirit, and implies heſitation, and doubts and ſcruples, and ſhews credulity, fickleneſs and inconſtancy: and which is brought on by the ſleight of men; either thro' the uncertain and changeable ſtate of things in life; the mind of man is fickle, the life of man is uncertain, and all the affairs of human nature are ſubject to change, by reaſon of which men are eaſily impoſed upon; or rather thro' the tricking arts of falſe teachers: the word here uſed is adopted by the Jews into their language, and with them קוביא, ſignifies the game at dice [a]; and קוביוסטום, is a gameſter at that play, and is interpreted by them, one that ſteals ſouls [b], and deceives and corrupts them; and may be fitly applied to falſe teachers, who make uſe of ſuch like artifices and juggling tricks, to deceive the hearts of the ſimple, as the others do to cheat men of their money: hence it follows, and cunning craftineſs, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; or unto the deceitful methods or wiles of the devil, as the Alexandrian copy reads; which not only ſuggeſts that their principal end in view is to deceive, but their inſidious, private and ſecret way of deceiving, and their expertneſs in it, which they have from the devil; and now the miniſtration of the Goſpel is the beſt and ſureſt guard and antidote, againſt ſuch fluctuations and deceptions.

[z] Maimon. in Miſn. Sanhedrin, c. 11. §. 1. Coſri, par. 4. §. 3. p. 213. 2.

Ver. 15. But ſpeaking the truth in love, &c.] Either Chriſt himſelf, who is the truth, and is to be preached, and always ſpoken of with ſtrong affection and love; or the Goſpel, the word of truth, ſo called in oppoſition to that which is falſe and fictitious; and alſo to the law, which is ſhadowiſh; and on account of its author, the God of truth, and its ſubject matter, Chriſt, and the ſeveral doctrines of grace; and becauſe the Spirit of truth has dictated it, and does direct to it, and owns and bleſſes it: this with reſpect to the miniſters of the Goſpel, ſhould be ſpoken openly, honeſtly, and ſincerely, and in love to the ſouls of men, and in a way conſiſtent with love, in oppoſition to the ſecret, enſnaring and pernicious ways of falſe teachers; and with reſpect to private chriſtians, as they are to receive it in love, ſo to ſpeak of it to one another from a principle of love, and an affectionate concern for each others welfare, to the end that they may grow up into him in all things which is the head, even Chriſt: the work of grace upon the ſoul is a gradual work, and an increaſe of this in the exerciſe of faith, hope, love, and ſpiritual knowledge is a growth; and this is a growth in all things, in all grace, as in thoſe mentioned, ſo in others, as humility, patience, ſelf-denial, reſignation of the will to the will of God, and eſpecially the knowledge of Chriſt; for it is a growing into him, from whom ſouls receive all their grace and increaſe of it; for he is the head of influence to ſupply them, as well as the head of eminence to protect them; ſee chap. i. 22. and now the preaching of the Goſpel, or the ſincere ſpeaking of the truth, is the inſtrumental means of ſuch growth.

Ver. 16. From whom the whole body fitly joined together, &c.] By which is meant, the church; ſee chap. i. 23. ſometimes it deſigns all the elect of God in heaven and in earth, but here the church-militant, which only can admit of an increaſe; this body is from Chriſt, as an head, and the phraſe denotes the riſe and original of the church from Chriſt, her dependance upon him, and union to him, and of its members one to another; ſhe has her being and form from him, and all her bleſſings, as her life and light, righteouſneſs and holineſs, her grace and ſtrength, her joy, peace, and comfort, her fruitfulneſs and final perſeverance; and her dependance is upon him for ſubſiſtence, ſuſtenance, protection and ſafety, and for grace and glory; and her union to him is very near, ſtrict and cloſe, and indiſſoluble; and the union between the ſeveral members is alſo very cloſe, and both are very beautiful: and compacted by that which every joint ſupplieth, according to the effectual working in the meaſure of every part. The Alexandrian copy reads, of every member; and ſo the Vulgate Latin, Syriac and Arabic verſions; the author of the union of the members of Chriſt's body to one another is the Spirit of God, by him they are baptized into one body; the cement or bond of this union is the grace of love wrought in their ſouls by him; and the means are the word and ordinances, and theſe convey a ſupply from Chriſt the head to every member, ſuitable to the part it bears in the body, according to the energy of the Spirit, who makes all effectual: and ſo maketh increaſe of the body unto the edifying of itſelf in love; the increaſe of the body the church, is either in numbers, when perſons are converted and added to it; or in the exerciſe of grace, under the influence of the Spirit, thro' the miniſtration of the word and ordinances; and both theſe tend to the edifying or building of it up; and nothing is of a more edifying nature to the church than love, which bears the infirmities of the weak, and ſeeks for, and follows after thoſe things which make for peace and godly edification, 1 Cor. viii. 1.

Ver. 17. This I ſay therefore and teſtify in the Lord, &c.] Theſe words may be conſidered either as an aſſertion, and ſo a teſtimonial of the different walk and converſation of the ſaints at Epheſus, from the reſt of the Gentiles; or as an exhortation in the name of the Lord to ſuch a walk, the Apoſtle here returning to what he ſtirs them up to in ver. 1. that ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk, in the vanity of their mind; every natural man walks in a vain ſhew; the mind of man is vain, and whoever walk according to the dictates of it, muſt walk vainly: the phraſe is expreſſive of the emptineſs of the mind; it being naturally deſtitute of God, of the knowledge, fear and grace of God; and of Jeſus Chriſt, of the knowledge of him, faith in him, and love to him; and of the Spirit and his graces; and it alſo points at the inſtability and changeableneſs of the human mind, in which ſenſe man at his beſt eſtate was altogether vanity; as alſo the folly, falſhood, and wickedneſs of it in his fallen ſtate: and the mind diſcovers its vanity in its thoughts and imaginations, which are vain and fooliſh; in the happineſs it propoſes to itſelf, which lies in vain things, as worldly riches, honours, &c. and in the ways and means it takes to obtain it, and in words and actions; and the Gentiles ſhewed the vanity of their minds in their vain philoſophy, and curious enquiries into things, and in their polytheiſm and idolatry: to walk herein, is to act according to the dictates of a vain and carnal mind; and it denotes a continued ſeries of ſinning, or a vain converſation maintained, a progreſs and obſtinate perſiſting therein with pleaſure: now God's elect before converſion walk as others do, but when they are converted their walk and converſation is not, at leaſt, it ought not to be like that of others: the Alexandrian copy and ſome others, the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions, leave out the word other, and only read, as the Gentiles, &c.

Ver. 18. Having the underſtanding darkened, &c.] Not that the natural faculty of the underſtanding is loſt in men, nor the underſtanding in things natural and civil, and which is quick enough, eſpecially in things that are evil; but in things ſpiritual it is very dark and ignorant, as about the nature and perfections of God, his holineſs and righteouſneſs; about ſin and the conſequences of it; about Chriſt, his perſon, office, and work, and ſalvation by him; about the Spirit, and his work of grace upon the ſoul; and about the ſcriptures and the doctrines contained in it; and ſo it came to be by ſin: the underſtanding of man was at firſt filled both with natural and divine knowledge; but man was not content with this, and being ambitious of more, even of being as God, loſt what he had; for on account of his ſin he was baniſhed the divine preſence, which brought not only a darkneſs upon him, but upon all his poſterity; and which is increaſed by perſonal iniquity, and oftentimes by ſatan the god of this world, who blinds the minds of men; and ſometimes men are given up in juſt judgment by God, to a judicial blindneſs and hardneſs of heart; and which iſſues in utter darkneſs, in blackneſs of darkneſs for evermore: being alienated from the life of God; not that which God lives in himſelf, but that which he lives in his people; nor that natural life which men receive from him, but a ſpiritual life, a life of grace, faith and holineſs; and which may be called the life of God, becauſe it is infuſed by the Spirit of God, and the word of God is the means of it, and it is ſupported and ſecured by the power of God, and is according to the will of God, and is directed to his glory: now wicked and unconverted men are alienated from this life; they are eſtranged from God the fountain of it; and go aſtray from the law, the rule of an holy life; and are entirely deſtitute of a principle of life, from whence men can only act right; and are utterly unacquainted with the pleaſures and ſweetneſs of the life of faith and holineſs; nor do they approve of ſuch a life, but have the utmoſt averſion to it: thro' the ignorance that is in them; every unregenerate man is an ignorant man, and eſpecially the Gentiles were very ignorant of God, and of divine things; ignorance is natural to men, it comes by ſin, and is itſelf ſinful, and is ſometimes the puniſhment of ſin, and alſo the cauſe of it, as here of alienation from the life of God; for where is ignorance of God, there can be no deſire after him, no communion with him, no faith in him, and dependance on him; no true worſhip of him, or living according to his will, and to his glory: and this ignorance is, becauſe of the blindneſs of their hearts, or the hardneſs of it; there is a natural hardneſs of the heart, the heart is naturally ſtony, and ſo it remains till grace takes away the ſtony heart, and gives an heart of fleſh; it is inſenſible and inflexible, and not ſuſceptive of any impreſſion; and there is a voluntary hardneſs of it, men willingly harden themſelves againſt the Lord, and make their hearts like an adamant ſtone, all ſin is of an hardening nature; and there is a judicial hardneſs, which God gives up men unto; and when and where this is the caſe, in either ſenſe, it is no wonder men ſhould be ſo ignorant of God, and ſo alienated from the life of him: סמיות הלב, blindneſs of heart [c], is a Rabbinical phraſe.

Ver. 19. Who being paſt feeling, &c.] Their conſciences being cauterized or ſeared as with a red hot iron, which is the conſequence of judicial hardneſs; ſo that they have loſt all ſenſe of ſin, and don't feel the load of its guilt upon them, and are without any concern about it; but on the contrary commit it with pleaſure, boaſt of it and glory in it, plead for it and defend it publickly, and openly declare it, and ſtand in no fear of a future judgment, which they ridicule and deſpiſe: the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions, and the Claromontane exemplar read, who deſpairing; of mercy and ſalvation, ſaying there is no hope, and therefore grow hardened and deſperate in ſin: have given themſelves over unto laſciviouſneſs, to work all uncleanneſs with greedineſs; by laſciviouſneſs is meant all manner of luſts, and a wanton and unbridled courſe of ſinning; and their giving themſelves over unto it denotes their voluntarineſs in ſinning, the power of ſin over them, they being willing ſlaves unto it, and their continuance in it; and this they do in order to work all uncleanneſs; to commit every unclean luſt, to live in a continued commiſſion of uncleanneſs of every ſort; and that with greedineſs; being like a covetous man, never ſatisfied with ſinning, but always craving more ſinful luſts and pleaſures.

Ver. 20. But ye have not ſo learned Chriſt, &c.] Some diſtinguiſh theſe words and make two propoſitions of them, but ye not ſo, or ye are not ſo, ye have learned Chriſt; the firſt of theſe propoſitions has reſpect to what goes before, and ſuggeſts that regenerate perſons are not as other men: they don't walk in the vanity of their minds as others, their minds are not empty and vain; but are filled with God, with a ſaving knowledge of God in Chriſt, with the fear and love of God, and with Chriſt, with a ſpiritual knowledge of him, with faith in him and love to him, and with the Spirit, with his graces and fruits of righteouſneſs; and tho' there is a great deal of vanity, inſtability, treachery, and ſinfulneſs in them, yet their walk and the courſe of their converſation is not according to this: nor are their underſtandings darkened as others; they are enlightened to ſee their loſt ſtate and condition by nature, the plague of their own hearts, the inſufficiency of their own righteouſneſs, the way of life and ſalvation by Chriſt, and that ſalvation from firſt to laſt is all of grace; they have ſome light into the doctrines of the Goſpel, and have ſome glimpſe of glory; and their light is of an increaſing nature: they are not alienated from the life of God as others, but live a life of communion with him, a life of faith upon him, and a life of holineſs according to his mind; they are not paſt feeling as others, they are ſenſible of ſin, and are often preſſed down with the weight of it, and groan, being burdened by it; they cannot ſin with that delight and pleaſure as others do, nor will they plead for it, but confeſs it with ſhame and ſorrow; nor do they give up themſelves to it, and continue in it, and in an inſatiable purſuit of it: the reaſon of all which is, they have learned Chriſt; ſo as to know him as God over all bleſſed for ever; as the Lord and heir of all things; as the alpha and omega of the covenant of grace; as entruſted with all that is near and dear to his Father; as the Father's free gift to men, and as the ſinner's ſaviour; as the way of acceſs to God and acceptance with him; as the church's head and huſband; as the ſaints prophet, prieſt, and king, and as the only mediator between God and men; and ſo as to receive him, believe in him, and commit their ſouls unto him; and ſo as to embrace his truths, and ſubmit to his ordinances: and this leſſon they learn, not in the book and ſchool of nature, nor of carnal reaſon, nor of the law; but in the book of the covenant, and of the ſcripture; and in the ſchool of the church, and under the miniſtry of the Goſpel; for the miniſters of the Goſpel are the inſtructors, the inſtruments of teaching; though the Spirit of God is the efficient cauſe, the anointing which teacheth all things, and leads into all truth, as it is in Jeſus: and this leſſon being truly learnt, will teach men to walk differently from others; to deny ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, and to live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly.

Ver. 21. If ſo be that ye have heard him, &c.] Not heard him preach, but heard him preached; and that not merely externally, with the outward hearing of the ear; though oftentimes ſpiritual conviction and illumination, true faith in Chriſt, real comfort from him, and eſtabliſhment and aſſurance of intereſt in him, come this way, as to theſe Epheſians, ch. i. 13. but internally, ſo as to know him, underſtand his word, and diſtinguiſh his voice; ſo as to approve of him and love him, and believe in him; feel the power of his Goſpel, reliſh his truths, and obey his ordinances, and ſo bring forth fruit to his glory; as ſuch do, who are quickened by him, whoſe ears are unſtopped, and their hearts opened, and their underſtandings enlightened; and who have hearing ears, and underſtanding hearts given them: and have been taught by him; not perſonally, but by his Spirit and miniſters; for Chriſt is not only the ſubject of the miniſtry of the word, and whom the Spirit of God teaches and directs ſouls to for righteouſneſs, pardon, cleanſing, and for every ſupply of grace; but he is the efficient cauſe of teaching; and there is none teaches like him: and thoſe who are taught by him, are taught as the truth is in Jeſus; as the Goſpel is in him, as in its original and ſubject; for he is truth itſelf, and grace and truth came by him; and as it was preached by him, and ſo is pure and unmixed.

Ver. 22. That ye put off concerning the former converſation, the old man, &c.] Which is the corruption of nature; why this is called a man, and an old man, ſee the note on Rom. vi. 6. the putting him off, is not a removing him from the ſaints, nor a deſtroying him in them, nor a changing his nature; for he remains, and remains alive, and is the ſame old man he ever was, in regenerate perſons; but it is a putting him off from his ſeat, and a putting him down from his government; a ſhewing no regard to his rule and dominion, to his laws and luſts, making no proviſion for his ſupport; and particularly, not ſquaring the life and converſation according to his dictates and directions; and therefore it is called a putting him off, concerning the former converſation: the change lies not in the old man, who can never be altered, but in the converſation; he is not in the ſame power, but he retains the ſame ſinful nature; he is put off, but he is not put out; and though he does not reign, he rages, and often threatens to get the aſcendant: theſe words ſtand either in connexion with ver. 17. and ſo are a continuation and an explanation of that exhortation; or elſe they point out what regenerate ſouls are taught by Chriſt to do, to quit the former converſation, to hate the garment ſpotted with the fleſh, and to put it off; for the alluſion is to the putting off of filthy garments, as the works of the fleſh may be truly called, which flow from the vitioſity of nature, the old man: which is corrupt according to the deceitful luſts; the old man, or the vitioſity of nature, has its luſts; and theſe are deceitful, they promiſe pleaſure and profit, but yield neither in the iſſue; they promiſe liberty, and bring into bondage; they promiſe ſecrecy and impunity, but expoſe to ſhame, and render liable to puniſhment; they ſometimes put on a religious face, and ſo deceive, and fill men with pride and conceit, who think themſelves to be ſomething, when they are nothing: and through theſe the old man is corrupt; by theſe the corruption of nature is diſcovered; and the corruption that is in the world is produced hereby; and theſe make a man deſerving of, and liable to the pit of corruption; and this is a good reaſon, why this corrupt old man, with reſpect to the life and converſation, ſhould be put off.

Ver. 23. And be renewed in the ſpirit of your mind.] Or by the Spirit that is in your mind; that is, by the Holy Spirit; who is in the ſaints, and is the author of renovation in them; and who is the reviver and carrier on, and finiſher of that work, and therefore that is called the renewing of the Holy Spirit, Titus iii. 5. or rather the mind of man, which is a ſpirit, of a ſpiritual nature, immaterial and immortal, and is the ſeat of that renewing work of the Spirit of God; which ſhows, that the more noble part of man ſtands in need of renovation, being corrupted by ſin: and this renewing in it, deſigns not the firſt work of renovation; for theſe Epheſians had been renewed, and were made new creatures in Chriſt; but the gradual progreſs of it; and takes in, if not principally intends, a renewal, or an increaſe of ſpiritual light and knowledge, of life and ſtrength, of joy and comfort, and freſh ſupplies of grace, and a revival of the exerciſe of grace; and in ſhort, a renewal of ſpiritual youth, and a reſtoration of the ſaints to that ſtate and condition they were in, in times paſt: and the exhortation to this can only mean, that it becomes ſaints to be concerned for ſuch revivings and renewings, and to pray for them, as David did, Pſal. li. 10, for otherwiſe, this is as much the work of the Spirit of God, as renovation is at firſt; and he only who is ſent forth, and renews the face of the earth, year by year, can renew us daily in the ſpirit of our minds.

Ver. 24. And that ye put on the new man, &c.] Which ſome underſtand of Jeſus Chriſt, who is truly and really man, and a new or extraordinary one, Jer. xxxi. 22. and as ſuch is God's creature, and is made after his image, and which appears in his perfect holineſs and righteouſneſs; and the phraſe of putting on well agrees with him, Rom. xiii. 14. Gal. iii. 27. whoſe righteouſneſs is a garment, pure and ſpotleſs, and which is put on by the hand of faith: though rather by the new man is meant, the new nature, the new principle, or work of grace in the ſoul, elſewhere called a new creature; and it bears this name in oppoſition to, and diſtinction from the old man, or corruption of nature, before ſpoken of; and becauſe it is de novo, or anew, put into the hearts of men; it is not what was in them naturally; nor is it any old principle renewed, or wrought up in another and better form; but it is ſomething that is infuſed, that was never there before: and becauſe it is new in all its parts; ſuch who have it, have new hearts and new ſpirits given unto them; they have new eyes to ſee with, and new ears to hear with, and new hands to handle and work with, and new feet to walk with; and they live a new life and converſation; ſo the Jews ſay of a man that truly repents of ſin, and does not return to it, that he is, איש חדש, a new man[d]: now to put on this new man, is not to make ourſelves new creatures; for this is not by the power of man, but by the Spirit of God; this is God's work, and not man's; 'tis he who made us at firſt, re-makes us, and not we ourſelves; beſides, theſe Epheſians the Apoſtle writes to, were already made new men, or new creatures; but to put on the new man, is to walk in our lives and converſations, agreeable to the new man, or work of grace upon the ſoul; as to put off the old man, reſpects the former converſation, or a not walking as formerly, and agreeable to the dictates of corrupt nature, ſo to put on the new man, is to walk according to the principles of grace and holineſs formed in the ſoul: and of this new man it is further ſaid, which after God is created in righteouſneſs and true holineſs; the principle of the ſoul is created, and therefore is not the effect of man's power, which cannot create; it is peculiar to God only to create; it is a creature, and therefore not to be truſted in, and depended on; for not grace, but the author of grace is the object of truſt: it is created after God; by his power, according to his mind and will, and after his image, and in his likeneſs; which greatly conſiſts in righteouſneſs and true holineſs; called true, in oppoſition to the typical and ceremonial holineſs of the Jews, and to the pretended holineſs of hypocrites; and denotes the truth and genuineneſs of the Spirit's work of ſanctification upon the heart; unleſs this ſhould rather be conſidered, as the effect of his grace upon the ſoul; for ſo the words may be rendered, unto righteouſneſs and true holineſs; for the new man is of ſuch a nature, and ſo formed, as to tend to acts of righteouſneſs and holineſs, and to engage men to the performance of them: ſome copies read, in righteouſneſs, and holineſs, and truth; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion ſeems to have read.

Ver. 25. Wherefore putting away lying, &c.] Which is one of the deeds of the old man, and a branch of the former converſation agreeable to him: a lye is a voluntary diſagreement of the mind and ſpeech, with a deſign to deceive; it is to ſpeak that which is falſe, contrary to truth ſhining in the mind; and it is ſpoken knowingly and willingly, and with a deſign to impoſe upon others: hence a man may ſpeak what is falſe, and not be a liar, if he does not know it to be ſo; and hence parables, fables, tropes, figures, hyperboles, &c. are not lyes, becauſe they are not uſed to deceive, but to illuſtrate and enforce truth: there are ſeveral ſorts of lyes; there is an officious lye, which is told for the ſervice of others, but this is not lawful; for evil is not to be done, that good may come of it; and a man may as well tell a lye to ſerve himſelf, as another; and any other ſin by the ſame rule may be allowed of, and tolerated; beſides, it is not lawful to lye for God, and therefore not for a creature: and there is a jocoſe lye; this ought not to be encouraged; all appearance of evil ſhould be abſtained from; every idle word muſt be accounted for; and hereby alſo an evil habit of lying may be acquired: and there is a lye which is in itſelf directly hurtful, and injurious; as is every falſe thing, ſaid with a deſign to deceive: and there are religious lyes, and liars; ſome practical ones, as thoſe who do not ſincerely worſhip God, and who are diſſolute in their lives, and their practice is not according to their profeſſion; and there are others who are guilty of doctrinal lyes, as antichriſt and his followers, who are given up to believe a lye; and ſuch who deny the deity, incarnation, Meſſiahſhip, work, office, grace, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice of Chriſt; and who profeſs themſelves to be chriſtians, and are not: the ſprings and cauſes of lying, are a corrupt heart and the luſts of it, which prompt unto it; ſuch as covetouſneſs, malice, and the fear of men; and alſo a tempting devil, the father of lyes; and who is a lying ſpirit, in the hearts and mouths of men: this is a vice which ought to be put away, eſpecially by profeſſors of religion; the effects of it are ſad; it brings infamy, diſgrace, and diſcredit, upon particular perſons; and has brought judgments upon nations, where it has in general obtained; and has been the cauſe of corporal diſeaſes and death; and even makes men liable to the lake of fire and brimſtone, which is the ſecond death: it is a ſin exceeding ſinful; it is a breach of God's law; an aping of the devil; it is againſt the light of nature, and is deſtructive of civil ſociety, and very abominable in the ſight of God: wherefore ſpeak every man truth with his neighbour; both with reſpect to civil and religious affairs, in common converſation, in trade and buſineſs, and in all things relating to God and men: for we are members one of another; as men, are all of one blood, deſcended from one man, and ſo are related one to another; and as in civil ſociety, belong to one body politick; and in a religious ſenſe, members of the ſame myſtical body, the church; of which Chriſt, who is the truth itſelf, is the head; and therefore ſhould not attempt to deceive one another by lying, ſince there is ſuch a near relation, and cloſe union of one to another.

Ver. 26. Be ye angry and ſin not, &c.] There is anger which is not ſinful; for anger is found in God himſelf, in Jeſus Chriſt, in the holy angels, and in God's people: and a man may be ſaid to be angry and not ſin, when his anger ariſes from a true zeal for God and religion; when it is kindled not againſt perſons, but ſins; when a man is diſpleaſed with his own ſins, and with the ſins of others; with vice and immorality of every kind; with idolatry and idolatrous worſhip, and with all falſe doctrine; and alſo when it is carried on to anſwer good ends, as the good of thoſe with whom we are angry, the glory of God, and the promoting of the intereſt of Chriſt: and there is an anger which is ſinful; as when it is without a cauſe; when it exceeds due bounds; when it is not directed to a good end; when it is productive of bad effects, either in words or actions; and when it is ſoon raiſed, or long continues: the Jews have a like diſtinction of anger; they ſay[e], "there is an "anger and an anger; there is an anger which is "bleſſed above and below, and it is called bleſſed, "as it is ſaid Gen. xiv. 19. and there is an anger "which is curſed above and below, as it is ſaid "Gen. iii. 14. and xlix. 7." And theſe two ſorts are compared to Ebal and Gerizzim, from the one of which proceeded bleſſing, and from the other curſing: anger for the moſt part is not only ſinful, but it tends to ſin, and iſſues in it; hence that ſaying of the Jews, לא תרתח ולא תחטי, be not angry, and thou wilt not ſin[f]: the ſpring of it is a corrupt heart, it is ſtirred up by ſatan, encouraged by pride, and increaſed by grievous words and reproachful language: let not the ſun go down upon your wrath; there is an alluſion to Deut. xxiv. 12, 13, 14, 15. it ſeems to be a proverbial expreſſion; and the deſign of it is to ſhew, that anger ſhould not be continued; that it ſhould not laſt at fartheſt, more than a day; that when the heat of the day is over, the heat of anger ſhould be over likewiſe; and that we ſhould not ſleep with it, leſt it ſhould be cheriſhed and increaſed upon our pillows; and beſides, the time of the going down of the ſun, is the time of evening prayer, which may be greatly interrupted and hindered by anger. R. Jonah[g] has an expreſſion or two like to this; "let not the indignation of any one abide upon thee; and let not a night ſleep with thee, and anger be againſt any one:" it ſhould be conſidered, that as God is ſlow to anger, ſo he does not retain it for ever; and that to retain anger, is to gratify the devil; wherefore it follows,

Ver. 27. Neither give place to the devil.] Or to the accuſer, or ſlanderer; that is, to any adverſary, that takes delight in ſlandering and reproaching the ſaints; give ſuch no room, nor reaſon, to calumniate the doctrine and ways of Chriſt, through an unbecoming converſation, by lying and ſinful anger, or by other means; or rather the devil, the great accuſer of the brethren is meant; and the Ethiopic verſion renders it, do not give way to ſatan; which is done, when men indulge any luſt or corruption; and when they eaſily fall in with his ſuggeſtions and temptations; when they are off of their watch and guard; and when they do not reſiſt, but quietly yield unto him.

Ver. 28. Let him that ſtole ſteal no more, &c.] Stealing, or theft, is a fraudulent taking away of another man's goods, without the knowledge and will of the owner, for the ſake of gain; to which evil may be reduced, not making good, or not performing payments, all unjuſt contracts, detention of wages, unlawful uſury, unfaithfulneſs in any thing committed to truſt, adviſing, encouraging, and receiving from thieves: theft is a very great evil; it is a breach of the common law of nature, to do to others, as we would be done by; it is contrary to particular laws of God, and is againſt common juſtice, and ought not to be continued in, and is puniſhable by God and man; it ſprings from a corrupt heart, and often ariſes from poverty, idleneſs, ſloth, covetouſneſs, and prodigality: the remedy againſt it follows, but rather let him labour, working with his hands the thing which is good; labouring with diligence and induſtry, at any manufacture, trade, or buſineſs, which is honeſt, lawful, and of good report, is a proper antidote againſt theft; and ought to be preferred to ſuch a ſcandalous way of living, and to be conſtantly attended to: and that for this end among others, that he may have to give to him that needeth; and not take away another man's property; needy perſons are the objects of charity; and what is given to them, ſhould be a man's own; and what a man gets by his hand labour, he ſhould not prodigally ſpend, or covetouſly lay up, but ſhould chearfully diſtribute it to indigent perſons.

Ver. 29. Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, &c.] As unſavoury ſpeech, fooliſh talking, light and frothy language, that which is filthy, unprofitable, noxious, and nauſeous, and all that is ſinful; ſuch as prophane oaths, curſes, and imprecations, unchaſte words, angry ones, proud, haughty, and arrogant expreſſions, lyes, perjury, &c. which may be called corrupt, becauſe ſuch communication ſprings from a corrupt heart; is an evidence of the corruption of it; the ſubject matter of it is corrupt; and it conveys corruption to others, it corrupts good manners; and is the cauſe of mens going down to the pit of corruption: wherefore a reſtraint ſhould be laid upon the lips of men; men have not a right to ſay what they pleaſe; good men will be cautious what they ſay, otherwiſe their religion is in vain; and conſcious of their own weakneſs, they will pray to God to ſet a watch before their mouth, and to keep the door of their lips, and not ſuffer any thing to come out, but that which is good for the uſe of edifying; or for edification, as the Syriac verſion renders it; the Arabic verſion reads, for the edification of all; that is, that hear; and the Vulgate Latin verſion and Claromontane exemplar, for the edification of faith; for the building up of ſaints on their moſt holy faith, and for the encouragement and increaſe of the grace of faith: in the Greek text it is literally, for the edification of uſe; for uſeful edification, or what is uſeful for edification; and is ſuited to the preſent want or opportunity, as the word is by ſome rendered: and that muſt be good, which anſwers ſuch an end; meaning not that the language ſhould be formally and grammatically good, though to ſpeak with propriety is uſeful and ſerviceable, and tends the more to inſtruction and edification; but that which is materially good, or the ſubject of it is good; that which is true, pure, pleaſant, and profitable: that it may miniſter grace unto the hearers; may be grateful and acceptable to them, or may miniſter the grace of God to them; that is, the doctrine of grace, the Goſpel of the grace of God; and be a means of conveying the principle of grace into the hearts of the hearers, and of drawing it forth into exerciſe where it is; and ſuch ſpeech or communication which ſprings from a gracious heart, and from a principle of grace in the heart, and is upon the ſubject of the grace of God, is moſt likely to be thus uſeful and edifying: agreeable to all this, are ſome ſayings of the Jews[h]; "ſays R. Joſhua ben Levi, for ever let not a man ſuffer any thing, מגונה, that is filthy, or unſeemly, to proceed out of his mouth; ſays R. Iſhmael, for ever let a man diſcourſe, בלשון נקייה, in a pure language;" not corrupt.

Ver. 30. And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, &c.] Not a believer's own ſpirit, ſanctified by the Holy Ghoſt, which is grieved by ſin; nor the ſpirit of a good man, that hears our words and ſees our actions, and is diſpleaſed and troubled at them; but the third perſon in the Trinity: and this is ſaid of him by an anthropopathy, and ſuppoſes ſomething done that is offenſive to him; and he may be grieved, not only by unconverted perſons, by their ſtubborn reſiſtance and oppoſition to the Goſpel, and means of grace, and by their contempt of his perſon, office, and grace, but by believers themſelves, and who are here ſpoken to; and which may be done both by their words, lying, angry, and corrupt ones, before cautioned againſt, ver. 25, 26, 29. and by their actions, their behaviour towards God, their converſation in the world, and by their carriage to one another, which is ſuggeſted in the following verſe: alſo he may be grieved by their thoughts, their vain and ſinful thoughts, and that they are no better employed; and eſpecially when they entertain any undervaluing ones of Jeſus Chriſt, whoſe glorifier he is; and by the unbelief of their hearts, and by their unmindfulneſs of the things of the Spirit; and when they diſregard the rules, dictates, and advice of the Spirit, and make no uſe of him: and his being grieved appears, by his departure from them; which is to be perceived, by the darkneſs of their ſouls, the prevailings of corruption, the weakneſs of grace, and their backwardneſs to duty: and now there are many reaſons why he ſhould not be grieved; as becauſe he is God, and the author of the new birth, the implanter and applier of all grace, and the finiſher of it; becauſe he is the ſaints comforter, their advocate, helper, and ſtrengthner; and their conſtant companion, who dwells in them, and will remain in them, until death: and it follows, whereby ye are ſealed unto the day of redemption; of the ſealing work of the Spirit, ſee the note on ch. i. 13. By the day of redemption may be meant, either the day of death, when the ſaints have a deliverance from the incumbrance of the body; from their preſent ſtate of exile and baniſhment; from the body of ſin and death; from all ſorrows and afflictions; from the reproaches and perſecutions of men; from the temptations of ſatan; from doubts, fears, and unbelief; and from all fear of death, corporal, ſpiritual, and eternal: or the day of the reſurrection, when the body will be redeemed from mortality, corruption, weakneſs and diſhonour; when it will be refined and ſpiritualized, ſo that it will not ſtand in need of natural ſuſtenance; will be endowed with great agility, like that of ſpirits; and will be ſubject to the ſoul, or ſpirit, and will be ſuited to ſpiritual objects; to which may be added, the day of judgment, Luke xxi. 28. when Chriſt ſhall appear in glory, and his ſaints with him, and he will put them ſoul and body, into the poſſeſſion of everlaſting happineſs; which will conſiſt in the viſion of Chriſt, in conformity to him, and in that happy company and converſation that will then be enjoyed, and that delightful employment they will be taken up in: and now the ſaints being ſealed up by the Spirit unto this time, ſhews the perpetual indwelling of the Spirit in them; and that it will continue even after death, who will give them confidence at the day of judgment; and that it is the Spirit which works up the ſaints, and makes them meet for glory; and gives them the aſſurance of it, and therefore ſhould not be grieved.

[g] Apud Capell. in Matt. v. 23.

[h] T. Bab. Peſachim, fol. 3. 1.

Ver. 31. Let all bitterneſs, &c.] Theſe words are a dehortation from ſeveral vices, good men are liable to, by which the Spirit of God is grieved: bitterneſs ſometimes deſigns the corruption of nature, which is the gall of bitterneſs, and bond of iniquity; and ſometimes actual ſins and tranſgreſſions, even thoſe of God's own people, which are evil and bitter things; and ſometimes heretical doctrines, which are roots of bitterneſs; and ſometimes ſinful words ſpoken by the ſaints, one againſt another; and here perhaps it ſignifies, the firſt offence taken in the mind, againſt any perſon, upon any account, which ſhould at once be put away, and not encouraged: and wrath; heat of ſpirit, which follows upon bitterneſs, or upon the ſpirit being embittered and offended; ſee Ezek. iii. 14. And anger; a ſinful one cautioned againſt before, ver. 26. And clamour and evil ſpeaking; ſuch as brawlings, contentions, contumelies, reproaches, ſlanders, &c. ariſing from an imbittered, wrathful, and angry diſpoſition: theſe ſhould all be put away from you, with all malice; being the deeds of the old man, unbecoming ſuch as are born again, and grieving to the Spirit of God.

Ver. 32. And be ye kind one to another, &c.] Good, affable, courteous; which appears in looks, words, and actions; by looking pleaſantly on each other, ſpeaking kindly to one another, and mutually doing every good office that lies in their way, and in their power: tender hearted; which is oppoſed to a being hard hearted to them that are in diſtreſs, and cloſe handed to the needy; to cruelty and ſeverity to ſuch who are ſubject to them, or have injured them; and to a rigid and cenſorious ſpirit to them that are fallen: forgiving one another, even as God for Chriſt's ſake hath forgiven you; whatever offences are given, or injuries done by the ſaints one to another, and ſo far as they are committed againſt them, they ſhould forgive, and ſhould pray to God for one another, that he would manifeſt his forgiveneſs of them, as committed againſt him; and this ſhould be done in like manner, as God forgives in Chriſt, and for his ſake; that is, fully and freely, and from their hearts; and ſo as to forget the offences, and not to upbraid them with them hereafter; yea, they ſhould forgive them before they repent, and without aſking for it, and that for Chriſt's ſake, and becauſe they are members of his: the Complutenſian edition reads, even as Chriſt hath forgiven us; the Arabic verſion alſo reads us, and ſo ſome copies: the words may be rendered, giving freely to one another, even as God in Chriſt has given freely to you; ſaints ſhould give freely to one another, for outward ſupport, where it is needful; and ſhould impart ſpiritual gifts and experience for inward comfort, where it is wanted, and as they have ability; and that from this conſideration, that all they have, whether in temporals or ſpirituals, is freely given by God in Chriſt, and for his ſake; with whom he freely gives them all things; in whom he has given them grace, and bleſſed them with all ſpiritual bleſſings; as peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, and eternal life.

CHAP. V.

THE Apoſtle in this chapter, goes on with his exhortations to the duties of religion; and ſuch in general, as relate to purity of life, and againſt uncleanneſs; and particularly treats of the duties of married perſons. And whereas in the latter part of the preceding chapter, he had exhorted to kindneſs and tenderneſs, and which he enforced by the example of God himſelf, he here repeats and urges it; and to it adds the example of Chriſt in loving his people, and giving himſelf for them a propitiatory ſacrifice, acceptable to God, ver. 1, 2. then follows a dehortation from ſeveral vices of the impure kind, ſome as being filthy actions, and unbecoming ſaints, and not to be named by them, and much leſs done, ver. 3. others, and ſuch as are vices of the tongue, as being inconvenient, and to which thankſgiving is preferred, ver. 4. and the former eſpecially, as excluding from having any part or portion in the kingdom of God and Chriſt, ver. 5. and all of them, as bringing the wrath of God upon men, ver. 6. wherefore profeſſors of religion ſhould avoid ſuch ſins, and not join with the children of diſobedience in the commiſſion of them, ver. 7. to which exhortation they ſhould the rather give heed, from the conſideration of their preſent ſtate, illuſtrated by their former one; who were once darkneſs, but now light, and therefore ſhould walk as enlightened perſons, ver. 8. and as having the Spirit of God, which is known by its fruits, ver. 9. ſtudying to know, approve of, and do that which is acceptable to God, ver. 10. and on the contrary, ſhould have no ſociety and communion with men in the commiſſion of ſins, the works of darkneſs, but ſhould reprove them for them, ver. 11. ſince the things done by them were ſuch, that it was a ſhame to relate them, and much more to commit them, ver. 12. and the rather this was incumbent upon them, ſince it was agreeable to their character, as being made light in the Lord; ſeeing it is the property of light, to make manifeſt and detect what is done in the dark, ver. 13. which is confirmed by a paſſage of ſcripture pertinently produced, to ſtir up drouſy and lifeleſs profeſſors, to the diſcharge of their duty, ver. 14. and from hence the Apoſtle enforces a wiſe and circumſpect walk and converſation, one part of which lies in redeeming time; and which ſhould be done for this reaſon, becauſe the preſent days were evil ones, ver. 15, 16. and that they might avoid a fooliſh walk, and order their converſation wiſely and aright, he ſuggeſts it would be proper to learn what was the will of the Lord, which is the rule of a chriſtian's walk and converſation, ver. 17. and whereas drunkenneſs is oftentimes the cauſe of all the above-mentioned vices, the Apoſtle cautions againſt that, and on the contrary adviſes them to be concerned for a larger meaſure of the Spirit of God; that under his influence they might ſing pſalms, hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs, in a melodious manner, and heartily to the Lord; and ſo expreſs their thankfulneſs to him, for all mercies from him; and not abuſe their mercies and themſelves, and ſpend their time in ſinging lewd and prophane ſongs, as drunkards often do, ver. 18, 19, 20. and hence he paſſes to the ſpecial duties of wives and huſbands, to which he premiſes a general exhortation to ſubmiſſion to one another, ver. 21. and begins with the ſubjection of wives to their huſbands, this being the will of the Lord, ver. 22. and beſides, the relation which the wife ſtands in to her huſband, being her head, requires it; and which is illuſtrated, by Chriſt being the head and ſaviour of his body, the church, ver. 23. and which is further urged and enforced, by the inſtance and example of the church's ſubjection to Chriſt, ver. 24. and next the Apoſtle exhorts huſbands to love their wives, in imitation of Chriſt, who has loved his church; and as an inſtance of it, has given himſelf to death for her; than which, there cannot be a greater inſtance of love, ver. 25. the ends of which were, the ſanctification and cleanſing of the church with his blood, by means of water and the word; and the preſentation of her to himſelf, all glorious and beautiful, ver. 26, 27. and then another argument is uſed, to engage the affections of huſbands to their wives, they being their own bodies; ſo that loving them, is loving themſelves, ver. 28. nor was it ever known, and it would be unnatural, for a man to hate his own fleſh, but on the contrary, he nouriſhes and cheriſhes it; and therefore ſeeing the wife is a man's own fleſh, he ought not to hate her, but to nouriſh and cheriſh her; and this is alſo enforced, by the example of Chriſt, who does not hate his church, but nouriſhes and cheriſhes her, ver. 29. the reaſon of which is, becauſe the ſaints which make up the church, are members of him, one fleſh and blood with him, ver. 30. which is the caſe of a man and his wife; and hence it is, that according to the original law of marriage, a man was to leave father and mother, and cleave to his wife, ver. 31. the whole of which is a myſtery, and typical of the marriage relation and union between Chriſt and his church, ver. 32. and the chapter is cloſed with a recapitulation of the mutual duties of huſband and wife, love in the one, and reverence in the other, ver. 33.

Ver. 1. Be ye therefore followers of God, &c.] Not in his works of infinite wiſdom and almighty power, which is impoſſible; but in acts of righteouſneſs and holineſs, and particularly in acts of mercy, goodneſs, and beneficence; as in forgiving injuries and offences, and in freely diſtributing to the neceſſities of the ſaints; as the connexion of the words with the preceding chapter, and the inſtance and example in the following verſe ſhow: and this ſhould be done by the ſaints, as dear children; and becauſe they are ſuch, by adopting grace; being predeſtinated unto the adoption of children, in the eternal purpoſe of God, and taken into that relation in the covenant of grace; and which is declared and made manifeſt in regeneration, and by faith in Chriſt Jeſus: and they are dear, or beloved children, being loved with an everlaſting and unchangeable love, and which is the ſpring and ſource of their adoption; and their being dear to him is ſeen, by what he is unto them, their covenant God and Father; and by what he has done for them, in giving his Son to them, and for them; as well as in chuſing, calling, and quickning them by his grace; and by the account he makes of them, as his jewels, his peculiar treaſure, and the apple of his eye; and by the pity and compaſſion he has for them, and the care he takes of them; and therefore it becomes them to imitate him; for who ſhould they imitate and follow after, but their Father, and eſpecially when they are ſo dear unto him?

Ver. 2. And walk in love, &c.] To God; to which the ſaints are obliged, not only by the law of God, which requires it, but by the goodneſs of God, and the diſcoveries of his love to them; and which ſhows itſelf, in fearing to offend him, in a conformity to his will, in making his glory the chief end of all actions, and in loving all that belong to him: and alſo the ſaints ſhould walk in love to Chriſt; who is to be loved fervently, conſtantly, in ſincerity, with all the heart, and above all creatures and things; becauſe of the lovelineſs of his perſon, the love he bears to them, and the things he has done for them, and the relations he ſtands in to them; and which is manifeſted, in keeping his commands, in delighting in his preſence, and in a concern at his abſence: and alſo they ſhould walk in love to one another, which is chiefly deſigned; which is Chriſt's new commandment, and is an evidence of regeneration; and without which, a profeſſion of religion is in vain: and to walk in love, is not merely to talk of it, but to exerciſe it; and to do all that is done for God, and Chriſt, and the ſaints, from a principle of love; and to advance, increaſe, and abound in it, and to go on and continue therein: the example to be copied after, and which carries in it an argument engaging to it is, as Chriſt alſo hath loved us; with a love exceeding great and ſtrong, which is wonderful, unconceivable, and unparalleled; and even as the Father has loved him; with a love that is free and ſovereign, unchangeable and everlaſting, of which he has given many inſtances; and a principal one is hereafter mentioned: the as here is a note of ſimilitude, not of equality; for it cannot be thought that the ſaints ſhould love God, or Chriſt, or one another, with a love equal to Chriſt's love to them, but only that theirs ſhould bear ſome likeneſs to his: the Alexandrian copy and Ethiopic verſion, inſtead of us, read you: and hath given himſelf for us; not the world, and the things of it, which are his; not men, nor angels, nor animals, but himſelf; he gave away his time, ſervice, and ſtrength; his name, fame, and reputation; all the comforts of life, and life itſelf; his whole human nature, ſoul and body, and that as in union with his divine perſon; and that not only for the good of his people, but in their room and ſtead; not for angels, nor for all men, but for his choſen ones, the church, his ſheep, his people, and when they were ſinners; in the following manner, and for the ſaid purpoſe: an offering and a ſacrifice to God, for a ſweet ſmelling ſavour; Chriſt was both prieſt and ſacrifice; he offered up himſelf a propitiatory ſacrifice for the ſins of his people, to expiate them, and make reconciliation and ſatiſfaction for them; and this he offered up to God, againſt whom they had ſinned, and whoſe juſtice muſt be ſatiſfied, who called him to this work, and engaged him in it; and which was well pleaſing to him, he ſmelled a ſweet ſavour of reſt in it, it being an unblemiſhed ſacrifice, and voluntarily offered up; and was compleat, full, and adequate to the demands of his juſtice; by it ſin was put away, finiſhed, and made an end of, and his people perfected for ever; ſee Gen. viii. 20, 21.

Ver. 3. But fornication, and all uncleanneſs, or covetouſneſs, &c.] The Apoſtle proceeds to dehort from ſeveral vices, which are unbecoming the dear children and followers of God; and which the love of Chriſt ſhould conſtrain them to avoid: the firſt of theſe, which is ſimple fornication, is the ſin which is committed between ſingle or unmarried perſons; and is contrary to the law of God, is a work of the fleſh, and is againſt a man's own body; it renders perſons unfit for church communion, brings many temporal calamities upon them, and expoſes them to divine wrath, and excludes from the kingdom of heaven, without repentance; and the reaſon why it is ſo often taken notice of is, becauſe it was very frequent among the Gentiles, and not thought criminal: all uncleanneſs takes in adultery, inceſt, ſodomy, and every unnatural luſt; and covetouſneſs ſeems not ſo much to deſign that ſin which is commonly ſo called, namely, an immoderate deſire after worldly things, as a greedy and inſatiable appetite after the above luſts: let it not be once named among you, as becometh ſaints; that is, neither one nor other of them; the ſenſe is, that they ſhould not be committed; ſo that there might be no occaſion to ſpeak of them, even tho' with abhorrence, as if there were no ſuch vices in being; and much leſs ſhould they be named with pleaſure, and pleaded for: for thus it becomes ſuch who are ſet apart by God the Father, whoſe ſins are expiated by the blood of Chriſt, and whoſe hearts are ſanctified by the Spirit of God; who profeſs the Goſpel of Chriſt, and have a place and a name in God's houſe, better than that of ſons and daughters.

Ver. 4. Neither filthineſs, nor fooliſh talking, nor jeſting, &c.] The former of theſe may include all filthy geſtures and behaviour, every indecent habit and attire, and all actions which have a tendency to excite luſt; and alſo all impure words, theſe diſcover an impure heart, and are the means of corrupting mens minds and manners; filthy ſpeaking, is a verbal commiſſion of the things that are ſpoken of; and it may include all impure ſongs and books, and the reading or hearing of them; this is what the Jews call, נבול פה, filthineſs of the mouth, obſcene words; which they ſay they don't uſe on feaſt-days, as the Gentiles do [1]: fooliſh talking does not ſo much deſign every imprudent thing that is ſaid, as that which is wicked, corrupt, unſavoury, light, vain, idle, and unprofitable; and takes in all fabulous ſtories, and mimicking of fools in words and geſtures: and jeſting, when it is with wantonneſs, and excites unto it, and is inconſiſtent with truth, and when the ſcriptures are abuſed by it, and not our neighbour's edification, but hurt is promoted by it, ought not to be uſed: which are not convenient; are diſagreeable to the will of God, and unſuitable to the characters of the ſaints, and are very unbecoming them to practiſe: but rather giving of thanks; inſtead of theſe, as the Syriac verſion renders it; it is much more ſuitable and becoming, to give thanks to God, for temporal and ſpiritual mercies, and to ſpeak thoſe things which are grateful to good men; this is to uſe the tongue to much better purpoſe, than in an obſcene, fooliſh, or jocoſe way: one of Stephens's copies read, but only giving of thanks.

Ver. 5. For this ye know, &c.] Or know ye this, as the Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, and the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read: that no whoremonger, nor unclean perſon; any one that is guilty of fornication, adultery, inceſt, &c. Nor covetous man, who is an idolater; as every man is, that indulges his luſts, the idols of his own heart; and who ſerves divers luſts and pleaſures, and gives up himſelf to work all uncleanneſs with greedineſs; never having his fill of ſin, but is ever craving and coveting it; as well as he who is immoderately deſirous of worldly things: the covetous man may be called an idolater, becauſe the idolater and he worſhip the ſame in ſubſtance, gold and ſilver, and braſs, or what is made of them; the covetous man admires his gold, lays it up, and will not make uſe of it, as if it was ſomething ſacred; and through his over love to mammon, whom he ſerves, he neglects the worſhip of God, and the good of his own ſoul, and puts his truſt and confidence in his riches: now no ſuch perſon hath inheritance in the kingdom of Chriſt, and of God; meaning either a Goſpel church-ſtate, in which perſons of ſuch characters, and living in ſuch ſins, ought not to be; or elſe the kingdom of heaven and of glory, which may be called the kingdom of Chriſt, becauſe it is in his hands, for his people; and it is his righteouſneſs that gives a title to it, and his Spirit and grace which make meet for it; and it is by his power ſaints are preſerved unto it; and he will put them into the poſſeſſion of it; and which will greatly conſiſt in the enjoyment of him: and this is alſo the kingdom of God, either of Chriſt who is God, or of God the Father; it being of his preparing and giving, and which he calls unto, and makes meet for; and this may be ſaid to be an inheritance, becauſe it is peculiar to children, the bequeſt of their heavenly Father, and is not purchaſed or acquired by them, but comes to them from the free donation of God, through the death of Chriſt; and to have an inheritance in it, is to have a right unto it, a meetneſs for it, and to be poſſeſſed of it: now the meaning of theſe words is, not that all who have been guilty of theſe ſins, ſhall be excluded the kingdom of God, but all ſuch who live and die in them, without the grace of God, and righteouſneſs of Chriſt.

Ver. 6. Let no man deceive you with vain words, &c.] With vain philoſophy, vain babblings, with fooliſh and filthy talking; ſuggeſting that theſe were not ſinful the Apoſtle had condemned; or that they were ſmall ſins, the frailties of human life; and that God would take no notice of them, and they might continue in them with impunity: ſuch deceivers there were, doctrinal and practical ones; who lay in wait to deceive men with ſuch vain pretences; and there was danger of being carried away with their error; for the heart is deceitful and deſperately wicked, and is eaſily taken in ſuch ſnares: wherefore the Apoſtle cautions againſt ſuch deceptions, adding for becauſe of theſe things; fornication, uncleanneſs, covetouſneſs, filthineſs, fooliſh talking, and jeſting: the wrath of God cometh upon the children of diſobedience; in temporal judgments, and in eternal ruin; there have been inſtances of it; it is uſually the caſe, and always if grace prevents not; this wrath comes down from above, and ſometimes ſuddenly, with great force and power, like a mighty flood; and there's no ſtanding up under it, and againſt it; and though it falls upon the children of diſobedience, ſuch as are diſobedient both to law and Goſpel, are unbelievers in Chriſt, and unperſuadable by his miniſters, are ſtubborn, obſtinate, and rebellious; yet it ſhows how much theſe things are diſpleaſing to God, and reſented by him, and therefore ſhould be avoided by his people; and the conſideration of their not being appointed to this wrath, though deſerving of it as others, and of their deliverance from it by Chriſt, ſhould engage them the more to abſtain from theſe ſins.

Ver. 7. Be not ye therefore partakers with them.] In their ſins, and acts of diſobedience; by keeping needleſs company with them; by abetting and encouraging ſinful practices; by conniving at them, and not reproving for them; or by committing the ſame things.

Ver. 8. For ye were ſometimes darkneſs, &c.] Not only dark, but darkneſs itſelf; exceeding blind, dark, and ignorant, reſpecting ſpiritual things; ſo the Gentiles were wont to be called by the Jews, חושך, darkneſs[k] itſelf; of this darkneſs, ſee the note on ch. iv. 18. But now are ye light in the Lord; either in, or by the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the light of men, from whom all ſpiritual light comes; or by the Lord the Spirit, by whom the eyes of their underſtandings were enlightened, to ſee the exceeding ſinfulneſs of ſin, in heart and life; the inſufficiency of their own righteouſneſs and moral virtues, to juſtify them before God; and the true and right way of righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation by Chriſt; and to have ſome light into the ſeveral doctrines of the Goſpel, and even a glimpſe of the inviſible glories and realities of another world: and this light is ſo great, that they are not only ſaid to be enlightened, but to be light itſelf; and this they have not of, and from themſelves, but the Lord; and therefore ſhould walk as children of light; not in ſins, which are works of darkneſs, but in faith, truth, and holineſs.

Ver. 9. For the fruit of the Spirit, &c.] Either of the ſpirit of man, as renewed, or rather of the Spirit of God; the alluſion is to fruits of trees: the believer is a tree of righteouſneſs; Chriſt is his root; the Spirit is the ſap, which ſupports and nouriſhes; and good works under the influence of his grace, are the fruit: the Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, and the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read, the fruit of light; which agrees with the preceding words: and the genuine fruit of internal grace, or light, is in all goodneſs, and righteouſneſs, and truth; the fruit of goodneſs, lies in ſympathizing with perſons in diſtreſs; in aſſiſting ſuch according to the abilities men have; in a readineſs to forgive offences and injuries; and in uſing meekneſs and candour in admoniſhing others: righteouſneſs lies in living in obedience to the law of God; in attending the worſhip and ſervice of him; and in diſcharging our duty to our fellow creatures; and this as goodneſs, is very imperfect, and not to be boaſted of, or truſted to; nor is ſalvation to be expected from it: truth is oppoſed to lying, to hypocriſy, to error and falſhood; and where the Spirit of God, and the work of grace are, there will be more or leſs an appearance of theſe fruits.

Ver. 10. Proving what is acceptable unto the Lord.] There are many things that are acceptable to God, as the perſon of Chriſt, his righteouſneſs, ſacrifice, ſufferings, death, and mediation; the perſons of his people, their ſervices, ſufferings, ſacrifices of prayer, and praiſe to him, and of bounty and liberality to the poor; their graces, and the exerciſe of them; and the actions of their lives and converſations, when they are becoming the Goſpel, are according to the will of God, and are done in faith, and are directed to his glory: and theſe things which are acceptable to God, as all the truths of the Goſpel, and duties of religion are, ſhould be proved, or tried by men; and in order to the trial of ſpiritual things, it is neceſſary that the mind be renewed, the underſtanding be enlightened, the ſpiritual ſenſes be in exerciſe, and all be under the influence and directions of the Spirit of God: and the trial is to be made, not according to human reaſon, which is corrupt and fallible, and beſides, there are ſome things in revelation above it; but according to the ſcriptures, which are the word of God, and the rule of faith and practice; and whither the Prophets, Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, always ſent men for the trial of divine things; and things being here tried, and found to be right, ſhould be approved of, valued, and eſteemed, cleaved to and held faſt.

Ver. 11. And have no fellowſhip with the unfruitful works of darkneſs, &c.] It is not ſaid with the workers of darkneſs, or with the men of the world, who are in darkneſs, and are darkneſs itſelf; to have fellowſhip with them in a civil way, or to dwell among them, is not prohibited; it is allowed of, and countenanced by the greateſt examples; and eſpecially it is lawful and right, when there is any proſpect of doing good to the ſouls of men; and even when natural right, relation, and neceſſity require it; and indeed, the contrary is impracticable: converſation with them in things ſinful and ſuperſtitious, ſhould be abſtained from; and when it tends to draw off the ſoul from Chriſt and his intereſt, and is infectious; and when weak ones are offended, and ſinners are hereby hardened and confirmed in ſin; and the name of God is blaſphemed, and the Goſpel is evil ſpoken of: but fellowſhip is not to be maintained with the works of darkneſs; which are ſins, ſo called, becauſe they are oppoſite to light; to the light of nature, to the light of the divine word, both law and Goſpel, to the light of grace, to God the fountain of light, and to Chriſt the light of the world; and becauſe the ſource and ſpring of them, are the original darkneſs of the mind, and ſatan the prince of darkneſs; and becauſe they are generally committed in the dark; and becauſe the effect and conſequence of them is utter darkneſs, and blackneſs of darkneſs: and theſe are unfruitful; they are of no profit and advantage, they bring forth no fruit, unleſs it be guilt, fear, ſhame, corruption, and death; wherefore no fellowſhip ſhould be had with them, by committing the ſame, by aſſiſting in them, by conſenting to them, by approving of them, by receiving any worldly advantage from them, and by winking and conniving at them: it is contrary to the character of ſaints, to have fellowſhip with ſuch, as the Apoſtle ſays, 2 Cor. vi. 14. where he gives the myſtical explanation of the law, in Deut. xxii. 10. agreeable to which, and to the paſſage here, is the ſenſe of a Jewiſh commentator [l]; who upon it obſerves, that that law "intimates, that a righteous man, "שלא ישתתף ſhould have no fellowſhip with a "wicked man;" this is to be unequally yoked, ſignified by the ox and the aſs plowing together: but rather reprove them; both by words and by deeds, by an agreeable life and converſation, which laſt ſeems to be the deſign of the Apoſtle here; becauſe it is not a brother, but ſuch who are in darkneſs, and live in works of darkneſs; yea, not ſinners, but ſins are to be reproved, which can be done no other way; nor are all ſaints proper to reprove verbally, nor are they qualified for it; but all ſhould, and may by facts; and the light diſcovers darkneſs, by its own ſplendor; and this appears, from the Apoſtle's reaſoning in the next words.

[k] Tzeror Hammor, fol. 1, 2.

Ver. 12. For it is a ſhame even to ſpeak of thoſe things, &c.] This is a reaſon, why perſons ſhould walk as children of light; why they ſhould prove what is acceptable to God; why they ſhould have no fellowſhip with the unfruitful works of darkneſs; why the Apoſtle exhorts to reprove them, and yet does not expreſs what they are; and why they ſhould be reproved rather by deeds, than by words: and he tacitly intimates, that if it is a ſhame to ſpeak of thoſe ſins which are done of them in ſecret, it is much more ſhameful to commit them; the perſons the Apoſtle refers to, are the unconverted Gentiles in general; ſuch who have no inheritance in the kingdom of God, who deceive men with vain words, who are children of diſobedience, who are in darkneſs, and deſtitute of the Spirit; and it may be that reſpect may be had to the followers of Simon Magus, the Gnoſticks, and ſuch like impure profeſſors, by whom the vileſt things were done in ſecret; for ſins, works of darkneſs, will not bear the light; there is a conſciouſneſs in men of the evil of ſin, unleſs paſt feeling, and therefore they don't care that others ſhould know their crimes; and beſides, there is an imaginary pleaſure in committing ſin ſecretly; but then though theſe things are ſecret to men, they are not to God; nor will they always remain ſecrets, they will be brought to light, and therefore no fellowſhip ſhould be had with them; and eſpecially when they are of ſuch a ſcandalous nature, that it is a ſhame to mention the very names of them.

Ver. 13. But all things that are reproved, &c.] As all ſins ſhould be, by the miniſters of the Goſpel, and by other ſaints, and will be by God; either by his Spirit convincing of them, or by his judgments, and the letting out of his wrath and fury, either here or hereafter, for the puniſhment of them: are made manifeſt by the light; either by the ſaints, who are made light in the Lord, and detect and reprove the ſins of others; or by the word of the Lord, which diſcovers the heinouſneſs of ſins; or by Chriſt the light of the world, who as judge will bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs; or by the omniſcience of God, to whom darkneſs and light are both alike: for whatſoever doth make manifeſt, is light; this is true in things natural and ſpiritual, whether of the ſun in the firmament, or of Chriſt the ſun of righteouſneſs; or of the divine word, or of good men.

Ver. 14. Wherefore he ſaith, &c.] Either the man that is light in the Lord, who reproves the unfruitful works of darkneſs; or elſe the Holy Ghoſt by Paul, who here ſpeaks after the manner of the Prophets; or God, or the Spirit, or the ſcripture; ſee James iv. 6. but where is it ſaid? ſome think the Apoſtle refers to Iſa. ix. 2. others to Iſa. xxvi. 19. others to Iſa. lx. 1. ſome are of opinion the words are cited out of an Apocryphal book of Jeremy, or from ſome writing now loſt; and ſome have thought them to be a ſaying of Chriſt, that was freſh in memory: it may not be improper to obſerve what Maimonides ſays [m], that "the blowing of the trumpet in the beginning of the year, "had an intimation in it, as if it was ſaid, "עורי ישינים, awake ye that ſleep, from your "ſleep, and ye that ſlumber rouſe up from your "ſlumber, and ſearch into your actions, and return by repentance, and remember your creator;" whether any reference may be had to this, may be conſidered: the words are ſpoken not to unregenerate men, for though they are aſleep, and dead in ſin, and need awaking out of ſleep, and raiſing from the dead, yet they are never called upon to awake and ariſe of themſelves; ſuch a ſenſe would countenance the doctrine of man's free-will and power, againſt the preventing and efficacious grace of God; but to regenerate perſons, profeſſors of religion, to whom the epiſtle in general was written; and who are ſpoken to, and exhorted in the context: awake thou that ſleepeſt; the children of God are ſometimes aſleep, and need awaking; of the nature, cauſes, and ill conſequences of ſuch ſleeping, and of the methods by which they are ſometimes awaked out of it; ſee the note on Rom. xiii. 11. And ariſe from the dead; living ſaints are ſometimes among dead ſinners, and it becomes them to ariſe from among them, and quit their company, which is oftentimes the occaſion of their ſleepineſs: beſides, the company of dead ſinners is infectious and dangerous; it is a means of hardening in ſin, and of grieving of the people of God, who obſerve it; and by abſtaining from their company, a teſtimony is bore againſt ſin, and conviction is ſtruck into the minds of ſinners themſelves; to which add, that ſo to do, is well pleaſing to God, who promiſes to receive ſuch who come out from among them, and ſeparate themſelves from them: and it follows here as an encouragement, and Chriſt ſhall give thee light; for ſuch who are made light in the Lord, ſtand in need of more light; and by keeping cloſe to the word, ways, ordinances, and people of Chriſt, they may expect more light from Chriſt: they need freſh light into pardoning grace and mercy, through the blood of Chriſt; they want more to direct them in the way they ſhould go; and they are often without the light of God's countenance; and they may hope for light from Chriſt, ſince it is ſown in him, and promiſed through him; and he is given to be a light unto them, and he is the giver of it himſelf.

Ver. 15. See then that ye walk circumſpectly, &c.] The Alexandrian copy, and the Vulgate Latin verſion read, ſee then, brethren; it being an exhortation to the ſaints at Epheſus, upon the foregoing diſcourſe and citation, to take heed to their walk: the believer's walk is both inward and outward; his inward walk is by faith on Chriſt; his outward walk is his converſation among men: this ſuppoſes life; requires ſtrength and prudence; denotes continuance and progreſſion; with patience and courage: this walk ſhould be ſeen to, and watched over; a man ſhould ſee to it that he does walk, and to the way in which he walks, and how he walks; that he walks circumſpectly, with his eyes about him; that he walks with diligence, caution, accuracy, and exactneſs, to the uttermoſt of his ſtrength and power; and with wiſdom and prudence, looking well to his going: not as fools, but as wiſe; ſuch walk like fools, whoſe eyes are not upon their ways; who walk in their own ways, which are crooked, and ways of darkneſs, and lead to deſtruction; who walk after the fleſh, and naked, without the garments of a holy life and converſation; and with lamps, but no oil in them: and ſuch walk as wiſe men, who walk according to the rule of God's word, make Chriſt their pattern, have the Spirit for their guide, and walk as becomes the Goſpel of Chriſt; inoffenſively to all men, in wiſdom towards them that are without, and in love to them that are within; and as pilgrims and ſtrangers in this world, looking for a better country; and ſo as to promote the glory of God, and the good of ſouls.

Ver. 16. Redeeming the time, &c.] Or buying time; a like expreſſion is uſed in Dan. ii. 8. which we render, gain time; but in the Chaldee text it is, buy time; and ſo Jacchiades a Jewiſh commentator on the place renders it, העת הזאת אתם נמכרים, ye buy this opportunity; and the Septuagint verſion uſes the ſame phraſe the Apoſtle does here; but there it ſeems to ſignify a ſtudy to prolong time, to put off the buſineſs to another ſeaſon; but here taking time for a ſpace of time, it denotes a careful and diligent uſe of it, an improvement of it, to the beſt advantage; and ſhows that it is valuable and precious, and is not to be trifled with, and ſquandered away, and be loſt, as it may be; for it can neither be re-called nor prolonged: and taking it for an opportunity of doing good to ourſelves or others, it ſignifies that no opportunity of diſcharging our duty to God and man, of attending on the word and ordinances of the Goſpel, and to the private and publick exerciſes of religion, of gaining advantage to our own ſouls, or of gaining the ſouls of others, and of doing good either to the bodies or ſouls of men, ſhould be neglected; but even all riſques ſhould be run, and means uſed to enjoy it: in the Syriac and Chaldee languages, זבנא, time, comes from זְבַן, to redeem: the reaſon the Apoſtle gives for the redemption of time is, becauſe the days are evil; as ſuch are, in which iniquity abounds, and many wicked men live, and errors and hereſies prevail, and are days of affliction or perſecution; ſee Gen. xlvii. 9.

Ver. 17. Wherefore be ye not unwiſe, &c.] No one would be thought to be unwiſe, but ſuch are, who do not redeem time, and are ignorant of the will of the Lord; believers ſhould not act the unwiſe part, neither in their talk, nor in their walk and converſation, nor in their uſe of time: but underſtanding what the will of the Lord is; or of God, as read the Alexandrian copy, the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions: there is the ſecret will of God, which is the rule of all his proceedings; and is unknown to men, till facts make it appear; this is always fulfilled, and ſometimes by perſons who have no regard to his revealed will; to this the wills of the people of God ſhould be always reſigned: and there is his revealed will, which lies partly in the Goſpel; which declares it to be his will, that Chriſt ſhould work out the ſalvation of his people, which is what he came to do; that whoever believes in him, ſhall be ſaved; that all that are redeemed, ſhall be ſanctified; and that they ſhall perſevere to the end, and be glorified; and partly in the law, in the precepts and commands of it, which contain the good, perfect, and acceptable will of God: and the underſtanding of it is not a mere ſpeculative knowledge of it, but a practical one; when a man not only knows, but does the will of God, and his heart and actions agree with it; and this is to be done in faith, in virtue of grace and ſtrength received, with a view to the glory of God, having no dependance on what is done; and to the right underſtanding of it, ſo as to act according to it, as ſhould be, the word of God, and the illuminations, inſtructions, and grace of the Spirit, are neceſſary: the Alexandrian copy, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, read the words as an exhortation, underſtand ye the will of God.

Ver. 18. And be not drunk with wine, wherein is exceſs, &c.] The ſin of drunkenneſs here dehorted from, is a cuſtom, or habit, of voluntary exceſſive drinking of any ſtrong liquor, whereby the mind is diſturbed, and deprived of the uſe of reaſon: though wine is only here mentioned, that being the uſual liquor drank in the eaſtern countries, yet the ſame holds good of any other ſtrong liquor, as of that; nor is drinking wine for neceſſary uſe prohibited, nor for honeſt delight and lawful pleaſure; but exceſſive drinking of it, and this voluntary, and with deſign, and on purpoſe; otherwiſe perſons may be overtaken and intoxicated, through ignorance of the ſtrength of the liquor, and their own weakneſs; and it is a cuſtom, or habit of exceſſive drinking, for not a ſingle act, but a ſeries of actions, a courſe of living in this ſin, denominates a man a drunkard; and generally ſpeaking, exceſſive drinking deprives perſons of the uſe of reaſon, though not always; and ſuch are criminal, who are mighty to drink wine, and ſtrong to mingle ſtrong drink; as are alſo ſuch, who though not guilty of this ſin themſelves, are the means of it in others: the ſin is very ſinful; it is one of the works of the fleſh; it is an abuſe of the creature; it is oppoſed to walking honeſtly; for it perſons are to be excluded from the communion of the church; and without the grace of true repentance, ſhall not inherit the kingdom of heaven: many things might be ſaid to diſſuade from it; it hurts the mind, memory, and judgment; deprives of reaſon, and ſets a man below a beaſt; it brings diſeaſes on the body, and waſtes the eſtate; it unfits for buſineſs and duty; it opens a door for every ſin, and expoſes to ſhame and danger; and therefore ſhould be carefully avoided, and eſpecially by profeſſors of religion: but be filled with the Spirit; that is, with the Holy Spirit, as read the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions; with the gifts and graces of the Spirit: ſome have been filled with them in an extraordinary way, as the Apoſtles on the day of Pentecoſt; and others in an ordinary manner, as common believers; and who may be ſaid to be filled with the Spirit, as with wine, or inſtead of it, or in oppoſition to it, when the love of God is ſhed abroad in their hearts by the Spirit, which is compared to wine, for its antiquity, purity, and refreſhing nature; and they are filled with it, who have a comfortable ſenſe of it, and a firm perſuaſion of intereſt in it, and are delighted with the views of it, and are as it were inebriated with it; and they are filled with the Spirit, in whom his grace is a well of living water, and out of whoſe belly flow rivers of it; and who have a large meaſure of ſpiritual peace and joy, expreſſed in the following manner.

Ver. 19. Speaking to yourſelves in pſalms, and hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs, &c.] By pſalms are meant, the pſalms of David, and others which compoſe the book that goes by that name, for other pſalms there are none; and by hymns we are to underſtand, not ſuch as are made by good men, without the inſpiration of the Spirit of God; ſince they are placed between pſalms and ſpiritual ſongs, made by men inſpired by the Holy Ghoſt; and are put upon a level with them, and to be ſung along with them, to the edification of churches; but theſe are only another name for the book of pſalms, the running title of which may as well be the book of hymns, as it is rendered by Ainſworth; and the pſalm which our Lord ſung with his diſciples after the ſupper, is called an hymn; and ſo are the pſalms in general called hymns, by Philo the Jew[n]; and ſongs and hymns by Joſephus[o]; and, שירות ותושבחות, ſongs and praiſes, or hymns, in the Talmud[p]: and by ſpiritual ſongs are meant, the ſame pſalms of David, Aſaph, &c. and the titles of many of them are ſongs, and ſometimes a pſalm and ſong, and ſong and pſalm, a ſong of degrees; together with all other ſcriptural ſongs, written by inſpired men; and which are called ſpiritual, becauſe they are endited by the Spirit of God, conſiſt of ſpiritual matter, and are deſigned for ſpiritual edification; and are oppoſed to all profane, looſe, and wanton ſongs: theſe three words anſwer to, שירים תהלים מזמורים, the ſeveral titles of David's pſalms; from whence it ſeems to be the intention of the Apoſtle, that theſe ſhould be ſung in Goſpel churches; for ſo he explains ſpeaking to themſelves in them, in the next clauſe: ſinging and making melody in your hearts to the Lord; ſinging, as it is a diſtinct thing from prayer, ſo from giving of thanks, which is mentioned in the next verſe as another duty; it is not a mental praiſing of God, for it is called ſpeaking, and teaching, and admoniſhing, but it is a praiſing of God with the modulation of the voice; and is rightly performed, when the heart and voice agree; when there is a melody in the heart, as well as in the tongue; for ſinging and making melody in the heart, is ſinging with, or from the heart, or heartily; or as elſewhere, with grace, and which the Alexandrian copy reads here; that is, either with gratitude and thankfulneſs, or with grace in exerciſe; and the end in view, ſhould be the glory of God.

Ver. 20. Giving thanks always for all things, &c.] For things temporal, for our beings, and the preſervation of them, and for all the mercies of life; for things ſpiritual, for Chriſt, and for all ſpiritual bleſſings in him; for electing, redeeming, ſanctifying, adopting, pardoning, and juſtifying grace; for a meetneſs for heaven, and for eternal life itſelf; for the Goſpel, promiſes, truths, ordinances, and miniſtry; and this is to be done always, at all times, in times of adverſity, deſertion, temptation, affliction, and perſecution, as well as in proſperity: unto God, and the Father; to God who is, and as he is the Father of mercies, and of all creatures; and as he is the Father of Chriſt, and of all the elect in him: in the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; for all the mercies of God's people, both temporal and ſpiritual, come through him, and for his ſake; and thankſgivings for them, are only acceptable to God as they are offered up by him; nor is there any other way of bringing them to God, but through him: this duty, as it ſtands connected with the former, ſhows that praiſe and thankſgiving are the principal ſubject matter of pſalms, hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs, to be ſung; and that the manner of ſinging, is with thankſgiving; and that the end of it, is to give thanks to God.

Ver. 21. Submitting yourſelves one to another, &c.] Which may be underſtood either in a political ſenſe, of giving honour, obedience, and tribute, to civil magiſtrates, ſince they are ſet up by God for the good of men, and 'tis for the credit of religion, for the ſaints to ſubmit to them; or in an œconomical ſenſe, thus the wife ſhould be ſubject to the huſband, children to their parents, and ſervants to their maſters, which ſeveral things are afterwards inſiſted on, as explanative of this rule; or in an eccleſiaſtic ſenſe, ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, ſubject yourſelves to your brethren: thus members of churches ſhould be ſubject to their paſtors, not in the ſame ſenſe as they are to Chriſt, the head, nor are they obliged to believe or do every thing they ſay, right or wrong; yet honour and eſteem are due to them, and ſubmiſſion and obedience ſhould be yielded to their doctrines, precepts, and exhortations, when they are agreeable to the word of God; ſince God has ſet them in the higheſt place in the church, called them to the higheſt ſervice, and moſt honourable work, and beſtowed on them the greateſt gifts; the younger members ſhould alſo ſubmit to the elder, and the minority to the majority; one member ſhould ſubmit to another, to the ſuperior judgment of another, and to the weakneſs of another, and to the admonitions of others, and ſo as to perform all offices of love: and the manner in which this duty is to be performed, is in the fear of God; which may be conſidered as the moving cauſe of ſubmiſſion, or as the rule of it; ſubmiſſion ſhould be on account of the fear of God, and ſo far as is conſiſtent with it; and indeed, the fear of God is that which ſhould influence and engage to every duty; and which ſhould be before our eyes, and in exerciſe in our hearts, in all concerns, civil and religious: the Alexandrian copy and ſome others, the Complutenſian edition, and the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions read, in the fear of Chriſt; who is the head of the church, and king of ſaints, and as ſuch to be feared and reverenced; and for his ſake, there ſhould be a ſubmiſſion to one another; the Syriac verſion reads, in the love of Chriſt, which ſhould conſtrain the ſaints to this duty.

Ver. 22. Wives, ſubmit yourſelves unto your own huſbands, &c.] This is an inſtance, explaining the above general rule; which ſubjection lies in honour and reverence, ver. 33. and in obedience; they ſhould think well of their huſbands, ſpeak becomingly to them, and reſpectfully of them; the wife ſhould take care of the family, and family affairs, according to the huſband's will; ſhould imitate him in what is good, and bear with that which is not ſo agreeable; ſhe ſhould not curiouſly enquire into his buſineſs, but leave the management of it to him; ſhe ſhould help and aſſiſt in caring and providing for the family; and ſhould abide with him in proſperity and adverſity, and do nothing without his will and conſent: and this ſubjection is only to her own huſband; not to any other man, nor to her children, nor to her ſervants, or any brought into her houſe; and this conſideration ſhould render the ſubjection more eaſy, voluntary, and chearful: and which is but reaſonable that it ſhould be; as may be gathered from the time, matter, and end of the woman's creation, ſhe was made after him, out of him, and for him; and from her fall, and being firſt in the tranſgreſſion; and from her being the weaker and inferior ſex; and from the profitableneſs and comelineſs of it; and the credit of religion requires it, that ſo the word of God be not blaſphemed: wherefore it follows, as unto the Lord; that is, either as the Lord has commanded, that ſo it ſhould be, ſhewing a regard to his precepts; or as in the ſight of the Lord, and ſo yielding it ſincerely and heartily; or in things pertaining to the Lord, which are conſiſtent with the law of the Lord, and the Goſpel of Chriſt; and in like manner as the church is ſubject to Chriſt, her Lord and huſband, as follows.

Ver. 23. For the huſband is the head of the wife, &c.] See the note on 1 Cor. xi. 3. even as Chriſt is the head of the church; all the elect; ſee the note on ch. i. 22. And he is the Saviour of the body; not of our body, as the Ethiopic verſion reads, of that part of man, which is called the body; though that indeed is redeemed and ſaved by Chriſt, as well as the ſoul; but of his body, as the Vulgate Latin verſion reads; that is, of the church, which is his body; ſee ch. i. 23. of which he is the Saviour; he provides every thing for it, preſerves and protects it, and has wrought out ſalvation for it, which every member of it partakes of.

Ver. 24. Therefore as the church is ſubject unto Chriſt, &c.] Her head, being wholly dependant upon him, and entirely reſigned to him, and receiving all from him; from whom alone is all her expectation of proviſion, protection, comfort, and happineſs; wherefore ſhe has reſpect to all his commands, and eſteems all his precepts concerning all things to be right; and yields a chearful, voluntary, ſincere, and hearty obedience to them; ariſing from a principle of love to him, and joined with honour, fear, and reverence of him: ſo let the wives be to their own huſbands in every thing; political, domeſtic, and eccleſiaſtic; that is conſiſtent with the laws of God, and the Goſpel of Chriſt.

Ver. 25. Huſbands, love your wives, &c.] Which conſiſts in a ſtrong and cordial affection for them; in a real delight and pleaſure in them; in ſhowing reſpect, and doing honour to them; in ſeeking their contentment, ſatisfaction, and pleaſure; in a quiet, conſtant, and comfortable dwelling with them; in providing all things neceſſary for them; in protecting them from all injuries and abuſes; in concealing their faults, and covering their infirmities; in entertaining the beſt opinion of their perſons and actions; and in endeavouring to promote their ſpiritual good and welfare: this love ought to be hearty and ſincere, and not feigned and ſelfiſh; it ſhould be ſhown in private, as well as in public; it ſhould be chaſte and ſingle, conſtant and perpetual; it ſhould exceed that which is bore to neighbours, or even to parents, and ſhould be equal to that a man bears to himſelf; though not ſo as to hinder, and break in upon love to God and Chriſt: many are the reaſons why huſbands ſhould love their wives; they are given to be helps unto them; they are companions of them; they are wives of covenant; they are their own wives, yea, their own bodies, their own fleſh, nay, as themſelves; they are their image and their glory; and eſpecially the example of Chriſt in his love to his church and people, ſhould engage to it: even as Chriſt alſo loved the church, and gave himſelf for it; ſee the note on ver. 2. the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions read, his own church; his bride and ſpouſe, whom he betrothed to himſelf from all eternity, the Father having given her to him; and is no other than the church of the firſt-born, whoſe names are written in heaven, even all the elect of God.

Ver. 26. That he might ſanctify and cleanſe it, &c.] Being defiled, both with original ſin and actual tranſgreſſions; for God's elect, whom Chriſt loved and eſpouſed from everlaſting, fell in Adam with the reſt of mankind; and in their nature ſtate, live in ſin as others do; and ſo are under the guilt, and in the pollution of it as others be: Chriſt gave himſelf for them, that he might deliver them out of this ſtate; he gave himſelf a ſacrifice for them, that he might expiate their ſins, and make atonement and ſatisfaction for them; he ſhed his blood that he might cleanſe them from them; and he wrought out a righteouſneſs that he might juſtify them from all their iniquities; and which being put upon them, makes them to appear pure and ſpotleſs in the ſight of divine juſtice; for this ſanctifying and cleanſing, does not ſo much refer to the inward work of ſanctification of the Spirit, though that is a fruit and effect of the death of Chriſt, and is brought about by the following means, as to the juſtification of them by the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt: which is ſaid to be, with the waſhing of water; not baptiſm, which is never expreſſed by waſhing; nor does it purify or cleanſe from ſin; nor is it the means of ſanctification and regeneration, which ought to be before it; nor the grace of the Spirit, though that is often compared to water, and regeneration and ſanctification are owing to it; yet the ſaints are not ſo cleanſed from ſin by it, as to be without ſpot or wrinkle; but the blood of Chriſt, which is the fountain to waſh in, and which cleanſes from all ſin: by the word; not the form of words in baptiſm; but either the Goſpel, which brings the good news and glad tidings of peace, pardon, atonement, and juſtification by Chriſt; or the ſentence of juſtification pronounced upon the conſcience by him; ſee John xv. 2.

Ver. 27. That he might preſent it to himſelf a glorious church, &c.] There is a preſentation of the church by Chriſt to his Father, at his death, when he gathered the elect together in one, brought them nigh, and reconciled them to God, and preſented them to him holy, unblameable, and unreproveable in his ſight; and now in heaven, where he repreſents their perſons, appears and makes interceſſion for them; and at the laſt day, when he will deliver the whole number of them compleat and perfect, in conſequence of his ſuretyſhip engagements: but this is a preſentation of them to himſelf; and is either in this life, when they are brought to him in raiment of needle work, cloathed with his righteouſneſs, and waſhed in his blood, and he beholds them all fair, and without ſpot; or at the firſt reſurrection, and during the thouſand years reign; as well as in the ultimate glory, when the open marriage of the Lamb will be come, when his bride will be arrayed with fine linnen, clean and white; and have the glory of God upon her, and appear in glory with Chriſt, and will be a glorious church indeed: not having ſpot, or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing; the bodies of the ſaints will be like to Chriſt's glorious body, and will ſhine as the ſun in the kingdom of their Father; and in their ſouls, they will be compleatly conformed to the image of Chriſt, and enjoy uninterrupted communion with him, and have perfect knowledge of him; they will be always in his preſence, and he will take unſpeakable delight and complacency in them, which his preſentation of them to himſelf is expreſſive of: the church will then be free from all ſpots and blemiſhes; from all hypocrites and formal profeſſors; from all hereſies and hereticks; from all declenſions and infirmities, and from all ſin and iniquity: the alluſion ſeems to be to the cuſtoms and practices of the Jews, in their eſpouſals: if a man eſpouſed a woman on condition that ſhe had no ſpots in her, and afterwards ſpots were found in her, ſhe was not eſpouſed; for ſpots or blemiſhes, as in prieſts, ſo in women, render them unfit; as the one for ſervice, ſo the other for marriage; and they reckon up eight ſeveral ſpots or blemiſhes, for which they may be rejected[q]: but Chriſt's church has no ſpots nor blemiſhes, nor any thing like them; and will never be rejected by him, but will be always pleaſing in his ſight: but that it ſhould be holy and without blemiſh; as it is, being juſtified by his righteouſneſs, waſhed in his blood, and ſanctified by his Spirit.

Ver. 28. So ought men to love their wives as their own bodies, &c.] It is a common ſaying with the Jews, that a man's wife is, כגופו, as his own body[r]; and it is one of the precepts of their wiſe men, that a man ſhould honour his wife more than his body, ואהבה כגופו, and love her as his body[s]; for as they alſo ſay, they are but one body[t]: the Apoſtle ſeems to ſpeak in the language of his countrymen; however his doctrine and theirs agree in this point: wherefore he that loveth his wife, loveth himſelf; becauſe ſhe is one body and fleſh with him.

Ver. 29. For no man ever yet hated his own fleſh, &c.] This is unnatural, contrary to the firſt principles of nature; ſee Iſa. lviii. 7. which the[u] Jews underſtand of one that is near akin, and there is none nearer than a wife: but nouriſheth and cheriſheth it; feeds and clothes it: even as the Lord the church; who never hated her, but nouriſhes and cheriſhes her: Chriſt never hated his church and people; for his love is not only a love of benevolence, but of complacency and delight: there is a difference between anger and hatred, Chriſt may be angry with them, but not hate them; and there is a difference between perſons and actions, Chriſt may hate their actions, but not their perſons; and there is a difference between deſert and fact, they may be deſerving of his wrath and hatred, but are not the objects of it in fact; and there is a difference between what is real, and what is imaginary, they may imagine themſelves to be hated by him, when they are not; and there is a difference between hatred, and a non-diſcovery of love, Chriſt may not manifeſt his love, and yet not hate; as he never does his own people, for his love is everlaſting and unchangeable: and he nouriſhes them, as a Father his child, as a ſhepherd his flock, and as an huſband his wife; he feeds them with that which is nouriſhing, with himſelf the bread of life, with his covenant and promiſes, with the Goſpel and the doctrines of it, and with his love and grace; and by his Spirit, miniſters, word, and ordinances: and he cheriſhes them, he grants them near and intimate communion with himſelf, than which nothing is more deſireable by them, or joyful to them; nor is there any thing that more revives and encourages faith, hope, and love; he cloaths them ſuitable to their dignity and character, as his ſpouſe and bride; and with which they are well contented, and in which they look exceeding comely in his ſight: theſe phraſes are expreſſive of the whole care Chriſt takes of his church, in furniſhing her with every thing pertaining to life and godlineſs; for her comfort and happineſs in this world, and that to come: inſtead of the Lord, the Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read, Chriſt; and the Arabic verſion reads, as the Lord loves the church.

Ver. 30. For we are members of his body, &c.] Not of his natural body, for this would make Chriſt's human nature monſtrous; Chriſt as man, is of our fleſh and of our bones, or a partaker of the ſame fleſh and blood with us; or otherwiſe, his incarnation would have been of no ſervice to us; and had our human nature been from Chriſt, it would not have been corrupted; but our bodies, fleſh, and bones, are from the firſt, and not the ſecond Adam, and ſo corrupt and ſinful; Chriſt indeed as God, is the former of all human nature, and as man was ſet up in God's thoughts as the pattern of it; but the Apoſtle is here ſpeaking of the ſaints, not as men, but as chriſtians, as new creatures in Chriſt, and of what is peculiar to them; and therefore this muſt be underſtood of Chriſt's myſtical body the church; which is his by the Father's gift, and his own purchaſe; and of which he is the head, and which is united to him; now of this ſaints are members; ſee Rom. xii. 5. 1 Cor. xii. 12, 18, 27. Of his fleſh and of his bones; for ſo the church may be called, his own fleſh, his fleſh and bones, on account of the marriage relation ſhe ſtands in to him, and that ſpiritual union there is between them, which theſe phraſes are expreſſive of; and which the near relation of man and wife, is an emblem of: theſe words are wanting in the Alexandrian copy, and in the Ethiopic verſion.

Ver. 31. For this cauſe ſhall a man leave his father and mother, &c.] Theſe words contain the law of marriage, and are cited from Gen. ii. 24. and declare what ought to be, and are a prophecy of what ſhould be; and are obſerved againſt polygamy, and to ſtir up mutual affection; ſee the note on Matt. xix. 5.

Ver. 32. This is a great myſtery, &c.] It has ſomething myſterious in it; it is a figure and emblem of the myſterious union between Chriſt and his people: for ſo it follows, but I ſpeak concerning Chriſt and the church; or mention this law and inſtitution of marriage, with reſpect to them; for the leaving of father and mother, prefigured Chriſt's coming forth from the Father, and coming into this world in human nature, and his diſregard to his earthly parents, in compariſon of his people, and his ſervice for them; the man cleaving to the wife, very aptly expreſſes the ſtrong affection of Chriſt to his church, and the near communion there is between them; and their being one fleſh denotes the union of them; and indeed, the marriage of Adam and Eve, was a type of Chriſt and his church; for in this the firſt Adam was a figure of him that was to come, as well as in being a federal head to his poſterity: Adam was before Eve, ſo Chriſt was before his church; God thought it not proper that man ſhould be alone, ſo neither Chriſt, but that he ſhould have ſome fellows and companions with him: the formation of Eve from Adam, was typical of the church's production from Chriſt; ſhe was made of him while he was aſleep, which ſleep was from the Lord, and it was not an ordinary one; which may reſemble the ſufferings and death of Chriſt, which were from the Lord, and were not common; and which are the redemption of his church and people; and which ſecure their comfort and happineſs, and well-being: ſhe was taken out of his ſide, and built up a woman of one of his ribs; both the juſtification and ſanctification of the church are from Chriſt, from the water and the blood which iſſued out of his ſide, when on the croſs: the bringing and preſentation of Eve to Adam, has its myſtery; it was God that brought her to him; and ſhe was the ſame that was made out of him; and to the ſame Adam was ſhe brought of whoſe rib ſhe was made, and that not againſt her will: ſo it is God that draws ſouls to Chriſt, and eſpouſes them to him, even the ſame that he has choſen in him, and Chriſt has redeemed by his blood; and to the ſame are they brought, who was wounded for their tranſgreſſions, and bruiſed for their ſins; and they are made willing in the day of his power upon them, to come and give themſelves to him. Adam's conſent and acknowledgment of Eve to be his wife, ſhadow forth Chriſt's hearty reception and acknowledgment of the ſaints, as being of him, and his, when they are brought unto him under the influences of his grace and Spirit.

Ver. 33. Nevertheleſs, let every one of you in particular, &c.] The Apoſtle returns to his former ſubject, and recapitulates the mutual duties of huſband and wife, after he had enforced them from the inſtance and example of Chriſt, and his church; and would have every married perſon in particular take the directions and inſtructions given, to themſelves: as that the huſband ſo love his wife even as himſelf; ſince they two are one fleſh: and the wife ſee that ſhe reverence her huſband; ſince he leaves father and mother for her, and is the head of her; ſee the note on ver. 22.

CHAP. VI.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle goes on with his exhortations to relative and domeſtic duties, and conſiders thoſe of children and parents, and of ſervants and maſters; and next he exhorts the ſaints in general to conſtancy and perſeverance in the exerciſe of grace, and the performance of duty in the ſtrength of Chriſt, and with the uſe of the armour of God deſcribed by him; intreats them to pray for him; gives the reaſons of ſending Tychicus, who brought them this Epiſtle, and cloſes it with his apoſtolical ſalutation. He begins with the duties of children to their parents, which are ſubmiſſion and obedience to them, honour, fear, and reverence of them; the arguments engaging thereunto are taken from the light of nature and reaſon, from the command of God, and the promiſe annexed to it, ver. 1, 2, 3. Then follow the duties of fathers to their children, who are exhorted not to uſe them with too much rigor, and ſo provoke them to wrath, but to bring them up in a religious manner, that they may ſerve the Lord, ver. 4. Next he obſerves the duties of ſervants to their maſters, which are ſubjection and obedience, which ſhould be done with reverence of them, with ſimplicity of heart, as unto Chriſt, not with eye-ſervice, as men-pleaſers, but with the heart, and with good-will, as doing the will of God, and as if it was to the Lord, and not men; to which they are encouraged by a promiſe of reward which is given without reſpect to bond or free, ver. 5, 6, 7, 8. And maſters, they are exhorted to do what is right and juſt to their ſervants, and not terrify them with menaces; to which they are moved by the conſideration of their having a maſter in heaven, who is no reſpecter of perſons, ver. 9. From hence the Apoſtle paſſes to a general exhortation to the ſaints to behave with firmneſs and conſtancy of mind, tho' they had many enemies, and theſe mighty and powerful, and an over-match for them; relying on the power and ſtrength of Chriſt, and making uſe of the whole armour of God, which he adviſes them to take, that they might ſtand and withſtand in the worſt of times, ver. 10, 11, 12, 13. the ſeveral parts of which he enumerates, as the girdle of truth, the breaſt-plate of righteouſneſs, the ſhoes of the Goſpel of peace, the ſhield of faith, whereby the fiery darts of ſatan are quenched, the helmet of ſalvation, the ſword of the Spirit the word of God, and ſpiritual prayer of every ſort for all ſaints, attended with watching and perſeverance, ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. which laſt part of the ſpiritual armour being mentioned, leads on the Apoſtle to intreat the Epheſians to pray for him, that he might freely and boldly preach the Goſpel; which he commends from the myſterious nature and ſubject of it, from his character as an embaſſador for it, or for Chriſt, the ſum and ſubſtance of it, and from his being in bonds for it; which ſhowed how great an eſteem he had of it, and how heartily concerned he was to preach it without fear, ver. 19, 20. And then adds, that the reaſons of his ſending Tychicus, whom he deſcribes by his relation to him as a brother, and his affection for him, and by his office as a miniſter, and his faithfulneſs in it, were; that they might be acquainted with his circumſtances, in what ſtate and condition he was, both with reſpect to things temporal and ſpiritual, and that their hearts might be comforted by him, ver. 21, 22. And the Epiſtle is concluded with the Apoſtle's ſalutation; and the perſons ſaluted are the brethren of this church, and all that love Chriſt Jeſus ſincerely; and the bleſſings wiſhed for are peace, love, with faith and grace; the perſons from whom they are deſired are God the Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, ver. 23, 24.

Ver. 1. Children obey your parents in the Lord, &c.] The perſons whoſe duty this is, children, are ſuch of every ſex, male and female, and of every age, and of every ſtate and condition; and though the true, legitimate, and immediate offspring of men may be chiefly reſpected, yet not excluſive of ſpurious children, and adopted ones, and of children in-law; and the perſons to whom obedience from them is due, are not only real and immediate parents, both father and mother, but ſuch who are in the room of parents, as ſtep-fathers, ſtep-mothers, guardians, nurſes, &c. and all who are in the aſcending line, as grand-fathers, grand-mothers, &c. to theſe, children ſhould be ſubject and obedient in all things lawful, juſt and good; in every thing that is not ſinful and unlawful, by the word of God; and in things indifferent, as much as in them lies, and even in things which are difficult to perform: and this obedience ſhould be hearty and ſincere, and not merely verbal, and in ſhow and appearance, nor mercenary; and ſhould be joined with gratitude and thankfulneſs for paſt favours: and it ſhould be in the Lord; which may be conſidered either as a limitation of the obedience, that it ſhould be in things that are agreeable to the mind and will of the Lord; or as an argument to it, becauſe it is the command of the Lord, and is well-pleaſing in his ſight, and makes for his glory, and therefore ſhould be done for his ſake: for this is right; it appears to be right by the light of nature, by which the very heathens have taught it; and it is equitable from reaſon that ſo it ſhould be; and it is juſt by the law of God, which commands nothing but what is holy, juſt, and good.

Ver. 2. Honour thy father and mother, &c.] This explains who parents are, and points at ſome branches of obedience due unto them; for they are not only to be loved, and to be feared, and reverenced, their corrections to be ſubmitted to, offences againſt them to be acknowledged, their tempers to be bore with, and their infirmities covered; but they are to be honoured in thought, word, and geſture; they are to be highly thought of and eſteemed; they are to be ſpoken to, and of, very honourably, and with great veneration; and to be behaved to in a very reſpectful manner; and they are to be relieved, aſſiſted, and maintained in a comfortable way when aged, and in neceſſitous circumſtances; and which may be chiefly deſigned. So the Jews explain, כבוד, the honour due to parents, by, &c. מאכיל, giving them food, drink, and clothing, unlooſing their ſhoes, and leading them out and in [x]. Compare with this 1 Tim. v. 4, 17. ſee the note on Matt. xv. 4. which is the firſt commandment with promiſe: it is the fifth commandment in the decalogue, but the firſt that has a promiſe annexed to it: it is reckoned by the Jews [y] the weightieſt of the weightieſt commands of the law; and the reward beſtowed on it is length of days, as follows.

Ver. 3. That it may be well with thee, &c.] In this world, and that which is to come; ſee Deut. v. 16. The Jews [z] ſay, "there are four things, "which if a man does, he eats the fruit of them "in this world, and the capital part remains for "him in the world to come; and they are theſe, "כיבוד אב ואם, honouring father and mother, do"ing acts of beneficence, making peace between "a man and his neighbour, and learning of the law, "which anſwers to them all." And thou mayſt live long on the earth: length of days is in itſelf a bleſſing; and tho' mens days can't be lengthened beyond God's purpoſe and decree; and tho' obedient children don't always live long; yet diſobedience to parents often brings the judgments of God on children, ſo that they die not a common death, 2 Sam. xviii. 14. Prov. xxx. 17. On thoſe words in Deut. xxxii. 47. the Jews [a] have this paraphraſe; "becauſe "it is your life, זה כיבוד אב ואם, this is honour"ing father and mother; and thro' this thing ye ſhall "prolong your days, this is beneficence." It may be obſerved, that the words in this promiſſory part are not the ſame as in the decalogue, where they ſtand thus, that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee; referring to the land of Canaan; for the law in the form of it, in which it was delivered by Moſes, only concerned the people of the Jews; wherefore to ſuit this law, and the promiſe of it, to others, the Apoſtle alters the language of it.

Ver. 4. And ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath, &c.] Neither by words; by unjuſt and unreaſonable commands; by contumelious and reproachful language; by frequent and public chidings, and by indiſcreet and paſſionate expreſſions: nor by deeds; preferring one to another; by denying them the neceſſaries of life; by not allowing them proper recreation; by ſevere and cruel blows, and inhuman uſage; by not giving them ſuitable education; by an improper diſpoſal of them in marriage; and by profuſely ſpending their eſtates, and leaving nothing to them: not but that parents may, and ought to correct and rebuke their children; nor are they accountable to them for their conduct; yet they ſhould take care not to provoke them to wrath, becauſe this alienates their minds from them, and renders their inſtructions and corrections uſeleſs, and puts them upon ſinful practices; wrath lets in ſatan, and leads to ſin againſt God; and indeed it is difficult in the beſt of men to be angry and not ſin; ſee Col. iii. 21. Fathers are particularly mentioned, they being the heads of families, and are apt to be too ſevere, as mothers too indulgent. But bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; inſtructing them in the knowledge of divine things, ſetting them good examples, taking care to prevent their falling into bad company, praying with them, and for them, bringing them into the houſe of God, under the means of grace, to attend public worſhip; all which, under a divine bleſſing, may be very uſeful to them: the example of Abraham is worthy of imitation, Gen. xviii. 19. and the advice of the wiſe man deſerves attention, Prov. xxii. 6.

Ver. 5. Servants, be obedient to them that are your maſters, &c.] The Apoſtle enlarges on the duty of ſervants, as well as frequently inculcates it in his Epiſtles; becauſe, generally ſpeaking, they were more rude and ignorant, and leſs pains were taken with them to inſtruct them; they were apt to be impatient and weary of the yoke; and ſcandal was like to ariſe from ſervants in the firſt ages of Chriſtianity thro' ſome libertines, and the licentiouſneſs of the falſe teachers, who inſinuated, that ſervitude was inconſiſtent with chriſtian freedom: the perſons exhorted are ſervants, bond ſervants, and hired ſervants; who are to be ſubject to, and obey their maſters, of each ſex, whether male or female, of every condition, whether poor or rich, believers or unbelievers, good or bad humoured, gentle or froward: ſuch as are their maſters according to the fleſh; or carnal maſters, as the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it; even though they are unregenerate men, and are in a ſtate of nature, and only mind the things of the fleſh, yet they are to be obeyed in their lawful commands: or in things pertaining to the fleſh, as the Arabic verſion renders it; in things temporal, which concern the body, and this temporal life; not in things ſpiritual and religious, or that belong to conſcience, and which are contrary to them: or according to your fleſh, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; ſignifying that they are only maſters over their bodies, not their conſciences; and that their power only extends to corporal things, and can laſt no longer than while they are in the fleſh; ſee Job iii. 19. and obedience is to be yielded to them with fear and trembling; with great humility and reſpect, with reverence of them, and giving honour to them, with carefulneſs not to offend them, with ſubmiſſion to their reproofs and corrections, and with fear of puniſhment; but more eſpecially with the fear of God, being by that influenced and conſtrained to obedience: in ſingleneſs of heart; with readineſs and chearfulneſs, without hypocriſy and diſſimulation, and with all integrity and faithfulneſs: as unto Chriſt; it being agreeable to his will, and what makes for his glory, and ſerves to adorn the doctrine of God our ſaviour in all things.

Ver. 6. Not with eye-ſervice, as men-pleaſers, &c.] Doing nothing but when under the maſter's eye, and then pretending a great deal of diligence and induſtry, in order to ingratiate themſelves into his affections, and neglecting his buſineſs when he is abſent; whereas they ought to attend his ſervice in his abſence, as well as in his preſence, and ſo ſeek to pleaſe him, which is commendable. But as the ſervants of Chriſt; acting in like manner as the ſervants of Chriſt, who are not men-pleaſers; or as if they themſelves were ſerving Chriſt, as indeed they are, when they are doing that which is the will of Chriſt: doing the will of God from the heart; meaning not the will of God in a religious, but in a civil ſenſe, yielding a chearful and hearty obedience to their own maſters.

Ver. 7. With good-will doing ſervice, &c.] To their maſters; not grudgingly, with an ill will; no otherwiſe, nor longer than when they are forced to it; but of a ready mind, and with a chearful ſpirit, taking delight in their work, and reckoning it a pleaſure to ſerve their maſters; as an Iſraelite that is not ſold, who does his work, ברצונו, with his good-will, and according to his own mind [b]; doing what they do as to the Lord, and not to men; not merely becauſe it is the will of men, and they are commanded by them, and in order to pleaſe them, but becauſe it is the will of the Lord, and is well-pleaſing in his ſight.

Ver. 8. Knowing that whatſoever good thing any man doth, &c.] According to the will of God, from right principles in his heart, and with a view to God's glory: the ſame ſhall he receive of the Lord; that is, he ſhall receive the fruit and advantage of it, in a way of grace, whether he be bond or free; a bond man or a free man, a maſter or a ſervant.

Ver. 9. And ye maſters do the ſame things unto them, &c.] This does not refer to ſervice and obedience, but to ſingleneſs of heart, benevolence, humanity, and a regard to Chriſt, and the will of God, and to the doing of good things, and to the performance of their duty, as they would have their ſervants do theirs; whoſe duty, if religious maſters, is, with reſpect to their ſouls, to inſtruct them in, and uſe them to religious exerciſes, to pray with them, and for them, to ſet them good examples, to prevent them falling into bad company, and to allow them proper time for religious duties; and with reſpect to their bodies, and outward concerns, to provide ſufficient food and proper raiment for them, or to give them their due wages, to take care of them when ſick or lame, and ſhew compaſſion and humanity to them, to encourage thoſe that are prudent, faithful, and laborious, and to correct the diſobedient, and expel the incorrigible: forbearing threatning; not that they may not in any ſenſe threaten, but not always, nor too often, nor too much, and with great things on light occaſions; nor ſhould they be too forward to execute their threatnings, eſpecially when their ſervants repent and amend; they ſhould then forbear them and forgive; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, forgive their offences; this is oppoſed to all hard rigour, and ill uſage, either by words or blows. And this is a rule given by the Jews [c], that a maſter ſhould not multiply clamour and anger, but ſhould ſpeak to him (his ſervant) quietly, and in a ſtill manner, and he will hear his objections, or arguments and reaſons: knowing that your maſter alſo is in heaven; meaning Chriſt, who employs, provides for, and uſes well all his ſervants, and to whom maſters muſt be accountable for their uſage of ſervants; for he is the common maſter of maſters and ſervants; and ſo the Alexandrian copy, and Vulgate Latin verſion read, their and your maſter: and the place of his habitation is mentioned, to diſtinguiſh him from earthly maſters; and the more to move and excite maſters to their duty, ſince he being in heaven over-looks and takes notice of all their actions, as the omniſcient God; and being omnipotent, has it in his power to plead and avenge the cauſe of the injured: neither is there reſpect of perſons with him; as whether they are of this, or the other nation, Jew or Gentile; whether in this, or that ſtate and condition, or in ſuch and ſuch circumſtances of life; whether maſters or ſervants, bond or free, or whether Canaanitiſh or Hebrew ſervants; between which the Jews [d] made a difference, and allowed of rigour to be uſed to the one, but required mercy and kindneſs to be ſhewed to the other; and ſo were reſpecters of perſons.

Ver. 10. Finally, my brethren, &c.] This is the concluſion of the Apoſtle's exhortations, in which he addreſſes the ſaints as his brethren; which appellation he uſes, not merely as a familiar way of ſpeaking among the Jews, but in regard to them as regenerate perſons, and of the ſame family and houſhold of God with himſelf; and he calls them ſo, to ſhew his humility, and as a proof of his affection to them, and with a deſign to encourage them to their duty, as follows: be ſtrong in the Lord, and in the power of his might; which is directed to, partly on account of the things before exhorted to, which could not be performed in their own ſtrength; and partly with reſpect to their many and potent enemies hereafter mentioned, againſt whom they had no might nor power of their own; and therefore the Apoſtle points out the Lord Jeſus Chriſt unto them, in whom are ſtrength, power, and might, even everlaſting ſtrength, to enable them to perform their duty, and to fight againſt every enemy, ſin, ſatan, and the world; for tho' they are weak, and without ſtrength in themſelves, and can do nothing of themſelves, and without Chriſt; yet ſince there is ſtrength in him, which is communicable to them, they may expect it from him, and depend upon it; and they may come at, or ſtrengthen themſelves in it, and by it, by meditation on it, by prayer for it, by waiting on Chriſt in his own ways, by exerciſing faith upon him, and thro' the Spirit, who ſtrengthens them from him with might in the inward man.

Ver. 11. Put on the whole armour of God, &c.] Not that which God himſelf is ſometimes clothed with, and uſes againſt his enemies; but what he has provided for his people, and furniſhes them with; the particulars of which are after mentioned: and it is called the armour of God, becauſe it is prepared by him for his people, and is beſtowed on them by him; and becauſe it is in its own nature divine and ſpiritual, and not carnal; and becauſe it is provided for fighting the Lord's battles, and is uſed in them; and becauſe the efficacy of it is from him, and the execution it does is owing to him: and it is whole, compleat, and perfect; and all of it is uſeful, and no part to be neglected, but all to be taken and put on; which is not to make and provide this armour, but to take it, as in ver. 13. as being ready made and provided, and to expect and prepare for battle, and make uſe of it; and this ſuppoſes ſaints to be in a warfare-ſtate, and that they are in the character of ſoldiers, and have enemies to fight with, and therefore ſhould be accoutred with proper and ſuitable armour, to meet them: that ye may be able to ſtand againſt the wiles of the devil; who is the grand enemy of Chriſt and his people, and a very powerful and cunning one he is; ſo that the whole armour of God ſhould be put on, which is proof againſt all his might and craft, in order to ſtand againſt him, oppoſe him, and fight, and get the victory over him, which in the iſſue is always obtained by believers; for they not only ſtand their ground in the ſtrength of Chriſt, and by the uſe of their armour, confound his ſchemes, and baffle all his arts and ſtratagems, but are more than conquerors thro' him that has loved them.

Ver. 12. For we wreſtle not againſt fleſh and blood, &c.] The Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, and ſome copies, read you, inſtead of we. This is a reaſon why ſaints ſhould be ſtrong in the Lord, and why they ſhould put on the whole armour of God, and prepare for battle, ſince their enemies are ſuch as here deſcribed: not fleſh and blood; frail mortal men, ſuch as were wreſtled againſt in the Olympic games, to which the Apoſtle alludes. For this wreſtling, as Philo the Jew ſays [e], concerning Jacob's wreſtling, is not of the body, but of the ſoul; ſee Matt. xvi. 17. Gal. i. 16. and the meaning is, not with men only, for otherwiſe the ſaints have a conflict with men; with prophane men, and wreſtle againſt them, by bearing a teſtimony againſt their enormities, and by patiently enduring their reproaches, and conquer them by a conſtant adherence to Chriſt, and an exerciſe of faith upon him, which gets the victory over the world; and with heretical men, and maintain a conflict with them, by watching and obſerving the firſt appearance of their errors and hereſies, and declaring againſt them, and by uſing ſcripture arguments to confute them, and by rejecting the ſtubborn and incorrigible from church-communion: yet they wreſtle not againſt theſe only, but againſt principalities, againſt powers; by whom are meant not civil magiſtrates, or the Roman governours, though theſe are ſometimes ſo called, Tit. iii. 1. and may be ſaid to be the rulers of the darkneſs of this world, or of the dark heathen world, and were in high places, and were of wicked and malicious ſpirits, againſt the people of Chriſt; yet theſe can't be oppoſed to fleſh and blood, or to men, ſince they were ſuch themſelves; and tho' they were in high, yet not in heavenly places; and the connexion with the preceding verſe ſhews the contrary, the enemy being the devil, and the armour ſpiritual; wherefore the devils are here deſigned, who are deſcribed from their power, rule, and government, ſee the note on ch. i. 21. both in this clauſe, and in the next: and againſt the rulers of the darkneſs of this world; that is, over wicked men in it, who are in a ſtate of darkneſs itſelf; and ſo ſatan is called the prince, and God of the world, John xii. 31. 2 Cor. iv. 4. The Jews uſe this very word, the Apoſtle does here, of the angel of death, who is called darkneſs [f]; and the devil is called by them, שר של חושך, the prince of darkneſs [g]; and mention is made by them of, חשוכי עלמא, the darkneſs of the world [h]; from whom the Apoſtle ſeems to have taken theſe phraſes, as being in common uſe among the Jews; who alſo uſe it of civil governours [i], and render it, as here, the rulers of the world, and ſay it ſignifies monarchs, ſuch as rule from one end of the world to the other [k]: ſome copies, and the Ethiopic verſion, leave out the phraſe, of this world. It follows, againſt ſpiritual wickedneſs in high places; or wicked ſpirits, as the devils are, unclean, proud, lying, deceitful, and malicious; who may be ſaid to be in high or heavenly places; not in places ſuper-celeſtial, or in the higheſt heavens, in the third heaven, where God, angels, and ſaints are; but in the aerial heavens, where the power or poſſe of devils reſide, and where they are above us, over our heads, overlooking us, and watching every advantage againſt us; and therefore we ſhould have on our armour, and be in a readineſs to engage them; and ſo the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions render it, under, or beneath heaven; and the Arabic verſion, in the air.

Ver. 13. Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God, &c.] This is a repetition of the exhortation in ver. 11. which repetition ſeems neceſſary by reaſon of the many powerful enemies mentioned in the preceding verſe, and ſerves to explain what is meant by putting it on; and leads on the Apoſtle to give an account of the ſeveral parts of this armour: the end of taking it is much the ſame as before, that ye may be able to withſtand in the evil day; that is, that ye may be able to ſtand againſt the wiles and ſtratagems of ſatan, againſt his power and might, to oppoſe his ſchemes, and reſiſt his temptations; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, that ye may be able to meet the evil one; to face him, and give him battle, being accoutred with the whole armour of God; tho' the Greek copies, and other verſions, read, in the evil day; in which ſin and iniquity abound, error and hereſy prevail, ſatan is very buſy, trials and afflictions come on, perſecution ariſes becauſe of the word, and God's judgments are in the earth: and having done all to ſtand; or having overcome, having routed the enemy, ſtand as conquerors; or rather, having took and put on the whole armour of God, in order to ſtand, and withſtand the enemy,

Ver. 14. Stand therefore, &c.] Keep your ground, don't deſert the army, the church of Chriſt, nor his cauſe; continue in the ſtation in which you are placed, keep your poſt, be upon your watch, ſtand upon your guard: having your loins girt about with truth; by which is meant the Goſpel, and the ſeveral doctrines of it; ſee chap. i. 13. and iv. 15. and to have the loins girt with it, ſhews, that it ſhould be near and cloſe to the ſaints, and never departed from; and that it is a means of keeping them cloſe to God and Chriſt, and of ſtrengthening them againſt the aſſaults and attacks of ſatan; and is of great uſe in the chriſtians ſpiritual conflict with their enemies; the girdle is a part of armour, and ſo conſiderable as ſometimes to be put for the whole, Iſ. v. 27. and here it is mentioned in the firſt place: and having on the breaſt-plate of righteouſneſs; in alluſion to Iſ. lix. 17. meaning not works of righteouſneſs done by men, tho' theſe are a fence when rightly uſed againſt the reproaches and charges of the enemy, as they were by Samuel, 1 Sam. xii. 3. but rather the graces of faith and love, 1 Theſſ. v. 8. tho' faith has another place in the chriſtian armour, afterwards mentioned; wherefore it ſeems beſt to underſtand this of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which being imputed by God, and received by faith, is a guard againſt, and repels the accuſations and charges of ſatan, and is a ſecurity from all wrath and condemnation.

Ver. 15. And your feet ſhod with the preparation of the Goſpel of peace.] The Goſpel is ſo called, becauſe it makes men to be of peaceable tempers and behaviour, and gives peace to diſtreſſed minds:

it directs the way to eternal peace, and publiſhes peace made by the blood of Chriſt; and has a much better claim to this name, and epithet, than the law has, which is often called peace by the Jews [l]: the preparation of it does not deſign a promptitude or readineſs to preach the Goſpel, or to receive it, or profeſs it, or to give a reaſon of faith in it, or to endure reproach and perſecution for it; nor that readineſs which the Goſpel is a means of, as for every good work, for the ſpiritual warfare, for the chriſtian's journey heaven-ward, or for heaven itſelf: but the word ἑτοιμασια ſignifies a baſe, or foundation; and ſo it is uſed by the Septuagint interpreters on Zech. v. 11. and here it deſigns a firm and ſolid knowledge of the Goſpel, as it publiſhes peace by Jeſus Chriſt, which yields a ſure foundation for the chriſtian ſoldier to ſet his foot upon, and ſtand faſt on; it being that to him, as the ſhoe is to the foot, its baſe or foundation: and for the feet to be ſhod with it, does not mean the outward converſation being agreeable to the Goſpel, tho' ſuch a walk and converſation is very beautiful and ſafe, and ſuch may walk and war with intrepidity; but it deſigns the conſtant and firm ſtanding of believers in the faith of the Goſpel, and ſo ſtriving and contending for it, without being moved from it, that it may continue with them. Shoes or boots, which were ſometimes of iron, and ſometimes of braſs, are reckoned among the armour of ſoldiers [m].

Ver. 16. Above all, taking the ſhield of faith, &c.] Which may be underſtood either of the grace of faith, which is like a golden ſhield, precious, ſolid, and ſubſtantial; and like a ſhield of mighty men, by which mighty things are done, and by which the believer not only repels, but conquers the enemy. The Jews ſay [n], that repentance and good works are as a ſhield againſt divine vengeance: or rather of the object of faith, that which faith makes uſe of as a ſhield; ſo God himſelf is a ſhield, Gen. xv. 1. his divine perfections, as his power, faithfulneſs, truth, and immutability, which encompaſs the ſaints as a ſhield, and are oppoſed by faith to the temptations of ſatan; alſo the love and favour of God, Pſ. v. 12. and particularly God in his word, Prov. xxx. 5. which is a ſhield againſt falſe doctrines, and the wiles of ſatan. Moreover, Chriſt is a ſhield, Pſ. lxxxiv. 11. and faith makes uſe of him as a ſhield, his perſon, blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice; which it holds up and oppoſes to all the charges and objections of ſatan; and who is the ſaints protection, and ſecurity from the wrath of God, divine juſtice, and eternal death. The diſciples of the wiſe men are ſaid to be [o], התריסון, ſhielded men, who, as the Gloſs ſays, fight in the war of the law; but they are not like Chriſt's diſciples, who have on the ſhield, and fight the fight of faith: and this is above all to be taken, as being the moſt uſeful part of the chriſtian armour; or with all, with the reſt, this is to be taken, and by no means to be neglected; and it is to be uſed in all; in every temptation of ſatan, in every conflict with that enemy, or any other. Wherewith ye ſhall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked; of the wicked one, ſatan; who was the firſt wicked one, and the tempter of others to wickedneſs; and is emphatically the wicked one, being wickedneſs itſelf; and his temptations are fiery darts: they may be compared to darts, becauſe they ſometimes come ſuddenly and ſwiftly, and thick and faſt, are very numerous, and where they ſtick are very troubleſome and grieving; ſee Gen. xlix. 23, 24. And they may be ſaid to be fiery, becauſe they ſerve to enflame the mind, and excite to ſin, as luſt, anger, revenge, and the like; and were they not repelled, would be the occaſion of bringing into everlaſting burnings. The alluſion is to βελεσι πεπυρωμενοις, the fiery darts, caſt by enemies into towns, and upon houſes, in order to burn them [p]. Mention is alſo made of, גירי דאשא, fiery darts, with the Jews [q], and of ſatan's caſting a dart at David [r]: from theſe cuſtoms, and ways of ſpeaking, the Apoſtle borrows his phraſes; and ſuggeſts, that the ſhield of faith is of uſe to quench the fiery darts of ſatan's temptations; ſo that they may not have the malignant influence they are deſigned for; which is chiefly done by faith's dealing with the blood of Chriſt. And there were ways of quenching the fiery darts alluded to; which was done by ſkins and hides of beaſts made wet, or anointed with allum [s].

Ver. 17. And take the helmet of ſalvation, &c.] Meaning either Chriſt himſelf, the ſaviour; and ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, the helmet of the ſaviour; or the ſalvation itſelf, which he is the author of, and a well-grounded hope of it; ſee 1 Theſſ. v. 8. the alluſion is to Iſ. lix. 17. and ſuch an hope of ſalvation by Chriſt, is a defence of the head againſt falſe doctrines; for the helmet is a piece of armour for the head; and it is an erecter of the head in times of difficulty, affliction, and diſtreſs; and it covers the head in the day of battle, when engaged with ſatan, the enemy of ſouls: and the ſword of the Spirit, which is the word of God; the word of God is compared to a ſword, for its two edges, the law and Goſpel; the one convicts of ſin, and cuts to the heart for it, and the other cuts down all the goodlineſs of man; and the ſcriptures in general are a ſharp ſword, in convincing of ſin, reproving for it, and threatning with wrath and ruin, in refuting error and hereſy, and repelling ſatan's temptations, and will be uſed in the deſtruction of antichriſt: and this word may be called the ſword of the Spirit, becauſe it is not carnal, but of a ſpiritual nature; and is uſed by the ſpiritual man; and becauſe the holy Spirit, as the Ethiopic verſion here expreſſes it, is the author of it; and which he furniſhes the ſaints with, and teaches them how to make uſe of, and makes it powerful and effectual. So the Jews ſays [t], the words of the law are like to a ſword, and ſpeak of, חרב הורה, the ſword of the law [u].

Ver. 18. Praying always with all prayer and ſupplication in the Spirit, &c.] The laſt weapon is prayer, and takes in all ſorts of prayer, mental and vocal, public and private; and every branch of it, as deprecation of evils, petitions for good things, and thankſgiving for mercies: and which ſhould be uſed always; this ſtands oppoſed to ſuch who pray not at all, or who have prayed, but have left it off, or who pray only in diſtreſs; and it ſuggeſts, that a man ſhould pray as often as he has an opportunity; and particularly, that he ſhould make uſe of it in times of darkneſs, deſertion, and temptation: and this, when performed aright, is performed in the Spirit; with the heart, ſoul, and ſpirit engaged in it; it is put up with a true heart, and a right ſpirit, and without hypocriſy; in a ſpiritual way, and with fervency, and under the influence, and by the aſſiſtance of the Spirit of God. And watching thereunto; either to the word, as a direction for prayer, or to prayer itſelf; for opportunities to pray, for the aſſiſtance of the Spirit in prayer, for an anſwer of it, and to return thanks for bleſſings when beſtowed; and againſt all dependance on it, and againſt ſatan's temptations, and our own corruptions with reſpect to it: with all perſeverance; in it, notwithſtanding what ſatan, and an unbelieving heart may ſuggeſt to the contrary: and ſupplication for all ſaints; of every nation, age, ſex, and condition, in all places, and of every denomination. So Chriſt taught his diſciples to pray, ſaying, our Father, ſuggeſting, that they were not only to pray for themſelves, but for all the children of God.

Ver. 19. And for me, &c.] This ſhows the great humility of the Apoſtle, and the ſenſe he had of the greatneſs of the work of the miniſtry; and that it is the duty of people to pray for their miniſters; and that no man is perfect in this life; and that the more ſuperior members need the aſſiſtance of the inferior ones: for this requeſt is made by the Apoſtle not in diſſimulation, or as feigning humility and modeſty; but in the ſincerity of his heart, and from a real ſenſe of his need of freſh ſupplies of gifts and grace, to fit him for the work and ſervice of Chriſt: that utterance may be given unto me; or that the word; meaning not the ſubject-matter of the miniſtry, the word of the Goſpel, the word of faith, truth, and reconciliation, for that was committed to him; unleſs he ſhould mean an increaſe of light and knowledge in it; but rather a faculty of ſpeaking it freely and aptly, and what is commonly called elocution; not ſpeaking with the enticing words of man's wiſdom, but with the words of the Holy Ghoſt: or elſe an opportunity of preaching the word, and liberty to do it, as follows: that I may open my mouth boldly; or in the opening of my mouth; the phraſe is Rabbinical. The Jews [w] ſay, that when Moſes came to write that paſſage, let us make man in our image, &c. he ſaid before the Lord of the world, why doſt thou give, פתחון פה, opening of the mouth to hereticks? i. e. an occaſion to them of ſpeaking, objecting to us, and of reproving and convincing us with reſpect to a plurality of perſons in the deity: and a little after they ſay, "where-ever you find, פתחון פה, an "opening of the mouth to hereticks, you will find "an anſwer by its ſide, or along with it." Now the Apoſtle deſired he might have ſomething to ſay, to object to, and to reprove and convince the unbelieving Jews; that he might do this with boldneſs, with all faithfulneſs, with courage, and intrepidity, and with freedom of ſpeech; or openly and publickly, as the Syriac verſion renders it: to make known the myſtery of the Goſpel; or the myſterious doctrines of it, ſuch as the doctrines of a Trinity of perſons, of the union of the two natures in Chriſt, juſtification by his righteouſneſs, regeneration by his Spirit and grace, the ſaints union to Chriſt, and communion with him, the reſurrection of the dead, &c. which are called myſteries, becauſe they were hid until revealed; and tho' revealed, the modus and ratio of them are not to be accounted for. Now the Apoſtle's work was to make known theſe myſteries, to prove the truth of them from the word of God, and to defend them againſt the oppoſers of them; and that he might be able to do this, he intreats the prayers of the ſaints.

Ver. 20. For which I am an ambaſſador in bonds, &c.] The character the Apoſtle bore, was that of an ambaſſador; and he was an ambaſſador from and for Chriſt, in his room and ſtead; he repreſented him, he was ſent by him, and entruſted by him with the Goſpel; he gave him it, and a commiſſion to preach it, and furniſhed him with qualifications for it; ſuch as knowledge and faithfulneſs, wiſdom and prudence, courage and greatneſs of mind; and made his embaſſy ſucceſsful: and he was chiefly an ambaſſador to the Gentiles, which ſhowed great condeſcenſion in Chriſt to ſend him to them, and baſe ingratitude in the deſpiſers and rejecters of the Goſpel, for which he was an ambaſſador; for the embaſſy Chriſt's miniſters are ſent on, is the embaſſy of the Goſpel of peace: their buſineſs is to declare that men by nature are enemies to God; that peace is made by the blood of Chriſt for ſuch; by which means they are made uſeful to conciliate the minds of men to God's way of ſalvation, and to bring them to ſubmit to his government and laws: and when he adds, in bonds, or in a chain, he means, that he was in ſuch circumſtances, not for any crime, but for the Goſpel, for which he was an ambaſſador; and therefore was not aſhamed of his bonds, or chain, but rather gloried in them; and he makes mention of them to engage perſons to a regard to him as an ambaſſador, and to his embaſſy; for an ambaſſador, eſpecially an ambaſſador of Chriſt, that comes with his Goſpel, and more eſpecially that is ſuffering for it, ought to be received, heard, and honoured. That therein I may ſpeak boldly as I ought to ſpeak; that is, the Apoſtle beſeeches the ſaints to pray for him, that ſince he was an ambaſſador for the Goſpel, and in bonds, that he might ſpeak in it, or rather of it boldly and freely; that he might have both liberty from his bonds, and liberty in his ſoul, and freedom of ſpeech; and that he might uſe boldneſs in delivering his meſſage, as became an ambaſſador of Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 21. But that ye alſo may know my affairs, and how I do, &c.] Both his temporal and ſpiritual affairs; as that he was in bonds, and how he was ſupported under them, and of what uſe they were to others; how that he preached in his own hired houſe, and with what ſucceſs; and what miniſtring brethren he had with him to aſſiſt him; and in what condition was the church at Rome where he now was: the Apoſtle's life and actions would bear the light, and what he did was worthy of imitation, and muſt be both delightful and uſeful to know; and the account he ſends, by a meſſenger hereafter named, of whom he gives the following character, that credit might be the more readily given to his relation: Tychicus, a beloved brother, and faithful miniſter in the Lord, ſhall make known to you all things. This Tychicus was of Aſia, who accompanied the Apoſtle in his travels, and went with him to Rome, from whence he ſent him to ſeveral places to relate his caſe, and to know the ſtate of the churches, Col. iv. 7, 8. 2 Tim. iv. 12. Tit. iii. 12. He calls him a beloved brother; he was a brother, becauſe he was a partaker of the ſame grace, was of the ſame family and houſhold of God, and was of the ſame function, being a miniſter of the Goſpel, and was a beloved one: he was beloved of God and Chriſt, and of all the ſaints that knew him, and eſpecially a brother beloved of the Apoſtle Paul; and where there is brotherhood, there ſhould be love: he alſo ſtiles him a faithful miniſter in the Lord; he was a miniſter in the work and ſer-vice of the Lord, in things pertaining to him; he was one of his appointing, qualifying, and ſending; and he preached Chriſt and him crucified; and was a faithful one, to his Lord or maſter, in whoſe name he miniſtred, to the Goſpel which he miniſtred, and to the ſouls of men to whom he miniſtred; and a greater character he could not well have; and therefore it need not be doubted but that he would faithfully relate all things concerning the Apoſtle, and what he ſaid might be depended on as truth.

Ver. 22. Whom I have ſent unto you for the ſame purpoſe, &c.] Which ſhows the great concern the Apoſtle had for the churches, being willing to inform them of every thing that might be for their uſe and ſervice: that ye might know our affairs; temporal and ſpiritual, and not only the Apoſtle's affairs, but the affairs of thoſe that were with him, who were concerned in the ſame common cauſe: and that he might comfort your hearts; both by ſuch a relation, and by the miniſtry of the Goſpel to them: believers in Chriſt are ſometimes diſconſolate, by reaſon of indwelling ſin, ſatan's temptations, the hidings of God's face, afflictions and perſecutions, their own ſufferings, and thoſe of others; and it is the buſineſs of the miniſters of Chriſt to comfort them; their commiſſion is to ſpeak comfortably to them; and they are qualified for it, by inward comforts in their own ſouls; the Goſpel they preach, and the meſſage they bring, is of a comfortable nature; the Spirit of God acts by them, and with them as a comforter; and ſad indeed is the ſtate of Zion, or the church of Chriſt, when it has no comforters.

Ver. 23. Peace be to the brethren, &c.] The members of the church at Epheſus, who ſtood in a ſpiritual relation to each other; meaning all proſperity outward and inward, temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal; eſpecially peace of conſcience under the ſprinklings of the blood of Chriſt, and a view of peace made with God by that blood: and love with faith from God the Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; that is, an increaſe of theſe graces, and of the exerciſe of them, is wiſhed for; for otherwiſe theſe brethren had both theſe graces, faith and love; ſee ch. i. 15. which go together; faith works by love, and love diſcovers faith, and both are imperfect; faith has ſomething lacking in it, and love is apt to grow cold, and need reviving and increaſing; and theſe, and the increaſe of them, are from God the Father, who is the God of all grace, and from Jeſus Chriſt, in whom all fulneſs of grace is; and theſe things are equally deſired from the one as from the other, and ſhews a plurality of perſons in the Godhead, and the equality of Chriſt with the Father; and ſuch a wiſh expreſſes the Apoſtle's great love and affection for the brethren, and points out the things they ſtand in need of; and which, being aſked for ſuch, might be expected to be enjoyed.

Ver. 24. Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, &c.] Chriſt is the object of love, and a lovely object he is: he is to be loved becauſe of the lovelineſs of his perſon, and the tranſcendent excellencies that are in him; becauſe of his ſuitableneſs and fulneſs as a ſaviour; and becauſe of his great love ſhown to his church and people; and becauſe of the relations he ſtands in to them, and the communion they have with him: love to Chriſt is a grace of the Spirit, and is in all believers; and tho' it is imperfect, and ſometimes cold, it will abide for ever; it ought to be univerſal and ſuperlative; all of Chriſt is to be loved, and he is to be loved above all: and it ſhows itſelf in a value for his Goſpel, and the truths of it; in an eſteem of his ordinances, and a regard to his commands; in parting with all for Chriſt, when called for; and in bearing all for his ſake; in a well-pleaſedneſs in his company and preſence, and in a concern for his abſence, and in an uneaſineſs until he is enjoyed again: it ſhould be fervent, and conſtant, and cordial, and, as here ſaid, in ſincerity; from the heart, and with all the heart, and without hypocriſy; not in word only, but in deed and in truth; which appears when he is loved, as before obſerved: and the Apoſtle wiſhes grace to all ſuch ſincere and hearty lovers of him; by which may be meant a freſh diſcovery of the free grace, love, and favour of God in Chriſt to them; and a freſh ſupply of grace from the fulneſs of it in Chriſt; and a larger meaſure of the grace of the Spirit to carry on the good work begun in them; as well as a continuation of the Goſpel of the grace of God with them, and an increaſe of ſpiritual gifts. Grace may be connected with the word tranſlated ſincerity, and be rendered grace with incorruption; or incorruptible grace, as true grace is an incorruptible ſeed; or grace with immortality; and ſo the Apoſtle wiſhes not only for grace here, but for eternal happineſs and glory hereafter; and then cloſes the Epiſtle with an Amen, as a confirmation and aſſeveration of the truth of the doctrines contained in it, and as expreſſive of his earneſt deſire that the ſeveral petitions in it might be granted, and of his faith and confidence that they would be fulfilled.

The ſubſcription, written from Rome to the Epheſians by Tychicus, ſeems to be right; for that this Epiſtle was written to the Epheſians, the inſcription ſhows; and that it was written when the Apoſtle was a priſoner at Rome, appears from ch. iii. 1. and iv. 1. and vi. 20. and that it was ſent by Tychicus, ſeems very likely from ch. vi. 21, 22.

AN EXPOSITION, &c.

The Epiſtle of PAUL the Apoſtle to the PHILIPPIANS.

PHILIPPI was a Roman colony, and the chief city of one part of Macedonia, Acts xvi. 12. it is by Appianus called Datos, which was its original name; and by Diodorus Siculus it is called Crenidæ [a], from the fountains about it; and it took its name Philippi, from Philip king of Macedon, father of Alexander the great, who rebuilt and fortified it; near this place a famous battle was fought, and a victory obtained by Auguſtus Cæſar and Mark Antony, over Brutus and Caſſius; it is now called Chrixopolis, properly Chryſopolis, from the plenty of golden mines near it: here the Apoſtle was directed by a viſion, to go and preach the Goſpel; and which was ſucceeded, to the converſion of Lydia, and the jailor, and their families; which laid the foundation of a Goſpel church in this place, to whom this Epiſtle is written; and which was written by the Apoſtle when he was a priſoner at Rome, as many things in it ſhew; for he more than once makes mention of his bonds, and of theſe being made manifeſt in Cæſar's palace, and of ſome of Cæſar's houſhold ſending their chriſtian ſalutations to this church: Dr. Hammond makes the date of this Epiſtle to be the year 59, and Dr. Lightfoot places it in the year 60, and the ſixth of Nero: the occaſion of it was this, the Philippians to whom the Apoſtle was very dear, he being the firſt preacher of the Goſpel to them, and the inſtrument of their converſion, hearing that he was a priſoner at Rome, ſend their miniſter and paſtor Epaphroditus to him, to viſit him, and by him a preſent to ſupport him under his afflicted circumſtances, and who related to him the caſe of this church; and at his departure he ſent by him this letter; the deſign of which is, to expreſs his love and affection to them; to give them an account of his bonds, and the uſefulneſs of them, and how he was ſupported under them; to encourage them under all their afflictions and perſecutions, they endured for the ſake of Chriſt; to excite them to love, unity, and peace, among themſelves; to caution them againſt falſe teachers, Judaizing chriſtians, that were for joining Moſes and Chriſt, law and Goſpel, works and grace together, in the buſineſs of ſalvation; to exhort them to a holy life and converſation, and to return them thanks for their kind preſent.

CHAP. I.

THIS chapter contains the inſcription of the Epiſtle; the Apoſtle's ſalutation of the Philippians; an account of his thankſgivings, prayers, and affection for them, and confidence of them; a narrative of his ſufferings, and the uſe of them; and an exhortation to a converſation becoming the Goſpel, to abide by it, and ſuffer chearfully for it. The inſcription is in ver. 1. in which are mentioned by name, the perſons that ſubſcribed the Epiſtle, Paul and Timothy; and who are deſcribed by their character, ſervants of Jeſus Chriſt; and alſo the perſons to whom the Epiſtle was ſent, by the place of their abode, Philippi; the members of the church by their general character, ſaints in Chriſt Jeſus; and the officers of it, by thoſe that are peculiar to them as ſuch, biſhops and deacons: the ſalutation is in ver. 2. and then follows a thankſgiving for them to God, which was made in prayer, and upon every remembrance of them at the throne of grace, and that for their conſtant fellowſhip in the Goſpel, ver. 3, 4, 5. and the Apoſtle expreſſes his ſtrong confidence of the good work of grace being begun in them, and of the performance of it, until the day of Chriſt; grounded upon a judgment of charity, and a belief of their being partakers of the ſame grace with himſelf, ver. 6, 7. and declares the moſt tender and affectionate love to them, for the truth of which he calls God to witneſs, ver. 8. and as a proof of it, puts up ſeveral petitions for them; that they might have an increaſe of love, and ſpiritual knowledge, judgment, and ſenſe, that ſo they might be capable of trying and approving things that differ, and which are the moſt excellent of them; that they might be ſincere and harmleſs in their lives, and always doing good works in the ſtrength of Chriſt, and to the glory of God, ver. 9, 10, 11. next follows an account of his bonds and impriſonment, and the uſefulneſs of them; as that they were for the further ſpread of the Goſpel in many places, and even in Cæſar's palace, ver. 12, 13. yea, by means of them ſeveral of the miniſtring brethren were the more emboldened to preach the Goſpel without fear of men; tho' there was a difference among them, ſome preached Chriſt of envy, ſtrife, and contention, thinking to add to the Apoſtle's troubles, and others, of good-will, and of love to the Apoſtle, who they knew was ſet for the defence of the Goſpel, ver. 14, 15, 16, 17. upon all which the Apoſtle gives his ſentiments, and makes his reflexions, that whatever were the views of ſome men in preaching, it was, and ever would be, conſtant matter of joy to him that Chriſt was preached, ver. 18. yea, he was ſatisfied, that the ill deſigned by ſome to him would be over-ruled for his good, by means of the prayers of the ſaints, and the ſupply of the Spirit; for he had a ſure and well-grounded hope and expectation, that he ſhould never be brought to ſhame and confuſion, but that Chriſt would be magnified in him living and dying; for he knew that both his life, and his death, would be gain to Chriſt, or that it would be for the glory of Chriſt, for him to live, and his own gain ſhould he die, ver. 19, 20, 21. which put him in a ſtrait what was moſt eligible in this caſe, whether to live in the fleſh, or depart out of the world; ſeeing to live in the fleſh, and labour in the miniſtry, were fruitful and profitable, and more neceſſary and uſeful for the churches of Chriſt, and to die, and be with Chriſt were better for himſelf, ver. 22, 23, 24. but upon maturely weighing things on both ſides, like one of a truly noble public ſpirit, he inclines to the former; nay, is perſuaded, that he ſhould continue longer to be an inſtrument of increaſing the faith and joy of the Lord's people, which he knew would abound in Chriſt on his account, ſhould he be reſtored again, ver. 25, 26. And then he concludes the chapter with an exhortation to the Philippians, to order their converſation agreeable to the Goſpel of Chriſt, and to continue firm and unanimous in it, and uſe their utmoſt endeavours to keep it themſelves, and ſpread it among others, ver. 27. being not daunted and intimidated by the perſecutions of men, which to the perſecutors was a ſign of perdition, looked darkly, and with an ill aſpect upon them, but to the perſecuted was a token that they had an intereſt in that ſalvation which is of God, ver. 28. for as it is a gift of grace to believe in Chriſt, ſo likewiſe to ſuffer for him, ver. 29. to which the Apoſtle animates them by his own example, that which they were called unto being no other than what they had ſeen endured by him, and had heard concerning him, ver. 30.

[a] Vid. Ptolom. Geograph. l. 3. c. 13.

Ver. 1. Paul and Timotheus the ſervants of Jeſus Chriſt, &c.] The Apoſtle ſets his own name firſt, as being not only ſuperior to Timothy in age, in office, and in character, but the ſole writer of this Epiſtle. The reaſons of his joining Timothy with him are, becauſe he was with him when he firſt preached at Philippi, and ſo was known unto the Philippians, and reſpected by them; and becauſe he was about to ſend him to them again, whoſe commendations he enlarges on in the Epiſtle itſelf; and to let them ſee, that there was a continued agreement between them in affection and doctrine. It ſhews indeed great humility in the Apoſtle to join with him one ſo young, and ſo much inferior to him on all accounts; tho' it muſt be obſerved, that Timothy was not a partner with him in compoſing the Epiſtle; he only joined in the ſalutation to this church, and approved of the letter to it, and might be the amanuenſis of the Apoſtle; but had no hand in the Epiſtle itſelf, which was dictated by Paul under divine inſpiration. He chuſes a character which agreed to them both; he does not ſay Apoſtles, for Timothy was no Apoſtle, tho' he himſelf was, but ſervants of Jeſus Chriſt; not of men; nor did they ſeek to pleaſe men by preaching the doctrines and commandments of men, and which are ſuited to the carnal reaſonings, luſts, and pleaſures of men; for then the character here aſſumed would not belong to them: but ſervants of Chriſt; and that not in ſuch ſenſe only, as all mankind are, or in right ought to be, ſince all are his creatures, and therefore ought to ſerve him; nor merely as all the ſaints in common are, being bought with the price of Chriſt's blood, and being effectually called by his grace, and ſo made willing to ſerve him from a principle of love, without ſervile fear, and with a view to his glory; but as miniſters of the word, and preachers of the Goſpel; they were his ſervants in the Goſpel, they ſerved him under the miniſterial character, and as ſuch were the ſervants of the moſt high God, the king of kings, and lord of lords; ſo that this title is far from being mean and deſpicable, it is high, honourable, and glorious. To all the ſaints in Chriſt Jeſus which are at Philippi, with the biſhops and deacons. The perſons to whom this Epiſtle is inſcribed are here deſcribed by the place of their abode, Philippi, and by the various characters they bore in the church; which was at this time very numerous, conſiſting of many members, and of proper officers, and are both taken notice of here. The members are meant by all the ſaints in Chriſt Jeſus; they were ſaints or holy perſons, not by Moſes and his law; not by ceremonial ablutions and ſacrifices, which only ſanctified to the purifying of the fleſh, but could not take away ſin, or cleanſe from it; nor by themſelves and their moral righteouſneſs; for though thereby men may outwardly appear holy and righteous, yet they remain inwardly unholy and impure; nor by baptiſm, which has no regenerating nor ſanctifying virtue in it; if perſons are not ſaints before that, they are never by it; it leaves them as it finds them, and neither takes away original or actual ſin: but theſe were ſaints in and by Chriſt; they were become holy in conſequence of being in Chriſt; men are firſt in Chriſt, and then ſaints in him; they are choſen in him before the world began to be holy, and in time are made new men, new creatures, are created in him unto good works by virtue of their being in him; hence he ſanctifies his church and people by his blood, they being ſo nearly related to him, and intereſted in him, and he in them; hence they being firſt of God in Chriſt, he is made ſanctification to them; and hence internal holineſs is wrought in them from Chriſt, by his Spirit; which being begun is carried on, and will be performed until the day of Chriſt; and which was the happy caſe of theſe Philippians, as the Apoſtle was confident of. The officers of this church were the biſhops and deacons. The biſhops were the paſtors, elders, and overſeers of the church, for a biſhop and an elder is one and the ſame; ſee Acts xx. 17, 28. where the elders of the church at Epheſus are called overſeers or biſhops; for the ſame word is uſed there as here; and the Syriac verſion here renders the word by קשישא, elders: and they deſign no other than common and ordinary paſtors; who have the name of elders from their age, gravity, and ſeniority; and that of biſhops and overſeers from the nature of their office, which is to feed, watch, inſpect, and take the overſight of the flock, miniſter ſound doctrine to them, and preſerve them from error and hereſies. It ſeems by this, and the inſtance of the church at Epheſus, that there were, and ſo may be, where there is neceſſity for it, more paſtors or biſhops than one in a church; unleſs it can be thought that there were more churches than one in each of theſe cities; or that the paſtors of adjacent churches are here included; neither of which ſeem to be a clear caſe, but the contrary: but then theſe paſtors or biſhops were all upon an equal foot; one had not any authority or power over another, or more authority than another; they were not metropolitan or dioceſan biſhops, but paſtors of a particular church; and were neither lords over one another, nor of God's heritage. The deacons were ſuch as ſerved tables, the Lord's table, the miniſters table, and the poors table; took care of the ſecular affairs of the church, received and diſburſed monies, kept the churches accounts, and provided every thing neceſſary for its temporal good. The one ſort of theſe officers were concerned with the ſouls and ſpiritual eſtate of the members of the church; the others with their bodies and temporal eſtate, by viſiting the ſick, relieving the poor, &c. and both theſe exhibit the true primitive plan of church-offices and diſcipline; there being no other order of offices or officers, in a chriſtian church of divine inſtitution, but paſtors and deacons; whatever elſe is introduced is without warrant, and comes from the man of ſin. Theſe officers are mentioned by the Apoſtle, not only to ſhew his reſpect to them, but to obſerve to the members of this church, that they ought to eſteem them highly for their works ſake; theſe being offices of great importance and uſefulneſs to the church, which, by having ſuch, was a truly organized church of Chriſt.

Ver. 2. Grace be unto you, &c.] This form of ſalutation is uſed by the Apoſtle in all his Epiſtles; ſee the note on Rom. i. 7.

Ver. 3. I thank my God, &c.] After the inſcription and ſalutation follows a thankſgiving, the object of which is God; to whom thanks is to be given at the remembrance of his name, and the perfections of his nature, and for all his mercies, temporal and ſpiritual. The Apoſtle expreſſes his propriety and intereſt in him, calling him my God; thereby diſtinguiſhing him from all others, the nominal and fictitious gods of the Gentiles, and the idols and luſts of mens hearts; he was the God whom he ſerved in the Goſpel, by whom he was ſent, and from whom he received all his furniture, and to whom he was accountable. He had a ſpecial, particular, covenant intereſt in him, had knowledge of it, and faith in it; and therefore could draw nigh to God with freedom, uſe confidence, plead promiſes, expect favours, and do all he did, whether in a way of prayer, or praiſe in faith, and therefore was acceptable unto God. This work of thankſgiving he was often employed in on account of theſe Philippians, even, ſays he, upon every remembrance of you; that is, as often as I remember you, or make mention of you to God at the throne of grace; it being a cuſtomary thing with the Apoſtle to mention by name the ſeveral churches, the care of which was upon him, in his prayers to God; ſee Rom. i. 9. Eph. i. 16. 1 Theſſ. i. 2. and ſo he uſed to mention this church; and whenever he did, it was with thankfulneſs. The Arabic verſion reads it, for, or concerning all your remembrance; meaning of himſelf, and as if the ſenſe was, that he gave thanks to God for their remembrance of him at all times, and particularly at that time, by ſending him relief in his preſent circumſtances. But the former ſenſe is preferable.

Ver. 4. Always in every prayer of mine for you all, &c.] The Apoſtle was a praying believer, and a praying miniſter: notwithſtanding all his gifts, and graces, and high attainments, he was not above the work and duty of prayer, and in which he was ſenſible he ſtood in need of the aſſiſtance and direction of the Spirit of God. As ſoon as he was converted he prayed, and continued to do ſo without ceaſing, as he himſelf directs; he was conſtant and aſſiduous at the throne of grace, and was concerned for others, as well as himſelf, for all the churches, and for this church, and all the ſaints in it. Making requeſt with joy; for what God had done for them, and continued with them. Requeſts are to be made known to God with thankſgiving. When we requeſt a favour of him, it becomes us to return thanks for what we have received from him. Thankſgiving is a branch of prayer; as we have always mercies to aſk for, we have always mercies to be thankful for.

Ver. 5. For your fellowſhip in the Goſpel, &c.] Or for your communication unto the Goſpel; that is, to the ſupport of it. Theſe Philippians were one of the churches of Macedonia the Apoſtle ſo highly commends for their liberality in 2 Cor. viii. 1, 2, 3. they had been very communicative to him, and thoſe that were with him, from the beginning of the Goſpel being preached to them; as the inſtances of Lydia and the jaylor ſhew, and which are taken notice of in this Epiſtle, ch. iv. 15, 16. And this ſame generous ſpirit ſtill continued, of which their preſent by Epaphroditus was an evidence; and for this the Apoſtle gives thanks, not only that they had an ability to ſupport the Goſpel, and aſſiſt Goſpel miniſters, but that they were willing to communicate, and did communicate, readily and chearfully, largely and liberally; or this may intend their participation in the Goſpel, as the Arabic verſion renders it. The Goſpel was in a very wonderful and providential manner brought unto them, and it was attended with mighty power to the converſion of them; they received it with joy and gladneſs, and chearfully ſubmitted to the ordinances of it; they had much light into it, and ſpiritual knowledge of it; and were made partakers of the bleſſings of grace, which are revealed and exhibited in it, and of the exceeding great and precious promiſes of it, for which the Apoſtle gives thanks to God; for all this was from him, and a wonderful inſtance of his grace it was. Moreover, through the Goſpel being thus brought unto them, and ſucceeded among them, they became a Goſpel-church, and had, through the Goſpel, and the ordinances of it, fellowſhip one with another; yea, they had fellowſhip with the Father, and his Son Jeſus Chriſt, unto which they were called by the Goſpel: and in this they remained from the firſt day until now; they continued in the Goſpel which they were made partakers of, and in fellowſhip with one another, in breaking of bread, and in prayer, and in hearing the word which they conſtantly attended to, and were bleſſed with communion with Father, Son, and Spirit to that time; and therefore the Apoſtle continued from the firſt of their receiving the Goſpel, to that moment, to give thanks to God for them on that account: for this laſt clauſe may be connected with the words in ver. 3. I thank my God, as well as with thoſe immediately preceding, your fellowſhip in the Goſpel; and ſhews not only their perſeverance in the Goſpel, from the firſt to the preſent time, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it, for which he was abundantly thankful; but the continuance of his thankfulneſs on that account, from his firſt acquaintance with them to that time.

Ver. 6. Being confident of this very thing, &c.] The reaſon of his thankſgiving, and of his making requeſt with joy continually on the behalf of this church, was the confidence and full perſuaſion he had of this ſame thing; of which he could be as much aſſured as of any thing in the world: that he which hath begun a good work in you, will perform it until the day of Jeſus Chriſt; by this good work is not meant the preaching of the Goſpel among them, nor a Goſpel church-ſtate ſet up in the midſt of them; for though the preaching of the Goſpel was a good work, and iſſued well in the converſion of many, in their edification and comfort, and which was ſtill continued; and though a Goſpel church-ſtate was erected among them, and was now flouriſhing, yet the Apoſtle could not aſſure himſelf of the continuance of either of them, eſpecially until the day of Chriſt; and both have been removed from thence many hundreds of years ago: nor is their liberal communication to the ſupport of the Goſpel intended; for tho' this was a good work, yet this was not wrought by God but by themſelves, and was not wrought in them, but done by them; nor their good lives and converſations. The Syriac verſion indeed renders it good works; but theſe can't be deſigned, for the ſame reaſons as before; for tho' they are good things, and anſwer many valuable ends and purpoſes, yet they are external works done by men, and not internal ones wrought in them by God; wherefore by it is undoubtedly meant the work of grace upon their hearts, ſometimes called the work of faith, becauſe that is a principal part of it: this is God's work, and not man's, as may be concluded from the nature of the work itſelf, which is the transforming of a man by the renewing of him, a regeneration, a reſurrection, and a creation, and therefore requires almighty power; and from the condition man is in by nature, he is dead in ſin, and has no power to act ſpiritually, and much leſs what is equal to ſuch a work as this; he has no will, deſire, and inclination to it, but all the reverſe; and if he had, he could no more effect it, than the dry bones in Ezekiel's viſion could cauſe themſelves to live. This is the work of God. Sometimes it is aſcribed to the Father, who regenerates, calls by his grace, reveals his Son, and draws ſouls unto him; and ſometimes to the Son, who quickens whom he will, whoſe ſpirit is given, whoſe image is inſtamp'd, and out of whoſe fulneſs grace is received; but more commonly it is attributed to the Spirit, who is a Spirit of regeneration, ſanctification, and faith: and this is a good work, as it muſt needs be, ſince it is God's work; he is the efficient cauſe of it; his good-will and pleaſure, his grace and mercy are the moving cauſe of it, and not mens works; and his good word is the means of it. The matter of it is good; it is an illumination of the underſtanding, a ſubduing of the will, a taking away of the ſtony heart, and a giving of an heart of fleſh, an infuſion of ſpiritual life, a formation of Chriſt in the ſoul, and an implantation of all grace there: it is good in its effects; it makes a man a good man, and fits and qualifies him to perform good works, which without it he cannot do; it makes a man a proper habitation for God, and gives him meetneſs for the heavenly inheritance. And this is an internal work, a work begun in the ſaints; nothing external is this work; not an outward reformation, which, when right, is the fruit of this good work; nor external humiliation for ſin; nor a ceſſation from the groſſer acts of ſin; nor a conformity and ſubmiſſion to Goſpel-ordinances; all which may be where this work is not: but it is ſomething within a man; as appears from the names by which it goes; ſuch as Spirit, ſo called, becauſe it is of a ſpiritual nature, wrought by the Spirit of God, and has its ſeat in the ſpirit of man; it is called the inward man, which is renewed day by day; a ſeed that remains in him, and a root which is out of ſight, and oil in the veſſel, the heart, as diſtinct from the lamp of an outward profeſſion: as alſo from the ſeveral things, which, together, make up the ſubject of it; it is the underſtanding which is enlightened; the will which is ſubdued; the heart and inward parts in which the laws of God are written; the mind and conſcience, which are ſprinkled with the blood of Chriſt, and cleanſed; and the affections, which are ſet on divine objects. This is a begun work, and but a begun one. It may be ſaid to be begun as ſoon as light is let into the ſoul by the Spirit of God; when it ſees its loſt ſtate, and need of a ſaviour, for as the firſt thing in the old creation was light, ſo in the new; when the fear of God is put into the heart, which is the beginning of wiſdom; when love appears in the ſoul to God, to Chriſt, to his people, word, and ordinances; and when there are the ſeeing, venturing, and relying acts of faith on Chriſt, tho' there is a great deal of darkneſs, trembling, and unbelief; and when it is got thus far, and even much further, it is but a begun work; 'tis not yet finiſhed and perfect: this appears from the ſeveral parts of this work, which are imperfect, as faith, hope, love, knowledge, &c. from the indwelling of ſin, and corruption in the beſt of ſaints; from their various continual wants and neceſſities; from their diſclaiming perfection in this life, and their deſires after it. But the Apoſtle was confident, and ſo may every good man be confident, both for himſelf and others, that God who has, and where-ever he has begun the good work of grace, will perform, finiſh it, or bring it to an end, as the word here uſed ſignifies: and this the ſaints may aſſure themſelves of, from many conſiderations; as from the nature of the work itſelf, which is called living water, becauſe it always continues, a well of it, becauſe of its abundance, and is ſaid to ſpring up to eternal life; becauſe it is inſeparably connected with it, where there is grace, there will be glory; grace is the beginning of glory, and glory the perfection of grace; this work of grace is an incorruptible ſeed, and which remains in the ſaints, and can never be loſt; it is a principle of life, the root of which is hid in Chriſt, and that itſelf is maintained by him, and can never be deſtroyed by men or devils: and alſo from the concern God has in it, who is unchangeable in his nature, purpoſes, promiſes, gifts, and calling; who is a rock, and his work is perfect ſooner or later; who is faithful, and will never forſake the work of his hands, and has power to accompliſh it; and who has promiſed his people, that they ſhall grow ſtronger and ſtronger, that they ſhall not depart from him, and he will never leave them. Moreover, this may be concluded from the indwelling of the Spirit, as a ſpirit of ſanctification, as the earneſt and ſeal of the inheritance, and that for ever; and from the interceſſion and fulneſs of grace in Chriſt, and the ſaints union to him, and ſtanding in him; as well as from the impotency of any to hinder the performance of this work, as ſin, ſatan, or the world: to which may be added the glory of all the three perſons herein concerned; for if this work is not finiſhed, the glory of God the Father in election, in the covenant of grace, in the contrivance of ſalvation, in the miſſion of his Son, the glory of Chriſt in redemption, and of the Spirit in ſanctification, would be entirely loſt: wherefore it may be depended on, this work will be performed where-ever 'tis begun, and that until the day of Jeſus Chriſt; meaning either the day of death, when Chriſt takes the ſouls of believers to himſelf, and they ſhall be for ever with him, when this work of grace upon the ſoul will be finiſhed; for God, who is the guide of his people, will be their God and guide even unto death: or elſe the laſt day, the day of judgment, the reſurrection day, when Chriſt ſhall appear and raiſe the dead, and free the bodies of the ſaints from all their bondage, corruption, vileneſs, and weakneſs, which will be putting the laſt and finiſhing hand to this good work; nor will even the bodies of the ſaints be quitted by the Spirit of God till this is done.

Ver. 7. Even as it is meet for me to think this of you all, &c.] Some connect theſe words with ver. 3, 4, 5. as if the Apoſtle's ſenſe was, that it became him to be thus affected to them, and mindful of them in his prayers, to make requeſt for them with joy, and give thanks for their fellowſhip in the Goſpel, and continuance in it; but they ſeem rather to refer to his confidence of the good work begun in them, being perform'd until the day of Chriſt, and which was but juſt and right in him to entertain and aſſert; and may be underſtood either of a judgment of faith, or a judgment of charity: in a judgment of faith the Apoſtle might be confident, and ſo may every other man, that all that believe in Chriſt truly, and have a good work begun in them, that ſhall be finiſhed; for nothing is more certain, nor is there any thing that a man can be more confident of, than this, that he that believes in Chriſt ſhall be ſaved; and this the Apoſtle was fully perſuaded of with reſpect to every one in this church, that was a believer in Chriſt; and in a judgment of charity, it was meet and proper, juſt and right, to think, judge, hope, and believe ſo of every one of them, ſince there was nothing in their profeſſion, conduct, and converſation, ſhewing the contrary: becauſe I have you in my heart; or you have me in your heart; and either reading carries in it a reaſon why it was fit and right that he ſhould ſo think and judge concerning them; becauſe they were, as the Syriac verſion renders it, put or laid upon his heart; whenever he was at the throne of grace, his heart was enlarged on their account, his affections were wonderfully drawn out towards them, and they were ever in his mind, both in his bonds, and in the defence of the Goſpel; whether in the priſon, or in the pulpit, or whatever he was about in the cauſe or affairs of religion, they were in his heart and thoughts; from whence he concluded they muſt belong to God, the good work muſt be in them, and would be performed; 'tis a token for good when the Lord lays the caſe of any upon the hearts of his miniſters, or any of his people: and alſo, becauſe they had him in their hearts, they were affectionate to him, ever thoughtful and mindful of him; and had lately given a ſpecimen of their love to him, as a ſervant of Chriſt, and priſoner of the Lord; and as they, ſo he might know, that they had paſſed from death to life, becauſe they loved the brethren, and him in particular for his work ſake, who had been an uſeful inſtrument in the hand of God among them: and another reaſon follows, inaſmuch as both in my bonds, and in the defence and confirmation of the Goſpel, ye all are partakers of my grace; or partakers with me of grace; meaning either that they were partakers of the ſame electing, redeeming, adopting, juſtifying, pardoning, and regenerating grace, as he was; had obtained the ſame like precious faith in Chriſt, and knowledge of him, as he had, tho' not to the ſame degree; and therefore might well be aſſured of the performance of the good work in them, having no more to doubt of their ſalvation than of his own: or rather by grace, or as the Vulgate Latin verſion reads it, joy, he deſigns his ſufferings for Chriſt, and the ſake of his Goſpel; which he ſo calls, becauſe it was given him by God, as a token of his favour, and a mark of honour and reſpect, to ſuffer for Chriſt, as well as believe in him; and therefore rejoiced that he was counted worthy to ſuffer ſhame for his name. Now theſe Philippians were partakers with him of this, both in his bonds, by ſympathizing with him, praying for him, ſending relief unto him, and by ſuffering ſuch like things themſelves; and in the defence and confirmation of the Goſpel, whether by ſuffering, preaching, or writing; they ſtood by him, encouraged and aſſiſted him, when others forſook him, and laid difficulties and diſcouragements in his way; on account of all which it was but meet and proper he ſhould entertain ſuch ſentiments of them as before expreſſed.

Ver. 8. For God is my record, &c.] Which is all one as ſwearing by him; 'tis in form of an oath, being a ſolemn appeal to him as the ſearcher of hearts, for the uprightneſs of his mind, the ſincerity of his expreſſions, and the ſtrength of his affections: how greatly I long after you all; the common members, as well as the biſhops and deacons, the weak as well as the ſtrong believers, the poor as well as the rich; the Apoſtle's reſpects were univerſal, and without diſtinction: he longed after their ſpiritual welfare, an increaſe of gifts and grace among them; he was their ſpiritual Father, and he hankered after them, as parents after their children; he longed to ſee them, that he might enjoy their company and converſation, have communion with them, and impart ſome ſpiritual gift unto them: and this he did in the bowels of Jeſus Chriſt; not with an human and carnal affection, but with a chriſtian and ſpiritual one; with a love which came from Chriſt, and was in imitation of him, and on account of their being in him, loved by him, belonging to him, and being believers in him: it was in the moſt tender manner that he loved them, and was affected to them; the phraſe denotes, that his love towards them was internal, in his heart, and was moſt tender and ſtrong; and like to that tender concern Chriſt had for them, and which he ſtirred up in him.

Ver. 9. And this I pray, that your love may abound yet more and more, &c.] As a proof of his great affection for them, he puts up this petition on their account; which ſuppoſes that they had love, as they muſt certainly have, ſince the good work of grace was begun in them; for where-ever the work of the Spirit of God is, there is love, which is a fruit of the Spirit; and where there is not love, there cannot be that good work; for it ſignifies nothing what a man ſays, nor what he has, nor what he does, if love be wanting; but this grace was in theſe Philippians, they had love to God, to Chriſt, to one another, to all the ſaints, and to the miniſters of the Goſpel, and particularly to the Apoſtle, of which they had lately given him a proof: and it alſo ſuppoſes, that this grace, which was implanted in them in regeneration, was in exerciſe, which is meant by its abounding; it was not only a principle in the heart, and expreſſed by the mouth, but it was in action; it lay not in word, and in tongue, but ſhewed itſelf towards the objects of it in deed and in truth; and it was in a very large and lively exerciſe; it abounded, it flowed and overflowed; it roſe up out of the heart, as water out of a fountain; it was as grace is ſaid to be, a well of living water, ſpringing up, and ſpreading itſelf various ways; wherefore the Apoſtle did not pray that they might have love, nor merely that their love might abound, but that it might abound yet, might continue to abound, that there might be no ſtop put to its flow and exerciſe, and ſo concerns the perſeverance of it, and its actings; and that it might abound more and more; which regards the increaſe of it, and enlargement of its exerciſe. The Syriac verſion reads it, that it may be multiplied and abound; intimating, that ſpiritual love can't be exceeded in; there's no going to an extreme in the exerciſe of it; natural love may, but not ſpiritual; God and Chriſt can never be loved too much, nor ſaints, as ſaints, tho' they may as men: wherefore let love abound ever ſo much to theſe objects, it is capable of abounding more and more, without any danger of exceſs; and it is to be wiſhed for; for where it is ever ſo large and abundant in its actings, it is not perfect, nor will it be in this life; ſo that there is always room for ſuch a petition; beſides, the Apoſtle knew how apt love is to grow cold, and ſaints to ſink in their ſpiritual affections thro' the prevalence of ſin, the cares of the world, and temptations of ſatan: he adds, in knowledge, and in all judgment; that is, either with knowledge and judgment; and the ſenſe be, that as their love abounded, ſo their knowledge might be increaſed, and their judgment in ſpiritual things be better informed and eſtabliſhed. Some chriſtians are more affectionate, and leſs knowing; others are more knowing, and leſs affectionate; it is well when love and knowledge go and keep pace together: or it may be rendered by knowledge, ſuggeſting, that love is increaſed thereby, which is true; for the more ſaints know of God and Chriſt, the more they love them; and the more they know of one another's grace and experience, the more they love each other: by knowledge, may be meant the knowledge of God; not that which is general, is by the light of nature, and is very obſcure and inſufficient to ſalvation; but that which is ſpecial, is of God in Chriſt, as a God gracious and merciful, as a Covenant-God and Father in him; and which at beſt is imperfect, and needs increaſing: and alſo knowledge of Chriſt; not general, notional, and ſpeculative, as that he is the Son of God, the Meſſiah and Saviour of the world in common; but that which is ſpecial, ſpiritual, and ſaving; and which is a knowledge of approbation, whereby a ſoul approves of Chriſt above all others, as a Saviour; a fiducial one, whereby it truſts in him, and commits itſelf to him; an experimental and practical one, to which is joined a chearful obedience to his commands and ordinances, and becomes an appropriating one; yet is in this life imperfect, and ſo needs increaſing; and all means ſhould be uſed in order thereunto: moreover, the knowledge of one another may be included; an increaſe of which is neceſſary to promote brotherly love, and make communion with one another delightful and profitable. By all judgment, or ſenſe, as in the Greek text, is deſigned a ſpiritual apprehenſion, judgment, and ſenſation of things. The Syriac verſion renders it, all ſpiritual underſtanding, and may intend a ſpiritual perception, and ſenſe of the love of God ſhed abroad in the heart, an enlarged experience of the grace of God, and particularly faith, which is expreſſed by all the five ſenſes; as by ſeeing the Son, the glory, fulneſs, ſuitableneſs, and excellency of him, and the unſeen glories of another world; by hearing the joyful ſound, the voice of Chriſt in the Goſpel, ſo as to underſtand and diſtinguiſh it; by ſmelling a ſweet ſmell in the perſon, blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice of Chriſt, which are of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour to faith, as are alſo the things of God, and of the Spirit of God; and by taſting how good the Lord is, how ſweet is his word, and delicious his fruit; and by feeling, laying hold on Chriſt, embracing and handling him, the word of life: and now a believer having theſe his ſpiritual ſenſes exerciſed, he is capable of diſcerning between good and evil, and ſo of approving things moſt excellent; which is the end of this petition, as appears from the following words.

Ver. 10. That ye may approve things that are excellent, &c.] Or try things that differ. There are ſome things that differ one from other; as morality and grace, earthly things, and heavenly things, carnal and ſpiritual, temporal and eternal things, law and Goſpel, the doctrines of men, and the doctrines of Chriſt; all which differ as much as chaff and wheat, as gold, ſilver, precious ſtones, and wood, hay, ſtubble. Theſe are to be tried and proved; they are not to be received without diſtinction, but ſhould be examined, which is right and beſt to be choſen and preferr'd; and to ſuch trial and examination 'tis neceſſary that a man ſhould be transformed, by the renewing of his mind, that he ſhould have ſpiritual light, knowledge, and experience, have his ſpiritual ſenſes exerciſed to diſcern the difference of things, and alſo the guidance, direction, and influence of the Spirit of God: and this trial muſt be made, not according to carnal reaſon, and the judgment and dictates of it; for the moſt excellent things are above it, and out of its ſphere, and therefore judged fooliſh, and rejected by it; but according to the word of God, the ſcriptures of truth, in the light of the divine Spirit, and with ſpiritual judgment and ſenſe; when ſome things will be found excellent, as Chriſt, and the knowledge of him in his perſon, offices, grace, righteouſneſs, blood, ſacrifice, and ſatisfaction, and the ſeveral truths of the Goſpel relating to peace, pardon, juſtification, adoption, ſanctification, and eternal life; and of the ſeveral doctrines of the Goſpel, ſome will appear in their nature and uſe more excellent than others, more grand and ſublime; ſuch as concern the ſovereign and diſtinguiſhing grace of God, the glory of Chriſt, and the ſalvation of the elect; ſome being milk for babes, others meat for ſtrong men. And theſe being tried and proved, firſt by the word of God, and then by the experience of the ſaints, are to be approved above thouſands of gold and ſilver, and eſteemed more than our neceſſary food; even the ſincere milk of the word, as it is by new-born babes, as well as the ſtrong meat of it by the adult, and all to be highly valued and abode by, and held faſt. That ye may be ſincere; or pure, as the Syriac verſion renders it; pure as the ſun, diſcerned and judged by the light of it, as the word ſignifies, which diſcovers motes, faults, and flaws; in which, ſome think, is a metaphor taken either from the eagle, which holds up its young againſt the ſun, and ſuch as can bear the light of it ſhe retains as her own, but ſuch that cannot ſhe rejects as a ſpurious brood; or from perſons in traffick, who hold up the goods they are buying to the ſun, to ſee if they can obſerve any fault in them: ſo ſuch may be ſaid to be ſincere, or pure, who are pure in heart, life, and converſation, whoſe principles and practices will bear the teſt of light; ſuch are ſincere, who are like honey without wax, and fine flour without leaven, that have no mixture of corruption in doctrine, life, or manners; whoſe grace is genuine and right; whoſe faith is unfeigned; whoſe love to God, and Chriſt, and one another, is without diſſimulation; whoſe hope is lively, and of a ſoul-purifying nature, and is built on a good foundation; and whoſe repentance is attended with genuine effects, and proper fruits; whoſe principles are unmixed; who don't corrupt or adulterate the word of God, but deſire and retain the ſincere milk of it, and hold the myſtery of the faith in a pure conſcience; whoſe worſhip is alſo pure and ſpiritual, who worſhip God in ſpirit and truth, under the influence, and by the aſſiſtance of the Spirit of God, and with their whole hearts and ſpirits, and according to the truth of the Goſpel; who keep the ordinances as they were delivered, without any human inventions, corruptions, and mixtures; who are ſincere in their hearts, pure and ſound in heart, ſimple, plain hearted, and ſingle eyed; chuſe to be good, rather than ſeem to be ſo; whoſe deſires after God, and divine things, and whoſe affections for them, are true and real, and proceed from the bottom of their hearts; and who have their converſation in the world by the grace of God, in ſimplicity and godly ſincerity: and ſuch the Apoſtle wiſhes theſe ſaints to be, and adds, and without offence until the day of Chriſt; to God, as conſidered in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, in which they are perfectly without offence, and will always continue ſo; or in their walk and converſation before God, in which, tho' they may in many things offend, yet not be guilty of any notorious iniquity, and much leſs of living in it: and to themſelves, to their own conſciences, exerciſing a conſcience void of offence towards God and men; acting according to that light they have received, and thoſe principles they have embraced and profeſſed; deſiring to be kept from all evil, that it might not grieve and wound them; and doing nothing in things of an indifferent nature, with offence, or againſt the dictates of conſcience, and to the violation of it: and alſo to others, to Jew or Gentile, to the world, or to the church of God, by avoiding every thing that is offenſive to either; not good things, but evil ones, and thoſe that are indifferent; that peace may be preſerved, and their own good may not be evil ſpoken of; that the children of God may not be grieved, ſtaggered, and ſtumbled, nor ſinners hardened, or have any occaſion to blaſpheme. The phraſe denotes an harmleſs life and converſation, and a continuance in it to the end, to the day of death, or coming of our Lord, which is to be loved, longed, wiſhed, and looked for, and to be always had in view; and that to engage to a becoming life and converſation, with ſincerity, and without offence, ſince in that day all hearts and actions will be expoſed and laid open.

Ver. 11. Being filled with the fruits of righteouſneſs, &c.] Good works. Some think alms-deeds, or acts of liberality and bounty are here particularly intended; and that reſpect is had to the generoſity of theſe Philippians to the Apoſtle, and others: and true it is, that theſe are ſometimes ſo called, as in 2 Cor. ix. 10. but rather good works in general are meant, which are called fruits, becauſe like fruits, they ſpring from a ſeed, even from the incorruptible ſeed of grace in the heart, implanted there in regeneration; and becauſe they are owing, as the fruits of the earth are, to divine bounty and goodneſs, to the dews of grace, the riſing and bright ſhining of the ſun of righteouſneſs, and to the ſouth gale of the bleſſed Spirit, when brought forth aright; and alſo becauſe they are pleaſant and delightful, they are well-pleaſing to Chriſt, and are acceptable to God thro' Chriſt; and likewiſe, becauſe they are profitable, not to God, but to men: and they are ſtiled fruits of righteouſneſs, either of imputed righteouſneſs, the righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed without works, the effects of which are good works; for nothing more ſtrongly influences and engages men to the performance of good works, than a view of their free juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; hence there can be no juſtification by works, ſince theſe are the fruits and effects of juſtification, and not the cauſe: or of righteouſneſs and holineſs implanted in the ſoul by the Spirit of God, the new man, which is created unto good works, and in or unto righteouſneſs and true holineſs; and which naturally tends thereunto, and which ſtimulates and qualifies men for the performance of the ſame: or good works are ſo called, becauſe they are performed by a righteous man; for as none but a good tree can bring forth good fruit, ſo none but a tree of righteouſneſs can bear fruits of righteouſneſs; or none but a righteous man do works of righteouſneſs, which are truly ſuch: or becauſe they are ſuch as are done according to the righteous law of God; for this is a neceſſary requiſite of a good work, that it be according to the command and will of God; for otherwiſe, let it have never ſuch a ſhew of religion and goodneſs, 'tis no good work. The Alexandrian copy, the Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic verſions, read, fruit, in the ſingular number, but other copies and verſions, read, fruits; and the Apoſtle wiſhes, that theſe ſaints might be filled with them; that is, that they might be like trees laden with fruit, which have fruit on every branch, bough, and twigs; that they might abound in the performance of them, be ready to, and fruitful in every good work; not doing a few of one ſort only, but performing continually all manner of good works; and ſo be like fruitful trees that yield their fruit in their ſeaſon, and do not ceaſe from ſo doing, but ſtill bring forth fruit, and that in large quantities: which are by Jeſus Chriſt; who is the green fir-tree, from whom all fruit, as of grace, ſo of good works, is found; for all good works, which are truly and properly ſo, ſpring from union to Chriſt, and are owing to his grace: ſouls are married to Chriſt, that they may bring forth fruit unto God; they are created in him unto good works, and are engrafted in him the true vine; and thro' abiding in him, and deriving life, grace, and ſtrength from him, bear fruit, which otherwiſe they could not do: without Chriſt no good work can be performed; 'tis thro' him, ſtrengthening his people, they do all they do; for they are inſufficient to do any thing of themſelves, but his grace is ſufficient for them, and his ſtrength is made perfect in their weakneſs. He is the exemplar and pattern, according to which they do their good works; and they are motives drawn and taken from him, from his love, from the doctrines of grace relating to him, which are the moſt powerful, and do moſt ſtrongly work upon the ſaints to perform theſe things; and which, under his grace, and the influence of it, are directed unto the glory and praiſe of God: they are done by believers in Chriſt, not in order to obtain eternal life and happineſs for themſelves, which they know is the gift of God, and entirely owing to his free grace and abundant mercy; nor to gain honour and applauſe from men, but to glorify God; who is glorified when his people bring forth much fruit, and which alſo is the occaſion of others glorifying him likewiſe: and this end is neceſſary to a good work, that it be done to the glory of God; for if any thing elſe is in view and not that, let it have ever ſuch an appearance of a good work, it is none at all: and indeed, here we have all the requiſites of a good work; as that it ſhould be done according to the righteous law and will of God; that it ſprings from a principle of grace and holineſs; that it be performed in the name, grace, and ſtrength of Chriſt, and with a view to the honour and glory of God. The Ethiopic verſion reads, in or to his (Chriſt's) glory, and the praiſe of God; and the Arabic verſion thus, to the glory of God and his praiſe; and ſo the deſign of the clauſe is to ſhew, either that both the glory of Chriſt and the praiſe of God are concerned in every truly good work; or that the glory of God ſecretly, and his praiſe openly, are to be ſought therein; even all honour and glory, an abundance of it, and that continually; aſcribing nothing to ourſelves, but attributing all to him, acknowledging when we have done all we can, we are but unprofitable ſervants.

Ver. 12. But I would ye ſhould underſtand brethren, &c.] The church at Philippi having heard of the Apoſtle's troubles, he was very deſirous that they ſhould have a true and right underſtanding of them, and eſpecially of the uſe they had been of, and were like to be of more and more; and that partly that ſuch as were weak among them might not be offended and ſtaggered, and partly that all might be comforted; as alſo that they might be animated and encouraged hereby, to endure with patience and chearfulneſs, whatſoever afflictions might befal them for the ſake of Chriſt: his ſufferings are more obſcurely expreſſed in the next clauſe, and more clearly in the following verſe, that the things which happened unto me; by which he intends, not any thing done by him, or his labour in the miniſtry, which had been greatly ſucceded for the ſpread of the Goſpel; as the Syriac verſion ſuggeſts, rendering the phraſe, דסוערני דילי, that my work makes more abundant progreſs in the Goſpel; but his ſufferings on account of the Goſpel, which tho' ſaid to happen, were not things of chance but of appointment; for as all the ſufferings of Chriſt the head, were by the determinate counſel and foreknowledge of God, ſo are thoſe of all the members of his myſtical body, and of his miniſters who are appointed to theſe things, and they for them; of which Chriſt has given previous notice, ſo that they do not come unexpected, but are looked for by them; nor are they over diſtreſſed with them, being ſupported with the preſence, Spirit, grace, and favour of God; hence they can rejoice in them, in hope of the glory of God; and as the afflictions of Goſpel-miniſters, the quality and quantity of them, are fixed and ſettled by divine appointment, and which accordingly come upon them, ſo the uſe of them is alſo determined, and which have their ſure and certain effect as the Apoſtles had; for the very things by which men deſigned to have hindred the ſpread of the Goſpel, he ſays, have fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the Goſpel. The Goſpel, tho' it is good news and glad tidings of peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation by Chriſt; yet is very diſagreeable to carnal men, they are enemies to it, and do all they can to ſtop its progreſs, to ſhut the open door of it, and hinder its courſe by ſpeaking reproachfully of it, and writing againſt it, and eſpecially by perſecuting its profeſſors, and particularly its miniſters; which oftentimes proves rather a furtherance than an hindrance of it; for hereby the Goſpel, like gold and ſilver tried in the fire, ſhines out the more brightly, with more luſtre and glory, and has the greater influence on the minds of men; perſecution in one place has often been the means of carrying and ſpreading the Goſpel in many others; ſee Acts viii. 1, 5, 6. and xi. 19, 20, 21. and has been God's ordinance for the converſion of multitudes of ſouls, where it has been the fierceſt and hotteſt; inſomuch that it became a common ſaying in primitive times, that the blood of the martyrs was the ſeed of the church; and hereby alſo the Goſpel has been confirmed, and they that have embraced it have been the more eſtabliſhed in it. The Apoſtle's ſufferings and bonds, were for the confirmation and defence of the Goſpel.

Ver. 13. So that my bonds in Chriſt, &c.] What he had more darkly hinted before, he more clearly expreſſes here; the things that happened to him were his bonds; he was now a priſoner at Rome and in chains; tho' he had the liberty of dwelling alone in his own hired houſe, and of his friends coming to ſee him and hear him, yet he was bound with a chain, and under the care and guard of a ſoldier continually, who held one end of it. Theſe bonds of his were not for debt, which he took care not to run into, but choſe rather to work with his own hands, and ſo miniſtring to his own and the neceſſities of others, that he might not eat any man's bread for nought; nor for any capital crime, as murder, or theſt, or any thing that was worthy of death or of bonds; but his bonds were in Chriſt, or for Chriſt's ſake, for profeſſing Chriſt and preaching his Goſpel; he was a priſoner in the Lord, or for his ſake; ſee Epheſ. iv. 1. The uſe of his ſufferings, which is more generally ſignified in the preceding verſe, is here and in the next more particularly related, and the ſeveral inſtances of it given. Theſe his bonds for the ſake of Chriſt, he ſays, are manifeſt in all the palace, and in all other places, or my bonds are manifeſt in Chriſt, as the words may be read; that is, by the means of Chriſt, he cauſing them to be taken notice of by men, and ſome of the firſt rank: by his bonds being manifeſt may be meant he himſelf who was bound; who by his bonds became known to perſons, to whom in all probability he would otherwiſe have remained unknown; as to Felix, and Feſtus, and king Agrippa, and others in Cæſar's court: or the Goſpel for the ſake of which he was bound; this was made manifeſt and became known, not barely notionally, but ſavingly and experimentally; and even Chriſt himſelf the ſubſtance of it, for whom he was laid in bonds, by this means came to be known, in all the palace. The Arabic verſion reads it, in the palace of the Emperor. The word prætorium here uſed, ſignifies ſometimes the judgment hall, or court of judicature belonging to the Roman governors, as Herod and Pilate; ſee Acts xxiii. 35. John xviii. 28, 33. and xix. 9. and if it deſigns any ſuch court at Rome, then the ſenſe is, that thro' the Apoſtle's being ſent a priſoner to Rome, and his cauſe heard in the prætorium, or judgment-hall, he and the cauſe of his bonds came to be known by the judges in that court; and which might be the means of the converſion of ſome of them: ſometimes it ſignifies the general's pavilion in the camp, and ſometimes the Emperor's palace at Rome, he being the chief prætor or magiſtrate; and ſo here it ſeems to deſign Nero's houſe or court, where the Goſpel thro' the Apoſtle's bonds, had made its way to the converſion of many there; ſee chap. iv. 22. and in all other places; or as the Arabic verſion renders it, with all other men; for it may be underſtood either of men or places; and that Chriſt and his Goſpel came to be known thro' the Apoſtle's ſufferings, not only in the court of judicature where his cauſe was tried, or in Cæſar's palace, and to many of his courtiers, but in other places in Rome, and parts of the empire, and to many perſons there, both Jews and Gentiles; ſo that what was intended for the diſadvantage of the Goſpel, proved for the ſervice of it.

Ver. 14. And many of the brethren in the Lord, &c.] This is another inſtance of the uſefulneſs of the Apoſtle's ſufferings, and another proof of their being for the furtherance of the Goſpel; they were not only the means of the converſion of many that were without, but were very encouraging and ſtrengthening to them that were within the church, and to many that were in the miniſtry; who are called brethren, ſome real, others nominal; being partakers of the grace of God, at leaſt in profeſſion, or otherwiſe they would not have been fit to have been miniſters of the word, nor members of a Goſpel-church, which was neceſſary to their being regularly ſent forth; and whom the Apoſtle calls and owns as brethren in the miniſtry, being ſent forth by Chriſt, at leaſt ſome of them, and having the ſame commiſſion to preach the Goſpel as he had; tho' they had not equal gifts and qualifications with him: he ſtiles them brethren in the Lord, to diſtinguiſh them from the Jews at Rome, who were his brethren according to the fleſh; and to expreſs their ſpiritual character and relation, and point out the work of the Lord, in which they were jointly concerned with him: now tho' not all the brethren, yet many of them were greatly affected with, and influenced by the Apoſtle's patient and chearfully ſuffering for Chriſt; inſomuch that as he ſays, waxing confident by my bonds, are much more bold to ſpeak the word without fear; or as ſome read it, waxing confident in the Lord; connecting the phraſe, in the Lord, with this word, and ſo make the ground and object of their confidence the Lord; whoſe preſence, power, grace, and Spirit emboldened them the more by the Apoſtle's bonds, to preach the Goſpel with courage and intrepidity; the Lord being on their ſide, and their helper, they feared not what men could do unto them; or elſe being animated by the Apoſtle's patience and firmneſs of mind in ſuffering, and by the uſe they ſaw his bonds were of for the ſpread of the Goſpel, they took heart and courage to ſpeak the word; the word of God, as the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read; and ſo the Alexandrian, Claromontane, and two of Stephens's copies: meaning either the eſſential word, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who was the ſubject of their miniſtry; or the written word, the writings of Moſes and the prophets, the books of the Old Teſtament, according to which they ſpoke; or the Goſpel called often the word, and ſometimes with an addition, the word of truth, the word of faith, the word of reconciliation, the word of righteouſneſs, the word of life, and the word of our ſalvation, from the ſeveral ſubjects of it: this they ſpake boldly and freely, as it ought to be ſpoken, and without fear; not without fear and reverence of God whoſe word it is; nor of themſelves and their own weakneſs and inabilities, which cauſe much fear and trembling; but without the fear of man, which brings a ſnare; they had no regard to the threats and menaces, the reproaches and perſecutions of men; none of theſe things moved them; they feared God and not man, and ſo went on boldly, preaching the Goſpel; which is related with pleaſure, as a fruit and effect of the Apoſtle's ſufferings, and which he doubted not would be very delightful to the Philippians to hear of.

Ver. 15. Some indeed preach Chriſt, &c.] That is, ſome of them, as the Arabic verſion reads; ſome of the brethren, that were only ſo in profeſſion; wherefore theſe could not be the unbelieving Jews, who preached the Meſſiah in general, but did not believe Jeſus of Nazareth to be he, and opened the prophecies of the Old Teſtament relating to him, to the Gentiles; at which the Apoſtle is by ſome thought to rejoice; inaſmuch as this might be a means of giving light to them that were without any knowledge of the Meſſiah, and of leading them into an enquiry concerning him, whereby they might come to know the true Meſſiah, and believe in him: for theſe men were brethren, were members of the church, and whom the Apoſtle owned as brethren in the miniſtry; neither of which could have been admitted had they been unbelievers to Jeſus being the Meſſiah; nor would the Apoſtle have rejoiced in their miniſtry; and beſides, they preached the ſame Chriſt as other Goſpel-miniſters, only on different principles and with different views; they preached the pure Goſpel of Chriſt, they did not preach themſelves, or any doctrines of their own, but Chriſt, nor the doctrines of other men; nor did they read lectures of mere morality, as the Gentiles did; nor were they legaliſts as the Jews; they did not inſiſt on the doctrine of works, or preach up juſtification and ſalvation by the works of the law, a doctrine the Apoſtle always militated againſt, nor would he ever expreſs any pleaſure and ſatisfaction in it; nor did they preach a mixed Goſpel, partly of grace and partly of works; they were not ſuch as joined Moſes and Chriſt, the law and Goſpel, works and grace, together in mens ſalvation; nor did they corrupt and adulterate the word of God, or blend it with their own, or other mens inventions: but they preached Chriſt clearly and fully; he was the ſum and ſubſtance of their miniſtry; they preached up his perſon as the true God, the Son of God equal with the Father, and poſſeſſed of all divine perfections; as truly man, having aſſumed a true body and a reaſonable ſoul, and as God and man in one perſon; they preached him in all his offices, as prophet, prieſt, and king; juſtification by his righteouſneſs alone, pardon thro' his blood, atonement and ſatisfaction by his ſacrifice and ſalvation alone by him; they directed ſouls to him for all grace, and every ſupply of it; and aſſured them that tho' he died, he roſe again from the dead, is aſcended on high, is ſet down at the right hand of God, is an advocate with the Father, and ever lives to make interceſſion for his people; and when he has gathered them all in, he will come a ſecond time to judge the world in righteouſneſs, and take them to himſelf, that they may be ever with him: and yet all this they did, even of envy and ſtrife; not of envy to Chriſt, whom they preached, but of envy to the Apoſtle; they envied his gifts, his uſefulneſs and ſucceſs in the miniſtry; and he being now in bonds, they thought it a proper opportunity to exert themſelves, and ſet up preaching Chriſt as he had done, in the cleareſt manner; hoping they ſhould meet with the ſame ſucceſs, and gain great honour and applauſe in the church, and even be able to transfer to themſelves that glory which belonged to the Apoſtle: as for their ſtrife and contention, of which they alſo preached Chriſt; it was not with other faithful miniſters of the word, about the doctrines of the Goſpel; for in theſe they were agreed with them, at leaſt, in appearance and profeſſion, and in their miniſtry ever did they raiſe ſtrifes and contentions about words, from which comes envying among the brethren; for this would not have anſwered their ends, which were vain glory and popular applauſe; but they ſtrove and contended one with another, who ſhould preach Chriſt beſt and cleareſt, or with the Apoſtle to get his glory and honour from him; they ſtrove to outvie one another, and particularly him in preaching Chriſt: but there were others of the brethren who were truly ſuch, who preached Chriſt as well as they, and upon better principles, and with better views; and ſome alſo of good will; or willingly and freely, as the Arabic verſion renders it; without any ſelfiſh end or ſiniſter view of vain glory; not moved unto it by envy or ambition; not doing it in a contentious manner, and with an ill deſign; but of pure good will to the Goſpel, having a real liking of it, an hearty love for it, a ſincere deſire to ſpread it, and promote the intereſt of a redeemer, and the good of ſouls by it; having in a ſpiritual and experimental manner felt the power, and taſted the ſweetneſs of it themſelves; and ſo were inwardly affected and truly diſpoſed to preach it, clear of all external motives and ambitious views; and as having a good will to the Apoſtle himſelf, whoſe heart they knew was in the Goſpel, tho' he was now hindered from the miniſtry of it; and therefore to the beſt of their abilities were deſirous of ſupplying his place, without the leaſt injury to his character.

Ver. 16. The one preach Chriſt of contention, &c.] That is, thoſe that preached of envy and ſtrife, and not of good will to Chriſt, to the Goſpel, to the ſouls of men, or to the Apoſtle; and tho' they preached Chriſt, yet not ſincerely or purely; not but that they delivered the ſincere milk of the word, and preached the pure Goſpel of Chriſt, without any mixture and adulteration; but then they did not preach it with a ſincere heart, and a pure intention; for this reſpects not the doctrine they preached, but their views in it, which were not honeſt and upright; they did not preach Chriſt from a principle of love to his perſon, and from an inward experience of the power of his Goſpel, and a zealous affection for it, and firm attachment to it, and with a view to the glory of God, the honour of Chriſt, and the good of immortal ſouls; but were influenced by avarice, ambition, and envy: they had very evil deſigns upon the Apoſtle, ſuppoſing to add affliction to my bonds; imagining that by their free and bold way of preaching Chriſt openly in the city without controul, and with impunity, it might be thought that the Apoſtle did not lie in bonds for preaching Chriſt, but for ſome other crime; or otherwiſe why were not they laid hold on and put under confinement alſo? or thinking that by ſuch numbers of them frequently preaching Chriſt about the city, it would either incenſe and ſtir up the Jews, Paul's accuſers, to proſecute him more vigorouſly; or excite Nero to take more cognizance of his caſe, and either more cloſely confine him, or haſten the bringing his cauſe to a hearing, and him to puniſhment, as the ringleader of this ſect to the terror of others; but this they could not do without expoſing themſelves to great danger, unleſs they were determined to recant, as ſoon as they ſhould be taken up; wherefore it ſhould rather ſeem that their view was in preaching Chriſt to carry away the glory of it from the Apoſtle, and take it to themſelves; and fancying that he was a man of the ſame caſt with them, deſirous of vain glory, they thought it would afflict and diſtreſs him, he being in bonds, and not at liberty to exert himſelf, and make uſe of his ſuperior gifts and abilities; but in this they were miſtaken, he was ſo far from being made uneaſy hereby, that he rejoiced at the preaching of Chriſt, let their intentions be what they would; and therefore he does not ſay that they did add affliction to his bonds; but they ſuppoſed, or thought, that the method they took would do it.

Ver. 17. But the other of love, &c.] Thoſe that were truly brethren in the Lord, who had received the grace of God in truth, to whom the Goſpel was come in power, and who had a ſpiritual and experimental knowledge of Chriſt, and of the myſteries of his grace; theſe preached Chriſt of love, out of the love of him, as the Ethiopic verſe reads; that is, out of love to Chriſt, who to them was exceeding precious, altogether lovely, the chiefeſt among ten thouſands, and their hearts being hot and burning with love to him, they therefore ſpoke of him with their tongues; and out of love to the Goſpel of Chriſt, which with them was the pearl of great price, and every truth of it more valuable than gold, ſilver, and precious ſtones; and out of love to the church of Chriſt and the members of it, that their ſouls might be fed and nouriſhed with the wholeſome words of Chriſt, might be comforted with the doctrines of grace, and be eſtabliſhed and built up in their moſt holy faith; and out of love to the ſouls of others, knowing their miſerable eſtate by nature, and the danger they were in, and therefore preached Chriſt as the only way of ſalvation, whereby they could eſcape the wrath to come; and out of love to the Apoſtle likewiſe, which the following clauſe ſhews: knowing that I am ſet for the defence of the Goſpel; meaning either that they knew he was a choſen veſſel, to bear the name of Chriſt, and preach his Goſpel in the world; that he was ordained and appointed a miniſter of it before the world was; ſeparated to it from his mother's womb, and was called unto, and ſent to preach it by Chriſt, and was ſet apart for it by the church; and was in a very eminent manner qualified to defend it, by preaching, diſputing, writing, and ſuffering: or that they knew that he was laid, or lay, as the words may be rendered, in priſon, for defending the Goſpel of Chriſt; yea, they knew that his lying in priſon was in defence of the Goſpel; and therefore out of love to him, they joined iſſue with him to defend the Goſpel; as he by ſuffering for it, ſo they by preaching it, which they knew full well would be matter of great joy to him.

Ver. 18. What then? notwithſtanding every way, &c.] What follows from hence? what is to be concluded from all this? what is to be thought or ſaid in this caſe? this, that notwithſtanding theſe brethren acted on thoſe different principles, and with thoſe different views: whether in pretence; of love to Chriſt, zeal for the Goſpel, and concern for the good of ſouls; tho' their real views were their own applauſe, and detriment to the Apoſtle's character; or בעלתא, by occaſion, as the Syriac verſion renders the word, and as many interpreters think is the ſenſe of it; occaſionally preaching Chriſt, and making a handle of this to gain ſome other points, and get advantages to themſelves as ſome: or in truth; as the hearty friends of Chriſt and the Apoſtle did; they not only preached Chriſt who is the truth, and the truth as it is in Jeſus, and every truth of the Goſpel; and eſpecially that fundamental one, ſalvation alone by a crucified Chriſt, and that without any adulteration or concealing any part of it; but with great purity of mind, with integrity of heart, and in the uprightneſs of their ſouls; as of ſincerity, and in the ſight of God; without ſelfiſh and ſiniſter ends, and any ambitious views and evil deſigns: whether it was now in the one or the other way, upon the one or the other principles and views, the Apoſtle ſtood thus affected; and theſe were his ſentiments, reflections, and reſolutions, that inaſmuch as Chriſt is preached; in the glory of his perſon, in the fulneſs of his grace, in the ſuitableneſs of his offices and great ſalvation, in the excellency of his righteouſneſs, and the virtue of his blood, and the efficacy of his ſacrifice; and therein I do rejoice, yea and will rejoice; not that it was an indifferent thing with him, whether Chriſt was ſincerely or hypocritically preached; or that he could take any pleaſure in the manner of preaching, and in the principles and views of one ſort of theſe preachers; for nothing was more diſagreeable to him than envy and ambition, ſtrife and contention, hypocriſy and inſincerity; but he rejoiced in the ſubject matter of their miniſtry, which was Chriſt Jeſus the Lord, whom he dearly loved, and whoſe intereſt, if ſerved by any means, or any ſort of perſons, was a pleaſure to him; and alſo in the effects and conſequences of their miniſtry, the eſtabliſhing of the ſaints, the converſion of ſinners, the ſpread of the Goſpel, and the enlargement of the intereſt of Chriſt: all which may be anſwered through the preaching of Chriſt, by evil deſigning men; for Chriſt and his Goſpel are the ſame by whomſoever preached, and God may make uſe of his own truths to anſwer his ends and purpoſes, whoever are the diſpenſers of them, and tho' they themſelves may be caſt away, as Judas and others.

Ver. 19. For I know that this ſhall turn to my ſalvation, &c.] Or to ſalvation, to the ſalvation of others; that is, the preaching of Chriſt by theſe men, tho' deſigned by them to the hurt of the Apoſtle; yet he knew that by the power and grace of God, it ſhould be made uſeful to the converſion, and for the ſalvation of many ſouls; and this was matter of rejoicing to him: or that affliction which they thought to have added to his bonds, ſhould it befal him, he knew either from a divine revelation, or from the word of God in general, which gives reaſon to believe that all things work together for good to the ſaints, and from his own experience; that this alſo would turn to his advantage, and be for his good, either temporal, ſpiritual or eternal, and would work for him a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory in the world to come; and even in this world, he knew that every reproach, indignity, and ſuffering he endured, did but increaſe his fame and his honour, and make his name the more illuſtrious among the ſaints; which was the very thing theſe men envied in him, and ſtrove to take from him; yea, he knew that the method they took would, quite contrary to their expectation, be the means of his enlargement and liberty, of his ſalvation and deliverance from his bonds; ſee ver. 25, 26. and which he believed would be brought about by the prayers of the ſaints, and particularly theſe Philippians; thro' your prayer; as Peter was delivered out of priſon thro' the inceſſant prayer of the church for him. The Apoſtle knew that the prayer of a righteous man availeth much with God, and is very prevalent with him, and much more the prayers of a whole church; wherefore he frequently deſired them for him on many accounts; and among others, that he might be delivered out of the hands of unreaſonable men; and he firmly believed that he ſhould be delivered by ſuch means: and the ſupply of the Spirit of Jeſus Chriſt; which he had reaſon to expect and hope would be given him thro' their prayers for him; for tho' God has made large proviſions for the ſupply of the wants of his people, in his Son and in his covenant, to be diſpenſed unto them by his Spirit, yet for theſe will he be ſought unto by them: the ſupply of the Spirit is a ſupply of gifts from Chriſt, fitting and qualifying men for his ſervice, and which are miniſtred by the Spirit to them ſeverally as he will; and a ſupply of grace out of the fulneſs of Chriſt, which the Spirit of grace is the applier of; and a ſupply of ſtrength from the ſame by him, to enable the ſaints both to do and ſuffer whatever he is pleaſed to call them to; 'tis in ſhort a ſupply of all their need, which the Spirit of God helps them to, according to the riches of grace, in glory by Chriſt: this the Apoſtle knew would be ſufficient for him, to ſupport him under his preſent troubles, to deliver him out of them, and to fit him for whatever future work and ſervice his Lord and maſter had for him to do.

Ver. 20. According to my earneſt expectation and my hope, &c.] Theſe words are ſo placed as that they may refer both to what goes before and what follows after; and the ſenſe be either that the Apoſtle had an earneſt expectation and hope, even a ſtrong confidence of his ſalvation, or deliverance from his confinement; and alſo of his having an intereſt in the prayers of the ſaints, and that hereby a ſupply of the Spirit would be given him; for as he knew and was ſure that his God would ſupply the wants of others, he had great reaſon to believe he would ſupply his own; and eſpecially ſince he had been told by Chriſt that his grace was ſufficient for him: or as in connection with what follows; he had a full perſuaſion that he ſhould not be put to ſhame on any account; that in nothing I ſhall be aſhamed; not of his hope, neither the grace of hope, which makes not aſhamed; nor the object of hope, Chriſt Jeſus; nor the thing hoped for, eternal life and happineſs, or any of the above things about which this grace was converſant; nor of his reproaches and ſufferings for the ſake of Chriſt and his Goſpel, which he eſteemed as an honour to him, as jewels in his crown, as chains of gold about his neck, and as great riches; nor of the Goſpel which he preached, ſo as to retract and deny it, drop the whole, or conceal any part of it, lay down his profeſſion of it, or ceaſe to preach it: but his earneſt deſire and his firm hope and faith were, that with all boldneſs, as always; that as he had, ſo he ſhould continue to uſe boldneſs in the exerciſe of faith at the throne of grace, come with freedom thither, and ſtand before God with intrepidity, thro' the blood and righteouſneſs of his Son; and that as he had met with afflictions and ſufferings for Chriſt's ſake, with chearfulneſs and an undaunted ſpirit, none of theſe things had moved him, ſo he believed he never ſhould; and that as he had all along, throughout the whole courſe of his miniſtry, preached the Goſpel with plainneſs, openneſs, and freedom, without any guiſe or reſerve, and that with an holy courage and boldneſs in the face of all oppoſition; ſo now alſo Chriſt ſhall be magnified in my body; for this being Chriſt's, his great concern was to glorify him in it; and tho' it was a poor weak and crazy body, yet rich treaſure being put into this earthern veſſel, Chriſt had been greatly magnified, extolled, and made very high in it; never was there, as the Apoſtle, ſuch a magnifier of Chriſt, by preaching him in the tranſcendent glories of his perſon as the Son of God, in the riches of his grace as mediator, in all his offices of prophet, prieſt, and king; and particularly in the juſtification and ſalvation of men, where he made him to be all in all. Chriſt was alſo magnified by him, by his life and converſation, which was influenced by his grace, was in obedience to his will, was directed to his glory, was as became his Goſpel, and what adorned his doctrine in all things; and alſo by enduring ſuch hardſhips and ſo great ſufferings on his account; the power of Chriſt was greatly magnified in ſupporting him under them, and carrying him thro' them; and as this had been the caſe ever ſince he was in the miniſtry, it being the main thing he had in view, he had a well grounded hope and confidence, that it would ever be ſo: whether it be by life or by death; that is, ſhould he live longer, ſhould he be delivered from his preſent confinement, and be ſpared a little longer among men, he was comfortably aſſured Chriſt would be magnified by him in his body, and as long as he was in it; for his determination was to preach him and him only, to ſpend his life in his ſervice, and to ſeek not his own things, but the things of Chriſt; or ſhould he be put to death quickly by the order of Nero, he doubted not but Chriſt would have ſome glory thereby; he ſhould die calling upon his name with fervency, profeſſing his conſtant and unſhaken faith in him, and ſealing the Goſpel by his blood, with the greateſt chearfulneſs.

Ver. 21. For to me to live is Chriſt, &c.] Chriſt was his life, efficiently, the efficient cauſe and author of his ſpiritual life; he ſpoke it into him, produced it in him, and imprincipled him with it: and he was his life, objectively, the matter and object of his life, that on which he lived; yea, it was not ſo much he that lived, as Chriſt that lived in him; he lived by faith on Chriſt, and his ſpiritual life, was maintained and ſupported by feeding on him as the bread of life: and he was his life, finally, the end of his life; what he aimed at throughout the whole courſe of his life was the glory of Chriſt, the good of his church and people, the ſpread of his Goſpel, the honour of his name, and the increaſe of his intereſt; and this laſt ſeems to be the true ſenſe of the phraſe here: and to die is gain; to himſelf, for death is gain to believers: it is not eaſy to ſay what a believer gains by dying; he is releaſed thereby, and delivered from all the troubles and diſtreſſes of this life, ariſing from diſeaſes of body, loſſes and diſappointments in worldly things; from the oppreſſions and perſecutions of wicked men; from indwelling ſin, unbelief, doubts, and fears, and the temptations of ſatan; he as ſoon as dies enters into the preſence of God, where is fulneſs of joy, and is immediately with Chriſt, which is far better than being here, beholding his glory and enjoying communion with him; he is at once in the company of angels and glorified ſaints; is poſſeſſed of perfect holineſs and knowledge; inherits a kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world, and wears a crown of life, righteouſneſs, and glory; enters upon an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled; is received into everlaſting habitations, into manſions of light, life, love, joy, peace, and comfort; is at perfect reſt, and ſurrounded with endleſs pleaſures. This is the common interpretation, and is countenanced by the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, which read, to die, or if I die, it is gain to me; but inſtead of reading the words as conſiſting of two propoſitions, they may be conſidered as one, and the ſenſe be either this; Chriſt is gain to me living or dying, in life or in death; for Chriſt is the believer's gain in life; he is all in all, his righteouſneſs, his wiſdom, his ſanctification, his redemption, his life, his light, his food, his raiment, his riches, his joy, peace, and comfort; he is every thing to him he wants, can wiſh for or deſire: and he is his gain in death; the hope he then has is founded on him, and the triumphs of his faith over death and the grave ariſe from redemption by him; his expectation is to be immediately with him; and the glory he will then enter into, will lie in communion with him, in conformity to him, and in an everlaſting viſion of him: or thus, for me to live and to die is Chriſt's gain; his life being ſpent in his ſervice, in living according to his will, in preaching his Goſpel, ſerving his churches, and ſuffering for his ſake, was for his glory; and his death being for his ſake, in the faith of him, and the ſteady profeſſion of it, would be what would glorify him, and ſo be his gain likewiſe; and this ſeems to be the genuine ſenſe of the words, which contain a reaſon of the Apoſtle's faith, why he was perſuaded Chriſt would be magnified or glorified in his body, whether by life or by death.

Ver. 22. But if I live in the fleſh, &c.] To be in the fleſh ſometimes ſignifies to be in a ſtate of nature and unregeneracy, and to live in and after the fleſh, to live according to the dictates of corrupt nature; but here it ſignifies living in the body, or the life which is in the fleſh, as the Syriac verſion renders the phraſe here, and as the Apoſtle expreſſes it in Gal. ii. 20. and the ſenſe is, if I ſhould live any longer in the body, and be continued for ſome time in this world: this is the fruit of my labour; or I have fruit in my works, as the above verſion renders it: yet what I ſhall chuſe I wot not, or know not; whether life or death; ſince my life will be for the honour and glory of Chriſt, and tho' a toilſome and laborious one, yet uſeful and fruitful: by his labour, he means his miniſterial work and ſervice; the miniſtry is a work, a good and honourable work, and a laborious one. Chriſt's faithful miniſters are labourers; they labour in the word and doctrine, both in ſtudying and preaching it; and ſuch a labourer was the Apoſtle, who by the grace of God laboured more abundantly than others; the fruit of which was the converſion of many ſinners, the edification, comfort and eſtabliſhment of the ſaints, their fruitfulneſs in grace and works, the ſpread of the Goſpel far and near, the enlargement of the kingdom of Chriſt, and the weakening of ſatan's kingdom, and the glorifying of Chriſt in his perſon, offices, and great ſalvation; all which was a ſtrong and ſwaying argument with him, to deſire to live longer in the body, and made it on the one hand ſo difficult with him what to chuſe: for as a certain Jew[b] ſays, "the righteous man "deſires to live to do the will of God whilſt he "lives;" but not with that view, he adds, "to "encreaſe the reward of the ſoul in the world to "come."

Ver. 23. For I am in a ſtrait betwixt two, &c.] Life and death; or between theſe two counſels, as the Arabic verſion reads; two thoughts and deſires of the mind, a deſire to live for the reaſons above, and a deſire to die for a reaſon following. The Apoſtle was preſſed with a difficulty in his mind about this, as David was when he was bid to chuſe which he would, either ſeven years famine, or three months flight before his enemies, or three days peſtilence; upon which he ſaid, I am in a great ſtrait, 2 Sam. xxiv. 14. to which paſſage 'tis thought the Apoſtle alludes; the ſame word as here is uſed by Chriſt, Luke xii. 50. having a deſire to depart; to die, a way of ſpeaking much in uſe with the Jews, as expreſſive of death; thus Abraham is repreſented by them ſpeaking after this manner on account of his two ſons Iſaac and Iſhmael, the one being righteous and the other wicked [c]; "ſays he, if I bleſs Iſaac, lo, Iſhmael will ſeek "to be bleſſed, and he is wicked; but a ſervant "am I, fleſh and blood am I, and to-morrow "אפטר מן העולם, I ſhall depart out of the world, "or die; and what pleaſes the holy bleſſed God "himſelf in his own world, let him do: כשנפטר, "when Abraham was diſmiſſed or departed, the "holy bleſſed God appeared to Iſaac and bleſſed "him:" and again it is ſaid [d], "iniquities are "not atoned for, until דאתפטר מעלמא, a man "is diſmiſſed, or departs out of the world;" and once more [e], "when a man נפטר מזה העולם, de-"parts out of this world; according to his merit "he aſcends above;" ſee the note on John xiii. 1. the ſame word is uſed in the Syriac verſion here; death is a departing out of this life, a going out of the body, a removal out of this world; it is like moving from one place to another, from the world below to the world above; with the ſaints 'tis no other than a removing from one houſe to another, from the earthly houſe of their tabernacle, the body, to their Father's houſe, and the manſions of glory in it, preparing for them. Death is not an annihiliation of men, neither of ſoul nor body; it is a ſeparation of them, but not a deſtruction of either; it is a diſſolution of the union between them for a while, when both remain in a ſeparate ſtate till the reſurrection: now this the Apoſtle had a deſire unto, which was not a new and ſudden motion of mind; it was a thought that had long dwelt with him, and ſtill continued; and this deſire after death was not for the ſake of death, for death in itſelf is a king of terrors, very formidable and terrible, and not deſireable; 'tis an enemy, the laſt enemy that ſhall be deſtroyed; it is contrary to nature, and to deſire it, is contrary to a firſt principle in nature, ſelf-preſervation; but death is deſired for ſome other end: wicked men deſire it, and deſire others to put an end to their lives, or do it themſelves to free them from ſome trouble they are in; or becauſe they are not able to ſupport under a diſappointment of what their ambition or luſt have prompted them to: good men deſire death, tho' always when right, with a ſubmiſſion to the will of God, that they may be rid of ſin, which ſo much diſhonours God as well as diſtreſſes themſelves; and that they may be cloathed upon with the ſhining robes of immortality and glory; and as the Apoſtle here, to be with Chriſt: for the former clauſe is to be ſtrictly connected with this; he did not deſire merely to depart this life, but chiefly to be with Chriſt, and the former only in order to the latter; the ſaints are in Chriſt now, choſen in him, ſet upon his heart, and put into his hands, are created in him, and brought to believe in him, and are in him as branches in the vine; and he is in them, formed in their hearts, lives and dwells in them by faith, and they have ſometimes communion with him in private duties and publick worſhip; he comes into them and ſups with them, and they with him: but this is only at times, he is as a wayfaring man that continues but for a night; hence the preſent ſtate of the ſaints is a ſtate of abſence from Chriſt; whilſt they are at home in the body, they are abſent from the Lord, eſpecially as to his bodily preſence; but after death they are immediately with him, where he is in his human nature; and their ſouls in their ſeparate ſtate continue with him till the reſurrection morn, when their bodies will be raiſed and re-united to their ſouls, and be both for ever with him, beholding his glory, and enjoying uninterrupted communion with him; which will be the completion and full end of Chriſt's preparations and prayers: hence it appears that there is a future being and ſtate after death; the Apoſtle deſires to depart this life, and be, exiſt, be ſome where, with Chriſt; for the only happy being after death is with him; if ſouls are not with him, they are with devils and damned ſpirits, in the lake which burns with fire and brimſtone: and it is alſo manifeſt that ſouls don't ſleep with the body in the grave until the reſurrection; the ſouls of the ſaints are immediately with Chriſt, in the enjoyment of his preſence, in happineſs and glory, hoping, believing, and waiting for the reſurrection of their bodies; had the Apoſtle known that he muſt have remained after death in a ſtate of inactivity and uſeleſsneſs, deprived of the communion of Chriſt and of his church, it would have been no difficulty with him to determine which was moſt eligible, to live or die; and it would have been much better for him, and more to the advantage of the churches, if he had continued upon earth to this day, than to be ſleeping in his grave, ſenſeleſs and unactive; whereas he adds, which is far better: to depart and be with Chriſt is better than to live in the fleſh in this ſinful world, in the midſt of a variety of ſorrows and troubles, and in which communion with Chriſt is but now and then enjoyed, tho' ſuch a life is better than ſleeping in the grave; but upon a ſoul's departure and being with Chriſt, it is free from ſin and ſorrow, and in the utmoſt pleaſure, enjoying communion with him without interruption; and this is better than labouring in the miniſtry: for tho' no man took more pleaſure in the work of the miniſtry than the Apoſtle did, and no man's miniſtry was more profitable and uſeful; yet it was toilſome, laborious and weariſome to the fleſh; wherefore dying and being with Jeſus could not but be deſirable, ſince he ſhould then reſt from his labours, and his works would follow him; at leaſt, it was better for him, and ſo the Syriac verſion adds, ܠܝ, to me, far better for me; and ſo the Arabic: to live longer might be better and more to the advantage of Chriſt, the glory of his name, the good of his churches, it might be better for others; but leaving the world and being with Chriſt were better for him; and this was an argument ſwaying on the ſide of death, and inclining him to deſire that, and made it ſo difficult with him what to chuſe.

Ver. 24. Nevertheleſs to abide in the fleſh, &c.] To continue in the body, not always, but a little longer, is more needful for you; for their comfort, edification, and inſtruction, their further profiting and encreaſe in faith, and the joy of it. The Syriac verſion renders the words thus, but buſineſs for you, or a good will towards you compels me to abide in the body; body; and the Arabic verſion thus, notwithſtanding I chuſe to remain in the fleſh, and this I think very neceſſary for you; ſo that upon the whole, the argument for living longer on conſideration of glorifying Chriſt, and of being more uſeful to the good of ſouls, preponderated with him; inclined him to deſire rather to live than die; tho' the latter was better for him, and more to his perſonal advantage; and thus like a brave and good man, he prefers a public good to a private one.

Ver. 25. And having this confidence, I know that I ſhall abide, &c.] In the fleſh, in the body, live a little longer in the world. Theſe words muſt be underſtood either of a certain infallible knowledge, ariſing from a divine revelation, and a firm perſuaſion and confidence founded upon that which the Apoſtle had, of his being delivered from his bonds, and ſpared a little longer for further uſefulneſs among the churches; and accordingly ſome have thought that he was after this ſet at liberty, and travelled thro' ſeveral countries preaching the Goſpel, and after that was committed to priſon and ſuffered death; but of this there is no ſufficient proof: or rather therefore of a conjectural knowledge ariſing from the preſent ſtate of things, and his view of it; being willing to hope, and perſuade himſelf that he ſhould be delivered from his confinement, and his life be ſpared for the good of the intereſt of Chriſt, and the glory of his name; it being what his heart was ſet upon, and he was very deſirous of: and continue with you all; not only with the Philippians, but other ſaints, and other churches, who were dear to him, and he to them; tho' he may mean more eſpecially theſe believers: for your furtherance, or profiting; in divine and ſpiritual things, in the knowledge of Chriſt, and the truths of the Goſpel: and joy of faith; for the furtherance, or increaſe of that joy which faith is attended with, and which ſprings from it; for true ſolid joy ſprings from faith in the perſon, blood, righteouſneſs, and atonement of Chriſt; and is what may be increaſed, and is often done by and thro' the miniſtry of the word, and the miniſters of the Goſpel; who don't pretend to a dominion over the faith of men, only to be helpers of their joy, as they ſometimes are, as alſo of their faith, which as it comes by hearing is increaſed the ſame way. The phraſe is Jewiſh; mention is made in the writings of the Jews [f] of חדוה דמהימנותא, the joy of faith.

Ver. 26. That your rejoicing may be more abundant, &c.] They had rejoiced greatly on his account already, bleſſing God that ever they had ſeen his face, or heard his voice; as they had great reaſon to do, he being the happy inſtrument of firſt bringing the Goſpel to them, and of their converſion; and now he hoped he ſhould be delivered out of priſon, and ſee them again, that their joy might be increaſed and abound yet more and more, upon his deliverance, they had ſo earneſtly prayed and ſo much longed for, and at the ſight of him they ſo dearly loved: and yet to ſhew that this their joy was not looked upon by him as a carnal one, or as ariſing from a natural affection, he obſerves that it was in Jeſus Chriſt; tho' they rejoiced in him as an inſtrument, and therefore he adds, for me; yet it was on account of Jeſus Chriſt, the ſubject of his miniſtry; their joy did not center in the Apoſtle, but had Chriſt for its object, whoſe perſon, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation were held forth by him to their view and comfort; and tho' they would ſtill more and more rejoice ſhould he return to them once more, by my coming to you again; yet ſtill it would be in Chriſt, and becauſe of the fulneſs of the bleſſing of the Goſpel of Chriſt, in which he ſhould come to them.

Ver. 27. Only let your converſation be as it becometh the Goſpel of Chriſt, &c.] Or behave as citizens worthy of the Goſpel; for not ſo much their outward converſation in the world is here intended, which ought to be in wiſdom towards them that are without; ſo as to give no offence to any, and to put to ſilence the ignorance of fooliſh men, and them to confuſion and ſhame who falſly accuſe their good converſation in Chriſt; tho' this is what is highly becoming profeſſors of the Goſpel; and a moral converſation proceeding from principles of grace, under the influence of the Spirit of God, is very ornamental to the Goſpel, being what that requires and powerfully teaches; but the converſation of the ſaints one with another, in their church-ſtate, is here meant. The alluſion is to cities which have their peculiar laws and rules, to which the citizens are to conform; and ſuch as behave according to them act up to the character of good citizens, and becoming, and worthy of the charter by which they hold their priviledges and immunities. A church of Chriſt is as a city, and is often ſo called; the members of it are citizens, fellow-citizens one with another, and of the houſhold of God, and have laws and rules according to which they are to conduct themſelves; as ſuch do who walk worthy of their vocation, and becoming the charter of the Goſpel by which they have and hold their freedom and priviledges, as citizens of the new Jeruſalem: and ſuch a Goſpel-walk and converſation lies in ſuch things as theſe; conſtant attendance on the preaching of the Goſpel, and on the adminiſtration of Goſpel-ordinances; a ſtrict obſervation of the rules of behaviour towards perſons that have given offence, either in public or private; a juſt regard to the diſcipline of Chriſt's houſe, in admonitions, reproofs, cenſures and excommunications, as caſes require; cultivating love, unity, and peace; keeping the ordinances as they were delivered; retaining and ſtriving for the doctrines of the Goſpel; holding the myſteries of it in a pure conſcience, and adorning it by a becoming life and converſation. This the Apoſtle recommends as the only, the main and principal thing theſe ſaints ſhould attend to; and as what would give him the greateſt joy and pleaſure to hear of, whether he ſhould ever come and ſee them again or no: that whether I come and ſee you, or elſe be abſent, I may hear of your affairs. The Vulgate Latin verſion reads, hear of you; and ſo do the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions: that ye ſtand faſt in one Spirit; meaning either the Goſpel, which is the Spirit that giveth life; ſo called becauſe it is from the Spirit of God, and that by which he is conveyed into the ſouls of men, and contains ſpiritual things: this is one, uniform, conſiſtent ſcheme of truths; and in this believers ought to ſtand faſt, and ſhould abide by it, and never give up, or part with any one branch of it; and ſo to do is one part of their Goſpel converſation; for the Apoſtle in this and the following things points out the ſeveral parts of that converſation he exhorts to: or elſe the holy Spirit of God is intended, who as he is the beginner of the good work of grace on the ſoul, is he alſo who carries it on and will perfect it; and therefore to him ſhould the people of God look for grace and ſtrength, to enable them to ſtand faſt in the profeſſion of their faith, to hold it faſt without wavering, and to perſevere to the end; who is that one Spirit by which they are baptized into one body, and become fellow-citizens with the ſaints; or the Spirit of love, unity, and peace is here meant: true chriſtian love makes the ſaints to be of one heart and ſoul; and in this ſingle affection to one another ſhould they ſtand faſt; brotherly love ſhould continue, and all endeavours be uſed to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace; which isa nother branch of becoming Goſpel-converſation: the Apoſtle adds, with one mind, or ſoul; either ſignifying the ſame as before, or elſe that they ſhould be of one judgment in the doctrines and ordinances of the Goſpel, and abide therein; which is neceſſary to their harmonious walk and converſation together, as citizens of Zion: ſtriving together for the faith of the Goſpel; by the faith of the Goſpel, may be deſigned the grace of faith, which comes by the Goſpel, as the means of it, and by which the Goſpel becomes uſeful and beneficial to the ſouls of men, and which has the Goſpel for its object; for faith comes by hearing the word, and that is only profitable when it is mixed with it, and is that grace which gives credit to every truth of it, upon the teſtimony of divine revelation: now as the doctrine of faith is that which the ſaints are to ſtrive for, the grace of faith is that by which they ſtrive for it; by which they reſiſt ſatan, oppoſe falſe teachers, and overcome the world; and agreeable to this ſenſe the Arabic verſion reads, by the faith of the Goſpel: tho' rather the doctrine of faith is intended, that word of faith, or faith, which is the Goſpel itſelf, and which is often ſo called; and for this in all its parts and branches, believers ſhould ſtrive; as for all thoſe doctrines of faith, which concern the unity of God, the trinity of perſons in the Godhead, the divine Sonſhip of Chriſt, the proper deity and diſtinct perſonality of him and the bleſſed Spirit; and for all ſuch doctrines as regard the ſtate and condition of men by the fall of Adam, as that the guilt of his ſin is imputed to all his poſterity, the pollution of nature by it derived and communicated to them, that the biaſs of man's mind is naturally to that which is evil, and is averſe to that which is good, and that he is impotent to every thing that is ſpiritually good; and for all thoſe doctrines which regard the free and diſtinguiſhing grace of God; of election, as eternal, perſonal, and irreſpective of faith, holineſs, and good works, as motives and conditions of it; of the covenant of grace, as from everlaſting, abſolute and unconditional, ſure and firm; of redemption, as particular, and as proceeding upon a full ſatisfaction for ſin to law and juſtice; of juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; of peace and pardon by his blood; of regeneration, converſion, and ſanctification, as entirely owing to powerful and efficacious grace, and not to man's free-will; of the ſaints final perſeverance, the reſurrection of the dead, a future judgment, and eternal life, as the free gift of God: ſtriving for theſe, as wreſtlers do with one another, to which the alluſion is, ſuppoſes perſons to ſtrive and wreſtle againſt; and they are ſuch as oppoſe truth and themſelves unto it; as all ſuch that deny divine revelation, or the authority of the ſcriptures; that ſay that Jeſus is not the Meſſiah; or that Chriſt is not the natural and eternal Son of God; or that deny his proper deity, his ſatisfaction and righteouſneſs; that reject the efficacious grace of God, and the operations of the Spirit as unneceſſary to regeneration and converſion; that advance and plead for the purity of human nature, the power of man's free-will, and aſcribe juſtification and ſalvation to the works of men: all ſuch are to be contended with and ſtrove againſt, and that not with carnal weapons, but with ſpiritual ones, with the ſcriptures of truth; by which a good warfare with them may be warred, and the good fight of faith fought with much ſucceſs; and the whole requires great care and ſolicitude, earneſtneſs, zeal, conſtancy, and courage: ſtriving together for theſe intends either ſtriving with the Apoſtle, and as they had him both as a fellow-ſoldier, and for an example; or rather ſtriving one with another, their miniſters with their members, and their members with their miniſters; the one by preaching, writing, and diſputing more eſpecially, the other, by bearing a conſtant teſtimony to truth, and praying for the ſucceſs of it; and both by dying for it when required; and ſo to do is to have the converſation as becomes the Goſpel of Chriſt.

[f] Zohar in Gen. fol. 113. 4. & in Exod. fol. 36. 4.

Ver. 28. And in nothing terrified by your adverſaries, &c.] Not by ſatan, tho' a roaring lion, for Chriſt is greater than he; nor by the world which Chriſt has overcome; nor by falſe teachers, tho' men of art and cunning; nor by violent perſecutors, who can do no more than kill the body; let not the power, the rage, the cunning, or the violence of one or the other, move, diſcourage or affright from a cloſe attachment to the Goſpel and the truths of it: which is to them an evident token of perdition; when men wilfully oppoſe themſelves to the truth, and ſhew a malicious hatred to it, and hold it in unrighteouſneſs, and either turn the grace of God into laſciviouſneſs, or perſecute it with rage and fury, it looks as if they were given up to reprobate minds, to ſay and do things not convenient; as if they were fore-ordained to condemnation, and were conſigned over to deſtruction and perdition; and very rare it is that ſuch perſons are ever called by grace: but to you of ſalvation; when men are reproached and ridiculed, are threatned and perſecuted for the ſake of the Goſpel, and are enabled to take all patiently, and perſevere in the truth with conſtancy, it is a manifeſt token that ſuch are counted worthy of the kingdom of God; that God has a deſign of ſalvation for them, and that they ſhall be ſaved with an everlaſting one: ſo that the different effects of the oppoſition of the one, and the conſtancy of the other, are made uſe of as ſo many reaſons why the ſaints ſhould not be terrified by their enemies: 'tis added, and that of God; meaning either that the whole of this is of God, as that there are adverſaries, hereticks, and perſecutors; this is by divine permiſſion, and in order to anſwer ſome ends and purpoſes of God, and the perdition or everlaſting puniſhment of ſuch perſons will be righteouſly inflicted upon them by him; and that the conſtancy, faith, patience, and perſeverance of the ſaints and their ſalvation, are all of God: or it particularly reſpects the latter, the ſalvation of thoſe who perſevere to the end; this is not of themſelves, or merited by their conſtancy, patience, and perſeverance, but is God's free gift. The Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, join this clauſe to the beginning of the next verſe thus, and this is given of God to you, &c.

Ver. 29. For unto you it is given in the behalf of Chriſt, &c.] For the ſake of his Goſpel; for the good of his intereſt, and the glory of his name. The Alexandrian copy reads, to us it is given, &c. not only to believe in him; for faith in Chriſt, which is not merely believing that he is the Chriſt, and all that is ſaid of him, or all that he himſelf ſays, but is a ſeeing of the Son, a going to him, receiving, embracing, leaning, relying, and living upon him, as God's ſalvation, is a pure gift of grace; it is not in nature, nor in every man, and in whom it is, it is not of themſelves, it is the gift of God; the firſt implantation of it, all its acts and exerciſe, its increaſe, and the performance of it at laſt with power, are all owing to the grace of God; and this is only given to the elect; for it is a diſtinguiſhing gift; it's given to them, and them alone, and therefore called the faith of God's elect: but alſo to ſuffer for his ſake; for the ſake of Chriſt perſonal; for the ſake of Chriſt myſtical, for his body's ſake the church; for the ſake of his Goſpel, and for the ſake of his cauſe and intereſt in the world: now to ſuffer in name and character, in eſtate or perſon, not as an evil-doer, but as a chriſtian, is a gift of God, as faith in Chriſt is; all the ſufferings of the ſaints are appointed by God; their being called forth to ſuffer ſhame for the ſake of Chriſt, is an high honour conferred upon them; all the grace and ſtrength by which they are ſupported under ſufferings for Chriſt, are given to them; and all the glory conſequent upon them, is not merited by them, which are by no means to be compared with it, but is the free gift of God through Chriſt. The ſame perſons to whom it is given to believe in Chriſt, to them it is given to ſuffer for him; and they all do in ſome ſhape or another, though ſome more, others leſs; yet all are partakers of ſufferings for Chriſt, and ſo are conformed to him their head, and hereby enter the kingdom; now all this is ſaid, as containing ſo many reaſons to encourage believers to have their converſation as becomes the Goſpel of Chriſt, by a ſteady adherence to it, and a joint contention and ſtriving for it, without being intimidated by their enemies.

Ver. 30. Having the ſame conflict, &c.] For it ſeems that the Philippians were now under perſecution for the Goſpel of Chriſt; but this was no new or ſtrange thing; it was the ſame the Apoſtle was under formerly, and at that time: which ye ſaw in me, and now hear to be in me; when he and Silas were at Philippi, and firſt preached the Goſpel there, they were exceedingly ill uſed, and ſhamefully intreated; they were dragged to the market-place, or court, were beaten and ſcourged, and put into the inner priſon, and their feet made faſt in the ſtocks, Acts xvi. 19, 22, 23, 24. 1 Theſſ. ii. 2. of all this the Philippians were eye-witneſſes, and to which he here refers when he ſays, which ye ſaw in me; and now he was a priſoner at Rome, as they had heard, hence he ſays, and now hear to be in me; for they had ſent Epaphroditus to him with a preſent, as a token of their love to him, and to ſupport him under his affliction; and which he mentions, in order to animate them to bear their ſufferings patiently for Chriſt's ſake, ſince the ſame were accompliſhed in him, as well as in the reſt of their brethren and fellow-chriſtians in the world.

CHAP. II.

THIS chapter contains ſeveral exhortations to unity, love, and concord, to humility, and lowlineſs of mind, and to a becoming life and converſation; and concludes with commendations of two eminent miniſters of Chriſt, Timothy and Epaphroditus. The arguments engaging to harmony and mutual affection, are taken from the conſolation that is in Chriſt, the comfort there is in love, the fellowſhip of the Spirit, and the bowels and mercies which become ſaints, ver. 1. as alſo from the joy this would fill the Apoſtle with; and the things exhorted to, are expreſſed by likeneſs of mind, ſameneſs of love, and unity of ſoul, ver. 2. and the manner directed to for the preſervation of ſuch a ſpirit, is to do nothing in a contentious and vain glorious way, but in an humble and lowly manner, having a better opinion of others than themſelves; and obſerving their ſuperior gifts and graces, and ſo ſubmit things unto them, ver. 3, 4. and which humble deportment is further urged, from the inſtance and example of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, ver. 5. which is illuſtrated by the dignity of his perſon, the glorious divine form in which he was, and his indiſputable equality with his Father, ver. 6. and yet ſuch was his great condeſcenſion, that he became man, appeared in the form of a ſervant, and was humbled to the loweſt degree, even to die the death of the croſs, ver. 7, 8. nevertheleſs God exalted him as man, and gave him ſuperior honour to all creatures; and will oblige all to be ſubject to him, and acknowledge his dominion over them, to the glory of his divine Father, ver. 9, 10, 11. hereby ſuggeſting, that in like manner, though not to the ſame degree, ſuch who are humble and lowly minded, ſhall be exalted by the Lord; and then with the greateſt affection to the Philippians, and with high commendations of them, the Apoſtle renews his exhortation to do all the duties of religion with humility and modeſty; knowing that all the grace and ſtrength in which they performed them, was owing to the internal operation of divine power in them, ver. 12, 13. and therefore ſhould be done without murmuring againſt God, or diſputings among themſelves, ver. 14. and next he proceeds to exhort to an unblemiſhed and inoffenſive life and converſation, as the end and iſſue of a modeſt and humble behaviour; and this he enforces on them, from the conſideration of their relation to God, being his children, which would appear hereby; and from the wickedneſs and perverſeneſs of the people they lived among; and therefore ſhould be careful, leſt they be enſnared by them, to the diſhonour of God, and the grief of themſelves; and from their character as lights in the world, whoſe buſineſs it was to hold forth the word of life; and alſo from this conſideration, that it would be the joy of the Apoſtle in the day of Chriſt, that his labours among them had not been fruitleſs, ver. 15, 16. yea, ſuch was his love to them, that if even he was to die on their account, it would be matter of joy and gladneſs to him; and he deſires they would expreſs the ſame joy with him, ver. 17, 18. and though he could not be with them in perſon, he hoped in a little time to ſend Timothy, for this end, that he might know how things ſtood with them; which if well, would be a comfort to him, ver. 19. the reaſons why he pitched upon Timothy as a meſſenger to them were, becauſe there were none like him, for the ſincere regard he had for their ſpiritual good, ver. 20. and which is illuſtrated by the contrary diſpoſition and conduct of others, who ſought themſelves, and not Jeſus Chriſt, his honour and intereſt, ver. 21. and beſides, they themſelves were witneſſes of his filial affection to the Apoſtle, and of his faithful ſervice with him in the Goſpel, ver. 22. and then he repeats his hopes of ſending him quickly, as ſoon as ever he knew how it would go with him, whether he ſhould be releaſed or ſuffer, ver. 23. the former of which he had ſome confidence of, and that he ſhould be able to ſee them himſelf in a little time, ver. 24. however, in the mean while he thought it proper to ſend Epaphroditus to them, whom he commends as a brother of his, a co-worker, a fellow-ſoldier, a meſſenger of theirs, and a miniſter to his wants, ver. 25. the reaſons of ſending him were, becauſe he longed to ſee them, and becauſe he was uneaſy that they had heard of his ſickneſs; which was not only true that he had been ſick, but his ſickneſs was very dangerous, and threatned with death; however, through the mercy of God to him, he was recovered; and which was a mercy alſo to the Apoſtle, who otherwiſe would have had an additional ſorrow; wherefore another reaſon of ſending him was, that upon the ſight of him they might be filled with joy, and the Apoſtle himſelf have leſs ſorrow, ver. 26, 27, 28. and then he exhorts them, that when he was returned to them, they would gladly receive him, and highly eſteem of him; and the rather, ſince the dangerous illneſs he was attended with, was brought upon him through his laboriouſneſs in the ſervice of Chriſt, and alſo of the Apoſtle, which he performed in their ſtead, even to the neglect of his health and life, ver. 29, 30.

Ver. 1. If there be therefore any conſolation in Chriſt, &c.] Or exhortation, as the word is ſometimes rendered; that is, either if there is any exhortation of Chriſt to love and unity, as there is in John xiii. 34. and xv. 11, 17. and this is of any weight and value; or if an exhortation hereunto made in the name of Chriſt, by any of his miniſters, meſſengers, and ambaſſadors, will be regarded, as it ought to be, then fulfil ye my joy, &c. but as the word is frequently tranſlated conſolation, as it is here in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions; the ſenſe may be either, if there is any comfort to be given to them that are in Chriſt Jeſus, as every converted man is, and as the Apoſtle was, and eſpecially to them that are afflicted and perſecuted for the ſake of Chriſt, are priſoners in him, and on his account, which was the Apoſtle's caſe, then he deſired they would attend to his following requeſt: or if there was any conſolation for them, and they had had any comfort in and from Chriſt; as all true, ſolid, ſtrong, and everlaſting conſolation is only in Chriſt, and is founded on the greatneſs of his perſon, as God our Saviour, on the fulneſs of his grace, the efficacy of his blood, the perfection of his righteouſneſs and ſacrifice, and on the great ſalvation he is the author of: agreeably the Syriac verſion renders it, if therefore ye have any conſolation in Chriſt; and the Arabic verſion, if therefore ye enjoy any conſolation from the grace of Chriſt; which is diſplayed in the Goſpel, as undoubtedly they did; and ſince then all this comfort was enjoyed by them, through the Goſpel the Apoſtle preached to them, the argument from hence muſt be ſtrong upon them, to attend to what he deſired of them: if any comfort of love; in it, or from it; as from the love of God the Father, which is everlaſting and unchangeable, and muſt be comforting, when ſhed abroad in the heart by the Spirit; and from the love of the Son, which is the ſame, and equally immoveable and laſting, and which paſſeth knowledge; and from the love of the Spirit, in applying the grace of the Father, and of the Son, whereby he becomes a glorifier of them, and a comforter of his people; and from the love of the ſaints to one another, which renders their communion with each other comfortable, pleaſant, and delightful: or the Apoſtle's ſenſe is, if they had ſo much love for him, as to wiſh and deſire he might be comforted in his preſent ſituation, and that they would be willing to make uſe of any methods to comfort him, then he deſires this; and this is all he deſires, mutual love, peace, harmony, and agreement among themſelves: if any fellowſhip of the Spirit; of the ſpirit of one ſaint with another; if there is ſuch a thing as an union of ſpirits, an oneneſs of ſouls, a taſting of each others ſpirits, and a communion with one another, then care ſhould be taken to keep this unity of the Spirit, in the bond of peace: or if there is any fellowſhip of the Holy Spirit of God, any communion with him, any ſuch thing as a witneſſing of him to, and with our ſpirits, or as fellowſhip with the Father and the Son by him, and ſaints are baptized into one body by one Spirit, and have been made to drink of the ſame Spirit, then it becomes them to be of one mind, and to ſtand faſt in one ſpirit: if any bowels and mercies; as there are in God, and in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, moving towards the ſaints; or ſuch as become chriſtians, who as the elect of God, holy and beloved, ought to put on bowels of mercies to one another; expreſs the moſt hearty, inward, tender, and compaſſionate concern for each others welfare, temporal and ſpiritual. Thus the Apoſtle premiſes the moſt moving and pathetic arguments, leading on to the exhortations and advice, to love, harmony, and unity, given in the following verſe.

Ver. 2. Fulfil ye my joy, &c.] The Arabic verſion adds, by theſe things; meaning not his joy in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which aroſe from views of intereſt in his perſon, blood, and righteouſneſs; which was had by believing in him, by enjoying communion with him, and living in hope of the glory of God; this is a fruit of the Spirit, and is called joy in the Holy Ghoſt; who as he was the author, muſt be the finiſher of it, and not the Philippians; much leſs does he mean that fulneſs of joy in the preſence, and at the right-hand of God in heaven, which he expected to have; but that which aroſe from the ſtate, conduct, and mutual reſpect of the ſaints to each other; he had much joy in them, on account of the good work being begun, and carrying on in their ſouls; and becauſe of their ſtedfaſtneſs in the faith, notwithſtanding the perſecutions they met with; and on account of their continued love to him, and the late freſh inſtance of it they had given, in ſending their miniſter with a preſent to him, and who had given him a particular account of their affairs; but his joy was not yet full, there were ſome things which damped it; as the unbecoming walk and converſation of ſome, of whom he ſpoke with grief of heart, and tears in his eyes; and the inclination of others to liſten to the falſe teachers, thoſe of the conciſion, or circumciſion; and the murmurings, diſputings, and diviſions of others among them, that were contentious and quarrelſome; wherefore to crown his joy, and fill it brimful, he ſignifies that their unity in affection, judgment, and practice, would do it, for ſo he explains it as follows: that ye be like minded, or equally affected to one another; that ſince they were but as one man, were one body, and had but one head, and one Spirit that quickned and comforted them, and had but one faith and one baptiſm, they ought to be one in affection, practice, and judgment; this is the general, neral, of which the following are the particulars: having the ſame love; both for quality, being hearty, ſincere, and unfeigned; and for quantity, returning the ſame that is meaſured to them; and with reſpect to objects, loving the ſame Chriſt, the ſame doctrines of Chriſt, the ſame miniſters of the Goſpel, and all the ſaints, rich and poor, high and low, weak or ſtrong believers, without making any difference, by which means unity is preſerved: for if one loves Chriſt, and another antichriſt; one loves one doctrine, and another the oppoſite to it; one loves a teacher of the law, and another a preacher of the Goſpel; one loves one Goſpel miniſter, and one loves another, in diſtinction from, and oppoſition to the other; one loves the rich and not the poor, men of great gifts and grace, and neglects the meaner ſaints; when this is the caſe, they can't be ſaid to have the ſame love, nor can there be harmony, concord, and agreement: being of one accord, or being alike in ſoul; having the ſame ſoul, not in ſubſtance and number, as ſome philoſophers have aſſerted, but having the ſame affection, judgment, and will, as the firſt chriſtians are ſaid to be of one heart and of one ſoul; or unanimous in their ſentiments about doctrines and ordinances, being all of a piece in their practices; and agreeing in all their counſels, debates, acts, and votes, in their church meetings: of one mind; in the doctrines of grace, in the ordinances of the Goſpel, and in the diſcipline of the church: the means of preſerving and increaſing ſuch affection, unity, and agreement, are next directed to.

Ver. 3. Let nothing be done through ſtrife, &c.] About words merely; otherwiſe they were to ſtrive for the faith of the Goſpel, the purity of Goſpel ordinances, worſhip, and diſcipline; but the Apoſtle would not have them ſtrive merely to carry a point determined on, without having any regard to reaſon and truth, or yielding to the infirmities of the weak; which is the caſe and conduct of contentious perſons; than which nothing can be more contrary to the ſpirit of the Goſpel, or the peace of churches: the Apoſtle adds, or vain-glory; for where this is predominant, perſons will always be ſingular in their ſentiments, and never relinquiſh them, let what reaſons ſoever be given againſt them; nor will they give way to the judgment of others, but right or wrong will have their own wills; Diotrephes like, loving to have the preeminence in all things; and ſuch perſons and conduct, are very injurious to the comfort and harmony of the ſaints: but in lowlineſs of mind, let each eſteem other better than themſelves; not as to the things of the world, in reſpect of which one man may be a better man than another, and he muſt know and think himſelf ſo; nor with reſpect to the endowments of the mind, and acquired abilities, which one man may have above another; and the difference being ſo great in ſome, it muſt be eaſily diſcerned, that one is more learned and knowing, in this or the other language, art, or ſcience; but with regard to grace, and to ſpiritual light, knowledge, and judgment: and where there is lowlineſs of mind, or true humility, a perſon will eſteem himſelf in a ſtate of grace, as the great Apoſtle did, the chief of ſinners, and leſs than the leaſt of all ſaints; one in whom this grace reigns, will pay a deference to the judgment of other ſaints, and will prefer their experience, light, and knowledge, to his own; and will readily give way, when he ſees ſuch that are of longer ſtanding, of greater experience, and more ſolid judgment, as he has reaſon to think, than himſelf, are on the other ſide of the queſtion; and ſo peace, love, and unity, are preſerved. This grace of humility is an excellent ornament to a chriſtian, and wonderfully uſeful in chriſtian ſocieties.

Ver. 4. Look not every man on his own things, &c.] Not but that a man ſhould take care of his worldly affairs, and look well unto them, and provide things honeſt in the ſight of all men, for himſelf and his family, otherwiſe he would be worſe than an infidel; but he is not to ſeek his own private advantage, and prefer it to a public good; accordingly the Syriac verſion reads it, neither let any one be careful of himſelf, but alſo every one of his neighbour; and the Arabic verſion thus, and let none of you look to that which conduces to himſelf alone, but let every one of you look to thoſe things which may conduce to his friend; but this reſpects ſpiritual things, and ſpiritual gifts: a chriſtian ſhould not ſeek his own honour and applauſe, and to have his own will, and a point in a church carried his own way, but ſhould conſult the honour of Chriſt, the good of others, and the peace of the church; he ſhould not look upon his own gifts, he may look upon them, and aſcribe them to the grace of God, and make uſe of them to his glory, but not to admire them, or himſelf for them, and pride himſelf in them, and lift up himſelf above others, neglecting and taking no notice of the ſuperior abilities of others: but every man alſo on the things of others; not on their worldly things, buſying himſelf with other mens matters, and which he has nothing to do with, but on the ſentiments and reaſons of others; which he ſhould well weigh and conſider, and if they out-do and overbalance his own, ſhould yield unto them; he ſhould take notice of the ſuperior gifts of others, and own and acknowledge them; which is the way to ſubmit to one another in the fear of God, and to promote truth, friendſhip, and love.

Ver. 5. Let this mind be in you, &c.] The Arabic verſion renders it, let that humility be perceived in you. The Apoſtle propoſes Chriſt as the great pattern and exemplar of humility; and inſtances in his aſſumption of human nature, and in his ſubjection to all that meanneſs, and death itſelf, even the death of the croſs in it; and which he mentions with this view, to engage the ſaints to lowlineſs of mind, in imitation of him; to ſhew forth the ſame temper and diſpoſition of mind in their practice, which alſo was in Chriſt Jeſus; or as the Syriac verſion, think ye the ſame thing as Jeſus Chriſt; let the ſame condeſcending ſpirit and humble deportment appear in you as in him. This mind, affection, and conduct of Chriſt, may refer both to his early affection to his people, the love he bore to them from everlaſting, the reſolution and determination of his mind in conſequence of it; and his agreement with his Father to take upon him their nature in the fulneſs of time, and to do his will, by obeying, ſuffering, and dying in their room and ſtead; and alſo the open exhibition and execution of all this in time, when he appeared in human nature, poor, mean, and abject; condeſcending to the loweſt offices, and behaving in the moſt meek and humble manner, throughout the whole of his life, to the moment of his death.

Ver. 6. Who being in the form of God, &c.] The Father; being the brightneſs of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon. This form is to be underſtood, not of any ſhape or figure of him; for as ſuch is not to be ſeen, it is not to be ſuppoſed of him; or any accidental form, for there are no accidents in God, whatever is in God, is God; he is nothing but nature and eſſence, he is the το ον, the Jehovah, I am what I am; and ſo is his Son, which is, and was, and is to come, the fountain of all created beings: nor does it intend any outward repreſentation and reſemblance of him, ſuch as in kings; who becauſe of the honour and dignity they are raiſed unto, the authority and power they have, and becauſe of the glory and majeſty they are arrayed with, are called gods: nor does it deſign the ſtate and condition Chriſt appeared in here on earth, having a power to work miracles, heal diſeaſes, and diſpoſſeſs devils, for the manifeſtation of his glory; and ſo might be ſaid to be in the form of God, as Moſes for doing leſs miracles is ſaid to be a God unto Pharaoh; ſince this account does not regard Chriſt as he was on earth in human nature, but what he was antecedent to the aſſumption of it; or otherwiſe his humility and condeſcenſion in becoming man, and ſo mean, will not appear: but this phraſe the form of God, is to be underſtood of the nature and eſſence of God, and deſcribes Chriſt as he was from all eternity; juſt as the form of a ſervant ſignifies, that he was really a ſervant, and the faſhion of a man in which he was found, means that he was truly and really man; ſo his being in the form of God intends, that he was really and truly God; that he partook of the ſame nature with the Father, and was poſſeſſed of the ſame glory: from whence it appears, that he was in being before his incarnation; that he exiſted as a diſtinct perſon from God his Father, in whoſe form he was, and that as a divine perſon, or as truly God, being in the glorious form, nature, and eſſence of God; and that there is but one form of God, or divine nature and eſſence, common to the Father and the Son, and alſo to the Spirit; ſo that they are not three Gods, but one God: what the form of God is, the Heathens themſelves [g] ſay cannot be comprehended nor ſeen, and ſo not to be enquired after; and they uſe the ſame word the Apoſtle does here [h]: and now Chriſt being in this glorious form, or having the ſame divine nature with the Father, with all the infinite and unſpeakable glories of it, thought it no robbery to be equal with God; the Father; for if he was in the ſame form, nature, and eſſence, he muſt be equal to him, as he is; for he has the ſame perfections, as eternity, omniſcience, omnipotence, omnipreſence, immutability, and ſelf-exiſtence: hence he has the ſame glorious names, as God, the mighty God, the true God, the living God, God over all, Jehovah, the Lord of glory, &c. the ſame works of creation and providence are aſcribed to him, and the ſame worſhip, homage, and honour given him: to be in the form of God, and to be equal with God, ſignify the ſame thing, the one is explanative of the other: and this divine form and equality, or true and proper deity, he did not obtain by force and rapine, by robbery and uſurpation, as ſatan attempted to do, and as Adam by his inſtigation alſo affected; and ſo the mind of a wicked man, as Philo the Jew ſays [i], being a lover of itſelf and impious, οιομενος ισος ειναι ϑεω, thinks itſelf to be equal with God, a like phraſe with this here uſed; but Chriſt enjoyed this equality by nature; he thought, he accounted, he knew he had it this way; and he held it hereby, and of right, and not by any unlawful means; and he reckoned that by declaring and ſhewing forth his proper deity, and perfect equality with the Father, he robbed him of no perfection; the ſame being in him as in the Father, and the ſame in the Father as in him; that he did him no injury, nor deprived him of any glory, or aſſumed that to himſelf which did not belong to him: as for the ſenſe which ſome put upon the words, that he did not affect, or greedily catch at deity; as the phraſe will not admit of it, ſo it is not true in fact; he did affect deity, and aſſerted it ſtrongly, and took every proper opportunity of declaring it, and in expreſs terms affirmed he was the Son of God; and in terms eaſy to be underſtood, declared his proper deity, and his unity and equality with the Father; required the ſame faith in himſelf as in the Father, and ſignified that he that ſaw the one, ſaw the other, Mark xiv. 61, 62. John v. 17, 18. and x. 30, 33. and xiv. 1, 10. Others give this as the ſenſe of them, that he did not in an oſtentatious way ſhew forth the glory of his divine nature, but rather hid it; 'tis true indeed, that Chriſt did not ſeek, but carefully ſhunned vain-glory and popular applauſe; and therefore often after having wrought a miracle, would charge the perſons on whom it was wrought, or the company, or his diſciples, not to ſpeak of it; this he did at certain times, and for certain reaſons; yet at other times we find, that he wrought miracles to manifeſt forth his glory, and frequently appeals to them as proofs of his deity and Meſſiahſhip: and beſides, the Apoſtle is ſpeaking not of what he was, or did in his incarnate ſtate, but of what he was and thought himſelf to be, before he became man; wherefore the above ſenſe is to be preferred as the genuine one.

Ver. 7. But made himſelf of no reputation, &c.] Or nevertheleſs emptied himſelf; not of that fulneſs of grace which was laid up in him from everlaſting, for with this he appeared when he was made fleſh, and dwelt among men; nor of the perfections of his divine nature, which were not in the leaſt diminiſhed by his aſſumption of human nature, for all the fulneſs of the Godhead dwelt in him bodily; though he took that which he had not before, he loſt nothing of what he had; the glory of his divine nature was covered, and out of ſight; and though ſome rays and beams of it broke out thro' his works and miracles, yet his glory, as the only begotten of the Father, was beheld only by a few; the minds of the far greater part were blinded, and their hearts hardened, and they ſaw no form nor comelineſs in him to deſire him; the form of God in which he was, was hid from them; they reputed him as a mere man, yea, as a ſinful man, even as a worm, and no man: and to be thus eſteemed, and had in ſuch account, he voluntarily ſubjected himſelf, though ſo infinitely great and glorious; as he did not aſſume deity by rapine, he was not thruſt down into this low eſtate by force; as the angels that ſinned when they affected to be as God, were drove from their ſeats of glory, and caſt down into hell; and when man, through the inſtigation of ſatan, was deſirous of the ſame, he was turned out of Eden, and became like the beaſts that periſh; but this was Chriſt's own act and deed, he willingly aſſented to it, to lay aſide as it were his glory for a while, to have it veiled and hid, and be reckoned any thing, a mere man, yea, to have a devil, and not be God: O wondrous humility! aſtoniſhing condeſcenſion! and took upon him the form of a ſervant; this alſo was voluntary; he took upon him, was not obliged, or forced to be in the form of a ſervant; he appeared as one in human nature, and was really ſuch; a ſervant to his Father, who choſe, called, ſent, upheld, and regarded him as a ſervant; and a very prudent, diligent, and faithful one he was unto him: and he was alſo a ſervant to his people, and miniſtred to men; partly by preaching the Goſpel to them, and partly by working miracles, healing their diſeaſes, going about to do good, both to the bodies and ſouls of men; and chiefly by obtaining eternal redemption for his choſen ones, by being made ſin and a curſe for them; which though a very toilſome and laborious piece of ſervice, yet as he chearfully engaged in it, he diligently attended it, until he had finiſhed it: ſo he was often propheſied of as a ſervant, in Iſa. xlii. 1. and lii. 13. Zech. iii. 6. in which ſeveral places he is called in the Targum, עבדי משיחא, my ſervant the Meſſiah: put theſe two together, the form of God, and the form of a ſervant, and admire the amazing ſtoop! and was made in the likeneſs of men; not of the firſt Adam, for though, as he, he was without ſin, knew none, nor did any; yet he was rather like to ſinful men, and was ſent in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, and was traduced and treated as a ſinner, and numbered among tranſgreſſors; he was like to men, the moſt mean and abject, ſuch as were poor, and in lower life, and were of the leaſt eſteem and account among men, on any ſcore: or he was like to men in common, and particularly to his brethren the ſeed of Abraham, and children of God that were given him; he partook of the ſame fleſh and blood, he had a true body, and a reaſonable ſoul, as they; he was ſubject to the like ſorrows and griefs, temptations, reproaches, and perſecutions; and was like them in every thing, excepting ſin: a ſtrange and ſurprizing difference this, that he who was equal to God, ſhould be like to ſinful men!

Ver. 8. And being found in faſhion as a man, &c.] Not that he had only the ſhew and appearance of a man, but he was really a man; for as here, denotes not merely the likeneſs of a thing, but the thing itſelf, as in Matt. xiv. 5. John i. 14. ως here, anſwers to the Hebrew כ, which is ſometimes by the Jews [k] ſaid to be כף חדמיון, and ſignifies likeneſs, and ſometimes כף האמתות, and deſigns truth and reality; which is the ſenſe in which the particle is to be taken here: though he was ſeen and looked upon as a mere man, and therefore charged with blaſphemy when he aſſerted himſelf to be the Son of God, he was more than a man; and yet found and known by men in common, to be no more than a man, than juſt ſuch a man, as other men are; and ſo far is true, that his ſcheme, his habit, his faſhion, his form, were like that of other men; though he was not begotten as man, but conceived in an extraordinary manner by the power of the Holy Ghoſt, yet he lay nine months in his mother's womb, as the human fœtus ordinarily does; he was born as children are, was wrapped in ſwaddling-bands when born, as an infant is; grew in ſtature by degrees, as men do; the ſhape and ſize of his body were like other mens, and he was ſubject to the ſame infirmities, as hunger, thirſt, wearineſs, pain, grief, ſorrow, and death itſelf, as follows: he humbled himſelf; by becoming man, and by various outward actions in his life; as ſubjection to his parents, working at the trade of a carpenter, converſing with the meaneſt of men, waſhing his diſciples feet, &c. and the whole of his deportment both to God and man, his compliance with his Father's will, though diſagreeable to fleſh and blood, his behaviour towards his enemies, and his forbearance of his diſciples, ſhewed him to be of a meek and humble ſpirit; he humbled himſelf both to God and man: and became obedient unto death, or until death; for he was obedient from the cradle to the croſs, to God, to men, to his earthly parents, and to magiſtrates; he was obedient to the ceremonial law, to circumciſion, the paſſover, &c. to the moral law, to all the precepts of it, which he punctually fulfilled; and to the penalty of it death, which he voluntarily and chearfully bore, in the room and ſtead of his people: even the death of the croſs; which was both painful and ſhameful; it was an accurſed one, and ſhewed that he bore the curſe of the law, and was made a curſe for us: this was a puniſhment uſually inflicted on ſervants, and is called a ſervile puniſhment [l]; and ſuch was the form which he took, when he was found in faſhion as a man: this is now the great inſtance of humility the Apoſtle gives, as a pattern of it to the ſaints, and it is a matchleſs and unparalleled one.

Ver. 9. Wherefore God alſo hath highly exalted him, &c.] The Apoſtle proceeds to obſerve the exaltation of Chriſt, for the encouragement of meek and humble ſouls; that whereas Chriſt, who ſo exceedingly demeaned himſelf, was afterwards highly exalted by God, ſo all ſuch who in imitation of him, behave to one another in lowlineſs of mind, ſhall be exalted in God's due time; for whoſo humbleth himſelf, ſhall be exalted. The firſt ſtep of Chriſt's exaltation, was his reſurrection from the dead, when he had a glory given him as man; his body was raiſed in incorruption, in glory, in power, and a ſpiritual one; it became a glorious body, and the pledge and exemplar of the ſaints at the general reſurrection, of which his transfiguration on the mount was an emblem and prelude; and he was alſo glorified then as Mediator, he was then juſtified in the Spirit, and acquitted and diſcharged from all the ſins of his people, he took upon him and bore, having ſatisfied for them; and all God's elect were juſtified in him, for he roſe as a public perſon, as their head, for their juſtification; yea, in ſome ſenſe he was then glorified, as a divine perſon; not that any new additional glory was, or could be made to him as ſuch; but there was an illuſtrious manifeſtation of his natural, eſſential, and original glory; he was declared to be the Son of God with power, by his reſurrection from the dead: the next ſtep of his high exaltation, was his aſcending on high up to the third heaven, where he is made higher than the heavens; when he was accompanied by an innumerable company of angels, and by thoſe ſaints whoſe bodies roſe out of their graves after his reſurrection; and was received and carried up in a bright glorious cloud; and paſſing through the air, the ſeat of the devils, he led captivity captive, and triumphed over principalities and powers, having before ſpoiled them on his croſs; and then entering into heaven, he ſat down at the right-hand of God, which is another branch of his exaltation; and ſhews that he had done his work, and that it was approved and accepted of; and had that glory and honour beſtowed on him, which never was on any mere creature, angels or men, to ſit down on the right-hand of the majeſty on high; which as it is the higheſt pitch of the exaltation of the human nature of Chriſt, ſo by it there is a moſt illuſtrious diſplay of the glory of his divine perſon as the Son of God; who was with God, as one brought up with him from all eternity; and was ſo likewiſe when here on earth, but not ſo manifeſtly; but now he is openly and manifeſtatively glorified with himſelf, with that glory he had with him before the world began: moreover, Chriſt's exaltation lies in his having the gifts of the Spirit without meaſure, to beſtow on his miniſters and churches, in all ſucceeding generations, for the carrying on of his intereſt, and the enlargement of his kingdom; in having all power in heaven and in earth, to compleat his work and great deſigns; in having dominion and authority over all creatures and things, which are made to be ſubſervient to the execution of his mediatorial office; and in having the right and power of judging the world at the laſt day, when there will ſtill be a more glorious diſplay of his eternal deity and divine Sonſhip; for he'll come in his Father's glory, and in his own, and with his holy angels: now the cauſes of Chriſt's exaltation are theſe: the efficient cauſe is God; though he made himſelf of no reputation, and humbled himſelf, theſe were voluntary acts of his own; yet he did not exalt himſelf, but God exalted him, even God the Father; with him the covenant of grace and redemption was made, in which glory was promiſed Chriſt, in conſideration of his obedience, ſufferings, and death; and which he prayed to him for, and pleaded for with him, having done his work; and which exaltation of Chriſt is always aſcribed to God, even the Father; ſee Acts ii. 33. and iii. 13. and v. 31. the impulſive or moving cauſe, and indeed the meritorious cauſe, were the humiliation of Chriſt; becauſe he, though he was originally ſo great and glorious, yet made himſelf as it were nothing, humbled himſelf to become man, and was contented to be accounted a mere man, and went up and down in the form of a ſervant; and becauſe he became ſo chearfully obedient to the whole law, and to death itſelf, for the ſake of his people, and out of love to them, therefore God exalted him: the exaltation of Chriſt, was not only a conſequence of his obedience and death, and his humiliation, merely the way to his glory; but his high and exalted eſtate were the reward of all this; it was what was promiſed him in covenant, what was then agreed upon, what he expected and pleaded, and had as a recompence of reward, in conſideration of his having glorified God on earth, and finiſhed the work he undertook to do: it follows as an inſtance of the exaltation of Chriſt, and hath given him a name which is above every name. The Syriac verſion renders it, which is more excellent than every name; and the Arabic verſion tranſlates it, which is more eminent than every name; and the Ethiopic verſion thus, which is greater than every name; by which is meant, not any particular and peculiar name by which he is called; not the name of God, for though this is his name, the mighty God, and ſo is even the incommunicable name Jehovah, and which may be truly ſaid to be every name; but neither of theſe are given him, but what he has by nature; and beſides were what he had before his exaltation in human nature: 'tis true indeed, upon that this name of his became more illuſtrious and manifeſt unto men; it is a more clear point, that he is God over all bleſſed for evermore; and it will ſtill be more manifeſt at his glorious appearing, that he is the great God, as well as our Saviour: to which may be added, that the name Jehovah in the plate of gold on the high-prieſt's forehead, was ſet above the other word; ſo ſays Maimonides [m], “the plate of gold was two “fingers broad, and it reached from ear to ear; “and there was written upon it two lines, holineſs “to the Lord; קדש holineſs was written below, and “ליהוה מלמעלה, to the Lord, or to Jehovah, “above:” whether here may not be an alluſion to this, I leave to be conſidered: nor do I think that the name of the Son of God is meant; this is indeed a name of Chriſt, and a more excellent one than either angels or men have; for he is in ſuch ſenſe the Son of God, as neither of them are; but this is a name alſo which he has by nature, and is what he had before his exaltation; and was before this atteſted by his Father, and confeſſed by angels, men, and devils; though indeed upon his exaltation, he was declared more manifeſtly to be the Son of God, as he will be yet more clearly in his kingdom and glory: much leſs is the name Jeſus intended, which was given him by the angel before his conception and birth, and was a name common to men among the Jews; but it ſeems to deſign ſuch fame and renown, honour, glory, and dignity, as were never given unto, and beſtowed upon creatures; as his riſing from the dead as a public perſon, his aſcending on high in the manner he did, his ſeſſion at the right-hand of God, his inveſtiture with all gifts, power, dominion, authority, and with the judgment of the world; and whatever name of greatneſs there is among men or angels, Chriſt has that which is ſuperior to it. Was a prieſt a name of honour and dignity among the Jews? Chriſt is not only a prieſt, and an high-prieſt, but a great high-prieſt; a prieſt not after the order of Aaron, but after the order of Melchizedec, and a greater than he himſelf. Is a king a great name among men? Chriſt has on his veſture and on his thigh, a name written king of kings, and lord of lords. Is a deliverer of a nation a title of great honour? Chriſt is exalted to be a prince and a ſaviour of men of all nations; nor is there any other name but his, that is given among men, whereby we muſt be ſaved. Is a mediator between jarring princes and kingdoms, accounted a name of greatneſs and glory? Chriſt is the one only mediator between God and man, and of a new and better covenant. Are angels, ſeraphim, cherubim, thrones, dominions, principalities, and powers, great names in the other world? Chriſt is the angel of God's preſence, an increated one, the angel of the covenant, the head of all principality and power. Theſe are all ſubject to him, and he is ſet at God's right-hand far above them.

[k] Vid. Kimchi in Joſh. iii. 4.

[l] Lipſius de cruce, l. 1. c. 12.

Ver. 10. That at the name of Jeſus every knee ſhould bow, &c.] Which is to be underſtood, not of the outward act of bowing the knee upon hearing the name, and the ſyllables of the mere name Jeſus pronounced; for in the bare name there can be nothing which can command ſuch a peculiar reſpect; it was a name common with the Jews: Joſhua is ſo called in Heb. iv. 8. and the name of Elymas the ſorcerer was Bar-Jeſus; that is, the ſon of Jeſus, Acts xiii. 6. Now, how monſtrouſly ridiculous and ſtupid would it be, for a man, upon hearing theſe paſſages, and upon the pronouncing of this word, to bow the knee? Moreover, the words ought not to be rendered at, but in the name of Jeſus; that is, in and by reaſon of the power, authority, and dignity of Jeſus, as exalted at God's right hand, every creature is to be ſubject to him: add to this, that there are ſeveral creatures included in the following account, who, in a corporal ſenſe, have not knees to bow with, as angels, the ſouls of men departed, and devils; and therefore an external corporal bowing of the knee cannot be meant. The Jews indeed, upon hearing the name Jehovah pronounced by the high-prieſt, in the holy of holies, uſed to bow: they ſay[n], "that the prieſts, and the "people, that ſtand in the court, when they hear "Shembamphoraſh, (i. e. the name Jehovah) pro"nounced by the high-prieſt, היו כורעים, bowed, "and worſhipped, and fell upon their faces, and "ſaid, bleſſed be the name of the glory of his "kingdom, for ever and ever:" tho' it can hardly be thought there's any reference to this here. But inaſmuch as this action is a token of reverence, worſhip, and ſubjection, it is uſed for thoſe things themſelves; and the ſenſe is, that Chriſt is exalted as before deſcribed, that every creature may give him reverence, worſhip, and adoration, ſubmit and be ſubject to him, as all do, and ſhall, either freely or forcedly. Some really and heartily truſt in his name, are baptized in his name, and aſcribe honour, and glory, and bleſſing to him from their whole hearts; and others feignedly, and whether they will or no, are ſubject to him, and ſooner or later ſhall acknowledge his authority over them: and he ſhall be owned to be Lord of things in heaven; the angels there, and the ſouls of departed ſaints, with thoſe who are already clothed with their bodies: and things in earth; both good men, and bad men: and things under the earth; or in the abyſs, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; meaning either the devils in the bottomleſs pit; or rather the dead bodies of men in the grave, which ſhall come forth and ſtand before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt.

[m] Hilchot Cele Hamikdaſh, c. 9. §. 1.

Ver. 11. And that every tongue ſhould confeſs, &c.] Whether of angels or men, or of men of whatſoever nation. Confeſſion is either true and hearty, as when the mouth and heart agree in confeſſing, and which is made only by true believers; or verbal only, or in mere outward form, and by force, as in hypocrites, wicked men, and devils themſelves; who all either have confeſſed, or will confeſs, that Jeſus Chriſt is Lord: the holy angels confeſs him to be Lord, and their Lord truly, and are unfeignedly ſubject to him; and true believers heartily own him as their Lord, and chearfully ſubmit to his commands and ordinances; and the fooliſh virgins, and the goats on Chriſt's left-hand, will, at the laſt day, call him Lord, Lord; and the worſt of men, yea, even devils, will be obliged to own his lordſhip and dominion; which will be to the glory of God the Father. The Syriac reads, his Father, who has choſe and conſtituted him as the mediator, inveſted him with his office, ordained him to be judge of quick and dead, and given him all power and authority, and exalted him at his own right-hand; ſo that he that honoureth the Son, honoureth the Father alſo. The Vulgate Latin verſion renders the words, becauſe the Lord Jeſus Chriſt is in the glory of God the Father; being in the form of God, of the ſame nature and eſſence with him, and equal to him; as he will appear to be at his ſecond coming, for then he'll come in the glory of his Father.

Ver. 12. Wherefore, my beloved, &c.] This is an inference from the inſtance and example of Chriſt; that ſince he, who was God over all, bleſſed for ever, made himſelf ſo low in human nature, in which he is now ſo highly exalted, having done the work and buſineſs he came about with ſuch condeſcenſion, humility, and meekneſs; therefore it becomes thoſe who profeſs to be his followers, to do all their affairs as men and chriſtians, with, and among one another, in all lowlineſs of mind. The Apoſtle calls the ſaints here, my beloved, he having a ſtrong affection for them, which he frequently expreſſes in this Epiſtle; and he chuſes to make uſe of ſuch an endearing appellation, that it might be obſerved, that what he was about to ſay to them, ſprung from pure love to them, and a hearty deſire for their welfare, and from no other end, and with no other view: and to encourage them to go on in a courſe of humble duty, he commends them for their former obedience, as ye have always obeyed; not me, as the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions ſupply; but either God, acting according to his revealed will, they had knowledge of; or Chriſt by receiving him as prophet, prieſt, and king, by ſubmitting to his righteouſneſs, and the ſceptre of his grace; or the Goſpel, by embracing the truths of it, profeſſing them, and abiding in them, and by ſubjecting to the ordinances of it, and doing all things whatſoever Chriſt has commanded: and this they did always; they were always abounding in the work of the Lord, doing his will; they abode by Chriſt, and continued ſtedfaſtly in his doctrines, and kept the ordinances as they were delivered to them, and walked in all the commandments of the Lord blameleſs. Not as in my preſence only, but now much more in my abſence; which clauſe may either be referred to the foregoing, which expreſſes their obedience; and ſo ſignifies that that was carefully and chearfully performed, not only whilſt the Apoſtle was with them, but now when he was abſent from them, and much more when abſent than preſent; which ſhows, that they were not eye-ſervants, and men-pleaſers, but what they did they did ſincerely and heartily, as to the Lord: or to the following exhortation, that they would attend to it; not only as they had done when he was among them, of which he was witneſs, but that they would much more do ſo now he was abſent from them, namely, work out your own ſalvation with fear and trembling; which is to be underſtood not in ſuch ſenſe as tho' men could obtain and procure for themſelves ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation by their own works and doings; for ſuch a ſenſe is contrary to the ſcriptures, which deny any part of ſalvation, as election, juſtification, and vocation, and the whole of it to be of works, but aſcribe it to the free grace of God; and is alſo repugnant to the perfections of God, as his wiſdom, grace, and righteouſneſs; for where are the wiſdom and love of God, in forming a ſcheme of ſalvation, and ſending his Son to effect it, and after all it is left to men to work it out for themſelves? and where's the juſtice of God in admitting of an imperfect righteouſneſs in the room of a perfect one, which muſt be the caſe, if ſalvation is obtained by men's works? for theſe are imperfect, even the beſt of them; and is another reaſon againſt this ſenſe of the paſſage; and were they perfect, they could not be meritorious of ſalvation, for the requiſites of merits are wanting in them. Moreover, was ſalvation to be obtained by the works of men, theſe conſequences would follow; the death of Chriſt would be in vain, boaſting would be encouraged in men, they would have whereof to glory, and their obligations to obedience taken from the love of God, and redemption by Chriſt would be weakened and deſtroyed: add to all this, that the ſcriptures aſſure us, that ſalvation is alone by Chriſt; and that it is already finiſhed by him, and not to be wrought out now by him, or any other; and that ſuch is the weakneſs and impotence of men, even of believers, to whom this exhortation is directed, that it is impoſſible for them ever to effect it; therefore, whatever ſenſe theſe words have, we may be ſure that this can never poſſibly be the ſenſe of them. The words may be rendered, work about your ſalvation; employ yourſelves in things which accompany ſalvation, and to be performed by all thoſe that expect it, tho' not to be expected for the performance of them; ſuch as hearing of the word, ſubmiſſion to Goſpel-ordinances, and a diſcharge of every branch of moral, ſpiritual, and evangelical obedience, for which the Apoſtle before commends them, and now exhorts them to continue in; to go on in a courſe of chearful obedience to the cloſe of their days, believing in Chriſt, obeying his Goſpel, attending conſtantly to his word and ordinances, and diſcharging every duty in faith and fear, until at laſt they ſhould receive the end of their faith, the ſalvation of their ſouls: agreeably the Syriac verſion renders the words, פלוחו פולחנא דחייכון, do the work, or buſineſs of your lives; the work you are to do in your generation, which God has preſcribed and directed you to, which the grace of God teaches, and the love of Chriſt conſtrains to. Do all that with fear and trembling; not with a ſlaviſh fear of hell and damnation, or leſt they ſhould fall away, or finally miſcarry of heaven and happineſs; ſince this would be a diſtruſt of the power and faithfulneſs of God, and ſo criminal in them; nor is it reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that the Apoſtle would exhort to ſuch a fear, when he himſelf was ſo confidently aſſured, that the good work begun in them would be performed; and beſides, the exhortation would be very oddly formed, if this was the ſenſe, work out your ſalvation with fear of damnation: but this fear and trembling ſpoken of, is ſuch as is conſiſtent with the higheſt acts of faith, truſt, confidence, and joy, and is oppoſed to pride and vain-glory; ſee Pſ. cxv. 11. and ii. 11. Rom. xi. 20. and intends modeſty and humility, which is what the Apoſtle is preſſing for throughout the whole context; and here urges to a chearful and conſtant obedience to Chriſt, with all humility of ſoul, without dependance on it, or vain-glorying in it, but aſcribing it wholly to the grace of God, for the following reaſon.

[n] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 66. 1. Maimon. Yom Haccippurim, c. 2. §. 7.

Ver. 13. For it is God which worketh in you, &c.] Which is both an encouragement to perſons conſcious of their own weakneſs to work, as before exhorted to; ſee Hagg. ii. 4. and a reaſon and argument for humility and meekneſs, and againſt pride and vain-glory, ſince all we have, and do, is from God; and alſo points out the ſpring, principle, and foundation of all good works; namely, the grace of God wrought in the heart, which is an internal work, and purely the work of God: by this men become the workmanſhip of God, created unto good works, and are new men, and fitted for the performance of acts of righteouſneſs, and true holineſs; and this grace, which God works in them, is wrought in a powerful and efficacious manner, ſo as not to be fruſtrated and made void. The word here uſed ſignifies an inward, powerful, and efficacious operation; and the King's manuſcript, mentioned by Grotius and Hammond, adds another word to it, which makes the ſenſe ſtill ſtronger, reading it thus, which worketh in you, δυναμει, by power; not by moral ſuaſion, but by his own power, the power of his efficacious grace. The Alexandrian copy reads, δυναμεις, powers, or mighty works: God works in his people both to will and to do of his good pleaſure; God works in converted men a will to that which is ſpiritually good; which is to be underſtood, not of the formation of the natural faculty of the will; or of the preſervation of it, and its natural liberty; or of the general motion of it to natural objects; nor of his influence on it in a providential way; but of the making of it good, and cauſing a willingneſs in it to that which is ſpiritually good. Men have no will naturally to come to Chriſt, or to have him to reign over them; they have no deſire, nor hungrings and thirſtings after his righteouſneſs and ſalvation; where-ever there are any ſuch inclinations and deſires, they are wrought in men by God; who works upon the ſtubborn and inflexible will, and without any force to it, makes the ſoul willing to be ſaved by Chriſt, and ſubmit to his righteouſneſs, and do his will; he ſweetly and powerfully draws it with the cords of love to himſelf, and to his Son, and ſo influences it by his grace and Spirit, and which he continues, that it freely wills every thing ſpiritually good, and for the glory of God: and he works in them alſo to do; for there is ſometimes in believers a will, when there wants a power of doing. God therefore both implants in them principles of action to work from, as faith and love, and a regard for his glory, and gives them grace and ſtrength to work with, without which they can do nothing, but having theſe, can do all things: and all this is of his good pleaſure; the word his not being in the original text, ſome have taken the liberty to aſcribe this to the will of man; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, both to will, and to do that, רצבין אנתון, which ye will, or according to your good will; but ſuch a ſenſe is both bad and ſenſeleſs; for if they have a good will of themſelves, what occaſion is there for God to work one in them? no; theſe internal operations of divine power and grace, are not owing to the will of men, nor to any merits of theirs, or are what God is obliged to do, but what flow from his ſovereign will and pleaſure; who works when, where, and as he pleaſes, and that for his own glory; and who continues to do ſo in the hearts of his people; otherwiſe, notwithſtanding the work of grace in them, they would find very little inclination to, and few and faint deſires after ſpiritual things, and leſs ſtrength to do what is ſpiritually good; but God of his good pleaſure goes on working what is well-pleaſing in his ſight.

Ver. 14. Do all things, &c.] Not evil things, theſe are to be abhorr'd, ſhuned, and avoided, even all appearance of them, they are not to be done, even for the ſake of good; nor all indifferent things at all times, and under all circumſtances, when the peace and edification of others are in danger of being hurt by ſo doing; but all good things, all that are agreeable to the righteous law and good-will of God; all thoſe good things which accompany ſalvation, as hearing the word, and attendance on ordinances; all church affairs relating to public worſhip, private conference, every thing at church meetings, and which concern the diſcipline and laws of Chriſt's houſe; and all things that are civilly, morally, ſpiritually, and evangelically good; even all things that God would have done, or we would deſire ſhould be done to us by fellow-creatures and fellow-chriſtians: let all theſe be done without murmurings; either againſt God and Chriſt, as if any thing hard and ſevere was enjoined, when Chriſt's yoke is eaſy, and his burden light, and none of his commands grievous; and becauſe their preſence is not always enjoyed, and that communion and comfort in ordinances had, which may be deſired: or againſt the miniſters of the Goſpel, in whoſe power it is not to give grace, comfort, and ſpiritual refreſhment; any more than it was in Moſes and Aaron to give bread and water to the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, for which they murmured againſt them, and in ſo doing, againſt God himſelf: or againſt one another, becauſe of ſuperior enjoyments in nature, providence, and grace; but all things, both of a moral, civil, and religious nature, with reſpect to God, and one another, ſhould be done readily, freely, chearfully, and heartily: and alſo without diſputings; or without heſitations, as the Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions render it. Whatever appears to be agreeable to the will of God, ſhould be done at once without diſpute upon it, or heſitation about it, however diſagreeable it may be to carnal ſenſe and reaſon; the will of God is not to be diſputed, nor fleſh and blood to be conſulted, in oppoſition to it; nor ſhould the ſaints enter into any carnal reaſonings, and contentious diſputations, either at their public or private meetings, but do all they do decently, and in order, and in the exerciſe of brotherly love.

Ver. 15. That ye may be blameleſs, &c.] This, and what follows, ſhew the end to be anſwered, by obſerving the above exhortation. This reſpects not their being blameleſs in the ſight of God, which the ſaints are not in themſelves, being not without ſin, tho' they are, as conſidered in Chriſt, clothed with his righteouſneſs, and waſhed in his blood; but their being blameleſs before men: and this may be underſtood, both actively and paſſively; actively, that they might be without blaming others; ſome are ſo unhappy in their diſpoſition and conduct, as to be always finding fault with, and blaming all perſons they are concerned with, and all things in them, and done by them right or wrong, without any juſt reaſon; and this ought not to be, and may be prevented by doing all things, as before directed: or paſſively, that they might not be blamed by others juſtly; for no man can eſcape the blame and cenſure of every one; our Lord himſelf did not, nor this our Apoſtle; but doing, as before exhorted to, will, in a great meaſure, preclude any juſt reaſon for blame and complaint: 'tis added, and harmleſs; that is, that they might be, and appear to be ſo; harmleſs as doves, in imitation of Chriſt, who was holy in his nature, and harmleſs in his converſation, as his followers ſhould be; doing no injury to any man's perſon or property, behaving in an inoffenſive manner to all men, to Jew and Gentile, and to the church of God: it follows, the ſons of God; not that they might be ſons by ſo doing; but be as the ſons of God, as the Syriac verſion renders it, be like them, and behave as ſuch; for they were the ſons of God already; not by creation only, as angels, and all men are, nor merely by profeſſion of religion, but by adopting grace; they were predeſtinated to the adoption of children, and were taken into this relation in the covenant of grace, Chriſt had redeemed them from under the law, that they might receive this bleſſing, and it was actually beſtowed upon them by him in converſion: but the ſenſe is, that they might appear to be the children of God, by acting as becomes ſuch; not that they might appear ſo to themſelves, for they were openly and manifeſtatively to themſelves the children of God, by faith in Chriſt Jeſus, and through the teſtimony of the Spirit, witneſſing to their Spirits that they were in ſuch a relation to God; but that they might appear ſo to others, that they were the adopted ſons of God, and alſo begotten again by him, and made partakers of the divine nature; by their being followers of God as dear children, and by their being obedient ones to him in all holineſs and godly converſation, yielding a ready and chearful obedience to his will, without repining at it, or diſputing about it: and to be without rebuke; not without the rebuke of their heavenly Father, for whom he loves he rebukes; and every ſon that he receives into his family he ſcourges and chaſtizes, not in wrath and anger, or with rebukes of fury, but of love; but without the rebuke of men, both of the churches and miniſters of Chriſt, whoſe buſineſs it is to reprove and rebuke, publickly and privately, as caſes and their circumſtances require; and of the men of the world, who when they have any occaſion, make uſe of it to ſpeak reproachfully, as a railing Rabſhakeh did, when it is a time of rebuke and blaſphemy, and to be ſhunned and guarded againſt as much as poſſible: eſpecially ſince the ſaints live in the midſt of a crooked and perverſe nation; or age and generation, as every age is; ſaints are like lilies in the vallies, liable to be trampled upon by the foot of every wild beaſt; like roſes among thorns, to be ſcratched and torn; and like Lots in the midſt of Sodom, vexed with the filthy converſation of the wicked: the whole world lies in ſin, and the ſaints are encloſed on every ſide with wicked men. Philippi, where theſe ſaints lived, was a place of wickedneſs, and ſo no doubt was the whole region of Macedonia; the inhabitants were evil for the moſt part; their ways were crooked, and their works perverſe, being contrary to the law of God, and Goſpel of Chriſt; and therefore the following exhortation to the ſaints there was very ſuitable. Among whom ye ſhine; or ſhine ye, as it may be rendered, as lights in the world. This world is, in a moral ſenſe, what the original chaos was in a natural ſenſe, covered with darkneſs; the darkneſs of ignorance and unbelief, of impiety and ſuperſtition, has ſpread itſelf over the far greater part of the world; the men of it are children of the night, and of darkneſs; their works are works of darkneſs, and they are going on in darkneſs, not knowing where they are going. The ſaints are the lights of the world, they were once darkneſs itſelf, but are made light in and by the Lord; they are called into marvellous light, and are filled with light ſpiritual and evangelical; they are like the moon and ſtars, that give light to the world in the night; and as they receive their light from the ſun, and communicate it to the world, ſo do the ſaints receive theirs from Chriſt, the ſun of righteouſneſs, and ſhew it forth to others, both by doctrine and practice: or rather the churches of Chriſt are as candleſticks, in which the light of the Goſpel is put, and held forth to men, as follows; ſee Matt. v. 14, 15, 16.

Ver. 16. Holding forth the word of life, &c.] By which may be meant, either Chriſt the eſſential Word, in whom life was, and is, and who is called the quick or living Word, John i. 1, 4. Heb. iv. 12. and here may be ſtiled the Word of life, becauſe he has all life in him; he has a divine life in him, as God, he is the living God; and it is given to him to have life in himſelf, as mediator, for all his people; and he ever lives as man to make interceſſion for them; and becauſe he is the author of life in every ſenſe, of natural life to all men, of ſpiritual and eternal life to as many as the Father has given him: or elſe the Goſpel is intended, and the doctrines of it; and which are ſometimes called the words of eternal life, and of this life, John vi. 68. Acts v. 20. and that becauſe they are a means of quickening dead ſinners, they are a ſavour of life unto life, and the Spirit that giveth life, and of enlivening and comforting living ſaints; they treat of Chriſt who is the life; by the Goſpel, life and immortality are brought to light; that gives an account of everlaſting life; points out Chriſt as the way to it, ſhews that meetneſs for it lies in regenerating grace, and a right unto it is in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt. Now this Word of life is held forth, partly by the preaching of it to a dark world, as by ſome; and partly by profeſſing it publickly, as it ſhould be by all who are enlightened with it; and alſo by living lives and converſations becoming and ſuitable to it. That I may rejoice in the day of Chriſt. The Apoſtle having obſerved the advantages that would accrue to themſelves, and the benefit they might be of to the men of the world, by regarding the ſeveral exhortations he had given them, and which ends he mentions as reaſons and arguments to enforce them, cloſes with taking notice of the uſe and ſervice it would be to himſelf; it would give him joy and pleaſure when Chriſt ſhould come a ſecond time to judge the world; and when the dead in Chriſt would be raiſed, and ſet at his right hand, and theſe among the reſt, to whom the Apoſtle had been uſeful; and who continued to bear an honourable teſtimony in the world to Chriſt, and his Goſpel, to the end: that I have not run in vain, nor laboured in vain; being bleſſed with ſuch converts under his miniſtry, as were a credit to religion, an honour to the Goſpel, and a crown of rejoicing to him. He expreſſes his miniſterial function, and the diſcharge of it, by running in a race, as the miniſtry of a perſon is ſometimes called his courſe, Acts xiii. 25. and xx. 24. 2 Tim. iv. 7. in alluſion to the Olympic games, which the Apoſtle often refers to, when the conqueror obtained a crown; and it was enough for our Apoſtle, and a crown of rejoicing to him, that his ſpiritual children walked in the truth, and as became it, to the end: and alſo by labour, and hard ſervice, as the miniſterial work is, when faithfully performed; and eſpecially as his was, which was attended with ſo many difficulties, and yet with ſuch conſtancy, diligence, and indefatigableneſs, all which was not in vain; and he could look back upon it with pleaſure, when his followers ſtood faſt in the faith, and adorned the doctrine of Chriſt.

Ver. 17. Yea, and if I be offered, &c.] Or poured out, as the drink-offerings of wine or oil were; meaning the effuſion of his blood, which he compares to a libation, or drink-offering, which was poured upon the ſacrifice; and the laying down of his life for the ſake of Chriſt, and his Goſpel, which he knew not how ſoon might be, tho' he was in ſome hopes of a deliverance for the preſent, and therefore ſpeaks of it in an hypothetical way; yet he expected it ſooner or later; and that whenever it was, it would be as the libation upon the offering. Upon the ſacrifice and ſervice of your faith; he had been the means of bringing them to the faith of Chriſt, in which they were an offering acceptable to God, being ſanctified by the Holy Ghoſt; ſee Rom. xv. 16. and ſhould he ſuffer and ſhed his blood in the cauſe of Chriſt, it would be as a libation on them, as a ſacrifice; it would be for the ſake of preaching the doctrine of faith, by which they were brought to believe on Chriſt; and it would be for the further confirmation of their faith, and as a drink-offering acceptable unto God; upon all which accounts it would be matter of joy to him. I joy and rejoice with you all; meaning at his ſufferings and death, and the advantages thereof to Chriſt, to his churches, and to himſelf.

Ver. 18. For the ſame cauſe alſo do ye joy and rejoice with me.] He would not have them be ſorrowful, ſhould they hear of his death for the ſake of the Goſpel, and of his blood being poured out in ſuch a cauſe; ſince it was as a libation on their faith, and for the confirmation of it, and would be gain to Chriſt, and his intereſt, and to the Apoſtle alſo; and therefore they ſhould be ſo far from indulging grief and ſorrow on that account, that they ſhould rather joy and rejoice with him, who was ready to be offered up, or poured out; ſince he had run out his race, and that not in vain, but to ſo good a purpoſe, and eſpecially among them.

Ver. 19. But I truſt in the Lord Jeſus, &c.] Or hope; not in himſelf, his wiſdom, will, reſolutions and purpoſes; nor in an arm of fleſh, in any human aid and power; nor in princes, not in Nero, the Roman emperor, as expecting a releaſe from bonds by him, when he could the more eaſily part with Timothy; but in the Lord Jeſus, in the Lord whom every tongue ſhall confeſs to be ſo; and in that Jeſus, in whoſe name every knee ſhall bow; who is king of kings, and lord of lords, and the only ſaviour and deliverer of his people; who has the hearts of all men in his hands, and all power in heaven and in earth: he hoped and truſted, that thro' the goodneſs and power of Chriſt, opening a way for him, he ſhould be able to ſend Timotheus ſhortly unto you; one that had known the ſcriptures from his youth, and was very early converted to the chriſtian faith, was an eminent preacher of the Goſpel, and well known to the Philippians. The Apoſtle hoped to ſend him to them ſhortly, in a very little time; this he ſaid in order to encourage them, and thereby ſuggeſting, that he thought his own deliverance was at hand: this hope did not ariſe from a ſure and certain perſuaſion of the thing, but from love to theſe ſaints; he had a very great affection for them; he knew that a Goſpel-miniſter, and particularly Timothy, would be of great comfort and ſervice to them; wherefore, from that love which hopes all things, he hoped he ſhould, in a ſhort time, be able to ſerve them in love that way: the end he propoſed in it is next expreſſed, that I alſo may be of good comfort when I know your ſtate; not their wordly eſtate, their ſecular affairs, and whether they proſpered in their trades and buſineſs, and increaſed in riches; nor their corporal eſtate, or ſtate of health, and whether they proſpered in their bodies, not but that the knowledge of each of theſe would be welcome to the Apoſtle; nor every one's perſonal ſpiritual eſtate, what was the particular caſe and ſtate of each member; for tho' it is the buſineſs of a paſtor of a church to look diligently to the ſtate of his flock, and learn the caſe of every particular member, the Apoſtle could not be thought to come at ſuch an exact knowledge of things, who had the care of all the churches upon him; but their eccleſiaſtical ſtate, their church ſtate in general; how the Goſpel ſtood with them, and they in that; whether they held it faſt, and ſtrove for it, and what ground the falſe teachers got among them; how the ordinances of the Goſpel were regarded and attended on by them; with what life and light, and liberty and zeal, their miniſters preached the word; and what ſucceſs they had to the converſion of ſinners, and comfort of ſaints; and how they behaved towards them, in honouring, obeying, and ſubmitting to them, and eſteeming them highly for their works ſake; what an increaſe of gifts, grace, and numbers there was among them; and what harmony, love, peace, and concord ſubſiſted between them; and what afflictions and perſecutions they endured for the ſake of Chriſt; and with what patience, faith, and chearfulneſs they bore them By the return of Timothy he hoped to have know ledge of theſe things, that ſo he might alſo be of good comfort; as they would be by the coming of Timothy to them, by his preaching among them, and relating to them the caſe and circumſtances of the Apoſtle, how chearful he was under his afflictions, and of what uſe they were to the cauſe of Chriſt. The comfort and pleaſure of Goſpel miniſters lie in the good of the churches of Chriſt; it puts them in good heart and ſoul, as the word here uſed ſignifies, when they hear of their ſtedfaſtneſs in the faith of Chriſt, of their love to one another, and all the ſaints, and of their patience under ſufferings.

Ver. 20. For I have no man like-minded, &c.] With myſelf; as my ſoul, ſo the Syriac verſion renders it. Timothy had a ſoul like the Apoſtle's, which none that were with him, beſides him, had; he was of the ſame judgment with him in the doctrines of grace; he received and preached the ſame Goſpel as he did; he preached the ſame Chriſt, the Son of God, without yea and nay; he had the ſame affection for the Apoſtle, and the ſouls of men, as he had; his ſoul was knit to his, and they had, as it were, but one ſoul in two bodies; he was engaged in the ſame work of the Lord, and purſued it with the ſame zeal and diligence; he was a ſecond Paul in the pulpit; and there was no man like-minded as he, or ſo well diſpoſed to the Philippians as he was, that had their good and cauſe at heart, and was willing to take ſo long a journey to do them ſervice; for he had a particular affection for them, having been among them with the Apoſtle, when he firſt preached the Goſpel to them: who will naturally care for your ſtate. There were none like him that would; many were like the ſhepherds of Iſrael, that fed themſelves and not the flock; but he was one that was diligent to know the ſtate of the flock, and looked well to the herd under his care; and had an anxious care and ſolicitude, as the word ſignifies, for the good of ſouls. The work of a faithful Goſpel-miniſter is a work of care; one of his characters is, that he cares for the church of God; and tho' anxious care in worldly things is forbidden, yet in the affairs of Chriſt's houſe it is highly commendable, and eſpecially when it is natural, or genuine and ſincere, as Timothy's was: he had a ſincere love, an hearty and real concern for their good; and which he would ſhew by delivering to them the ſincere milk of the word, by preaching the Goſpel in the power and purity of it, with all ſincerity and uprightneſs, with a ſingle eye to the glory of Chriſt, and the good of their ſouls; and which is the Apoſtle's reaſon for ſending him unto them.

Ver. 21. For all ſeek their own, &c.] Meaning not every individual, but the greateſt part; and not merely ſuch as were manifeſtly falſe teachers, but ſuch as were with the Apoſtle, as miniſters of the word; and we may ſuppoſe him to be ſtripped, by one means or another, of the more valuable preachers of the Goſpel, and to be in much ſuch a caſe as he deſcribes himſelf to be, in 2 Tim. iv. 10, 11, 12. He had none with him, excepting a very few, but ſuch as he ſpeaks of in the preceding chapter, that preached Chriſt of envy, ſtrife, and contention; and theſe chiefly ſought their own worldly intereſt and advantage; they ſought great things for themſelves, and looked every man for his gain from his quarter, Demas like, loving this preſent world; they ſought for dominion and authority over men, and their faith, to lord it over God's heritage, as Diotrephes, who loved to have the pre-eminence; they ſought for popular applauſe, for honour and glory of men, as the Phariſees of old did; and particularly their own eaſe and health, and did not chuſe to undertake ſuch a fatiguing journey as from Rome to Philippi: not the things which are Jeſus Chriſt; they had no true regard to the Goſpel of Chriſt, to the continuance, eſtabliſhment, and ſpread of it in the world, or in any particular place; nor any hearty affection for the ordinances of Chriſt, and the retaining and preſerving of them in their purity and ſimplicity; nor for the churches of Chriſt, and their ſpiritual good and welfare, as the Jews formerly, they cared not if the houſe of God lay waſte, provided they dwelt in their cieled houſes; nor had they any concern for the honour and glory of Chriſt. But Timothy was a man of a quite different ſpirit and complexion; and which is another reaſon of the Apoſtle's ſending him to this place and people.

Ver. 22. But ye know the proof of him, &c.] They had had an experiment of him, a trial of his ſpirit, and a proof of his gifts and miniſtry, when he was among them with the Apoſtle at his firſt preaching the Goſpel to them, to the converſion of Lydia, and of the jaylor, and their houſholds, which laid the foundation of a Goſpel church-ſtate among them, ſee Acts xvi. 3, 12. The Vulgate Latin verſion reads in the imperative, know ye the proof of him; but the former reading is to be preferr'd: that as a ſon with the father, he hath ſerved with me in the Goſpel; he ſerved not the Apoſtle, but with him; he ſerved God as the Apoſtle did, in the Goſpel of his Son; he ſerved Jeſus Chriſt, whoſe Goſpel he preached, the intereſt and ſpread of which he greatly laboured in with him, as a fellow-ſervant or work-fellow; ſee Rom. xvi. 21. which expreſſes the modeſty of the Apoſtle, and the great honour put upon Timothy, and which was not abuſed by him; for as a Son honours, obeys, and imitates his father, ſo did he honour the Apoſtle, and give him all reſpect and reverence that was due to him on account of his office, age, and uſefulneſs; and obeyed his orders chearfully, going where-ever he ſent him, and doing whatever he bid him; and imitated him in his miniſtry, in his conſtancy, diligence, and zeal, having a true filial affection for him.

Ver. 23. Him therefore I hope to ſend preſently, &c.] For the reaſons now given: ſo ſoon as I ſhall ſee how it will go with me; whether he ſhould be releaſed from his bonds or no; whether he ſhould live or die; whether he ſhould be ſet free, or be called to ſuffer martyrdom for the ſake of Chriſt; for he expected, that the matter would be determined in a very ſhort time, when, be it as it would, Timothy would be ſpared.

Ver. 24. But I truſt in the Lord, &c.] The Syriac verſion reads, in my Lord: that I alſo myſelf ſhall come ſhortly; this he adds, partly to let them ſee, that he ſtill retained a ſecret hope and perſuaſion in his own mind of a deliverance, tho' he could not be certain of it, how things would go with him; and partly, that he might not be thought to put them off with ſending Timothy to them; for notwithſtanding that, his intention ſtill was, ſhould he be releaſed, to pay them a viſit himſelf. The Alexandrian copy adds, to you; ſo the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions.

Ver. 25. Yet I ſuppoſed it neceſſary to ſend to you Epaphroditus, &c.] In the mean while, before either he or Timothy could come to them. This man was ſent by the Philippians to the Apoſtle with a preſent, and had been detained at Rome for ſome time, partly thro' buſineſs, and partly thro' ſickneſs; but now the Apoſtle thought it proper, he being recovered, to ſend him to them, who was one of their miniſters. One of this name lived at Rome about this time, and was one of Nero's freemen [*], but not the ſame perſon here intended. This perſon has a very high character. The Apoſtle calls him, my brother; not in a natural relation, or as being his countryman, and ſo according to a way of ſpeaking with the Jews, and himſelf, his brother and kinſman according to the fleſh; for by his name and country he ſeems to be a Greek; but in a ſpiritual relation, being born again of the ſame Father, belonging to the ſame houſhold and family, and alſo a brother in the miniſtry, as it follows: and companion in labour; in the laborious work of preaching the Goſpel. The miniſtry of the word is a work; it is called the work of the miniſtry; and it is a laborious one when diligently and faithfully performed: the Apoſtle was a workman that needed not to be aſhamed, a labourer in Chriſt's vineyard, and one that laboured more abundantly than others; and he was not alone, he had companions in his work, and this good man was one of them: he adds, and fellow-ſoldier; the life of every believer is a warfare; he's always engaged in a war with ſin, and ſatan, and the world; and is often called to fight the fight of faith, to contend earneſtly againſt falſe teachers for the faith once delivered to the ſaints, to ſtand up for it, and faſt in it; and is provided for with the whole armour of God, with weapons of warfare, which are not carnal, but ſpiritual and mighty, being inliſted as a voluntier under the great captain of his ſalvation Jeſus Chriſt, under whoſe banner he fights, and is more than a conqueror thro' him: but tho' this is the common caſe and character of all the ſaints, it more eſpecially belongs to miniſters of the Goſpel; who are ſet for the defence of it, and at the front of the battle, and are called to meet the enemy at the gate, and endure hardneſs as good ſoldiers of Jeſus Chriſt; and ſuch an one was the Apoſtle; and he had other fellow-ſoldiers, and this perſon among the reſt, who were engaged in the ſame common cauſe with the ſame enemies, under the ſame captain, and would enjoy the ſame crown: but your meſſenger; or Apoſtle; meaning either that he was the paſtor of them, a preacher to them, a miniſter among them; for ordinary miniſters of the word were ſometimes called Apoſtles, as well as extraordinary ones, ſee Rom. xvi. 7. or rather, that he was their meſſenger to him, to relieve, comfort, and aſſiſt him in his bonds; and ſuch perſons were called the meſſengers of the churches, 2 Cor. viii. 23. which ſenſe is ſtrengthened by what follows: and he that miniſtred to my wants; to his perſonal wants in priſon, and to the wants of the poor ſaints, which the Apoſtle reckoned as his own, and which he uſed to ſupply, but now not able; and to his miniſterial wants, filling up his place in preaching the Goſpel to the ſaints at Rome.

Ver. 26. For he longed after you, &c.] This, and a following verſe, contain the reaſons of the Apoſtle's ſending him; and the firſt is, becauſe he had a very vehement and longing deſire after all of them; to ſee them, as the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions add, and as it is read in the Alexandrian and Claromontane copies, and in others: it was not the city of Philippi he longed to ſee, which might be his native place, nor his natural relations and family, but the church there; and not the officers of it only, the biſhops and deacons, but all the members of it, rich and poor, high and low, ſtrong and weak believers: and was full of heavineſs; almoſt preſſed down, quite diſheartened and diſpirited, ready to ſink and die away, not ſo much with his own diſorder and illneſs, as with ſorrow on account of the church at Philippi: becauſe that ye had heard that he had been ſick; he underſtood that the news of his ſickneſs had reached them, and he knew how diſtreſſing it would be to them, that it would cut them to the heart, and preſs them heavily, fearing they ſhould never ſee his face, nor hear his voice more. We have here an inſtance of that mutual love, tender affection and ſympathy, which were in the firſt churches, and what ſubſiſted between miniſters and people; ſee how they loved one another! but, alas! this firſt love is left.

Ver. 27. For indeed he was ſick nigh unto death, &c.] It was not a mere rumour, or a falſe alarm, but was real matter of fact; and it was not a light diſorder, a ſlight indiſpoſition, but a very dangerous illneſs; tho' the ſickneſs was not unto death, yet near it. Good men, ſuch as Chriſt loves, as he did Lazarus, are ſometimes ſick; tho' their ſpiritual diſeaſes are healed, and their ſins forgiven, ſo that the inhabitants of Zion have no more reaſon to ſay that they are ſick, ſince Chriſt has took their infirmities, and bore their ſickneſs, yet they are not exempt from bodily diſorders; and which are ſometimes ſuch as bring them to the brink of the grave, and, as it were, to the gates of death; and ſuch was this good man's caſe: but God had mercy on him; his diſorder was ſuch as was out of the reach of man; his recovery was not by man, but by God, and owing to his power, mercy, and goodneſs; and indeed, whenever means are made uſe of, and they ſucceed to the reſtoration of health, it ought to be aſcribed to the divine bleſſing on them. The raiſing up of this man is reckoned as an inſtance of mercy to him; as it was the removing of a grievous affliction, a return of him to his delightful work of the miniſtry, and the continuation of an uſeful life for the good of others; and ſo a mercy to him, and to the churches of Chriſt, and to the Apoſtle alſo: who adds, but on me alſo, leſt I ſhould have ſorrow upon ſorrow; one affliction added to another; the death of this brother of his to his bonds: moreover the ſickneſs of this companion of his filled him with ſorrow; and had he died, it would have greatly increaſed it, and which would have had a freſh addition by the loſs this church would ſuſtain, and the grief and trouble, they would be overwhelmed with: grace, and the doctrine of grace, tho' they regulate the paſſions, and reſtrain them from immoderate ſorrow, they do not deſtroy them, nor deny the proper uſe of them. Chriſtianity does not countenance a ſtoical apathy, but requires and encourages a chriſtian ſympathy, and directs us to weep with them that weep within due bounds.

Ver. 28. I ſent him therefore the more carefully, &c.] Or in greater haſte, and as ſoon as poſſible: that when ye ſee him again ye may rejoice; for this muſt greatly increaſe their joy, to ſee him again after he had been ſo long from them, and under ſuch a diſorder, which had made them to fear they ſhould never ſee him more. The Syriac verſion renders it, that when ye ſee him ye may rejoice again; as they had done heretofore in his converſation and miniſtry, when among them: and that I may be the leſs ſorrowful; when he ſhould hear of his ſafe arrival among them, and of their joyful reception of him to their mutual ſatisfaction, which would be an alleviation of the Apoſtle's ſorrow in his preſent circumſtances; for he did not expect to be wholly without ſorrow whilſt in this life.

Ver. 29. Receive him therefore, &c.] Not only into their houſes, where ſuch as bring the doctrine of Chriſt ſhould be admitted, and not others; but into their boſoms, into their hearts and affections, as he had reaſon to believe they would, and into their fellowſhip and communion, and to the exerciſe of his office among them, as their miniſter: and that in the Lord; or for the Lord, as the Arabic verſion renders it; for his ſake, becauſe he was one that was put into the miniſtry by him, was called unto it, and qualified for it, and ſent forth to miniſter in it by him; or in the name of the Lord, as an ambaſſador of his, as repreſenting him, and as if he himſelf was preſent; for he that receives a miniſter of Chriſt, receives Chriſt himſelf; ſee Luke x. 16. Gal. iv. 14. with all gladneſs; with ſincere affection, undiſſembled joy, perfect pleaſure, and with all demonſtrations of reſpect unto him, and delight in him at his return to them. And hold ſuch in reputation; account ſuch as he precious and valuable; highly eſteem of them for their works ſake; reckon them worthy of double honour, and give it to them.

Ver. 30. Becauſe for the work of Chriſt he was nigh unto death, &c.] Meaning either the work the church ſent him about, and which he chearfully undertook, and faithfully performed in carrying of a preſent to, and viſiting the Apoſtle in priſon; which is called the work of Chriſt, becauſe taken by Chriſt as if it was done to himſelf; and which, what with the long and fatiguing journey from Philippi to Rome, and the frequent viſits he made to the Apoſtle, and the much buſineſs beſides that lay upon his hands, brought upon him a diſorder which greatly threatened his life, and had almoſt iſſued in his death: or elſe the work of preaching the Goſpel ſo frequently and conſtantly, and with ſo much zeal and vehemency at Rome; and which may be called the work of Chriſt, becauſe it is what he calls unto, and qualifies for, and in which his glory is greatly concerned; and on which this good man was ſo intent, gladly ſpending himſelf, and being ſpent in it, that he was brought thro' it to the brink of the grave: not regarding his life; he was careleſs of that, and of his health; he loved not his life, nor counted it dear to himſelf; he rather deſpiſed it, and made no account of it, being very willing to deliver it up, and ſacrifice it in ſuch a good work and cauſe: to ſupply your lack of ſervice towards me; to do that in their name, room, and ſtead, which they, thro' abſence, could not do in perſon; ſignifying, that what was done to him, and for him, was but a piece of ſervice and duty to him; and which this good man, and faithful miniſter and meſſenger of theirs having done for them to the hazard of his life, he ought therefore to be received by them with great joy, and to be highly honoured and reſpected.

CHAP. III.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle cautions the Philippians againſt falſe teachers, whom he deſcribes as evil men, and exhorts them to walk as they had him, and other faithful miniſters for an example. And whereas theſe judaizing teachers were for drawing them off from Chriſt, and weakening their joy and glorying in him, he exhorts them in the firſt place to rejoice in Chriſt, ver. 1. and to beware of them, whom he deſcribes as dogs, as evil workers, as the conciſion, ver. 2. and oppoſes to them the characters of real ſaints, who are truly what they vainly boaſted of, really circumciſed perſons in a Goſpel ſenſe, ſpiritual worſhippers of God, joyful believers in Chriſt, and ſuch as placed no confidence in outward things, ver. 3. This the Apoſtle illuſtrates in his own caſe, who had as much reaſon for truſting in ſuch things as any man whatever, ver. 4. of which he gives an enumeration in ſeveral particulars, ver. 5, 6. upon which he paſſes his judgment, and ſhows of what account, and in what eſteem they were with him before, and now; that formerly they were reckoned gain, but now loſs, ver. 7. and which he explains as referring to every thing ſhort of Chriſt, and in compariſon of the knowledge of him, and which he preferred to every thing; and this he confirms by his willingneſs to ſuffer the loſs of all things for him; his ends in which were, that he might win him, and be found in him, without his own righteouſneſs, that legal one the falſe teachers extolled, and with the righteouſneſs of God which faith receives, and is the only juſtifying one; and that he might know more of him, feel more of his power, have more fellowſhip with him, and conformity to him, ver. 8, 9, 10. His view in all which was, that he might attain to that glorious and happy ſtate of the reſurrection of the dead in Chriſt, ver. 11. and to prevent miſtakes, and anticipate an objection that might be made to him, as if he aſcribed perfection to himſelf in the preſent ſtate, he owns he had not arrived to it: all he meant was, that it was his deſire to enjoy that which Chriſt had laid hold on him for; in order to which he buried in oblivion what was paſt, looking and preſſing to things before him, even to Chriſt, and the glory he was called unto, which was with him, ver. 12, 13, 14. Next follow various exhortations, as to be of the ſame mind with the Apoſtle in preſſing after ſpiritual and heavenly things, to which he exhorts thoſe that had a greater knowledge of them than others; and who, tho' otherwiſe minded, the Apoſtle was perſuaded would have the ſame revealed to them, ver. 15. and both he exhorts, according to their different attainments, to walk by the ſame rule, and mind the ſame thing, ver. 16. and to be followers of him, and of them that walked after his example, ver. 17. giving this as a reaſon, becauſe there were men who walked otherwiſe, to the grief of him, to the diſhonour of Chriſt, and to their own ſhame and deſtruction, whom he deſcribes as ſenſual and earthly-minded men, ver. 18, 19. and to engage them to follow him, and others, and not ſuch perſons, he draws a character of them oppoſite unto them; that whereas the minds of thoſe others were carnal and earthly, their minds were ſpiritual and heavenly; their converſation was in heaven, and they were waiting for Chriſt from hence, ver. 20. and the bleſſedneſs they expect from him then, is the reſurrection of their bodies, which is illuſtrated by the efficient cauſe of it, Chriſt; the ſubject of it, their vile bodies, as in this life, and in the grave; the exemplar and pattern of it, the glorious body of Chriſt; and the means by which it will be effected, the energy and power of Chriſt, who is omnipotent, ver. 21.

Ver. 1. Finally, my brethren, rejoice in the Lord, &c.] The Syriac verſion reads, in our Lord, i. e. Chriſt. The Apoſtle ſeems as if he was about to conclude his Epiſtle; and therefore, as if he was taking his farewel of this church, and giving his laſt advice to them, he exhorts them in a moſt affectionate manner, as his dear brethren in a ſpiritual relation, that they would make Chriſt their chief joy; that whatever ſorrow they might have on account of his bonds, or the ſickneſs of Epaphroditus, yet he obſerves they had reaſon to rejoice in their Lord and Saviour; and however, it might be matter of rejoicing to them to hear of his hope of coming once more to them, and of the recovery of their miniſter, and his return to them, yet Chriſt ſhould be the principal object of their joy. A believer has always reaſon to rejoice in Chriſt; in the greatneſs of his perſon, he being in the form of God, and equal to him, and therefore able to ſave his to the uttermoſt, by his obedience and death, and has intereſt enough in heaven to make his interceſſion prevalent and ſucceſsful, and power to keep ſafe all that are committed to him; and in the fitneſs of his perſon to be a mediator, and day's man, to take care of things pertaining to the glory of God, and to make reconciliation for ſin; and in the fulneſs of his perſon, he having all grace in him for his people, which is all theirs, and with joy may they draw water out of the full wells of ſalvation in him; and in the beauty of his perſon, which ſurpaſſes all others, a ſight of which fills with joy unſpeakable, and full of glory. They may, and ſhould rejoice, as they ſometimes do, in his ſalvation; in the contrivance of it by infinite wiſdom; in the impetration of it by himſelf; and in the application of it by his Spirit; and that becauſe hereby juſtice is ſatisfied, the law is magnified and made honourable, ſin is finiſhed, and an everlaſting righteouſneſs brought in. Alſo, they are called upon to rejoice in his reſurrection, which is for their juſtification; in his aſcenſion, ſeeing he then received gifts for men; and in his ſeſſion at the right hand of God, which is in their nature; and in his interceſſion, which is to their advantage; and in all the relations he ſtands in to them, as head, huſband, father, brother, friend; and in every thing that is his, and that belongs unto him, as his Goſpel, ordinances, ways, and worſhip. To write the ſame things to you. The Apoſtle finding he had more time on his hands, or freſh thoughts occurred to him, writes on, and makes an apology for writing the ſame things, which he had either wrote to other churches, or which he had delivered when firſt among them, or which he had ſince wrote to them. For ſometimes it is neceſſary to ſay and write the ſame things over and over again, partly that they may be the better underſtood, and partly that they may be more ſtrongly fixed in the memory; as alſo, that the ſaints may be the more eſtabliſhed in the preſent truth: and which he ſays, to me indeed is not grievous; or troubleſome; he found no backwardneſs to it, nor ſluggiſhneſs in it; he was not loth to do it, nor was it weariſome to him; or made him ſlothful, as the Arabic renders it; nor was he afraid to repeat what he had wrote, or again to warn them againſt falſe teachers, of whom he ſtood in no fear: but for you it is ſafe; or neceſſary, as the Vulgate Latin verſion reads, being a means of preſerving them from the error of the wicked; for tho' the ſaints are ſafe in Chriſt, and can never finally and totally be deceived, yet the Goſpel, and the frequent miniſtration of it, are a means of keeping them from the deception of evil men; for as the Syriac verſion renders it, they make you more cautious; when truth is repeated, and afreſh confirmed, it guards againſt falling in with damnable hereſies. And ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, is a guard, or garriſon to you.

Ver. 2. Beware of dogs, &c.] By whom are meant the judaizing teachers, who were for impoſing the works and ceremonies of the law upon the Gentiles, as neceſſary to ſalvation; and they have the name retorted on them they uſed to give to the Gentiles; ſee Matt. xv. 26, 27. nor ſhould they think it too ſevere, ſince the Jews themſelves ſay [p], "the face of that generation (in which the Meſſiah "ſhall come) ſhall be, כפני הכלב, as the face of "a dog." The Apoſtle calls them ſo, becauſe they returned to Judaiſm, as the dog to its vomit; and becauſe of the uncleanneſs in which many of them lived, and the impudence they were guilty of in transforming themſelves into the Apoſtles of Chriſt, and putting themſelves upon an equal foot with them; as alſo for their calumny and detraction, their wrangling with the Apoſtles, ſnarling at their doctrines, and biting them with the devouring words of reproach and ſcandal: likewiſe, they may be ſtiled dogs for their covetouſneſs, being ſuch greedy ones as in Iſ. lvi. 10. with feigned words making merchandize of men; and for their love of their bellies, which they ſerved, and not Chriſt, and made a God of. Moreover, becauſe they were without, as dogs are, Rev. xxii. 15. having gone out from the communion of the ſaints, becauſe they were not of them; or if among them, yet not true members of Chriſt, nor of his myſtical body; all which are ſo many arguments why the ſaints ſhould beware of them, and why their perſons, converſation, and doctrine ſhould be avoided. Beware of evil workers; meaning the ſame perſons, who were deceitful workers, did the work of the Lord unfaithfully, walked in craftineſs, and handled the word of God deceitfully, endeavoured to ſubvert the Goſpel of Chriſt, and the faith of men in it; who worked from bad principles, and with evil views; and notwithſtanding their large pretenſions to good works, teaching that juſtification and ſalvation were by them, which notion the Apoſtle tacitly refers to in this character; yet were bad livers, and ſuch as Chriſt will reject another day as workers of iniquity; a character they deſervedly bear, if there was no other reaſon for it than their preaching the doctrine of ſalvation by mens own works of righteouſneſs, and who, and their miniſtry are by all means to be ſhunned. Beware of the conciſion; the men of the circumciſion, as the Arabic verſion renders it; they choſe to be called ſo, but the Apoſtle would not give them that name, but calls them the conciſion; or the conciſion of the fleſh, as the Syriac verſion renders it; referring either to the cuttings in the fleſh, forbidden Lev. xxi. 5. or to the circumciſion of the fleſh rather, which they valued themſelves upon, and were for introducing among the Gentiles, whereby they made ſad diviſions, and cutting work among the churches; and were ſome of them at leaſt cut off, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it, from the churches; and who, as much as in them lay, cut themſelves off from Chriſt, and rendered him unprofitable to them; ſee Gal. v. 2, 4.

Ver. 3. For we are the circumciſion, &c.] And not they; they have the name, and we the thing, or that which legal circumciſion was a ſhadow of, namely, circumciſion of the heart; which lies in being pricked to the heart under a true ſenſe of ſin; in having the hardneſs of the heart removed, and the iniquity of it laid to open view; in pain and contrition of heart about it, joined with ſhame for it, and loathing of it, the conſequence of which is, a putting off of the body of the ſins of the fleſh, according to the former converſation; and alſo in a renouncing a man's own righteouſneſs in point of juſtification before God, and acceptance with him. All which is the work of God, and not man, and is therefore called the circumciſion made without hands; it has God, and not man for its author; and its praiſe is of God, and not of men; and its ſeat is in the heart and ſpirit, and not in the fleſh; and ſuch whoſe hearts are circumciſed to love the Lord their God, and fear him, are the true circumciſion: which worſhip God in the ſpirit. The object of worſhip is God, and him only; not a creature animate or inanimate, ſtocks or ſtones, beaſts, birds, men or angels; only God, Father, Son and Spirit: that the Father is to be worſhipped, is not diſputed, ſee John iv. 21, 23. and the Son is to be worſhipped with the ſame worſhip the Father is; ſince he is in the form of God, and equal to him, is the creator of all, the Lord of angels and men, and is to be, and is worſhipped by both; prayer is made unto him, baptiſm is adminiſtred in his name, and truſt and confidence are placed in him; and ſo is the Holy Ghoſt, he being equally God with the Father, and the Son, and therefore the ſame homage is to be given to him as to them: and ſo ſome indeed read the words here, which worſhip God the Spirit; or the Spirit, who is God. Worſhip is either inward or outward; inward worſhip lies in the exerciſe of grace on God, as of faith, hope, love, fear, &c. outward worſhip is the performance of certain external actions required by God, and both are to be performed: and it is alſo either private or public; private worſhip is in the cloſet, or in the family, and conſiſts of praying, ſinging of praiſes, &c. public worſhip lies in the obſervance of the outward ordinances of preaching, praying, hearing, ſinging, &c. in the church of God; even all ſuch ordinances as God has appointed, which are recorded in the ſcriptures, and are confirmed by the authority of Chriſt. The manner in which worſhip is to be performed, is in the ſpirit; either in and with the Spirit of God, without whoſe grace and aſſiſtance no part of it can be performed well. And the Alexandrian copy reads, which worſhip in the ſpirit of God; and ſo the Complutenſian edition, and ſeveral copies. Or in and with our own hearts and ſpirits, which ſhould be engaged in every part of religious worſhip with much attention, diligence, and fervency; or in a ſpiritual manner, in oppoſition to the carnal worſhip of the Jews, and the bodily exerciſe of formal profeſſors; and which lies in drawing nigh to God with true hearts, ſincere and fervent ones, with grace in them, and that in exerciſe: and rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus; or glory in him, and make their boaſt of him; for a different word is here uſed from that in ver. 1. Such who have a true ſenſe of themſelves, and a ſpiritual ſight of Chriſt, will not glory in themſelves, in their wiſdom, ſtrength, riches, or righteouſneſs, but in Chriſt, in his wiſdom and ſtrength, in his riches and righteouſneſs, and in his perſon and grace only: and have no confidence in the fleſh; in any carnal deſcent, or birth-privilege, as to be of the ſeed of Abraham, of the ſtock of Iſrael, or of ſuch a tribe, or family, or born of ſuch a parent; nor in circumciſion, or any of the carnal ordinances of the ceremonial law; nor in any civil, moral, legal, and external righteouſneſs, for ſo to do is but to make fleſh an arm; or indeed, to truſt in any thing out of Chriſt, or ſhort of him; and all this makes up the character and deſcription of a true believer in Chriſt.

Ver. 4. Though I might alſo have confidence in the fleſh, &c.] This he ſays, leſt it ſhould be objected to him, that the reaſon why he had no confidence in the fleſh, and did not boaſt of it, was, becauſe he could not; he had nothing to glory of, and put his confidence in, and therefore acted the common part of ſuch perſons, who deſpiſe what either they have not, or are ignorant of: but this was not the Apoſtle's caſe, he had as much reaſon, and as good a foundation for truſt in himſelf, his privileges and attainments, as any man had, and more; and his meaning here is not, that he might lawfully have confidence in the fleſh, for that is criminal in every one, but that he had as good pretenſions to it; and were it lawful, might with greater appearance of truth do it than ſome other perſons, or indeed any other: if any other man thinketh that he hath whereof he might truſt in the fleſh, I more; the ſenſe is, if there were any other perſon beſides the falſe teachers he ſpeaks of in ver. 2. that were of the Judaizing ſect, or any whatever of the Jewiſh nation, be he who he will, who thought within himſelf he had, or ſeemed to others to have, (for all ſuch confidence, and the grounds of it, are only in ſhow and appearance, and in imagination, not in reality) reaſons for boaſting and truſting in himſelf, and in his carnal privileges and performances, the Apoſtle had more, and which he enumerates in the following verſes; not but that he might be exceeded by ſome in ſome one particular or another; as for inſtance, he was not of the tribe of Levi, nor of Judah; he was neither of the houſe of Aaron, nor of David; neither of the prieſtly line, nor of the blood royal; but taking all together, there was not a man in whom ſo many reaſons met, for boaſting and confidence in the fleſh, as in himſelf.

Ver. 5. Circumciſed the eighth day, &c.] Circumciſion was an appointment of God to Abraham, and his male iſſue; to him and them God gave the covenant of circumciſion: this to Abraham perſonally was a ſign and ſeal, that the righteouſneſs of faith, which he had while he was an uncircumciſed perſon, ſhould come upon the uncircumciſed Gentiles in the times of the Meſſiah, when the Goſpel ſhould come among them; and it was a diſtinguiſhing character of the Jews from the Gentiles, until the coming of Chriſt; it was typical of the effuſion of his blood to cleanſe from all the impurity of original and actual ſin, and repreſented the circumciſion of the heart. The Jews valued themſelves much upon it, and treated the Gentiles with contempt for the want of it; and would neither converſe with them in a civil or religious way, becauſe they were uncircumciſed: but the Apoſtle was no Gentile, or an uncircumciſed perſon; he had this mark in his fleſh to glory in as well others, if it had been lawful to truſt in it; he was the ſubject of this ordinance whilſt it was a ſtanding one, and before it was aboliſhed by Chriſt; and it was performed on him at the preciſe time fixed in the original inſtitution of it, which was not always obſerved; for not to take notice of Jewiſh proſelytes, who were circumciſed at any age, when they became ſuch, whether in youth, manhood, or old age; and which by the way ſhews, that the Apoſtle was no proſelyte, but a natural Jew; Gerſhom, the ſon of Moſes, was not circumciſed till ſome years after his birth; and all the while the children of Iſrael were in the wilderneſs this ordinance was neglected, till Joſhua had led them into Canaan's land, and then he circumciſed all that generation that was born in the wilderneſs, ſome of whom muſt be near forty years of age; and in after-times it was uſual with the Jews, for one reaſon or another, to put off circumciſion to a longer time. Take the following ſtory as an illuſtration of this[q]: "'tis a tradition of R. Nathan; once, ſays he, I went to the cities of the ſea, and a woman came to me who had circumciſed her firſt ſon, and he died; the ſecond, and he died; the third ſhe brought to me, I ſaw him that he was red, I ſaid unto her, my daughter, wait a while for him till his blood is ſwallowed up in him; ſhe waited for him a while, and circumciſed him, and he lived; and they called him Nathan the Babylonian, after my name. And again another time I went to the province of Cappadocia, (the Jeruſalem Talmud[r] has it Ceſarea of Cappadocia) a certain woman came to me, who had circumciſed her firſt ſon, and he died; the ſecond, and he died; the third, (the above Talmud adds, and he died, the fourth) ſhe brought to me, I ſaw that he was green, I inſpected him, and the blood of the covenant was not in him, I ſaid unto her, my daughter, המתינו, tarry a while for him; (the Jeruſalem Talmud has it, הניחוהו לאחר זמן, let him alone to another time) till his blood fall in him, ſhe waited for him, and circumciſed him, and he lived; and they called him Nathan the Babylonian, after my name." The Jewiſh canon, with regard to the time of circumciſion, runs thus[s]: "an infant may be circumciſed at eight days, or at nine, or at ten, or at eleven, or at twelve, neither leſs nor more, (not leſs than eight, nor more than twelve) how? according to its courſe at eight. If it is born between the two evenings, it is circumciſed on the ninth day; if between the two evenings of the ſabbath eve, it is circumciſed on the tenth day; if on a feaſt-day after the ſabbath, it is circumciſed on the eleventh; if on the two days of the beginning of the year, it is circumciſed on the twelfth. An infant that is ſick, they don't circumciſe him until he is recovered." And in the laſt caſe, they reckon ſeven days from the time of the recovery of the child, as Maimonides[t] obſerves; with whom may be read other caſes, in which circumciſion was not always performed on the eighth day, but ſometimes was deferred, and ſometimes it was done the ſame day the child was born. But circumciſion on the eighth day was reckoned moſt valid and authentic, and according to rule; and therefore it is not without reaſon, that the Apoſtle mentions the time of his circumciſion, and puts an emphaſis upon it. Of the ſtock of Iſrael; this is ſaid to diſtinguiſh him from an Iſhmaelite, or an Edomite, who were circumciſed, and from the ſon of a proſelyte, who might be circumciſed on the eighth day; but he was a natural Iſraelite, to whom the various privileges belonged, mentioned in Rom. ix. 4, 5. and therefore had as much reaſon to truſt in the fleſh as any Iſraelite whatever. Of the tribe of Benjamin; who was a genuine and legitimate ſon of Jacob, whom he had by his lawful and beloved wife Rachel. Of which tribe was the firſt king of Iſrael, whoſe name was Saul, and which was the Apoſtle's firſt and Jewiſh name, and which perhaps was common in that tribe on that account. In this tribe ſtood the city of Jeruſalem, and the temple of the Lord; this tribe retained the true worſhip of God with Judah, when the ten tribes revolted, and worſhipped the calves at Dan and Bethel, and returned with Judah from captivity, when the others did not. And the Apoſtle was not only able to make himſelf appear to be of the ſtock of Iſrael, but could name the tribe to which he belonged, which many of the Jews, that were of one, or rather of the ten tribes, were not able to do, and may be his chief reaſon for mentioning this circumſtance. An Hebrew of the Hebrews; not ſo called only becauſe he could trace his pedigree from Abraham the Hebrew, or underſtood, and could ſpeak the Hebrew language, which the Helleniſtical Jews could not, or was an illuſtrious one among them, but becauſe both his parents were Hebrews; he was an Hebrew by the father and mother's ſide both; he was a genuine Hebrew. The Arabians have the ſame way of ſpeaking; and with them a genuine Arab is called an Arab of the Arabs[u], as here. Some there were whoſe mothers were Hebrews, and their fathers Gentiles; ſuch an one was Timothy, Acts xvi. 1. and there were others whoſe fathers were Hebrews, and their mothers Gentiles; and theſe are thought by ſome to be the ſame, the Talmudiſts[w] call, חללים, prophane; they not being reckoned ſo holy as ſuch whoſe fathers and mothers were both Hebrews; of which the latter gloried over the other. As touching the law, a Phariſee; with reſpect to the interpretation and obſervance of the law, which was according to the traditions of the elders, and not the literal and genuine ſenſe of it, he followed; and was of the ſect of the Phariſees, which was the ſtricteſt ſect among the Jews, and in the greateſt eſteem among the people: and tho' they had put many falſe gloſſes on the ſcripture, and held many erroneous principles, and were very tenacious of human traditions, yet they were preferable to the Sadducees, who denied the reſurrection of the dead, and other things; and were more zealous in their devotion and religion, and more ſtrict in their morals, and external holineſs of life and converſation. They ſeparated and diſtinguiſhed themſelves hereby from other people, and hence they had their name; ſee the note on Matt. iii. 7. Now the Apoſtle was not only a Phariſee, but the ſon of one; he was always brought up in that ſtrict ſect and ſevere way, Acts xxiii. 6.

Ver. 6. Concerning zeal, perſecuting the church, &c.] The Vulgate Latin verſion adds, of God, as in Gal. i. 13. The Apoſtle was very zealous of the traditions of the elders, and for the law of God, and towards God alſo; tho' his zeal was not according to knowledge, but blind, ignorant and furious; which puſhed him on to perſecute the followers of Chriſt, and the church of Chriſt at Jeruſalem more eſpecially, in a very violent and outrageous manner; he held the clothes of thoſe that ſtoned Stephen; he conſented unto his death; he made havock of the church at Jeruſalem, haling men and women to priſon; he continued breathing out threatenings and ſlaughter againſt the diſciples of Chriſt; gave his voice againſt them when put to death, puniſhed them frequently in the ſynagogues by ſcourging them, and compelled them to blaſpheme the name of Chriſt; was exceeding mad againſt them, purſued them to ſtrange cities, and perſecuted the church of God exceedingly, more than any one ſingle perſon beſides. Touching the righteouſneſs which is in the law blameleſs. This he mentions laſt, as including the whole of his righteouſneſs, neſs, civil, ceremonial, and moral; and which he fancied was ſo perfect, that whatever righteouſneſs was in the law, or required by it, he had it, and to ſuch a degree, that he was blameleſs before God and men; that he was juſtified by it in the ſight of God, and could not juſtly be found fault with by any, or be charged with any defect in his obedience, either to the moral or ceremonial law; which muſt ariſe from great ignorance of the righteouſneſs of God, and the ſtrictneſs of his juſtice, and of the law of God, and the purity, ſpirituality and extent of it, which reaches to the thoughts of the heart, and the firſt motions of ſin; and of himſelf, the plague of his own heart, of the ſin of luſt, and of the exceeding ſinfulneſs of ſin, in every inſtance of it.

Ver. 7. But what things were gain to me, &c.] As circumciſion, and the obſervance of the ceremonial law, which he thought were neceſſary to ſalvation; and his natural and lineal deſcent from Abraham, which he ſuppoſed entitled him to the favour of God, and eternal life, as well as to outward privileges; and his being of that ſtrict ſect of religion, a Phariſee, which he doubted not, being brought up and continued in, would ſecure to him everlaſting happineſs; and his zeal in perſecuting the church of Chriſt, in which he thought he did God good ſervice, and merited heaven for himſelf; and his legal righteouſneſs which he fancied was perfect, and ſo juſtified him in the ſight of God, and rendered him acceptable to him: for the Apoſtle's meaning is, not only that theſe things were judged by him, whilſt in an unconverted ſtate, good in themſelves, and in ſome reſpects uſeful, but that they were really gainful, and meritorious of happineſs in another world. But being converted, he ſaw all thoſe things in a different light, and had a different opinion of them: thoſe I counted loſs for Chriſt; circumciſion he ſaw was now aboliſhed, and was nothing, and that the circumciſion of the heart was the main thing; and that the other was ſo far from being uſeful and neceſſary to ſalvation, that it was hurtful, was a yoke of bondage, bound men over to keep the whole law, and made Chriſt of none effect to them; and the ſame opinion he had of the whole ceremonial law: as for natural deſcent, which he once valued and truſted in, he now rejected it, well knowing it ſignified not whether a man was a Greek, or a Jew, a Barbarian, or Scythian, provided he was but a believer in Chriſt; and as for any outward form or ſect of religion, he knew there was no ſalvation in it, nor in any other name but that of Chriſt; and he was ſo far from thinking, that on account of his zeal in perſecuting the church, he was deſerving of heaven, that for that reaſon he was not worthy to be called an Apoſtle of Chriſt; and as for his legal righteouſneſs, he now ſaw it to be as filthy rags; that many things in it were really evil in themſelves, ſuch as his obſervance of the traditions of the elders, whereby the commands of God were tranſgreſſed, and his mad zeal in perſecuting the followers of Chriſt; and other things, which had the appearance of good works, were not truly ſo, did not ſpring from love, were not done in faith, and with a view to the glory of God; and that the beſt of them were very imperfect, and exceeding blameable; yea, that if they had been perfect, they could not have been meritorious of eternal life, as he once thought them to be; he ſaw now they were of no uſe in juſtification and ſalvation; nay, that they were hurtful and pernicious, being truſted to, as keeping perſons off from Chriſt, and his righteouſneſs: wherefore, he gladly ſuffered the loſs of all his legal righteouſneſs, and renounced and diſclaimed it, and all pretenſions to juſtification and ſalvation by it, for the ſake of Chriſt; of life and ſalvation by him, and in compariſon of him; of the knowledge of him, and of his juſtifying righteouſneſs, as the following verſes ſhew. Hence, what before he pleaſed himſelf much with, and promiſed himſelf much from, he could not now reflect upon with any pleaſure and ſatisfaction of mind; which is the ſenſe of this phraſe with Jewiſh writers[x]: ſo it is obſerved of a drunken man, when he comes to himſelf, and it is told him what he did when in liquor, he grieves at it, ויחשוב הכל הפסד ולא ריוח, and counts all loſs and not gain; i. e. can take no pleaſure in a reflexion on it.

Ver. 8. Yea, doubtleſs, and I count all things but loſs, &c.] Not only the things before mentioned, but any thing, and every thing elſe but Chriſt, or that ſtood in competition with him, or were ſhort of him; as his natural and acquired parts; the whole compaſs of learning he had attained to; all that honour, credit, reputation, and popularity he was in for knowledge and devotion; all worldly ſubſtance, the comforts of life, and life itſelf; and all his righteouſneſs ſince converſion, as well as before; of this, no doubt could be made by thoſe who knew him, his principles and his practices: and all this for the excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus my Lord; by the knowledge of Chriſt is not meant ſubjectively the knowledge that is in Chriſt, or which he has of others, either as God or man; but objectively, that knowledge which believers have of him, who know him not only in his perſon, as God over all, but as a ſaviour and redeemer, and as theirs; they know him in all his relations, and particularly as their Lord, not by creation only, but by rdemption and grace, as the Apoſtle did, putting an emphaſis on theſe words, my Lord; thereby expreſſing his faith of intereſt in him, his great affection for him, and chearful ſubjection to him. And this knowledge is not general, but ſpecial, ſpiritual, and ſaving; it is a knowledge of approbation of Chriſt above all others; a fiducial one, which has faith in him joined with it, and is both experimental and practical, and at leaſt at times, appropriating; and tho' imperfect, it is progreſſive and capable of being increaſed, and will at laſt be brought to perfection. It is attained to, not by the light of nature, nor by the help of carnal reaſon, nor by the law of Moſes, but by the Goſpel of the grace of God, as a means; and the efficient cauſe of it is Father, Son, and Spirit; the Father reveals Chriſt in his ſaints; the Son gives them an underſtanding to know him; and the Spirit is a Spirit of wiſdom and revelation in the knowledge of him; and this knowledge is very excellent: a ſpiritual knowledge of Chriſt is more excellent than a general and notional one, or than a knowledge of Chriſt after the fleſh; and the knowledge of Chriſt under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, tho' the ſame in nature, is more excellent than that which was under the legal diſpenſation, by promiſes, prophecies, and the ceremonial law, in degree, extenſiveneſs, and clearneſs; but the moſt excellent knowledge of Chriſt is that of the ſaints in heaven; yea, even there is an excellency in what the ſaints have here on earth, and a ſuperior one to all other knowledge, if the author and original of it is conſidered: it is not of ourſelves, nor by the aſſiſtance of men; it is not in the book of nature, nor in the ſchools of the philoſophers; it is not of earth, nor earthly, but it comes from afar, from above, from heaven, from God the Father of lights; it is a free grace-gift, a diſtinguiſhing one, and is very comprehenſive, unſpeakable, and unchangeable: and as to the object of it, it is Chriſt, the chiefeſt among ten thouſands; who made the heavens, earth, and ſeas, and all that in them are, the ſun, moon, and ſtars, men and beaſts, birds and fiſhes, foſſils, minerals, vegetables, and every thing in nature; and therefore the knowledge of him muſt be ſuperior to the knowledge of every thing elſe; and which adds to its excellency, it makes Chriſt precious, engages faith and confidence in him, influences the life and converſation, humbles the ſoul, and creates in it true pleaſure and ſatisfaction; when all other knowledge fills with ſelf-love, pride, and vanity, and increaſes ſorrow; whereas this is not only uſeful in life, but ſupports as under afflictions, ſo in the views of death and eternity; thro' it grace is received now, and by it glory hereafter; for it is the beginning, earneſt, and pledge of eternal life. Well may the believer count all things but loſs for it, as the Apoſtle did; who adds for further confirmation of what he had aſſerted, for whom I have ſuffered the loſs of all things; he dropped all confidence in his carnal privileges, and civil, ceremonial, and moral righteouſneſs, for Chriſt and his righteouſneſs; he parted with all for this pearl of great price; he loſt his good name, credit, and reputation among men, and ſuffered afflictions and perſecutions in various ſhapes; he loſt the comforts of life, being often in cold and nakedneſs, in hunger and thirſt, and was ready to ſuffer the loſs of life itſelf for profeſſing and preaching Chriſt: and do count them but dung; or dog's meat; ſee ver. 2. what is fit only to be caſt to dogs, as the word ſignifies; and intends every thing that is baſe, mean, and worthleſs; as the fæces of men, the dregs and lees of liquor, the falling of fruit, chaff, ſtubble, the droſs of metals, dung, and what not: ſo he eſteemed his carnal deſcent, his form and ſect of religion, and zeal in it; his ceremonial and moral righteouſneſs before and after converſion; and every thing of the creature, or what was his own, and but fleſh; being of the ſame opinion with the church of old, who reckoned her righteouſneſſes, the beſt, and the whole of them, as filthy rags. The Apoſtle next expreſſes his end and views in this, that I may win Chriſt; not get an intereſt in him, for this he had already, and he knew he had, and that he ſhould never loſe it; and beſides, an intereſt in Chriſt is not a thing that begins in time, but commenced from all eternity; and is not gotten at all, not by good works, nor repentance, nor faith; for theſe, if right and genuine, are the fruits and effects of an intereſt in Chriſt, but is what is freely given. The Apoſtle's meaning is, either that he might gain or acquire a larger knowledge of Chriſt; and he cared not what pains he took, what expences he was at, nor what loſs he ſuſtained for what he eſteemed the moſt excellent, and for which he had already ſuffered the loſs of all things; and if he had had more to loſe, he could willingly part with it for more of this knowledge; compare ver. 10. or his ſenſe is, that he might gain by Chriſt, or that Chriſt might be gain to him, as he found him to be, and as he is to every believer; who by parting with all for Chriſt, gains much by him, as a juſtifying righteouſneſs, acceptance with God, peace, pardon, life, grace, and glory.

Ver. 9. And be found in him, &c.] This is another end the Apoſtle had in view, in counting all things loſs and dung, and ſuffering the loſs of all for Chriſt. Calvin, different from other interpreters, reads the words actively, and may find in him; and thinks the ſenſe is, that the Apoſtle renounced all things for Chriſt, that he might recover all in him: and true it is, that for the loſs of carnal privileges, he found in Chriſt ſpiritual bleſſings; and for the loſs of his own righteouſneſs, another, and a better, even the righteouſneſs of God; and in lieu of external goods, or worldly ſubſtance he was ſtripped of, true and laſting riches; and in the room of outward credit, peace and plenty, true honour, real peace, and ſpiritual paſture; and inſtead of the comforts of life, and life itſelf, ſpiritual and eternal life; tho' it is beſt to read the words paſſively, and be found in him; that is, be in him, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; ſo the word found is uſed in Gal. ii. 17. Phil. ii. 8. and he means not a nominal being in Chriſt, or a being in him by profeſſion, but a real one; and which is either ſecret or open: a ſecret being in Chriſt he had from everlaſting, being choſen in him, given to him, loved by him, betrothed unto him, preſerved in him, and repreſented by him; and an open one he had at converſion, when he became a new creature, and was created in Chriſt Jeſus unto good works: and here he intends a more clear and evident manifeſtation of his being in Chriſt; and his deſire is, that he might appear to be in him, in life and at death, and at the day of judgment, and in the following manner: not having mine own righteouſneſs, which is of the law; by which he means his obedience to the moral, as well as the ceremonial law; for the one was as much his own as the other, and more properly his righteouſneſs: this he calls his own, becauſe performed by him, and wrought out in his own ſtrength; and which he had an high opinion of, as if it was perfect and blameleſs; and which he had before put his truſt and confidence in; as alſo to diſtinguiſh it from another's righteouſneſs, even that which he had in Chriſt: he moreover calls it, the righteouſneſs which is of the law; which the law required, and he performed in obedience to it, ſeeking for juſtification by it; this character diſtinguiſhes it from the righteouſneſs of God, which is revealed in the Goſpel, and is manifeſted without the law: and this his own legal righteouſneſs he did not deſire to have, and to be found in; not but that he deſired to live ſoberly and righteouſly, to have, and do works of righteouſneſs, but not depend on them; he would not have, and account this his moral righteouſneſs, as a juſtifying one; he knew it was imperfect, filthy, and unprofitable, and that by it he could not be juſtified and ſaved, therefore he deſired to have another. But that which is through the faith of Chriſt; not thro' that faith which Chriſt himſelf, as man, had and exerciſed on God, as his God; but that which he is the author and finiſher of, and which has him and his righteouſneſs for its object; not through faith, as the cauſe of it; for the moving cauſe of juſtification is the free grace of God, and the efficient cauſe is God himſelf: and it appears from hence, that faith is not the matter of our juſtification, or is not our righteouſneſs; for faith and righteouſneſs are two diſtinct things, otherwiſe righteouſneſs could not be ſaid to be through faith. The righteouſneſs of Chriſt is here meant, and which is the ſole matter of juſtification, and comes to us thro' faith apprehending, receiving, and embracing it; and which ſhows, that it muſt be before faith, or it could not be thro' it; as water that runs thro' a bridge muſt be before and above that bridge thro' which it runs. This righteouſneſs is further deſcribed, as the righteouſneſs which is of God by faith; that righteouſneſs which Chriſt, who is the true God, is the author of, hence it is a pure and perfect one, infinite, and ſerves for many; which God the Father approves of, and is well pleaſed with, becauſe his law is magnified, and made honourable by it; and what he graciouſly gives, and freely imputes without works, to his people: and this is by faith, which beholds the excellency of it, acknowledges its ſufficiency, renounces its own righteouſneſs, and ſubmits to, and lays hold on this, and rejoices in it; and thus men are juſtified openly and manifeſtatively by faith, receiving the juſtifying righteouſneſs of Chriſt: or the words may be rendered upon faith. This righteouſneſs is as a garment put upon faith, or put upon him by God, who has true faith in Chriſt; ſee Rom. iii. 22. This laſt clauſe, by faith, is omitted in the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions, and ſeems to be read by them as belonging to the beginning of the next verſe. Now this righteouſneſs the Apoſtle deſired to have, and be found in; and this he ſays not, as ſuppoſing that a perſon may be found in Chriſt, and yet not have his righteouſneſs; nor as if he himſelf had not this righteouſneſs, and an intereſt in it; but to ſhew his value for it, and his deſire to be continually exerciſing faith on it, and the truſt and confidence he placed in it; well knowing that in this he was ſafe and ſecure from all condemnation; this would anſwer for him in a time come; being found in this he ſhould not be naked nor ſpeechleſs, and ſhould have a right and an admiſſion into the kingdom and glory of Chriſt Jeſus.

Ver. 10. That I may know him, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion reads by faith; and to the ſame ſenſe the Syriac. The Apoſtle did know Chriſt, and that years ago; he knew whom he had believed; he knew him for himſelf; he knew his perſonal intereſt in him; nor did he know any but him in the buſineſs of ſalvation: but his knowledge of Chriſt, tho' it was very great, it was imperfect; he knew but in part, and therefore deſired to know more of Chriſt, of the myſtery and glories of his perſon, of the unſearchable riches of his grace, of his great ſalvation, and the benefits of it, of his love, which paſſes perfect knowledge, and to have a renewed and enlarged experience of communion with him. The Apoſtle here explains what he means by winning Chriſt, for the ſake of which he ſuffered the loſs of all things, and counted them but dung; it was, that he might attain to a greater knowledge of the perſon and grace of Chriſt: and the power of his reſurrection; not that power which was put forth by his Father, and by himſelf, in raiſing him from the dead; but the virtue which ariſes from it, and the influence it has on many things; as on the reſurrection of the ſaints: it is the procuring cauſe of it, they ſhall riſe by virtue of union to a riſen Jeſus; it is the firſt-fruits, which is the earneſt and pledge of their reſurrection, as ſure as Chriſt is riſen, ſo ſure ſhall they riſe; it is the exemplar and pattern of theirs, their bodies will be raiſed and faſhioned like to the glorious body of Chriſt; and this the Apoſtle deſired to know, experience, and attain unto. Chriſt's reſurrection has an influence alſo on the juſtification of his people; when Chriſt died he had the ſins of them all upon him, and he died for them; when he roſe again, he was juſtified from them, and diſcharged as their public head and repreſentative, and they in him: hence it is ſaid of him, that he was raiſed again for our juſtification, Rom. iv. 25. Now, though the Apoſtle was acquainted with this virtue and influence of Chriſt's reſurrection, he deſired to know more of it, for the encouragement of his faith to live upon Chriſt, as the Lord his righteouſneſs. Moreover, the regeneration of men is owing to the reſurrection of Chriſt; as to the abundant mercy of God, as the moving cauſe, ſo to the reſurrection of Chriſt, as the means or virtual cauſe; and therefore are ſaid to be begotten again by the reſurrection of Chriſt from the dead, 1 Pet. i. 3. This power and virtue the Apoſtle had had an experience of, yet he wanted to feel more of it, in exciting the graces of the Spirit to a lively exerciſe, in raiſing his affections, and ſetting them on things above, and in engaging him to ſeek after them, and ſet light by things on earth, and in cauſing him to walk in newneſs of life, in likeneſs or imitation of Chriſt's reſurrection, to all which that ſtrongly animates and encourages; ſee Col. iii. 1, 2. Rom. vi. 4, 5. And the fellowſhip of his ſufferings; either his perſonal ſufferings, and ſo ſignifies a ſharing in, and a participation of the benefits ariſing from them; ſuch as reconciliation for ſin, peace with God, pardon, righteouſneſs, nearneſs to God, &c. or the ſufferings of his members for him, and with him, and which Chriſt reckons his own: theſe the Apoſtle was willing to take his part in, and lot of, knowing, that thoſe that are partakers of his ſufferings in this ſenſe, ſhall reign with him, and be glorified together. What the Jews deprecated, the Apoſtle was deſirous of; namely, ſharing in the ſorrows and ſufferings of the Meſſiah, and which they reckon the greateſt happineſs to be delivered from. "The diſciples "of R. Eleazar [y] aſked him, what a man ſhould "do that he may be delivered, מחבלו של משיח, "from the ſorrows of the Meſſiah? he muſt ſtudy "in the law, and in beneficence." And elſewhere they ſay [z], "he that keeps the three meals on the "ſabbath-day ſhall be delivered from three puniſh-"ments, מחבלו של משיח, from the ſorrows of the "Meſſiah, and from the damnation of hell, and "from the war of Gog and Magog." But our Apoſtle rejoiced in his ſufferings for Chriſt, and was deſirous of filling up the afflictions of Chriſt in his fleſh, for his body ſake the church: being made conformable unto his death; either in a ſpiritual ſenſe dying daily unto ſin, having the affections, with the luſts, crucified, and the deeds of the body mortified, and ſo planted in the likeneſs of his death; or rather in a corporal ſenſe, bearing always in the body the dying of the Lord Jeſus, and being continually expoſed to death for his ſake, and ready to ſuffer it, whenever called to it.

Ver. 11. If by any means I might attain unto the reſurrection of the dead.] Not in a figurative ſenſe, the reſurrection from the death of ſin to a life of grace, of which Chriſt is the efficient cauſe, for this the Apoſtle had attained to; unleſs the conſummation of that ſpiritual life, in perfect holineſs, ſhould be intended, than which, nothing was more deſirable by him; nor in a repreſentative ſenſe, for this alſo he enjoyed in Chriſt his head, being riſen with him, and in him, when he roſe from the dead; but in a literal ſenſe, and deſigns not the general reſurrection of the juſt and unjuſt, which he believed; for he knew that every one muſt, and will attain to this, even Pharaoh, Judas, and the worſt of men; but the ſpecial and particular reſurrection of the righteous, the better reſurrection, which will be firſt, and upon the perſonal coming of Chriſt, and by virtue of union to him, and in a glorious manner, and to everlaſting life and happineſs: and when the Apoſtle ſays, if by any means he might attain to this, it is not to be underſtood as if he doubted of it, which would be inconſiſtent with his firm perſuaſion, that nothing ſhould ſeparate him from the love of God, and with his full aſſurance of faith, as to intereſt in Jeſus Chriſt; but it denotes the difficulty of attaining it; ſince through various afflictions and great tribulations, a believer muſt paſs, before he comes to it; and alſo the Apoſtle's earneſt deſire of it, and ſtrenuous endeavour for it; not caring what ſcenes of trouble, or ſea of ſorrow, what fiery trials, ſevere ſufferings, or cruel death he went through, ſo be it he obtained, as he believed he ſhould, the glorious and better reſurrection; he counted not his life dear to himſelf, he loved it not unto death, having in view the bliſsful and happy ſtate after it.

Ver. 12. Not as though I had already attained, &c.] Or received; he had received much grace out of the fulneſs of it in Chriſt; he had received the gift of righteouſneſs, the forgiveneſs of his ſins, and the adoption of children; he had attained to a lively hope of the incorruptible inheritance, and had received a right unto it, and had a meetneſs for it; but as yet he had not received the thing itſelf, nor was he come to the end of his race, and ſo had not received the crown of righteouſneſs laid up for him; he had not yet attained to perfect knowledge, nor perfect holineſs, nor perfect happineſs: wherefore he adds, either were already perfect; he was perfect in compariſon of others, that were in a lower claſs of grace, experience, and knowledge, in which ſenſe the word is uſed in ver. 15. and in 1 Cor. ii. 6. he was ſo, as perfection intends ſincerity, uprightneſs, and integrity; the root of the matter, the truth of grace was in him; his faith was unfeigned, his love was without diſſimulation, his hope was without hypocriſy, his converſation in the world was in godly ſimplicity, and his preaching and his whole conduct in his miniſtry were of ſincerity, and in the ſight of God: he was perfect as a new creature with reſpect to parts, having Chriſt formed in him, and all the parts of the new man, though not as to degrees; this new man not being as yet grown up to a perfect man, or to its full growth, to the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt; he was perfect with reſpect to juſtification, being perfectly juſtified from all things, by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, but not with reſpect to ſanctification; and though his ſanctification was perfect in Chriſt, yet not in himſelf; his knowledge was imperfect, ſomething was wanting in his faith, and ſin dwelt in him, of which he ſometimes grievouſly complained: now this he ſays, leſt he ſhould be thought to arrogate that to himſelf, which he had not: but I follow; Chriſt the forerunner, after perfect knowledge of him, perfect holineſs from him, and perfect happineſs with him: the metaphor is taken from runners in a race, who purſue it with eagerneſs, preſs forward with all might and main, to get up to the mark, in order to receive the prize; accordingly the Syriac verſion renders it, רהט אנא, I run, and ſo the Arabic: the Apoſtle's ſenſe is, that though he had not yet reached the mark, he preſſed forward towards it, he had it in view, he ſtretched and exerted himſelf, and followed up very cloſely to it, in hope of enjoying the prize: if that I may apprehend that for which alſo I am apprehended of Chriſt Jeſus; he was apprehended of Chriſt, when he met him in his way to Damaſcus, ſtopped him in his journey, laid him proſtrate to the ground, and laid hold on him as his own, challenged and claimed his intereſt in him, as one that the Father had given him, and he had purchaſed by his blood; he entered into him, and took poſſeſſion of him, and took up his reſidence in him, having diſpoſſeſſed the ſtrong man armed, and ever ſince held him as his own; and he apprehended, or laid hold on him, to bring him as he had engaged to do, to a participation of grace here, and glory hereafter; that he might know him himſelf, and make him known to others; that he might be made like unto him, have communion with him, and everlaſtingly enjoy him: and theſe things the Apoſtle purſued after with great vehemence, that he might apprehend them, and be in full poſſeſſion of them; and which he did, in the way and manner hereafter deſcribed.

Ver. 13. Brethren, I count not myſelf to have apprehended, &c.] That for which he was apprehended of Chriſt: he had not attained to perfect knowledge, was not come to the mark, had not received the prize, or laid hold on eternal life; though he had received ſo much grace, and ſuch gifts, as had qualified him for an Apoſtle; and he had been ſo many years in that office, and had ſo great a knowledge in the myſtery of the Goſpel, and had laboured in it more abundantly than others, and with great ſucceſs; and even though he had been caught up into the third heaven, and had heard unſpeakable words, not lawful to be uttered, yet he had no ſuch opinion of himſelf, as if he was perfect: by which way of ſpeaking, he tacitly ſtrikes at the arrogance and vain confidence of falſe teachers, that pretended to perfection; and in this way led the brethren to conclude, that they could never have arrived to it, ſince ſo great an Apoſtle had not; ſome copies read not yet, and ſo the Ethiopic verſion: but this one thing I do; which he was intent upon, conſtantly attended to, and earneſtly purſued; it was the main and principal thing he was ſet upon, and which he employed himſelf in; and which engroſſed all his thoughts, deſires, affections, time, and labour; ſee Pſal. xxvii. 4. Luke x. 42. The Syriac verſion reads, this one thing I know; ſignifying that whatever he was ignorant of, and however imperfect his knowledge was in other things, this he was full well apprized of, and acquainted with. The Arabic verſion renders the whole thus, I do not think that I have now obtained and received any thing, but the one thing; namely, what follows: forgetting thoſe things which are behind; meaning not the ſins of his paſt life, which were indeed forgotten by God, and the guilt of which was removed from him, by the application of the blood of Chriſt, ſo that he had no more conſcience of them; yet they were remembered and made mention of by him, partly for his own humiliation, and partly to magnify the grace of God: nor earthly and worldly things, which believers are too apt to have reſpect to, to look back upon, and hanker after, as the Iſraelites did after the fleſh-pots in Egypt; though theſe were forgotten by the Apoſtle, ſo as not anxiouſly to care for them, and ſeek after them, to ſet his affections on them, or truſt in them: nor his fleſhly privileges, and legal righteouſneſs, which he purſued, valued, and truſted in before converſion, but now dropped, renounced, diſregarded, and counted as loſs and dung; but rather his labours and works of righteouſneſs ſince converſion, which though he ſometimes times took notice of for the magnifying of the grace of God, for the defence of the Goſpel, and to put a ſtop to the vain boaſting of falſe teachers, yet he forgot them in point of dependance on them, and truſt to them; and having put his hand to the plough, he did not look back, nor deſiſt, but went on in his laborious way, not thinking of what he had done; and gone through, nor diſcouraged at what was before him; as alſo he intends all his growth in grace, and proficiency in divine knowledge, which was very great; and though he was thankful for theſe things, and would obſerve them to the glory of the grace of God, yet he truſted not in them: nor did he ſit down eaſy and ſatisfied with what he had attained unto, and therefore was reaching forth unto thoſe things which are before; to perfection of knowledge, holineſs, and happineſs, which were before him, and he as yet had not attained unto; but was deſirous of, and purſued after with great vehemence and eagerneſs: the metaphor is taken from runners in a race, who do not ſtop to look behind them, and ſee what way they have run, and how far they are before others, but look and move forwards, and ſtretch themſelves out to the uttermoſt, and run with all their might and main to the mark before them; and ſo the Apoſtle did in a ſpiritual ſenſe.

Ver. 14. I preſs toward the mark, &c.] The alluſion is to the white line, or mark, which the runners in the Olympic games made up to, and to which he that came firſt received the prize; and by which the Apoſtle intends the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is σκοπος, the ſcope, or mark, of all the thoughts, purpoſes, and counſels of God, to which they all aim, and in which they all center; and of the covenant of grace, of which he is the ſum and ſubſtance, the mediator, ſurety, and meſſenger, in whom are all the bleſſings and promiſes of it; and of the ſcriptures of truth, the writings of the Old and New Teſtament, which all teſtify of him, and agree in him; and of both law and Goſpel, he is the end of the law, and the ſubſtance of the Goſpel; and of all the graces of the Spirit, in the hearts of his people, faith looks at him, hope is concerned with him, and love has him for its object; and of all the duties believers are concerned in, they all point at him, they are done in his name and ſtrength, through faith in him, and from a principle of love to him, and with a view to his glory; and ſo he is of their thoughts, affections, and deſires: and to this mark they preſs, or run, as the Syriac verſion renders it; they look to Jeſus, whilſt they are running their chriſtian race; they keep him in their view, and follow after him, becauſe he is their forerunner, and the captain of their ſalvation; they ſet him before them as their guide to direct them, according to whom they ſteer their courſe, that ſo they may not loſe their way, nor move out of it, to the right-hand or the left; and from whom they take great encouragement to go on, and preſs through the difficulties they do; and beſides, they know that there is no coming at the prize, but through the mark, for there is ſalvation in no other; and that whoever comes up to the mark, or believes in Chriſt, ſhall enjoy the prize of eternal life, which is next mentioned: for the prize of the high calling of God in Chriſt Jeſus; by which is meant, the incorruptible crown; the crown of life, righteouſneſs, and glory, that fadeth not away, ſtiled the prize of the calling of God; becauſe it is what God in effectual vocation calls his people to, even to a kingdom and glory, and to eternal glory and happineſs; of which they have a ſight, though but a glimmering view of it, and are bleſſed with hope in it; in which they rejoice, and ſee their right unto it, in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and have a meetneſs for it: this is named the high calling of God, becauſe God is on high, who calls them to it, in alluſion to the judge in the Olympic games, who was placed in an exalted ſituation, near the mark, with the crown in his hand, which he gave to him that came firſt; and becauſe the grace by which the ſaints are called, is from above, as every good and perfect gift is; and becauſe the prize they are called unto, conſiſts of things above, where Jeſus is, and is the hope laid up in heaven, and the inheritance reſerved there; and expreſſes the great honour and dignity of called ones, who are called to a crown and kingdom, are raiſed from the dunghill, to ſit among princes, and to inherit the throne of glory, and are made kings and prieſts unto God: and may alſo denote, that the calling to ſuch high honour is from above, and not below; and is owing to the ſpecial grace and favour of God, and not to any merits of men; nor is the prize to which they are called, of him that willeth and runneth, but of God's grace and mercy: and moreover, this calling is ſaid to be in Chriſt Jeſus; for both the purpoſe and grace, according to which men are called, are in him; the grace by which they are called, and which is implanted in them when called, is all in and from Chriſt; the bleſſings of grace, which they then in perſon enjoy, are ſpiritual bleſſings in him; and even the glory they are called unto, is in his hands; not only the promiſe of eternal life, but that itſelf; the gift of it is with him, and it comes through him; yea, they are called by him, and ſaid to be the called of Chriſt Jeſus: now the prize of this calling, which is what God has prepared from all eternity, which Chriſt has in his hands, and will give to all his, and which is of immenſe richneſs and eternal duration, and ſhall be beſtowed on all chriſtian runners, or true believers, is what the Apoſtle was preſſing for, purſuing after, with much difficulty, through great toil and labour, diligent ſearching of the ſcriptures, frequent wreſtling with God in prayer, and conſtant attendance on the means of grace, and ordinances of the Goſpel.

Ver. 15. Let us therefore as many as be perfect, &c.] Not abſolutely, but comparatively, with reſpect to other believers, in a lower claſs of knowledge and experience; and not with reſpect to degrees, but parts; and regards ſuch who were not children, but of riper age in divine things, unleſs the words are ſpoken ironically: be thus minded; as the Apoſtle was, to count what were gain to him, loſs for Chriſt; to reckon all things but loſs and dung, for the excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt; to be willing to ſuffer the loſs of all things, to win him; to deſire to be found in him, and in his righteouſneſs, and not a man's own; to know more of him in his perſon, righteouſneſs, ſufferings, death, and reſurrection from the dead; and to attain to ſuch a ſtate, and yet to diſclaim all perfection, and acknowledge their imperfection; and to forget things behind, and reach to thoſe before; and preſs towards the mark Chriſt, for the prize of eternal glory: and if in any thing ye be otherwiſe minded; as to ſeek for juſtification by the works of the law, or partly by Chriſt and partly by the law, and to imagine and expect perfection in this life: God ſhall reveal even this unto you; ſuch errors will be made manifeſt ſooner or later; the day will declare them, and ſuch wood, hay, and ſtubble will be burnt up by the fire, which will reveal every man's work.

Ver. 16. Nevertheleſs, whereto we have already attained, &c.] Whatever degree of knowledge of Chriſt, and the truths of his Goſpel, is attained to, let it be retained, and not departed from: let us walk by the ſame rule; either the doctrine of juſtification by Chriſt's righteouſneſs in particular, which is a rule of judgment concerning other things; for ſo far as they agree or diſagree with this, they are to be received or rejected; or the ſcriptures of truth, which are the rule of faith and practice, and the ſtandard and teſt, to which all are to be brought and tried: let us mind the ſame thing; be of one heart and affection to each other, and of the ſame judgment in the doctrines of the Goſpel, and purſue the ſame meaſures; particularly preſs towards the ſame mark, and for the ſame prize the Apoſtle did, and be followers of him, as is exhorted to in the next verſe.

Ver. 17. Brethren, be followers together of me, &c.] Not that the Apoſtle ſet up himſelf as the head of a party, which is what he always blamed in others; he did not aſſume a dominion over the faith of men, or ſeek to lord it over God's heritage; nor did he deſire any to be followers of him, any further than he was a follower of Chriſt; and in what he was, whether in doctrine or practice, he deſires to be followed in: and here he has a particular regard to what went before, concerning reckoning what was gain loſs; accounting all things but dung, in compariſon of the knowledge of Chriſt; looking to his righteouſneſs alone for juſtification; diſclaiming perfection, yet forgetting things behind; reaching towards things before, and preſſing to the mark for the prize, and walking according to the rule of God's word; in which things he had ſome that followed him, who were his ſpiritual children, and to whom he had been uſeful in converſion and edification; ſee 1 Cor. iv. 15, 16. 1 Theſſ. i. 6, 7. and he would therefore have theſe Philippians followers of him, together with them; and which contains in it an encouraging reaſon, or argument, ſince others were followers of him; or together with one another; he was deſirous, that one and all of them might follow him; that they might all go in the ſame way, profeſs the ſame truth, be found in the practice of the ſame things, worſhip the Lord with one conſent, purſue the ſame ends, and draw all the ſame way; and ſo be as the church was, like a company of horſes in Pharaoh's chariot: and mark them which walk ſo; as the Apoſtle did, and thoſe that were followers of him; theſe he would have them mark, obſerve, attentively look to; not as others, who cauſe offences and diviſions, and obey not the word, in order to ſhun, avoid, and keep no company with; but to imitate and follow, and next to Chriſt the mark, to make uſe of them as inferior ones: as ye have us for an enſample, or type; believers ſhould be enſamples one to another, eſpecially miniſters of the word; paſtors of churches are not to be lords over God's heritage, but to be enſamples to the flock, in word, in converſation, in charity, in ſpirit, in faith, in purity, as the Apoſtle exhorts Timothy, 1 Epiſt. iv. 12. and in theſe things they are to be followed by believers.

Ver. 18. For many walk, &c.] אחרניאית, otherwiſe, as the Syriac verſion adds; and which truly explains the words, and gives the ſenſe; they walked not as the Apoſtle and his followers; they walked as men, as carnal men, according to the courſe of the world, after their ungodly luſts; or according to the rites and ceremonies of the Moſaic diſpenſation, and not uprightly, and according to the truth of the Goſpel: and there were many that walked ſo; the road both of profaneneſs and error, is a broad one, and many walk therein, which makes it the more dangerous; the examples of many have great force, though a multitude is not to be followed to do evil; the converſation of a great part of profeſſors is not to be imitated; the few names in Sardis that have not defiled their garments with error or immorality, ſhould be marked for enſamples, and the majority ſhunned: of whom I have told you often; both when preſent among them by word of mouth, and when abſent from them by writing; for the Apoſtle was a faithful watchman and monitor to this church, and to all the churches, the care of which lay upon him; and diligent he was to warn them againſt falſe teachers, whoſe doctrines and practices he knew were of pernicious conſequence: and now tell you even weeping; partly on account of thoſe evil men, whoſe ſtate and condition, notwithſtanding their profeſſion, was very bad; and partly on account of the glory of God and Chriſt, and the honour of religion, which ſuffered much through them; and alſo on account of the Philippians, leſt they ſhould be drawn aſide by them; and becauſe they had taken ſo little notice of his frequent cautions and advice: and that they might the better know the men he ſpoke of, and avoid them, he deſcribes them by the following characters, that they are the enemies of the croſs of Chriſt; not that, though they might be Jews, they were like the unbelieving Jews, who were open and implacable enemies of a crucified Chriſt, called Jeſus accurſed, and anathematized him and his followers, and to whom the preaching of Chriſt crucified, was an offence and ſtumbling-block; for theſe were profeſſors of Chriſt, and pretended to preach Chriſt, and him crucified: nor were they ſuch hereticks, that denied that Chriſt really aſſumed human nature, and was really crucified and died; and affirmed that all this was only in appearance, or that an image was hung upon the croſs for him, or Simon the Cyrenian was crucified in his room, as ſome have thought, which was the hereſy of Simon Magus, and his diſciple Baſilides: nor is the ſenſe that they were averſe to the crucifixion of the affections with the luſts, though this ſeems to be their true character, ſince they were ſenſual and minded earthly things; but the meaning is, that they diſliked the croſs of Chriſt; they were unwilling to take it up for his ſake, and follow him; they ſtudied all ways and means to ſhun it; they ingratiated themſelves into the affections of the unbelieving Jews, by complying with the ceremonies of the law, and bearing hard upon the Apoſtle and his miniſtry, that ſo they might not ſuffer perſecution for the croſs of Chriſt; and beſides, by enjoining circumciſion and an obſervance of the law as neceſſary to ſalvation, they as much as in them lay, made void the efficacy of the croſs and death of Chriſt, and made that and him unprofitable, and of no effect to the ſouls of men; and were both doctrinally and practically enemies of the croſs of Chriſt: and ſo all ſuch profeſſors of Chriſt, who walk not according to the Goſpel, though they are not open and direct enemies to the Goſpel, which is the preaching of the croſs, yet they are ſecret and indirect ones, and oftentimes do more miſchief to it by their lives, than the keeneſt adverſaries of it can by their pens.

Ver. 19. Whoſe end is deſtruction, &c.] Everlaſting deſtruction, the deſtruction of both body and and ſoul in hell; and this is the end, the reward and iſſue of bad principles and practices; the broad roads of ſin and error lead to deſtruction; however pleaſing ſuch ways may be to men, the end of them is eternal death; deſtruction and miſery are in all the ways of profaneneſs and hereſy; not only immoralities, but hereſies, ſuch as ſtrike at the efficacy of Chriſt's croſs, his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, are damnable ones, and bring upon men ſwift deſtruction; and how ſhould it otherwiſe be, for there is no ſalvation but by the croſs of Chriſt? and if men are enemies to that, and the efficacy of it, and the way of ſalvation by it, there is no more, nor any other ſacrifice for ſin, but a fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation; and this will be the caſe of all barren and unfruitful profeſſors, who are like the earth, that brings forth briars and thorns, and is nigh unto curſing, whoſe end is to be burned; for what will the hope of ſuch an one, founded on his profeſſion, though he may have got credit and reputation among men avail, when God takes away his ſoul? whoſe God is their belly; the belly was the god of the Cyclopes, they ſacrificed to none but to themſelves, and to the greateſt of the gods, their own belly[a]; as money is the covetous man's god, whom he loves, adores, and puts his confidence in, ſo the belly is the god of the ſenſualiſt, the epicure, and voluptuous perſon; he has more regard for the ſervice of that, than for the ſervice of God: and of this complexion were theſe profeſſors; they were lovers of pleaſure, more than lovers of God; all their pretenſions to religion, to Chriſt, and his Goſpel, were only to ſerve themſelves, their own bellies, and not the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and to do good to the ſouls of men: or their belly may be ſaid to be their god, becauſe they placed religion in the obſervance of meats and drinks, either allowed or forbidden in the law of Moſes, which profited not thoſe that were occupied therein; for the kingdom of God, the Goſpel diſpenſation, internal religion, and the exerciſe of it, lies not in theſe things, but in righteouſneſs, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghoſt: and whoſe glory is in their ſhame; in their evil practices committed in ſecret, of which it was a ſhame to ſpeak; in their hidden things of diſhoneſty, crafty walking, and deceitful handling of the word of God, which were vile and ſcandalous; in corrupting the Goſpel and the churches of Chriſt, with their falſe doctrine; in obſerving and urging the ceremonies of the law, which were dead, and ought to be buried; and particularly circumciſion in the fleſh, in that part of the body which cauſes ſhame, and in this were their glory, Gal. vi. 13. The idol Baal Peor, and which is no other than the Priapus of the Heathens, is called by this name, Hoſ. ix. 10. ſo the prophets of Baal are in the Septuagint on 1 Kings xviii. 19, 25. called the prophets, της αισχυνης, of that ſhame; it may be the Apoſtle may have a regard to the ſecret debaucheries of theſe perſons; or becauſe they made their belly their god, he calls it their ſhame in which they gloried, and which was the name given to the idols of the Gentiles: who mind earthly things. The Arabic verſion renders it, who entertain earthly opinions; and ſome by earthly things underſtand, the ceremonies of the law, called the elements and rudiments of the world, which theſe falſe teachers were fond of, and were very diligent to inculcate and urge the obſervance of; though rather worldly things, ſuch as honour, glory, and popular applauſe, and wealth, and riches, are meant; for they ſought their own things, and not the things of Chriſt; through covetouſneſs, with feigned words, they made merchandize of men, and amaſſed to themſelves great ſums of money; and yet were greedy dogs, could never have enough, every one looking for his gain from his quarter: and now perſons of ſuch characters as theſe, were by no means to be followed, but ſuch who are hereafter deſcribed.

Ver. 20. For our converſation is in heaven, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion renders it, we have our city in heaven; and the words may be truly rendered, our citizenſhip is in heaven; that is, the city whereof we are freemen is heaven, and we behave ourſelves here below, as citizens of that city above: heaven is the ſaints city; here they have no continuing city, but they ſeek one to come, which is permanent and durable; a city that has foundations, whoſe builder and maker is God: as yet they are not in it, though fellow-citizens of the ſaints, and of the houſhold of God; they are pilgrims, ſtrangers, and ſojourners on earth; but are ſeeking a better country, an heavenly one, and God has prepared for them a city; they have a right unto it through the grace of God, and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and a meetneſs for it in him; and their converſation is here before-hand, whilſt their commoration is below; their thoughts are often employed about it; their affections are ſet upon it; their hearts are where their treaſure is; the deſires of their ſouls are towards it, and they are ſeeking things above, and long to be in their own city, and Father's houſe, where Chriſt is; and to be at home with him, and for ever with him. This is the work and buſineſs of their lives now, and what their hearts are engaged in. The Syriac verſion renders it, our work is in heaven; the buſineſs, the exerciſe of our lives, and of our graces, tend that way: from whence alſo we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; Chriſt is now in heaven, at the Father's right-hand, appearing in the preſence of God for his people, and making interceſſion for them; and ſo will remain, until the time of the reſtitution of all things; when he'll deſcend from heaven, and be revealed from thence: and this the ſaints look for, and expect; as they have good reaſon for it; from his own words, from the words of the angels at the time of his aſcenſion, and from the writings of the Apoſtles: and they expect him not merely as a judge, under which conſideration he will be terrible to the ungodly, but as a Saviour; who as he has already ſaved their ſouls from ſin, and the dreadful effects of it, from the bondage and curſe of the law, from the captivity of ſatan, and from eternal ruin and wrath to come, ſo he will ſave and redeem their bodies from the grave, corruption, mortality, and death, as follows.

Ver. 21. Who ſhall change our vile body, &c.] Which is defiled with ſin, attended with frailty, and is mortal; and being dead, is ſown and laid in the grave in corruption, weakneſs, and diſhonour: in the Greek text it is, the body of our humility; ſin has ſubjected the body to weakneſs, mortality, and death; and death brings it into a very low eſtate indeed, which is very humbling and mortifying to the pride and vanity of man: now this vile body in the reſurrection morn, ſhall be ſtripped of all its vileneſs, baſeneſs, and meanneſs; and be changed, not as to its ſubſtance, nor as to its form and figure, which ſhall always remain the ſame, as did the ſubſtance and form of our Lord's body after his reſurrection; but as to its qualities, it ſhall be changed from corruption to incorruption, from mortality to immortality, from weakneſs to power, and from diſhonour to glory, and be free from all ſin: ſo the Jews ſay [b], that "the evil imagination, or "corruption of nature, goes along with man in "the hour of death, but does not return with him "when the dead ariſe:" and this change will be made by the Saviour, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, when he ſhall deſcend from heaven; who as he is the pledge, the firſt-fruits, the exemplar, and meritorious cauſe, ſo he will be the efficient cauſe of the reſurrection of the ſaints; who will be raiſed and changed by him, by his power, and by virtue of union to him: that it might be faſhioned like unto his glorious body; or the body of his glory, as it is now in heaven, and of which his transfiguration on the mount was an emblem and pledge; for glory, power, incorruption, and immortality, the bodies of the ſaints in the reſurrection, ſhall be like to Chriſt's, though not equal to it, and ſhall ſhine like the ſun in the kingdom of their Father. The Jews [c] have a notion, that "the holy bleſſed God "will beautify the bodies of the righteous in future time, like the beauty of the firſt Adam:" but their beauty and glory will be greater than that, 'twill be like the glory of the ſecond Adam, the Lord from heaven, whoſe image they ſhall then bear: and whereas this requires almighty power, of which Chriſt is poſſeſſed, it will be done according to the working, the energy of his power and might; or as the Syriac verſion renders it, according to his great power; which was put forth in raiſing himſelf from the dead, and whereby he was declared to be the Son of God: and whereby he is able even to ſubdue all things unto himſelf; not only ſin, ſatan, and the world, but death and the grave; and ſo conſequently able to raiſe the dead bodies of his ſaints, and to change the qualities of them, and make them like unto his own: and now who would but follow ſuch perſons, who are citizens of heaven, have their converſation there, look for Chriſt the Saviour from thence, who when he comes will raiſe the dead in Chriſt firſt, put ſuch a glory on their bodies as is on his own, and take them to himſelf, that where he is they may be alſo? ſee Heb. vi. 12.

CHAP. IV.

THIS chapter contains exhortations to various duties becoming chriſtians, the Apoſtle's thankfulneſs to the Philippians for their preſent to him, and the concluſion of the Epiſtle with the ſalutations of the brethren: in ver. 1. the Apoſtle exhorts the ſaints with great affection, to perſeverance in the doctrine and faith of Chriſt; and in ver. 2. mentions ſome perſons by name, and to whom he recommends unity and agreement; and in ver. 3. entreats others to aſſiſt them therein; and in ver. 4. exhorts them all in general to joy in the Lord, and to moderation, enforced by this argument, the Lord being at hand, ver. 5. and to calmneſs and quietneſs of mind, and to prayer, and ſupplication, with thankſgiving, ver. 6. to which they are encouraged, by the promiſe of having the peace of God, keeping their minds through Chriſt, ver. 7. and to conclude, he exhorts them to every thing that is virtuous and commendable; to which he ſtimulates them, from the conſideration of the nature of the things themſelves, from his own example, and from the preſence of God with them, they might expect to enjoy, ver. 8, 9. and then he proceeds to take notice of the kindneſs of the Philippians to him, declares his joy on account of it, and expreſſes it by their care of him again; which he corrects, by obſerving that it was not for want of care in them before, but of opportunity of ſhowing it, ver. 10. nor did he take notice of this preſent of theirs, with ſo much exultation on account of his own penury, for he had learnt the great leſſon of contentment in every ſtate, ver. 11. which he enlarges upon and explains; namely, that he had been taught, and knew how to behave in fulneſs and want, in proſperity and adverſity; though this was not owing to himſelf, but to the power and ſtrength of Chriſt, ver. 12, 13. however, he commends the Philippians for their communicating to him in his affliction, both at the firſt preaching of the Goſpel to them, and at ſeveral times ſince, ver. 14, 15, 16. the reaſon of which commendation, was not becauſe he was covetous of gifts and preſents from them, but to encourage them to bring forth fruit, which would turn to their own advantage, ver. 17. as for himſelf he had enough, and therefore ſaid not this on his own account, but becauſe ſuch communication was a ſacrifice well pleaſing to God, and a return would be made by him; who as he was able to ſupply all their need, would; of which he aſſures them, and for which he prays, ver. 18, 19. and to whom he gives the glory of what they had given, and he had received, ver. 20. and then the Epiſtle is concluded with the ſalutation of the Apoſtle, and the ſaints, and brethren with him, and with his uſual benediction, ver. 21, 22, 23.

Ver. 1. Therefore, my brethren, &c.] Not in a natural, but ſpiritual relation; having the ſame Father, being of the ſame family, and houſhold of faith: ſeeing that on the one hand there were falſe teachers, who ſtand deſcribed by various characters in the preceding chapter, by whom they were in danger of being carried away from the ſimplicity of the Goſpel; and on the other hand, ſuch were the conduct and converſation of the Apoſtle, and other true believers, and ſuch were their expectations of Chriſt from heaven, and of happineſs from him as there expreſſed; therefore he exhorts to ſtedfaſtneſs in him, and that under the moſt tender, affectionate, and indearing appellations; given in the uprightneſs of his ſoul, without any manner of flattery, to ſignify his ſtrong affection for them, and to engage them to attend the more to what he was about to exhort them to; and which aroſe from pure love to them, an hearty concern for their good, and the honour of Chriſt Jeſus: my dearly beloved; as belonging to Chriſt, intereſted in him, members of him, redeemed by him, and bearing his image; and as his brethren, and ſo not loved with a carnal, but ſpiritual love: and longed for; to ſee them, converſe with them, and impart ſome ſpiritual gift to them; being the excellent in the earth, as other ſaints, towards whom was his deſire, and with whom was all his delight. Theſe epithets are joined with the word brethren, in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions, and read thus, my dearly beloved, and longed for brethren; and in the Ethiopic verſion, our beloved brethren: to which are added, my joy and crown; they were matter of joy to him, as he had reaſon to hope well of them; yea, to be confident that the good work was begun, and would be carried on in them; and that they had hitherto continued in the doctrine of the Goſpel, and walked worthy of it: and they were his crown, as they were ſeals of his miniſtry; and whom he valued more, and reckoned a greater honour and ornament to him, than the richeſt diadem, ſet with the moſt coſtly jewels and precious ſtones, and which he hoped and believed would be his crown of rejoicing another day; when he with them, ſhould ſtand at the right hand of Chriſt triumphing, as victors crowned, over ſin, ſatan, the world, death, and hell: ſo ſtand faſt in the Lord; or by the Lord; by his power and ſtrength, which is only able to make to ſtand faſt; ſaints are liable to falling, and would fall, were they not upheld with his right hand, and kept by his power; they only ſtand faſt, as they ſtand ſupported by his ſtrength, truſting in his might, and leaning on his arm. Chriſt is the only foundation where they can ſtand ſafe and ſure; and ſuch as are rooted and grounded, and built up in him, are eſtabliſhed and ſtand; though they are ſtill in need of being exhorted to hold the head, abide by him, and cleave unto him; to ſtand faſt in his grace, exerciſing the graces of faith, hope, and love upon him; in the liberty of Chriſt, in oppoſition to the bondage of the law, falſe teachers were for bringing them into; and in the doctrine of faith, and not depart from it in any degree, nor give way in the leaſt to the oppoſers of it, but continue ſtedfaſt in it without wavering, and which is chiefly intended here: ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, ſo ſtand in the faith of the Lord; both in the grace of faith, and in the doctrine of it, and in the profeſſion of both; ſee 1 Cor. xvi. 13. The Apoſtle bids them ſo ſtand faſt; that is, either as they had hitherto done, or as they had him and others for an example; whoſe views, converſation, and behaviour, are deſcribed in the foregoing chapter: my dearly beloved; this which otherwiſe would be a repetition of what is before ſaid, is by ſome connected with the former clauſe, and read thus, ſo ſtand faſt my dearly beloved in the Lord; and contains a reaſon, both why they were dearly beloved by the Apoſtle, becauſe beloved in and by the Lord; and why it became them to ſtand faſt in him, and abide by him, his truths, ordinances, cauſe, and intereſt.

Ver. 2. I beſeech Euodias, and beſeech Syntyche, &c.] Two women, who were members of this church at Philippi, and who ſeem to have been at variance; either with each other, on account of ſome temporal and civil things, as often is the caſe of the dear children of God, who fall out by the way; and it becomes a very hard and difficult taſk to reconcile them, though as here intreated in the moſt tender and importunate manner to agree: or elſe with the church, having entertained ſome ſentiments in religion different from it; being drawn aſide by falſe teachers, from the ſimplicity of the Goſpel, and their ſtedfaſtneſs in the faith; and this may rather be thought to be the meaning, ſince the Apoſtle would ſcarcely take notice of a private difference in ſo public a manner, and ſince this exhortation follows ſo cloſely the former: that they be of the ſame mind in the Lord; either that they agree together, and be reconciled to each other, conſidering the relation they ſtood in to one another, and to the Lord; or that they become of the ſame mind, and embrace the ſame truths, and profeſs and maintain the ſame principles the church did; and ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, that ye entertain one and the ſame opinion concerning the faith of the Lord.

Ver. 3. And I intreat thee alſo, true yoke-fellow, &c.] Not his wife, as ſome think [d]; for he had none, as appears from 1 Cor. vii. 7, 8. at the writing of which Epiſtle he was at Epheſus; where he ſtaid ſome little time, and then went to Jeruſalem; where he was quickly apprehended, and ſent a priſoner to Rome, and where he now was as ſuch; and therefore it is not likely that he ſhould marry a wife within this compaſs of time, and much leſs that he ſhould have one at Philippi; beſides, the word uſed is of the maſculine gender, and deſigns a man and not a woman: ſome think it is the proper name of a man, who was called Syzygus, and ſo the Arabic interpreter ſeems to underſtand it; and by the Apoſtle, true Syzygus, ſignifying that as was his name, ſo was he, really and in truth a companion and fellow-labourer, that drew in the ſame yoke with him; the Syriac verſion renders it, the ſon of my yoke; and the Ethiopic verſion, my brother and my companion: ſome think this perſon was the huſband, or brother of one of the above women; and therefore is intreated to uſe his intereſt, and compoſe the difference between them, or endeavour to reconcile them to the church; and others that it was the jailor, that was converted by the Apoſtle: but it ſeems moſt likely to have been one that was under the ſame yoke of the Goſpel, and who had been employed with him in preaching of it, a fellow labourer; ſuch an one as Barnabas, Silas, and Timothy, and might be one of thoſe; or rather Epaphroditus, who was miniſter in this church, and by whom the Apoſtle ſent this letter, and whom he might addreſs and importune in this manner; the word may very well be thought to anſwer to the Hebrew word חבר, often uſed in Jewiſh writings, for an aſſociate, a collegue, and a diſciple of the wiſe men, to which the Apoſtle may allude; ſee ch. ii. 25. help thoſe women; Euodias and Syntyche. The Syriac and Ethiopic verſions read them, referring to the above women; and the Arabic verſion reads, help both; that is, both thoſe women; not by relieving their temporal wants, which it does not appear they were in; but either by compoſing their differences, or by aſſiſting them with good counſel and advice; and giving them proper inſtructions in the doctrines of the Goſpel, that they might be brought to think the ſame things the church did: and the rather ſuch pains ſhould be taken with them, ſince they were ſuch, ſays the Apoſtle, which laboured with me in the Goſpel; not in preaching it, for he ſuffered not a woman to teach in the church; but by profeſſing it, and bearing reproach and perſecution for it; and by ſupporting and encouraging, and ſpreading it with their worldly ſubſtance: with Clement alſo; which ſome think is the ſame with Clemens Romanus, who was afterwards biſhop of Rome, and whoſe epiſtle to the Corinthians is ſtill extant; other writings are aſcribed to him, but are ſpurious: however, by his name he ſeems to be a Roman; and from his being joined with the Apoſtle, as one with whom theſe women alſo laboured in the Goſpel, he appears to be a preacher of it at Philippi: and with other my fellow-labourers; in the work of the miniſtry, as Timothy, who was with him at Philippi, when he firſt preached the Goſpel there, and ſome others: whoſe names are in the book of life; the book of God's eternal purpoſes and decrees, divine predeſtination to eternal life; and this being called a book, and the names of perſons being ſaid to be in it, denote the love of God to his elect, his care of them, his value for them, his remembrance of them, and the exact knowledge which he has of them; as well as imply, that his eternal election of them is perſonal and particular, is well known to him, and is ſure and unchangeable; being more ſo, than the writing of Pilate on the croſs, who ſaid, what I have written, I have written: and it is called the book of life, becauſe thoſe whoſe names are written in it, have a ſpiritual life here, and an eternal one hereafter; to both which they are fore-written in this book, or pre-ordained in God's counſels, and certainly and infallibly enjoy it: now the Apoſtle's knowledge of theſe perſons being written in this book, did not ariſe from any ſpecial revelation, as being ſhown the book of life, and the names of the elect in it, when he was caught up into the third heaven; nor was his knowledge of this matter peculiar and limited to theſe perſons only, but common to all that he had reaſon to hope and believe, had received the grace of God in truth, and walked worthy of the vocation wherewith they were call'd; ſuch perſons in a judgment of charity, which hopes and believes all things, he concluded were in this book of life; and the ſame judgment, faith, and hope, ought all believers to form and entertain one of another, nothing appearing contrary to it, in their faith and converſation.

Ver. 4. Rejoice in the Lord alway, &c.] This is a repetition of the exhortation in ch. iii. 1. ſee the note there, with this addition alway; for there is always cauſe and matter for rejoicing in Chriſt, even in times of affliction, diſtreſs, and perſecution; ſince he is always the ſame; his grace is always ſufficient; his blood has a continual virtue in it, and always ſpeaks for peace and pardon; his righteouſneſs is an everlaſting one, and ſo is his ſalvation, and ſuch is his love; though ſome join this word with what follows, and again, I always ſay, rejoice; this is what was continually inculcated by him, as being of great importance and uſe for the comfort of believers, and the honour of Chriſt.

Ver. 5. Let your moderation be known unto all men, &c.] The Vulgate Latin reads, your modeſty. The Syriac and Arabic verſions, your meekneſs, or humility; graces which accompany moderation, and are very neceſſary to it, but not that itſelf. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, your authority, which by no means agrees; for moderation lies not in exerting authority and power to the uttermoſt, at leaſt with rigour, but in ſhewing clemency and lenity; not dealing with men according to the ſeverity of laws and ſtrict juſtice, but according to equity, and with mildneſs and gentleneſs; giving up ſtrict and proper right, receding from what is a man's due, and not rigidly inſiſting on it; putting up with affronts and injuries, and bearing them with patience; and interpreting things in the beſt ſenſe, and putting the beſt conſtructions on words and actions they will bear; and in uſing inferiors and equals, with all humanity, kindneſs, and reſpect: and this is what is here intended, which the Apoſtle would have made known; exerciſed and practiſed publickly, that it might be ſeen and known of all, and God might be glorified, by whoſe name they were called, through their agreeable converſation among men; ſee Matt. v. 16. and he would not only have this known unto, but exerciſed towards all men; not only to believers, the members of the church, by ruling with gentleneſs, by bearing the infirmities of the weak, and by forgiving offences; but alſo to unbelievers, to the men of the world, by not avenging themſelves, but giving way to wrath; by patient ſuffering for well doing, without making any returns of ill, either by words or deeds: this is the moderation here meant, and not moderation in eating and drinking, and in apparel, and in the love and uſe of, and care for the things of this world; though ſuch moderation highly becomes profeſſors of religion; and much leſs moderation in religion, or towards the falſe teachers, thinking and ſpeaking well of them, and interpreting their notions in the beſt ſenſe, hoping they may mean otherwiſe than they ſay, and therefore ſhould treat their perſons with great reſpect, and their principles with tenderneſs; but this can never be thought to be the Apoſtle's ſenſe, after he had himſelf given them ſuch names and characters, as in ch. iii. 2, 18, 19. and beſides, though we may, and many times ought, as men and chriſtians, to give way, and yield up what is our right and due, for the ſake of peace, yet we cannot, nor ought to give up any thing, that of right belongs to God and Chriſt, in matters of doctrine or worſhip; nor in the leaſt abate of our zeal for the ſame, or give way to falſe teachers in any reſpect, nor for any time: moreover, moderation in religion, is nothing elſe but lukewarmneſs and indifference, than which nothing is more deteſtable, or abhorred by Chriſt. The argument or reaſon, enforcing moderation in the above ſenſe of it follows, the Lord is at hand. The Syriac verſion reads, our Lord; and the Ethiopic verſion, God is at hand. The ſenſe is, either the Lord is near, he's omnipreſent, and ſees and obſerves the conduct of his people, their deportment in the world, and to one another; and therefore, as in his preſence, and under his eye, they ſhould behave according to equity, and with kindneſs and tenderneſs towards their fellow-creatures and fellow-chriſtians: or the Lord is nigh unto them, as he is to all that call upon him in truth; he's a preſent help in time of trouble; he's in the midſt of them, and will help, and that right early; and will avenge his elect, and vindicate their cauſe, and right all their wrongs in his due time; and therefore they ſhould take all things patiently, and not avenge themſelves: or in a little while Chriſt will come to judgment, when he'll plead the cauſe of his people, and convince ungodly ſinners of their ungodly deeds, and hard ſpeeches againſt him and his; and therefore they ſhould leave all to that time, and commit themſelves to him that judgeth righteouſly.

Ver. 6. Be careful for nothing, &c.] This muſt be underſtood not in the moſt extenſive ſenſe, but with a limitation and reſtriction. There are many things that ſaints are to be careful for, as men and chriſtians; they are to be careful of their bodies, as well as of their ſouls; of the health of them, which is to be preſerved by all lawful means, and not expoſed to unneceſſary danger; and for their families, to provide things honeſt for them, proper food and raiment, and the neceſſaries of life; for whoever does not do that, denies the faith, and is worſe than an infidel; and even for the things of this world in a moderate way, uſing all diligence and induſtry in obtaining them; men ought to be careful to diſcharge the duties of their calling in civil life, and to care and concern themſelves for the honour of God, the intereſt of religion, and the ſupport of the Goſpel; and that they offend not God, by ſinning againſt him: but the carefulneſs the Apoſtle ſpeaks of, is an anxious ſolicitude for worldly things, an immoderate concern for the things of life, ariſing from diffidence, or negligence, of the power, providence, and faithfulneſs of God: ſaints ſhould not be anxiouſly, or in a diſtreſſing manner concerned for the things of this world, but be content, whether they have leſs or more; nor be over-much preſſed with what befals them, but ſhould caſt their care upon the Lord, and carry every caſe to him, and leave it there: but in every thing. The Syriac and Ethiopic verſions render it, in every time; always, conſtantly, every day, as often as there is opportunity, and need requires. The Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions join it with the following clauſe, in every prayer and ſupplication; but the grammatical conſtruction of the words will not admit of ſuch a verſion; 'tis beſt to underſtand it of every thing, or caſe, which ſhould be brought to God; whether it be of a temporal or ſpiritual kind, relating to body or ſoul, to ourſelves or others, to our families, relations, and acquaintance, the church, or the world: by prayer and ſupplication; which may include all ſorts of prayer, mental or vocal, private or public, ordinary or extraordinary, and every part of prayer: prayer may deſign petition, or aſking for good things that are wanted; and ſupplication, a deprecating of evils that are feared; though theſe two are often uſed together for the ſame thing, for prayer in general: which ought always to be accompanied with thankſgiving; for mercies received; for a man can never come to the throne of grace, to aſk for grace and mercy, but he has mercies to bleſs God for, and ſo to do is very acceptable to God; nor can a perſon expect to ſucceed in the enjoyment of future mercies, when he is not thankful for paſt and preſent ones: in this manner therefore, at all times, upon every occaſion, in a way of humble petition and ſupplication, joined with thankfulneſs for all favours, let your requeſts be made known to God; not to men; fly not to an arm of fleſh, but to God, to him only, and that in the moſt private manner, as not to be known by men; and put up ſuch requeſts, as there may be reaſon to hope and believe God will know and approve of; ſuch as are agreeable to his will, to the covenant of his grace, and the declaration of his word: uſe familiarity with God, tell him as you would do a friend, freely and fully all your caſe, pour out your ſouls and your complaints before him. This God would have his people do, and he expects it from them; and though he knows all their wants, and what are their deſires before they expreſs them, yet he'll ſeem not to know them, or take any notice of them, until they open them to him in ſome way or other; either by vocal prayer, or mental; by ejaculations, or ſighs and groans, by chattering as a crane or ſwallow, all which he underſtands: and be the caſe made known in what way or manner ſoever, with ever ſo much weakneſs, ſo be it it is made known, 'tis enough, it ſhall be regarded and not deſpiſed.

Ver. 7. And the peace of God which paſſeth all underſtanding, &c.] Not that peace which God calls his people to among themſelves in their effectual vocation; and which he requires of them to cultivate and maintain; and which he encourages in them by the promiſe of his gracious preſence among them; and which indeed he is the author of, and therefore is ſo called, Col. iii. 15. and which may be ſaid to ſurpaſs or exceed all ſpeculative knowledge, and underſtanding; for the one puffs up and profits nothing, but the other edifies; and much leſs that peace which God has in himſelf, who is all peace and love, and which paſſes all underſtanding, human and angelic; but either that peace which is made with God by the blood of Chriſt, and is publiſhed in the Goſpel of peace, which paſſes and ſurprizes all underſtanding of men and angels, that it ſhould be; that the thoughts of God ſhould be concerning it from everlaſting; that a council of peace ſhould be called and held between the eternal Three, and a covenant of peace entered into; that Chriſt ſhould be appointed the peace-maker, and the chaſtizement of it laid on him; that he ſhould make it by the blood of his croſs, and for men, whilſt enmies to God and to himſelf: or elſe that peace of conſcience, which ariſes from a view of peace made by Chriſt; of juſtification by his righteouſneſs, and atonement by his ſacrifice; and which may be called the peace of Chriſt, as the Alexandrian copy reads; both becauſe it is founded upon, and ſprings from him, and is what he is the donor of: and this is what paſſes the underſtanding of every natural man; he knows nothing of this peace, what this tranquillity of mind means; he intermeddles not with this joy; it is unaccountable to him how it ſhould be, that ſuch men ſhould have peace, who have ſo much trouble, are ſo much reproached, afflicted, and perſecuted, and yet have peace in Chriſt, whilſt they have tribulation in the world: which ſhall keep your hearts and minds thro' Chriſt Jeſus, or in Chriſt Jeſus; ſome read theſe words prayer-wiſe, or as a wiſh, let it, or may it keep, ſo the Vulgate Latin; but they are rather a promiſe, encouraging the ſaints to the diſcharge of the above duties; as rejoicing always in the Lord, ſhewing their moderation to all men, avoiding anxious care, and betaking themſelves at all times, on all occaſions, to prayer to God; in which way they may expect peace, and ſuch as will be of that ſervice to them, as here expreſſed; that is, be a means of their final perſeverance; for the peace of God in either ſenſe, is a preſervation of the ſaints: peace made with God, ſecures them in Chriſt from all condemnation by the law, ſin, ſatan, the world, or their own hearts; and peace in their own ſouls on ſo good a foundation as it is, keeps them thro' Chriſt as in a garriſon, from being overſet with the troubles of the world, or the temptations of ſatan; and is a means of preſerving them from being carried away with the errors and hereſies of the wicked, having a witneſs to truth within themſelves; and from every evil way and work, from profaneneſs and immorality; the grace of God teaching them, and the love of Chriſt conſtraining them, which is ſhed abroad in their hearts, to live and act otherwiſe.

Ver. 8. Finally, brethren, whatſoever things are true, &c.] To cloſe all with reſpect to the duties of chriſtianity incumbent on the profeſſors of it, the Apoſtle exhorts to a regard to every thing that is true; that is agreeable to the ſcriptures of truth, to the Goſpel the word of truth, or to the law and light of nature; and whatever was really ſo, even among the very heathens in oppoſition to falſhood, lying, and hypocriſy: whatſoever things are honeſt; in the ſight of men; or grave, or venerable in ſpeech, in action or attire, in oppoſition to levity, frothineſs, or foppery: whatſoever things are juſt; between man and man, or with reſpect both to God and men; giving to God what belongs to him, and to man what is his due; ſtudying to exerciſe a conſcience void of offence to both, in oppoſition to all impiety, injuſtice, violence, and oppreſſion: whatſoever things are pure; or chaſte, in words and deeds, in oppoſition to all filthineſs and fooliſh talking, to obſcene words and actions. The Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions render it, whatſoever things are holy; which are agreeable to the holy nature, law and will of God, and which tend to promote holineſs of heart and life: whatſoever things are lovely; which are amiable in themſelves, and to be found even among mere moral men, as in the young man whom Chriſt as man is ſaid to love, Mark x. 21. and which ſerve to cultivate and increaſe love, friendſhip, and amity among men; and which things alſo are grateful to God and lovely in his ſight, in oppoſition to all contention, ſtrife, wrath, and hatred: whatſover things are of good report; are well ſpoken of, and tend to get and eſtabliſh a good name, which is better than precious ointment, Eccleſ. vii. 1. for tho' a good name, credit, and reputation among men, are to be ſacrificed for the ſake of Chriſt when called for; yet care is to be taken to preſerve them by doing things which may ſecure them, and cauſe profeſſors of religion to be well reported of; and which is beautiful in all, and abſolutely neceſſary in ſome: if there be any virtue; any where, among any perſons whatever, in oppoſition to vice: and if there be any praiſe; that is praiſe-worthy among men, and deſerves commendation, even tho' in an unjuſt ſteward, Luke xviii. 8. it ſhould be regarded. The Vulgate Latin adds, of diſcipline, without any authority from any copy. The Claromontane manuſcript reads, if any praiſe of knowledge: think on theſe things; meditate upon them, revolve them in your minds, ſeriouſly conſider them, and reaſon with yourſelves about them, in order to put them into practice.

Ver. 9. Theſe things which ye have both learned, &c.] Meaning from himſelf, in a doctrinal way: and received; not only into their heads but hearts, had embraced cordially, with great affection, in the love thereof, as well as gave a full aſſent to: and heard; either publickly or privately, from the pulpit, or in converſation; or had heard of him when abſent, or from him when preſent: and ſeen in me; in his life and converſation, which were well known, and were a pattern to them that believe; and therefore he adds, do: practiſe the ſame things which they had learned from him as their duty, and had heard him urge as ſuch, and had ſeen exemplified in himſelf: and the God of peace ſhall be with you; to give that peace which is beyond the conception of a natural man, and the expreſſion of a ſpiritual one, and is the great preſervative thro' Chriſt; and to enable to do and to continue to do the above things, and to keep them from all harm, and every enemy of their ſouls; to favour them with his gracious preſence here, and with endleſs peace hereafter.

Ver. 10. But I rejoiced in the Lord greatly, &c.] The Apoſtle proceeds to the laſt part of this epiſtle, and to take notice of the preſent which theſe Philippians had ſent him, on account of which this his rejoicing was; and which was not ſmall but great, and was not of a carnal but ſpiritual kind; it was a joy in the Holy Ghoſt, which is oppoſed to meats and drinks and earthly enjoyments; it was a joy in the Lord; in our Lord, as the Syriac verſion renders it; it was not ſo much on account of the nature, ſubſtance, quantity or quality of the things ſent him, and the ſuitableneſs of them to his preſent neceſſity; but becauſe this thing was of the Lord, he had put it into their hearts to do it, and had given them not only ability, but a willing mind, and had wrought in them both to will and to do; and becauſe what they did they did for the ſake of Chriſt, and to him as an Apoſtle of his, and in obedience to Chriſt, and with a view to promote his cauſe and intereſt, honour and glory: that now at the laſt your care of me hath flouriſhed again; which ſuppoſes that they had formerly, at the firſt preaching of the Goſpel, ſhewed great reſpect to him, and took great care of him, as appears from ver. 15, 16. but that for ſome time paſt, and it ſeems for a conſiderable while, they had dropped it, or at leaſt had not ſhown it; but that now it revived again, and was ſeen in the preſent they had now ſent him. The alluſion is to trees, which in the ſummer ſeaſon bear much fruit, in autumn caſt their leaves, and in the winter are entirely bare, and in the ſpring of the year revive again, and put forth leaves and fruit: and juſt ſo it is with the ſaints, they are compared to trees, and are called trees of righteouſneſs, and are fruitful ones; but they have their winter ſeaſons, when they are barren and unfruitful, and look as if they were dead; but when it is a ſpring time with them they revive again, as in the exerciſe of their faith and hope in Chriſt, ſo of their love to him, and to one another, and the miniſters of the Goſpel; when the ſouth wind of the Spirit blows, the ſun of righteouſneſs ariſes, and the dews of divine grace fall upon them; and ſuch a revival was now in this church; and this was what the Apoſtle ſo much rejoiced in, not ſo much for the gift beſtowed on him, as for the fruit that appeared in them; ſee ver. 17. but whereas he had ſaid that this care of him flouriſhed again, at laſt; leſt this ſhould be thought as finding fault with them, and bringing a charge againſt them, he corrects himſelf by adding, wherein ye were alſo careful, but ye lacked opportunity; ſignifying that he believed they had entertained the ſame ſentiments of him, had the ſame affection and inward care for him all along; but they had no opportunity of ſhewing it, he being at ſuch a diſtance, and they having no conveniency or proper perſons to ſend to him; or were hindred thro' multiplicity of buſineſs on their hands, that they could not attend to him; and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, but ye were buſied, or taken up and employed in buſineſs: or it was for want of ability; for the words will bear to be rendered, but ye lacked ability; and to this ſenſe does the Syriac verſion render it, אלא לא ספקין הויתון, but ye were not ſufficient; or had not a ſufficiency, were not able to do it, and therefore to be eaſily excuſed.

Ver. 11. Not that I ſpeak in reſpect of want, &c.] Either of want of will in them; of their ſlowneſs and backwardneſs in their care of him, poſtponing him to others, caring for him laſt of all; this gave him no uneaſineſs, he did not take it ill, knowing and owning himſelf to be leſs than the leaſt of all ſaints: or of his own want before this preſent came; and his ſenſe is, that he did not expreſs himſelf with ſo much joy, becauſe of the penury and diſtreſs he was in before the things came to him which they ſent; for he was not in want; tho' he had nothing, he poſſeſſed all things, and was as happy, and in as comfortable a frame, and in as much content then as now: for I have learned in whatſoever ſtate I am, therewith to be content; or to be ſufficient, as the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it; or that that is ſufficient for me which I have, as the Syriac verſion renders it; for the word here uſed ſignifies to be ſelf-ſufficient, or to have a ſufficiency in ones ſelf, which in the ſtrict ſenſe of the phraſe is only true of God, who is El-ſhaddai, God all-ſufficient; but in a lower ſenſe, is true of ſuch who are contented with their preſent ſtate and condition, with ſuch things as they have, be they more or leſs, and think that they have enough, as old Jacob did, Gen. xxxiii. 11. and ſuch perſons have a ſort of an all-ſufficiency in them; they are thankful for every thing they have, be it little or more, and in every ſtate, whether of adverſity or proſperity; and quietly and patiently ſubmit to the will of God, and chearfully take and bear whatever is aſſigned them as their portion; and ſuch an one was the Apoſtle: he was not only content with food and raiment, and ſuch things as he had, but even when he had nothing at all; when he had neither bread to eat nor clothes to wear; when he was in hunger and thirſt, in cold and nakedneſs, as was ſometimes his caſe; and therefore he does not ſay here, that he had learned to be content with ſuch things, as he had, but εν οις ειμι, in what I am: and this he had not by nature, but by grace; it was not natural, but adventitious to him; it was not what he had acquired by his induſtry, but what he had learned; and that not in the ſchool of nature and reaſon, whilſt an unregenerate man; nor at the feet of Gamaliel, whilſt he was training up under him in the law of Moſes, and in the traditions of the elders; but he learned it of God, and was taught it by the revelation of Chriſt, and under the teachings of the Spirit of God, and that in the ſchool of affliction, by a train of experiences, of many ſorrows, afflictions, and diſtreſſes; for this leſſon is learned quite contrary to all the rules and reaſons among men, not by proſperity, but by adverſity: many are the things that may excite and encourage to the exerciſe of this heavenly grace, where it is wrought; as the conſideration of the unalterable will of God, according to which every man's ſtate and condition is ſettled, and therefore what God has made crooked can never be made ſtraight; and of our caſe when we came into the world, and what that will be when we go out of it, naked and bare of this world's things; and of our unworthineſs of the leaſt mercy at the hand of God: add to which, the conſideration of God being our portion and exceeding great reward; of having an intereſt in Chriſt and all things in him; and of the profits and pleaſures of a life of contentment; and of the promiſes which God has made to ſuch; and of that future glory and happineſs which will ſhortly be enjoyed: ſo that a believer may ſay who has the ſmalleſt pittance of earthly enjoyments, this with a covenant God, with an intereſt in Chriſt, with grace here and heaven hereafter, is enough.

Ver. 12. I know both how to be abaſed, &c.] Or humbled; to be treated with indignity and contempt, to be trampled upon by man, to ſuffer hardſhips and diſtreſs, to be in a very mean and low condition, to work with his own hands, and miniſter to his own and the neceſſities of others in that way; yea, to be in hunger and thirſt, in cold and nakedneſs, and have no certain dwelling-place; and he knew how to behave under all this; not to be depreſſed and caſt down, or to fret, repine, and murmur: and I know how to abound; or to excel; to be in the eſteem of men, and to have an affluence of the things of this world, and how to behave in the midſt of plenty; ſo as not to be lifted up, to be proud and haughty, and injurious to fellow-creatures; ſo as not to abuſe the good things of life; and ſo as to uſe them to the honour of God, the intereſt of religion, and the good of fellow-creatures, and fellow-chriſtians: every where; whether among Jews or Gentiles, at Jeruſalem or at Rome, or at whatſoever place; or as the Arabic verſion renders it, every time; always, in every ſeaſon, whether of adverſity or proſperity: and in all things; in all circumſtances of life: I am inſtructed; or initiated, as he was by the Goſpel; and ever ſince he embraced it, was taught this leſſon of contentment, and inured to the exerciſe of it, and was trained up and inſtructed how to behave himſelf in the different changes and viciſſitudes he came into: both to be full, and to be hungry; to know what it was to have plenty and want, to have a full meal and to want one, and be almoſt ſtarved and famiſhed, and how to conduct under ſuch different circumſtances: both to abound and to ſuffer need; which the Apoſtle repeats for confirmation ſake; and the whole of what he here ſays, is an explanation of the leſſon of contentment he had learned; and the knowledge he ſpeaks of was not ſpeculative but experimental, and lay not merely in theory, but in practice; and now leſt he ſhould be thought guilty of arrogance, and to aſcribe too much to himſelf, he in the following verſe attributes all to the power and grace of Chriſt.

Ver. 13. I can do all things, &c.] Which muſt not be underſtood in the greateſt latitude, and without any limitation; for the Apoſtle was not omnipotent, either in himſelf, or by the power of Chriſt; nor could he do all things that Chriſt could do; but it muſt be reſtrained to the ſubject matter treated of: the ſenſe is, that he could be content in every ſtate, and could know how to behave himſelf in adverſity and proſperity, amidſt both poverty and plenty; yea, it may be extended to all the duties incumbent on him both as a chriſtian and as an Apoſtle, as to exerciſe a conſcience void of offence towards God and men; to take the care of all the churches; to labour more abundantly than others in preaching the Goſpel; and to bear all afflictions, reproaches, and perſecutions for the ſake of it; yea, he could willingly and chearfully endure the moſt cruel and torturing death for the ſake of Chriſt: all theſe things he could do, not in his own ſtrength, for no man was more conſcious of his own weakneſs than he was, or knew more of the impotency of human nature; and therefore always directed others to be ſtrong in the Lord, and in the power of his might, and in the grace that is in Chriſt, on which he himſelf always depended, and by which he did what he did; as he adds here, thro' Chriſt which ſtrengtheneth me. The Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions leave out the word Chriſt, and only read him; and ſo the Alexandrian copy and others; but intend Chriſt as thoſe that expreſs it: ſtrength to perform duty and to bear ſufferings is in Chriſt, and which he communicates to his people; he ſtrengthens them with ſtrength in their ſouls, internally as the word here uſed ſignifies; by virtue of which they can do whatever he enjoins them or calls them to, tho' without him they can do nothing.

Ver. 14. Notwithſtanding ye have well done, &c.] This he ſays leſt they ſhould think he ſlighted their kindneſs, and leſt they ſhould be diſcouraged from doing any ſuch thing of this kind another time, either to himſelf or others; for tho' he was ſo well contented with his ſtate, and knew how to be abaſed and to ſuffer need, and could do all things thro' the ſtrength of Chriſt, yet he obſerves they did well in communicating to him; for communicating to poor ſaints or miniſters is a conſiderable branch of well doing; it is a good work when it is done in faith, and from love, and with a view to the glory, honour, and intereſt of Chriſt; it is what is agreeable to the will of God, and is an odour of a ſweet ſmell and acceptable to him: that ye did communicate with my affliction; by which is meant, not any affliction of mind, for he was in as comfortable a frame, had as clear views of his intereſt in God, as his covenant God, and was as contented and ſatisfied as ever he was in his life; nor any diſorder or diſtemper of body; but he was in priſon and penury: theſe Philippians communicated with him in it, both by ſympathizing with him in his tribulation; and by ſending their miniſter to viſit him, and with him a preſent for his relief and ſupport; in doing which they did well.

Ver. 15. Now ye Philippians know alſo, &c.] As well as the Apoſtle did, that they not only communicated now, but alſo had done formerly, and when none elſe beſide them did; wherefore he not only commends them for their preſent kindneſs to him, but for their paſt favours: that in the beginning of the Goſpel; of the preaching of it by the Apoſtle in the parts of Macedonia, particularly at Philippi; as ſoon as ever the Goſpel was preached to them, they ſhewed a grateful and beneficent ſpirit; of which we have an inſtance in Lydia, the firſt perſon we read of converted there, and alſo in the jailor who was the next; ſee Acts xvi. 12, 14, 15, 34, 40. yea, not only while he was with them they communicated to him, but when he was gone from them: when I departed from Macedonia; when he went to Corinth and other places, to preach the Goſpel in other parts and to other people, they ſent the brethren after him with preſents which ſupplied what was lacking to him, and in which other churches were deficient; ſee 2 Cor. xi. 8, 9. the Ethiopic verſion reads, when ye went from Macedonia with me; but is not ſupported by any copy or other verſion: no church communicated with me, as concerning giving and receiving, but ye only; the phraſe giving and receiving, is the ſame with משא ומתן, which is often uſed by the Jews for trading and commerce[e]; and the alluſion is, to the keeping of accounts by men in buſineſs, by debtor and creditor in a book, putting down in one column, what is delivered out, and in the other what is received, whereby accounts are kept clear: the Apoſtle's meaning is, that whereas he and his fellow-miniſters had delivered out ſpiritual things to this church, they had in return communicated their carnal things; ſo that there was a proper account kept, which was not obſerved by other churches, and which was greatly to the commendation of this.

Ver. 16. For even in Theſſalonica, &c.] When the Apoſtle was there; for from Philippi he went to Theſſalonica; ſee Acts xvii. 1. ye ſent once and again unto my neceſſity; for his uſe and ſervice, to ſupport him whilſt he was at that place, and relieve and aſſiſt him in his neceſſities; for the people at Theſſalonica were either not able to communicate, or were not of a beneficent diſpoſition, or the Apoſtle did not care to be chargeable to them; and they ſeem many of them to have been idle and lazy, and therefore he wrought among them with his own hands to ſet them an example; and the Philippians hearing and knowing that this was the caſe, ſent frequently, whilſt he was there, ſome of the brethren with gifts unto him.

Ver. 17. Not becauſe I deſire a gift, &c.] This commendation of them he entred into, not becauſe he deſired another preſent to be made to him, either by them or others; he was not a man of ſuch a diſpoſition, he was not like one of thoſe that could never have enough; he was fully ſatisfied and highly contented with what he had; he was not like the falſe teachers that made merchandize of men; he ſought not theirs but them: but I deſire fruit that may abound to your account; he had planted them, or had been an inſtrument in planting of them, as trees of righteouſneſs; and his great deſire was to ſee fruits of righteouſneſs grow upon them; by which ſometimes are meant acts of beneficence, as in 2 Cor. ix. 10. and that theſe might be abundant, and turn to their profit and advantage, as ſuch fruit does; for God does not forget to recompenſe acts of bounty, and labours of love, but if even a cup of cold water is given to a prophet or miniſter of Chriſt, on account of his being ſo, it ſhall have its reward in the iſſue of things, upon the caſting up of accounts; for the Apoſtle ſtill has reference unto that; his view was that the ballance might be on their ſide, and that much might be received by them; ſo that it was not for himſelf, but for their encouragement and future good he ſaid this; for as for himſelf he adds,

Ver. 18. But I have all things, and abound, &c.] Or I have received all things, as the Syriac verſion renders it; all that they had ſent by Epaphroditus; and for which he now gives a receipt; and by virtue of which he now abounded; and which abundance of his, was not ſo much owing to the largeneſs of their preſents, as to the contentation of his mind; looking upon this gift of theirs, tho' it might be but ſmall in itſelf, a fulneſs to him; for he adds, I am full; as much as he deſired, he wanted no more, he had enough: having received of Epaphroditus the things which were ſent from you; and which he acknowledged, that the character of this good man might ſtand clear, who had been entruſted with this affair: an odour of a ſweet ſmell, a ſacrifice acceptable, well-pleaſing to God; this is ſaid in alluſion to the ſacrifices under the former diſpenſation, in which God ſmelled a ſweet ſavour, Gen. viii. 21. in reference to which, as the ſacrifice of Chriſt is ſaid to be of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour, and as the ſpiritual ſacrifices of the ſaints, as praiſes and prayers are called odours, and are ſaid to be acceptable unto God; ſo acts of beneficence are called ſacrifices, with which he is well pleaſed.

Ver. 19. But my God ſhall ſupply all your need, &c.] Or fulfil all your need: the Jews when they would comfort any, under the loſs of any worldy enjoyment, uſed to ſay, המקום ימלא לך חסרונך, God fulfil, or will fulfil thy need[f]. The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions, read theſe words as a wiſh or prayer, but may my God ſupply or fulfil all your need; I am not able to make you any returns, but I pray that my God would recompenſe it to you, that as you have ſupplied my want, he would ſupply all yours; but we with others, and as the Ethiopic verſion, read, ſhall or will ſupply; as an aſſertion by way of promiſe, tho' he could not, yet his God would; he who was his God, not only as the God of nature and providence, or as the God of the Iſraelites, but as the God of all grace; who had loved him as ſuch, had choſen, adopted, regenerated and ſanctified him; who was his God in Chriſt, and by virtue of the covenant of grace, and which was made known in effectual vocation; whoſe ambaſſador he was, and whom he had faithfully ſerved in the Goſpel of his Son; this God who had been his God, was and would be ſo unto death, in whom he had an intereſt, and becauſe he had an intereſt in him and was thus related to him, he firmly believed, and fully aſſures theſe ſaints, that he would ſupply their wants who had been ſo careful of him: believers tho' they need nothing as conſidered in Chriſt, being compleat and filled full in him, having in him all grace, and all ſpiritual bleſſings, and under believing views of this at times, ſee themſelves compleat and wanting nothing; yet in themſelves, they are poor and needy, and often want freſh diſcoveries of the love of God to them, freſh ſupplies of grace from Chriſt, ſtand in need of more light from him, and to be quickened according to his word; they want freſh ſupplies of ſtrength from him anſwerable to the ſervice and work they are daily called to; and as their trials and afflictions abound, they have need of renewed comfort to ſupport under them; and have alſo need of freſh manifeſtations and applications of pardoning grace to their ſouls, and freſh views of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, as their juſtifying righteouſneſs before God; and in a word, need daily food for their ſouls as for their bodies: now God who is alſo their God, is able and willing to ſupply their wants; and he does ſo, he withholds no good thing from them, nor do they want any good thing needful for them, for he ſupplies all their need; and this they may expect, ſince he is the God of all grace, and a fulneſs of grace is in his Son; and this grace is ſufficient for them, and a ſupply of it is given them by the Spirit: according to his riches; God is rich not only in the perfections of his nature, which are inconceivable and incommunicable; and in the works of his hands, of creation and providence, the whole earth is full of his riches, and according to theſe riches of his goodneſs, he ſupplies the wants of all creatures living; but he is alſo rich in grace and mercy, and it is according to the riches of his grace, he ſupplies the ſpiritual wants of his people, and he does it like himſelf, according to the riches he has; he gives all things richly to enjoy, plenteouſly and abundantly: in glory; in a glorious manner, ſo as to ſhew himſelf glorious, and make his people ſo, to the glory of his rich grace; and with glory, as it may be rendered, with eternal glory; he will not only give grace here, and more of it as is needful, according to the abundance of it in himſelf and in his Son, but glory hereafter: and all by Chriſt Jeſus; and thro' him, who is full of grace and truth; who is the mediator in whom the fulneſs of it lies, and thro' whoſe hands, and by whom it is communicated to the ſaints: or with Chriſt Jeſus; along with him God gives all things freely, all things pertaining to life and godlineſs: or for the ſake of Chriſt Jeſus; not for any worth or merit in men, but for the ſake of Chriſt, in whom they are accepted, and on whoſe account reſpect is had to their perſons, and ſo to their wants.

Ver. 20. Now unto God and our Father, &c.] To God who is our Father in Chriſt, be glory for ever and ever, Amen; for all the grace he gives now, and for all the glory and happineſs expected hereafter; for the ſupply of every want both temporal and ſpiritual; ſeeing every good gift comes from him, and is to be aſcribed to his free grace and favour, and not to any deſerts of men; and particularly he may mean for what they had ſent him, and he had received from them.

Ver. 21. Salute every ſaint in Chriſt Jeſus, &c.] Meaning at Philippi, whether rich or poor, leſſer or greater believers, common ſaints, as well as the officers of the church, biſhops and deacons; who were in Chriſt by electing grace, and as their covenant head, and repreſentative from everlaſting, and which was manifeſted and made known by their converſion and effectual vocation: the brethren which are with me greet you; ſuch as Timothy; ſee chap. ii. 19. and Epaphras, Marcus, Ariſtarchus, Demas, and Lucas, Philemon ver. 23, 24. he makes no mention of Peter any where, when he writes from Rome or to it, which ſhews he was not there then, or a biſhop of that place, as the Papiſts ſay.

AN EXPOSITION, &c.

The Epiſtle of PAUL the Apoſtle to the COLOSSIANS.

THE Coloſſians, to whom this Epiſtle is written, were not the Rhodians, by ſome called Coloſſians, from Coloſſus, the large ſtatue of the ſun, which ſtood in the iſland of Rhodes, and was one of the ſeven wonders of the world; but the inhabitants of Coloſſe, a city of the greater Phrygia, in the leſſer Aſia, near to which ſtood the cities of Laodicea and Hierapolis, mentioned in this Epiſtle. Pliny [a] ſpeaks of it as one of the chief towns in Phrygia, and [b] Herodotus calls it the great city of Phrygia; it is ſaid to have periſhed a very little time after the writing of this Epiſtle, with the above cities, by an earthquake, in the year of Chriſt 66, and in the 10th of Nero [c]; tho' it was afterwards rebuilt; for Theophylact ſays, that in his time it was called Chonæ. When the Goſpel was brought hither, and by whom, is not known, nor who was the founder of the church in this place; for the Apoſtle Paul was not, ſince his face had never been ſeen by them, ch. ii. 1. tho' it is ſaid that Epaphras, the ſame name with Epaphroditus, was fixed by him paſtor of this church; and others ſay Philemon was ſet over it by him. The occaſion of this Epiſtle was this, Epaphras, who had preached the Goſpel to the Coloſſians, and very likely was the firſt that did, came to Rome where the Apoſtle Paul was a priſoner, and gave him an account of them, how they had heard and received the Goſpel, and of their faith in Chriſt, and love to the ſaints; and alſo declared to him, in what danger they were thro' ſome falſe teachers that had got among them, who were for introducing the philoſophy of the Gentiles, the ceremonies of the law of Moſes, and ſome pernicious tenets of the followers of Simon Magus, and the Gnoſticks; upon which the Apoſtle writes this Epiſtle to them, to confirm them in the faith of the Goſpel Epaphras had preached unto them, and which was the ſame he himſelf preached; and to warn them againſt thoſe bad men, and their principles; and to exhort them to a diſcharge of their duty to God, and men, and one another. It was written by the Apoſtle, when in bonds at Rome, as many paſſages in it ſhew, and about the ſame time with thoſe to the Philippians and Epheſians; and the Epiſtle to the latter greatly agrees with this, both as to ſubject and ſtile. Dr. Lightfoot places it in the year of Chriſt 60, in the ſecond of the Apoſtle's impriſonment, and in the ſixth of Nero's reign.

CHAP. I.

THIS chapter contains the inſcription of the Epiſtle; the Apoſtle's uſual ſalutation; his thankſgiving to God on behalf of the Coloſſians for grace received; his prayers, that more might be given them; an enumeration of various bleſſings of grace, which require thankfulneſs, in which the glories and excellencies of Chriſt are particularly ſet forth: and it is concluded with an exhortation to a ſtedfaſt adherence to the Goſpel, taken from the nature, excellency, and uſefulneſs of the miniſtry of it. The inſcription, and the ſalutation, are in ver. 1, 2. and are the ſame with thoſe in the Epiſtle to the Epheſians, only Timothy is joined with the Apoſtle here, and the Coloſſians have the additional character of brethren given them. The thankſgiving is in ver. 3, 4, 5. the object of it is God, the Father of Chriſt; the time when made, when in prayer to him; its ſubject-matter, the faith and love of the ſaints; to which is added, their happineſs ſecured for them in heaven, their hope was converſant with: and whereas the Goſpel was the means by which they came to the hearing and knowledge of it, this is commended from the ſubject of it, the doctrine of truth; from the ſpread of it in the world; and from its efficacy in bringing forth fruit in all, to whom it came in power, and that with conſtancy, ver. 5, 6. and alſo from the teſtimony of Epaphras, a faithful miniſter of Chriſt, and theirs, who was dear to the Apoſtle, and of whom he had the above account of them, ver. 7, 8. And then follow his prayers for them, that they might have an increaſe of ſpiritual knowledge, and that they might put in practice what they knew; and for that purpoſe he intreats they might be bleſſed with ſtrength, patience, and long-ſuffering, ver. 9, 10, 11. And in order to excite thankfulneſs in himſelf and them, he takes notice of various bleſſings of grace; of the Father's grace in giving a meetneſs for eternal glory and happineſs, by delivering from the power of darkneſs, and tranſlating into the kingdom of his Son, ver. 12, 13. and of the Son's grace in obtaining redemption by his blood, and procuring the remiſſion of ſins, ver. 14. which leads the Apoſtle to enlarge upon the excellencies of the author of theſe bleſſings, in his divine perſon, as the image of God, and the firſt cauſe of all created beings, ver. 15. which he proves by an enumeration of them, as created by him, and for his ſake, by his pre-exiſtence to them, and their dependance on him, ver. 16, 17. and in his office-capacity, as mediator, being the head of the church, the governor of it, and the firſt that roſe from the dead; by all which it appears that he has, and ought to have the pre-eminence, ver. 18. And this is ſtill more manifeſt from his having all fulneſs dwelling in him, to ſupply his body the church, of which he is the head, ver. 19. and from the reconciliation of all the members of it to God by him, ver. 20. which bleſſing of grace is amplified partly by the ſubjects of it, who are deſcribed by their former ſtate and condition, aliens and enemies, and by their preſent one, reconciled by the death of Chriſt in his fleſhly body; and partly by the end of it, the preſentation of them holy, blameleſs, and irreproveable in the ſight of God, ver. 21, 22. Wherefore it is a duty incumbent on ſuch to abide by the Goſpel of Chriſt, which brings the good tidings of peace and reconciliation, and is the means of faith and hope; and the rather, ſince they had heard it themſelves, and others alſo, even every creature under heaven; and the Apoſtle was a miniſter of it, ver. 23. and on his miniſtration of it he enlarges, by obſerving his ſufferings for the church on account of the Goſpel, which he endured with pleaſure; and therefore they ſhould, by his example, be encouraged to continue in it, ver. 24. Moreover, he argues the ſame from his commiſſion of God to preach it for their ſakes, ver. 25. and from the nature and ſubject-matter of it, being a hidden myſtery, and containing riches and glory in it; yea, Chriſt himſelf, the foundation of hope of eternal glory, ver. 26, 27. and from the end of preaching it, which was to preſent every man perfect in Chriſt; which end the Apoſtle laboured and ſtrove to obtain thro' the power and energy of divine grace, which wrought in him, and with him, ver. 28, 29.

Ver. 1. Paul an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, &c.] The Apoſtle puts his name to this Epiſtle, by which he was known in the Gentile world, as he uſually does in all his Epiſtles; and ſtiles himſelf an Apoſtle, as he was, having ſeen Chriſt in perſon, and received his commiſſion, doctrine, and qualifications immediately from him, with a power of doing miracles to confirm the truth of his miſſion. This he choſe to make mention of, partly becauſe the falſe teachers every where inſinuated, that he was not an Apoſtle; and partly to give the greater ſanction and authority, and command the greater regard and credit to what he ſhould ſay; as well as to excuſe his freedom in writing to them whom he had never ſeen, ſince he was an Apoſtle of the Gentiles, and ſo to them: he calls himſelf an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt; not of men, he was not ſent out by men, but by Chriſt, who appeared to him, made him a miniſter of his, gave him his Goſpel by revelation, abundantly qualified him for the work, ſent him forth unto the Gentiles, in whoſe name he went as an ambaſſador and meſſenger of his, and whom he preached, and by whom he was greatly ſucceeded, to the converſion of many ſouls, who were ſeals of his Apoſtleſhip in every place: into which office he came by the will of God; not by the will of men, for he derived no authority and power, nor received any doctrine from men; nor by his own will, of his own head, by any uſurpation of his; he did not take this office upon him of himſelf, but was inveſted with it, according to the ſecret will and purpoſe of God, from everlaſting, who had ordained and appointed him to this ſervice, and according to his will of command made known to him in time, when he told him what he ſhould do, and openly ſeparated, and ſent him forth to do the work he had called him to; and which aroſe not from any merits or worthineſs of the Apoſtle, but from the ſovereign good-will and pleaſure, free grace and favour of God, to which the Apoſtle continually aſcribes it in all his Epiſtles: and Timotheus our brother; who joined with the Apoſtle in this Epiſtle, and whom he calls a brother; partly becauſe of the chriſtian relation he ſtood in to him, and them, they being all brethren, children of the ſame Father, partakers of the ſame grace of regeneration, belonging to the ſame family, and ſo ſhould own and love one another as brethren; and partly and chiefly becauſe of his being a brother, companion, fellow-ſoldier, and a fellow-labourer in the Goſpel. He mentions him, either becauſe he was known unto them, or that he might be ſo; and to ſhew the agreement there was between them in the doctrine of Chriſt, which might have the greater weight with them to abide in it.

Ver. 2. To the ſaints and faithful brethren in Chriſt, &c.] This is the inſcription of the Epiſtle, in which the perſons wrote unto are deſcribed as ſaints, or holy men; not by birth, for all are unholy and unclean by nature; nor by baptiſm, for that neither takes away ſin, nor gives grace; nor merely externally, by an outward reformation; but by ſeparation, being by an act of eternal election ſet apart for God, for holineſs, and happineſs; and by imputation, Chriſt being made ſanctification to them; and by the ſanctifying grace of the Spirit of God in regeneration, being called with an holy calling, and having principles of grace and holineſs wrought in them, and they formed as new men in righteouſneſs and true holineſs: and as brethren; being born of God, having him for their Father, and being of his houſhold, and a part of the family in heaven and earth named of Chriſt, and heirs together of the grace of life, and of the heavenly glory: and as faithful ones; true and ſincere believers in Chriſt, conſtant and perſevering in the faith of him; faithful to the Goſpel, and their profeſſion of it, and to Chriſt, whoſe name they bore, and to one another, to whom they ſtood in the relation of brethren: and all this in Chriſt; and by, and thro' him; they were ſaints in him; they were choſen in him, and ſanctified in him their head, and received all their holineſs from him; they were brethren in him the firſt-born of them; his God being their God, and his Father their Father; and had their faith and faithfulneſs from him, as well as it was exerciſed towards, and on him: and they are further deſcribed by the place of their abode, which are at Coloſſe; a city of Phrygia: grace be unto you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. This is the ſalutation, and which ſtands in this form in moſt of Paul's Epiſtles; ſee the note on Rom. i. 7. The Syriac verſion puts peace before grace, and leaves out the laſt clauſe, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; as does alſo the Ethiopic verſion.

Ver. 3. We give thanks to God, &c.] Meaning himſelf and Timothy. This is the beginning of the Epiſtle, which is introduced with a thankſgiving to God; to whom praiſe and thankfulneſs are always due as a creator and preſerver, as the author of all good things, as the Father of mercies, temporal and ſpiritual, and as the covenant God and Father of his people thro' Chriſt: wherefore it follows, and the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; the ſenſe of which either is, that God the Father, who is the object of praiſe and thanſgiving, is both the God of Chriſt, and the Father of Chriſt, the God of Chriſt, as Chriſt is man, and the Father of Chriſt, as Chriſt is God; or the latter is exegetical of the former, and may be rendered thus, God, even the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: and very properly are thanks given to him under this character, becauſe it is as he is the Father of Chriſt, that he bleſſes his people with all ſpiritual bleſſings; and becauſe he is their God, as well as his God; and their Father, as well as his Father, though in a different ſenſe, his by nature, theirs by adoption. Moreover, as all their bleſſings come from God, as the Father of Chriſt, and thro' Chriſt, and for his ſake, ſo it is very proper that thanks ſhould be returned unto him under that character; and thro' Chriſt, by whom alone ſuch ſacrifices of praiſe are acceptable to God: 'tis added, praying always for you; which, as it is expreſſive of the conſtant diſcharge of the duty of prayer, and the continual remembrance of theſe ſaints in it, and ſhows the affection the Apoſtle had for them; ſo it points out the time when, and the way and manner in which Paul and Timothy gave thanks to God on account of them; 'twas when they were at the throne of grace, and in their frequent prayers to God; thankfulneſs for mercies received, both by ourſelves and others, being a branch of the duty of prayer.

Ver. 4. Since we heard of your faith in Chriſt Jeſus, &c.] This expreſſes the matter of their thankfulneſs, or what it was they gave thanks to God for, their faith in Chriſt; by which is not only meant their hearty aſſent to the whole doctrine of faith, concerning the perſon, offices, and grace of Chriſt, their ſoundneſs and ſtedfaſtneſs in it, and their ſincere and conſtant profeſſion of it; but the grace of faith in them, the operation of the Spirit of God in their ſouls, which had not Moſes, nor any mere man, but Chriſt for its object; by which they looked unto him as a ſaviour, went unto him as ſuch, ventured on him, committed themſelves unto him, leaned and relied upon him; that grace which comes from him, has him for its author and finiſher, and returns unto him, and lives on him. This Paul and Timothy had heard of by their miniſter Epaphras; and it ſhews that they made no ſecret of it, did not keep it to themſelves, but declared, confeſſed, and publiſhed it to others, as is the duty of all believers to do; and thanks being given for it to God, makes it a clear point that it was not of themſelves, but was the gift of God, otherwiſe there would have been no need of thankfulneſs for it; as alſo, that it is a very eminent grace, and of great uſe and ſervice to ſuch who are poſſeſſed of it. And of the love which ye have to all the ſaints; this is another thing for which thanks are given to God. The object of this grace are ſaints; all men indeed are to be loved, and even our very enemies; and good is to be done to all, but eſpecially to holy and good men, to the houſhold of faith; and theſe are all to be loved and reſpected; nor is any reſpect or difference of perſons to be made on account of country, or natural relation, as Jews or Gentiles, or of outward ſtate and condition, as rich or poor, bond or free, or of greater or leſſer gifts and grace, weak or ſtrong believers, or of different ſentiments in the leſſer matters of religion. It denotes both the grace of love itſelf, which is a fruit of the Spirit implanted in regeneration, and is an evidence of the new birth, and always is, where true faith in Chriſt is, for faith works by it; and alſo the effects of it, which lies not in bare words, in expreſſions of ſpiritual affection and friendſhip, but in deeds, by ſerving one another in love, by relieving in neceſſity, ſympathizing in diſtreſs, praying with, and for one another, and the like; all which theſe ſaints were famous for.

Ver. 5. For the hope which is laid up for you in heaven, &c.] Theſe words may be conſidered either in connexion with the foregoing, and expreſs the reaſon or motive which encouraged theſe ſaints to believe in Chriſt, and to go on believing in him, and hold faſt the profeſſion of their faith in him, and to love the ſaints, and ſhew it upon all occaſions, and in every caſe; becauſe of the rich treaſure of glory and happineſs in reſerve for them in heaven, which they were hoping and waiting for; this encouraged their faith in Chriſt, and enlarged their love and beneficence to the ſaints: or elſe with the thankſgiving of the Apoſtle, and ſo contains freſh matter of it, that as thanks were given for faith and love, ſo for hope; by which is meant, not the grace of hope, for that is not in heaven, tho' it enters within the vail, and is converſant with heavenly things, but is in the heart; and tho' it ſuppoſes it, and which theſe perſons had; they were not without it; they had a good hope thro' grace of eternal glory, for faith, hope, and love always go together: nor Chriſt the foundation of hope; there are many things in him, which are a ground of hope of happineſs, as his ſufferings, and death, and redemption thereby; his reſurrection from the dead, his interceſſions and preparations; the promiſe of life in him, and the thing itſelf being in his gift; his righteouſneſs and grace, which give a title to it, and meetneſs for it; and he is alſo in heaven, but then he can't be ſaid to be laid up there: but the thing hoped for, everlaſting happineſs, is intended; ſee Tit. ii. 13. Gal. v. 5. 2 Tim. iv. 8. which is ſo called, becauſe it is the object of hope; is not yet poſſeſſed; is future; is not ſeen; is difficult, and yet poſſible to be enjoyed: this is ſaid to be laid up; which denotes the preciouſneſs and valuableneſs of it, it is a treaſure, an inheritance, a kingdom, and riches of glory; and the ſecrecy and hiddeneſs of it, it conſiſts of things inviſible to the bodily eye, and which are out of the reach of carnal ſenſe and reaſon, of which faith only has ſome ſmall glimpſe; and alſo the ſafety of it, 'tis hid in Chriſt, 'tis reſerved in heaven, and can't be come at, and ſpoiled by men or devils; and likewiſe the free grace and goodneſs of God in laying up and providing things of ſuch a nature for his children and friends: the place where it is, in heaven, where moth and ruſt corrupt not, and thieves cannot break thro' and ſteal; and ſo is ſafe, and muſt be of an heavenly nature, as it is for heavenly perſons: for you; the ſaints and faithful brethren in Chriſt, for thoſe who were choſen in Chriſt, for whom it was prepared from the foundation of the world; for this is not laid up for any, for every one, but for the choſen of God, and precious; whom God has diſtinguiſhed by his grace, Chriſt has redeemed by his blood, and the Spirit regenerates and ſanctifies, and who have faith, hope and love given unto them; and this was not only laid up for them, but they knew of it, they were made acquainted with it: whereof ye heard before; before the writing of this Epiſtle, under the miniſtry of their faithful teacher Epaphras: in the word of the truth of the Goſpel; or in the true word of the Goſpel; which comes from the God of truth, is endited by the Spirit of truth, is concerning Chriſt the truth, and which contains nothing but truth, and lies in the ſcriptures of truth: or in the word of truth, even the Goſpel; which explains what word of truth is meant. The law is the word of truth; and many of the words of men, of the philoſophers, were words of truth; but it was not in either of them, they had heard of eternal life laid up in heaven; of which there were hopes to be entertained by ſinful creatures, enjoying it thro' Chriſt: this is what only the Goſpel brings an account of; life and immortality are only brought to light by the Goſpel; which not only ſpeaks of it, but lays that before men, which give them ground and encouragement to hope for it.

Ver. 6. Which is come unto you, &c.] That is, the Goſpel, which came to them from God, from heaven, from Chriſt, out of Jeruſalem, from whence the word of the Lord was to come, by the miniſters of the Goſpel, who being ſent, came to Coloſſe, and there preached it; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders the words, הי דאתכרזת, which is preached unto you. And a wonderful inſtance of the free grace of God this was; they did not ſeek, enquire for, and go after the Goſpel, but it came to them; and ſo Chriſt was found of them by it, who ſought him not, and made manifeſt in his perſon, grace, and righteouſneſs to them that aſked not after him: for this Goſpel came not to them in word only, but with the power of the holy Spirit: it was come, εις υμας, into you, as the phraſe may be rendered, into their very hearts, and wrought effectually there, enlightening, convincing, comforting, and inſtructing them; where it had a place, and remained; for the words may be read, as they are by the Arabic verſion, which is preſent with you. The Goſpel is always in one place or another, and will be to the end of the world; but it is not always in the ſame place; but as yet it was not removed from Coloſſe; it was ſtill with them in the external miniſtry of it, and it remained in their hearts in the powerful and comfortable experience of it: as it is in all the world; as it was come into, and preached to all the world, and was made uſeful, and continued in all the world at that time. Chriſt gave his diſciples a commiſſion to go into all the world, and preach the Goſpel to every creature; it was no more to be reſtrained to a particular nation, but was made general and common to all the nations of the world, and accordingly they preached it to all; and by this time had delivered the joyful meſſage to the greater part of the world, which is ſometimes meant by all the world, and the whole world; or it had been now preached in all the known and habitable parts of the world by one Apoſtle and another, ſome being ſent into one part, and ſome into another; ſo that the grace of God appeared to all men, and the doctrine of it had been preached to every creature under the heaven, according to Chriſt's commiſſion; the Goſpel of the kingdom was to be preached in all the world, for a witneſs to all nations, before the end of the Jewiſh ſtate came, or before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, which was not many years after the writing of this Epiſtle. Now this ſhows, that it was the ſame Goſpel which had been preached at Coloſſe by their faithful miniſter there, as had been diſpenſed in other, and in all parts of the world by the Apoſtles; which is ſaid in the commendation of the Goſpel, it being one, uniform, conſiſtent, and all of a-piece in every place, and as preached by every faithful miniſter, and might ſerve greatly to confirm the Coloſſians in their faith of it: and bringeth forth fruit; by which is meant, either the converſion of ſinners, the fruit of the Goſpel-miniſtry, when attended with a divine bleſſing and power; or the graces of the Spirit, as faith, hope, love, repentance, humility, ſelf-denial, &c. with all the effects thereof, in new obedience, and a godly converſation, which come from Chriſt, the green fir-tree, and are produced by the Spirit, thro' the preaching of the Goſpel. The Vulgate Latin adds, and encreaſeth; the Syriac verſion has the ſame; and it is ſo read in ſome Greek copies, as in the Alexandrian copy, two of Stephens's, and in the Complutenſian edition; and may intend the ſpread of the Goſpel among others, beſides thoſe who firſt received it, and the growing fruitfulneſs of the profeſſors of it under its influence: as it doth alſo in you, ſince the day ye heard of it; as ſoon as ever it came among them, they hearkened to it, they were inclined to hear it externally, and a divine power going along with it, giving them hearing ears, and underſtanding hearts, they heard it, ſo as to know it, love it, and believe it; and from that time it brought forth fruit, and increaſed in them, and they continued in the faith and profeſſion of it; ſo that as the Goſpel is commended both from the large ſpread and efficacy of it, as well as its uniformity in every place, theſe Coloſſians alſo are commended for their hearing of it, both externally and internally, and for their perſeverance in it: and which is further illuſtrated in the following clauſe, and know the grace of God in truth; by the grace of God may be meant, the love and favour of God, in the miſſion and gift of his Son, to be the ſaviour and redeemer of loſt ſinners, diſplayed in the Goſpel, of which they had a comfortable experience, it being ſhed abroad in their hearts by the Spirit; or the bleſſings of grace revealed in the Goſpel, as free juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, full pardon of ſin, according to the riches of grace, and adoption of children, ariſing out of the love, and free favour of God, of which they had had a real application made to them thro' the Goſpel, by the Spirit of God; or rather the doctrine of grace itſelf, ſo called, becauſe it is a declaration of the free grace of God in the ſalvation of ſinners, and the means of implanting grace in the heart. This they knew not merely in a notional and ſpeculative manner, but experimentally; for the Goſpel was not only come to them, but into them; they had a ſpiritual knowledge of it, and affection for it; they felt the power of it in their hearts, and taſted and reliſhed the ſweetneſs of it; and owned and acknowledged it, as the word here uſed may be rendered; for as with the heart they believed it, ſo with the mouth they made publick profeſſion of it: and this they did in truth; they came by the knowledge of the love of God, and the bleſſings of grace, and the doctrines of it, by the Goſpel, the word of truth; in and thro' that they became acquainted with theſe things; and having known and embraced the doctrine of the Goſpel of the grace of God, in the truth of it, without any mixture of error, as it had been purely, and without adulteration, truly and faithfully preached by their miniſter, they profeſſed it truly, heartily, and ſincerely, and without hypocriſy; which is another part of their commendation, and involves in it the praiſe of their miniſter alſo, which is enlarged upon in the following verſes.

Ver. 7. As ye alſo learned of Epaphras, &c.] To know the grace of God, believe the truth of the Goſpel, and to own and profeſs it ſincerely. Our dear fellow-ſervant; a ſervant of Chriſt he was, and a fellow-ſervant of the Apoſtles, jointly engaged with them in preaching the Goſpel; which character, as it greatly commends Epaphras, and ſhews him to be a very conſiderable preacher of the word, ſo it expreſſes the great humility and condeſcenſion of the Apoſtle, in putting him upon a level with himſelf, tho' he was not in that high office of the Apoſtleſhip he was. And dear this precious ſervant of Chriſt was to him, and his fellow-miniſters, on account of the grace and gifts beſtowed on him, becauſe of his uſefulneſs in the miniſtry, and his faithfulneſs and integrity in the diſcharge of it; and whoſe company and converſation in the priſon greatly endeared him to them, for he was a fellow-priſoner, as well as a fellow-ſervant, Philemon ver. 23. It follows, who is for you a faithful miniſter of Chriſt; one whom Chriſt had made a miniſter, and not man; who was qualified, and ſent forth, and made ſucceſsful by him in his ſervice; and who preached none but Chriſt, and him crucified, in the buſineſs of ſalvation: and he was a faithful one; one that ſought not his own glory, but the glory of him that ſent him; nor to pleaſe men, but his maſter; who concealed no part of his meſſage, but freely and fully declared the whole; he was faithful to Chriſt, who put him into the miniſtry, and to the ſouls of men, to whom he miniſtred: and therefore 'tis ſaid, he was ſuch an one for you; for them, not for himſelf; for their ſpiritual good and advantage; he ſought not theirs, but them; he had a great zeal for them, dearly loved them, and ſpent his time and ſtrength, and made uſe of his gifts and talents while among them, for their uſe and benefit.

Ver. 8. Who alſo declared unto us your love in the Spirit.] Not only their love to God, and Chriſt, and to all the ſaints, which is before mentioned, but their love to the Apoſtle; tho' they had only heard of him, and of his great capacity for, and faithfulneſs and uſefulneſs in preaching of the Goſpel, which had greatly endeared him to them. This, he ſays, was in the Spirit; it was ſpiritual love, to diſtinguiſh it from a carnal and worldly one; they loved him for the ſpiritual grace that was in him, the ſpiritual gifts beſtowed on him, the ſpiritual ſervice he was engaged in, and the ſpitual uſefulneſs he was of: or they loved him in, and with their ſpirits, with all their hearts, ſincerely, and without diſſimulation; and tho' they had never ſeen him in the fleſh, yet being, as it were, preſent with him in ſpirit, their affections were knit unto him: or this their love was in the holy Spirit, as the Ethiopic verſion reads it; it was a fruit of the Spirit of God, which he had implanted in their hearts in regeneration, as is alſo love to God, and likewiſe to Chriſt.

Ver. 9. For this cauſe we alſo, &c.] Not merely for their love to the Apoſtle, and the reſt that were with him; which ſenſe is too much contracted, and carries ſome appearance of meanneſs and ſelfiſhneſs; but becauſe of their faith in Chriſt, their love to all the ſaints, and the good hope they had of eternal happineſs; and becauſe they had heard the Goſpel, and truly knew it, and ſincerely profeſſed it: therefore, ſince the day we heard it, do not ceaſe to pray for you, and to deſire; which ſhows, that the Apoſtles prayed without ceaſing; not that they were every moment praying, without intermiſſion, but that they were frequent and conſtant every day at the throne of grace; and as often as they were there, they were mindful of theſe Coloſſians, even ever ſince they heard of their reception of the Goſpel, of their profeſſion of it, and of the fruit it brought forth in them; and in their petitions prayed and deſired, earneſtly and importunately intreated God on their behalf: that ye might be filled with the knowledge of his will; the will of God, as the Syriac verſion reads it; by which is meant, not the ſecret will of God, according to the counſel of which he does all things in nature, providence, and grace, but his revealed will; and that either as it is ſignified in the law, which declares the good, and perfect, and acceptable will of God, relating to what he would have done, or avoided by his creatures; or rather, as it is exhibited in the Goſpel, which contains the will of God reſpecting the ſalvation of his choſen ones; as that it is his will that Chriſt ſhould obtain eternal redemption for them, to do which he voluntarily ſubſtituted himſelf in their room, came into this world, and has accompliſhed it; and that all thoſe that are redeemed by Chriſt ſhould be regenerated by the Spirit; and that whoever ſees the Son, and believes in him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life; as alſo, that all thoſe whom he has choſen in Chriſt, and given to him, and he has redeemed by his blood, and who are ſanctified by his Spirit, none of them ſhould be loſt, but that they ſhould be all ſaved with an everlaſting ſalvation. Now the Apoſtle does not pray that they might have a knowledge of this will of God, for ſome knowledge of it they had already; they had heard of the hope laid up in heaven, in the truth of the word of the Goſpel; they had not only had the external revelation, and had heard the Goſpel outwardly preached, but they had known truly the grace of God; and therefore what he aſks for is, that they might be filled with the knowledge of it; which ſuppoſes that they had knowledge, but it was not full and compleat; it was imperfect, as is the knowledge of the beſt of ſaints in this life; and that they might have a larger meaſure of it, and ſuch a fulneſs of it as they were capable of in the preſent ſtate, and not ſuch an one as the ſaints will have in heaven, when they ſhall know even as they are known. He adds, in all wiſdom and ſpiritual underſtanding; his meaning is, that they might be led into all the wiſdom of God, which is ſo largely diſplayed in the revelation of his will concerning the ſalvation of his people, which is made in the Goſpel; which is the manifold wiſdom of God, wherein he has abounded in all wiſdom and prudence; and contains ſuch a ſcheme of things, ſo wiſely contrived and formed, that angels deſire to look into it; and that they might have a ſpiritual underſtanding of the myſteries of grace, without which they cannot be diſcerned to ſpiritual advantage, nor indeed without the Spirit of wiſdom and revelation in the knowledge of them: and the Ethiopic verſion renders it, by the prudence of the Holy Ghoſt; who ſearches the deep things of God, and reveals them to the ſaints, and improves and increaſes their ſpiritual and experimental knowledge of them, which is what is here intended.

Ver. 10. That ye might walk worthy of the Lord, &c.] The Vulgate Latin verſion reads, of God; to which the Ethiopic verſion agrees; but rather the Lord Jeſus Chriſt ſeems to be deſigned: and to walk worthy of him, is to walk by faith in him; to walk after his Spirit, and according to his word, and in his ordinances; to have the converſation as becomes his Goſpel, and worthy of that vocation wherewith the ſaints are called by grace to the obtaining of his kingdom and glory. The Apoſtle prays, that their knowledge might iſſue in practice; for knowledge, without practice, is of no avail: he firſt aſks for knowledge, and then practice; for how ſhould men act according to the will of God, or Chriſt, unleſs they know it? and when they know it, they ſhould not reſt in their knowledge, but put it in practice: unto all pleaſing. The Syriac reads it, that ye may pleaſe God in all good works: an unregenerate man can't pleaſe God in any thing; without faith in Chriſt it is impoſſible to pleaſe him by any thing man can do; Chriſt only could, and did always the things that pleaſed his Father; there are many things done by believers which are diſpleaſing to God; nor is there any thing they can do that is pleaſing to God but thro' Chriſt, in whom their perſons and ſervices are accepted; good works being done in faith, and from a principle of love, and with a view to the glory of God, are acceptable unto him thro' Chriſt; and therefore are to be carefully maintained, and ſtudiouſly performed by all thoſe that have a ſpiritual underſtanding of the will of God, and believe in Chriſt their Lord and redeemer: being fruitful in every good work; ſaints are trees of righteouſneſs, the planting of the Lord; good works are the fruit, which, under the influence of divine grace, they bring forth; and this is not of one ſort only, as trees uſually do, but of every kind; being engrafted into Chriſt the true vine, and deriving life, ſap, and nouriſhment from him, they are filled with the fruits of righteouſneſs by him, which they bring forth and bear, to the glory of his heavenly Father; and being ſuch, they are pleaſant plants to him, as fruit-bearing trees are to the owner of them: wherefore, in order to the ſaints walking in their lives and converſations unto all pleaſing, or pleaſing in all things, the Apoſtle prays they might be fruitful in good works, and that in every one, in every kind of good works: and increaſing in the knowledge of God; not barely of his nature and perfections, as they are diſplayed in the works of creation; but of his mind, and will, and the myſteries of his grace, as they are revealed in the Goſpel; of the knowledge of him in Chriſt, as the God of all grace, and as a covenant God and Father. The Apoſtle had before prayed for an increaſe of the knowledge of the will of God, previous to his requeſt, for the putting of it in practice; and now ſuggeſts, that an increaſe of the knowledge of God himſelf may be expected in a practical uſe of means, an attendance on the ordinances of Chriſt, and a diligent performance of good works: from the whole of theſe petitions, it may be obſerved by the Apoſtle's aſking for them, that all our knowledge, and the increaſe of it, and all our fruitfulneſs in good works, are all from the Lord; and therefore we have no reaſon to boaſt of our knowledge, nor depend upon our works, but frankly to own, that notwithſtanding all we know, and do, we are but unprofitable ſervants.

Ver. 11. Strengthened with all might, &c.] This is ſtill a continuation of the Apoſtle's prayer for theſe believers; for having prayed for an increaſe of ſpiritual knowledge, and that this might be put into practice, he proceeds to pray for ſtrength for them, that they might be enabled to practiſe what they had knowledge of; to walk worthily, to pleaſe God in all things, to bring forth fruit with patience, to perſevere in knowledge, practice, fruitfulneſs, and in an increaſe thereof. It implies, that believers are weak in themſelves, and inſufficient to do or bear any thing of themſelves, but ſtand in need of ſtrength from above, even of all might; of all kind of ſpiritual might and ſtrength, proportionate to the various kinds of ſervices, temptations, and trials they are called unto, and exerciſed with: they have need of every kind, degree, and ſupply of ſtrength to enable them to reſiſt the temptations of ſatan, to ſtand againſt them, and bear up under them; to oppoſe the corruptions of their own nature, that great company which comes upon them, wars againſt them, threatens to carry them captive, and deſtroy them, and againſt which they have no power of their own; to bear the croſs, which, without the preſence and grace of Chriſt, is very heavy, and all afflictions and adverſities of every ſort, which are grievous to the fleſh, and at which it recoils; to perform the various duties of religion, and the whole of the work of their generation; which tho' they have a will unto, yet often know not how to perform, they want renewed ſtrength in their ſouls; and alſo to perſevere in faith and holineſs, and hold on and out to the end: and which ſtrength they can't expect to have from themſelves, or from any creature, but according to his glorious power; the glorious power of God. Power belongs to God, is a perfection of his nature, and has been, and is gloriouſly diſplayed in many things; as in the creation of the heavens and the earth; in the upholding of all things in their being; in the redemption and ſalvation of ſinners; in their faith and converſion; in ſupporting the ſaints under various trials and exerciſes; and in the ſafe keeping them thro' faith unto ſalvation: from this glorious power of God ſaints may hope to be ſupplied with all might, or a ſufficient ſupply of ſtrength for every ſervice, and for every difficulty; as alſo from the grace that is in Chriſt, who has ſtrength as well as righteouſneſs for his people, who is the glorious power and arm of the Lord, without whom they can neither do, nor bear any thing, but thro' him ſtrengthening them, they can do, and bear all things; as likewiſe from the Spirit of the Lord, who is the finger of God, by whom Chriſt wrought his miracles; and is that glorious power from on high, with which the Apoſtles being endued, did the wonderous things they did; and 'tis by the ſame ſpirit that believers are ſtrengthened with might in the inner man: unto all patience; to bring forth fruit with patience; to run with patience the race ſet before them; to bear patiently all afflictions and tribulations; to wait patiently for the things promiſed by God, and for the coming and appearance of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and the heavenly glory or hope laid up for them in heaven: and long-ſuffering; to be ſlow to anger, and not eaſily provoked to wrath; to be ready to forgive injuries; and to bear long, and with patience, all reproaches and perſecutions for the ſake of Chriſt, and his Goſpel; all which require daily freſh ſupplies of grace and ſtrength, eſpecially to endure all with joyfulneſs, as well as with patience and long-ſuffering, with a chearful ſpirit, or with joy in the Holy Ghoſt; to eſteem reproach for Chriſt's ſake, above the riches and honours of this world; to rejoice when counted worthy to ſuffer ſhame for his name. This requires ſtrength above that of nature, and a renewed ſupply of that of grace. This laſt clauſe, with joyfulneſs, the Syriac verſion connects with the following verſe, reading it, with joy do ye give thanks, &c.

Ver. 12. Giving thanks unto the Father, &c.] To God the Father, as the Vulgate Latin and the Syriac verſions read the clauſe; and the Complutenſian edition, and ſome copies, God and the Father; who is both the Father of Chriſt by nature, and of all his people by adoption. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, as an exhortation or advice, give ye thanks to the Father; and ſo the Syriac verſion: but the words rather ſeem to be ſpoken in the firſt, than in the ſecond perſon, and are to be conſidered in connexion with ver. 9. So when the Apoſtle had made an end of his petitions, he enters upon thankſgiving to God: which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the ſaints in light; by the inheritance, or lot, is meant not the common lot of the children of God to ſuffer perſecution for the ſake of Chriſt, and thro' much tribulation to enter into the kingdom, which they are by God the Father counted and made worthy of, with the reſt of ſaints called out of darkneſs into light; nor their preſent ſtate and condition, having a power to become the children of God, and to be fellow-citizens with the ſaints, to enjoy communion with them, under the the Goſpel-diſpenſation, called light, in oppoſition to Jewiſh and Gentile darkneſs, to be brought into which ſtate is an high favour of God; but the heavenly glory, ſo called, in alluſion to the land of Canaan, which was divided by lot to the children of Iſrael, according to the will and purpoſe of God; and becauſe it is not acquired by the works of men, but is a pure free-grace gift of God, and which he, as the Father of his people, has bequeathed unto them; and which they enjoy thro' the death of the teſtator Chriſt; and of which the Spirit is the earneſt; and becauſe this glory is peculiar to ſuch as are the children of God by adopting grace. It is no other then that inheritance which is incorruptible and undefiled, and which fades not away, reſerved in the heavens; and deſigns that ſubſtance, or thoſe ſolid and ſubſtantial things they ſhall poſſeſs hereafter; that kingdom, ſalvation and glory they are heirs of; and includes all things they ſhall inherit, and even God himſelf, who is their portion, their inheritance, their exceeding great reward, and of whom they are ſaid to be heirs. This is the inheritance of the ſaints, and of none elſe; who are ſanctified, or ſet apart by God the Father in eternal election; who are ſanctified by the blood of Chriſt, or whoſe ſins are expiated by his atoning ſacrifice; who are ſanctified in Chriſt, or to whom he is made ſanctification; and who are ſanctified by the Spirit of Chriſt, or have the work of ſanctification begun upon their ſouls by him; in conſequence of which they live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly in the world. And this inheritance of theirs is in light; unleſs this clauſe ſhould be read in connexion with the word ſaints, and be deſcriptive of them; they being called and brought out of darkneſs into light, and made light in the Lord, light being infuſed into them; in which light they ſee light, ſin to be exceeding ſinful, and Chriſt to be exceeding precious: or this phraſe ſhould be thought to deſign the means by which the Father makes meet to partake of the inheritance; namely, in or by the light of the Goſpel, ſhewing the way of ſalvation by Chriſt, and by the light of grace put into their hearts, and by following Chriſt the light of the world, which is the way to the light of life: tho' it rather ſeems to point out the ſituation and nature of the heavenly inheritance; it is where God dwells, in light inacceſſible to mortal creatures, and who is light itſelf; and where Chriſt is, who is the light of the new Jeruſalem; and where is the light of endleſs joy, and uninterrupted happineſs; and where the ſaints are bleſſed with the clear, full, and beatific viſion of God in Chriſt, and of Chriſt as he is, ſeeing him, not thro' a glaſs darkly, but face to face. This may be ſaid in reference to a notion of the Jews, that the light which God created on the firſt day, is that goodneſs which he has laid up for them that fear him, and is what he has treaſured up for the righteous in the world to come [d]. Now the ſaints meetneſs for this is not of themſelves; by nature they are very unmeet for it, being deſerving of the wrath of God, and not of an inheritance; and are impure and unholy, and ſo not fit to partake of the inheritance of ſaints, or holy ones, and much leſs to dwell and converſe with an holy God; and being darkneſs itſelf, can't bear ſuch light, or have communion with it: but God the Father makes them meet, which includes all the acts of his grace towards them, upon them, and in them; ſuch as his chuſing them in Chriſt, and their inheritance for them; in preparing that for them, and them for that; bleſſing them with all grace, and all ſpiritual bleſſings in Chriſt; putting them among the children by an act of adoption, of his own ſovereign will, and free grace, and thereby giving them a goodly heritage, and a title to it; juſtifying them by the righteouſneſs of his Son, and ſo making them heirs according to the hope of eternal life, and forgiving all their treſpaſſes for Chriſt's ſake; cleanſing them from all in his blood, ſo that being the undefiled in the way, without ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing, they are fit for the undefiled inheritance; regenerating them by his Spirit, and implanting principles of light and life, grace and holineſs in them, without which no man ſhall ſee the Lord, or enter into the kingdom of heaven. One copy, as Beza obſerves, reads it, which hath called us to be partakers; &c. and ſo does the Ethiopic verſion. And all ſuch as the Father has thus called, and made meet, ſhall certainly be partakers of the inheritance; they partake of it already in Chriſt their head, and in faith and hope, having the Spirit as an earneſt and pledge of it, and will wholly and perfectly enjoy it hereafter: for though, like Canaan's land, 'tis diſpoſed of by lot, by the will, counſel, and free grace of God, yet will not be divided into parts as that was; there is but one undivided inheritance, but one part and portion, which all the ſaints ſhall jointly and equally partake of, having all and each the ſame right and title, claim and meetneſs. For which they have abundant reaſon to give thanks to the Father, when they conſider what they were, beggars on the dunghill, and now advanced to ſit among princes, and to inherit the throne of glory; were bankrupts, over head and ears in debt, owed ten thouſand talents, and had nothing to pay, and now all is frankly forgiven; and beſides, a title to, and meetneſs for, the heavenly inheritance, are freely beſtowed on them; and particularly when they conder they are no more worthy of this favour than others that have no ſhare in it, and alſo how great the inheritance is.

Ver. 13. Who hath delivered us from the power of darkneſs, &c.] That is, from the power of ſatan; ſee Acts xxvi. 18. who, tho' once an angel of light, is now darkneſs itſelf, and is reſerved in chains of darkneſs; he is a ruler of the darkneſs of this world; his kingdom is a kingdom of darkneſs; and he blinds the minds of them that believe not, keeps them in darkneſs, and increaſes the natural darkneſs of their minds; he delights in works of darkneſs, and tempts men to them; and his everlaſting ſtate and portion will be blackneſs of darkneſs: his power over men, in a ſtate of unregeneracy, which he uſurps, and is ſuffered to exerciſe, is very great; he works effectually in them, and leads them captive at his will; and nothing leſs than the power of God, who is ſtronger than the ſtrong man armed, can deliver out of his hands; and which is at leaſt one part of the mercy for which thanks are here given; ſee the note on Luke xxii. 53. with the Jews, one of the names of ſatan is, חשך, darkneſs [e]. Moreover, the darkneſs of ſin, ignorance, and unbelief, with which God's elect, whilſt in a ſtate of nature, are ſurrounded, and, as it were, ſhut up and impriſoned, ſo that they have not the leaſt ſpark of true ſpiritual light and knowledge, may be alſo meant; under the power of which they are to ſuch a degree, that they know nothing of God in Chriſt, of the way of ſalvation by him, or of the work of the Spirit on their ſouls, or of the doctrines of the Goſpel in an experimental manner; and ſo they continue, till by an almighty power, they are turned from darkneſs to light; when, by powerful grace, they are plucked as brands out of the burning, and delivered from wrath to come, and from that utter darkneſs of miſery and deſtruction, their ways of ſin and darkneſs led and expoſed them to. This deliverance is wrought out for them in effectual vocation, when they are internally called, and powerfully brought out of this darkneſs, by introducing light into them, revealing Chriſt in them, cauſing the prince of darkneſs to flee from them, and the ſcales of darkneſs and blindneſs to fall from their eyes; and which is both an inſtance of the wonderful grace of God, and of his almighty power, and in which lies in part the ſaints meetneſs for the inheritance; for theſe words are, in ſome ſort, explanative of the former; for ſo long as a perſon is under the power of darkneſs, he cannot be meet for an inheritance which is in light: it follows, as another branch of this mercy, for which thanks are given, and hath tranſlated us into the kingdom of his dear Son; not into the kingdom of glory; for tho' the ſaints are heirs of it, and rejoice in hope of it, they have not yet an entrance into it; which they will have abundantly when Chriſt ſhall introduce them into it, not only as his Father's, but as his own kingdom and glory: but the kingdom of grace is here meant, or that ſtate of grace, light, and life, which ſuch are brought into, when reſcued out of ſatan's hands, and recovered out of their former ſtate of ignorance and infidelity; when they are by the drawings of the Father, by his powerful and efficacious grace, brought to Chriſt, and in the day of his power on their ſouls, are made willing to ſubmit to his righteouſneſs, and to embrace him as the alone ſaviour and redeemer, and be ſubject to him as king of ſaints, obſerving his commands, keeping his ordinances, and walking in his ſtatutes and judgments with other ſaints, in a Goſpel church-ſtate; which is Chriſt's kingdom here on earth, where he reigns as king over God's holy hill of Zion, being ſet there by his Father, from whom he has received this kingdom, and will deliver it to him, when it is compleat and perfect. Now thoſe whom Jehovah the Father ſnatches out of ſatan's hands, and breaks in upon their ſouls with divine light and knowledge, he brings into ſuch a ſtate, and into this kingdom of Chriſt, who is called his dear ſon; or the ſon of his love; or his ſon of love; who being his ſon by nature, of the ſame nature with him, and equal to him, always was, is, and will be the object of his love, complacency, and delight; as he cannot be otherwiſe, ſince he is the brightneſs of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon; and even as this Son of his is in an office-capacity, as the mediator between God and man, he is his elect, in whom his ſoul delights; and he is always well pleaſed with all the choſen ones in him, who are the ſons of God thro' him, and always beloved in him. This clauſe is added, partly to diſtinguiſh the kingdom of Chriſt, into which the ſaints are brought in this life, from the kingdom of the Father, or the ultimate glory they ſhall poſſeſs hereafter; and partly to expreſs the ſecurity of the ſaints, and their continuance in the love of God, being in the kingdom, and under the care and government of the Son of his love; and alſo to make way for what the Apoſtle has further to diſcourſe concerning the perſon, office, and grace of Chriſt, in the following verſes.

[d] Zohar in Gen. fol. 6. 3. & in Exod. fol. 32. 3. & in Lev. xiv. 4. & xxxvii. 4. Bereſhit Rabba, fol. 3. 2.

Ver. 14. In whom we have redemption, &c.] Which is an excellent and wonderful bleſſing of grace ſaints have in and by Chriſt; and lies in a deliverance from ſin, all ſin, original and actual, under which they are held captive, in a ſtate of nature, and by which they are made ſubject to the puniſhment of death; but thro' the ſacrifice of Chriſt it is taken, and put away, finiſhed, and made an end of; and they are freed from the damning power of it, or any obligation to puniſhniſhment for it; and in conſequence of this, are delivered from the enſlaving, governing power of it by his grace and Spirit, and will hereafter be entirely rid of the very being of it: it conſiſts alſo of a deliverance from the law, the curſe, and bondage of it, under which they are held on account of ſin, the tranſgreſſion of it; but being delivered from ſin, they are alſo from the law, its accuſations, charges, menaces, curſes, and condemnation; as likewiſe out of the hands of ſatan, by whom they are led captive; for thro' the ranſom-price paid by Chriſt, they are ranſomed out of the hands of him that was ſtronger than they, the prey is taken from the mighty, and the lawful captive delivered by him that has led captivity captive: in ſhort, this redemption is a deliverance out of the hands of all their enemies, and from all evils and miſery, the effects of ſin, from death, and hell, and wrath to come. The author of it is Chriſt, the Son of God, the Son of his love, his dear Son: he was called to this work in the council of peace, in which the affair of redemption was conſulted; and he agreed to undertake it in the covenant of grace, of which this is a principal article; and being in his conſtitution, as mediator, every way fit and proper for it: as man, the right of redemption belonged to him, being the near kinſman of his people, and as God, he was mighty and able to perform it; as man, he had ſomething to offer, and as God, could make that ſacrifice valuable and effectual to all ſaving purpoſes; as man, he had compaſſion on human nature, and as God, was concerned for things pertaining to his honour and glory. And thus being every way qualified, he was ſent, and came on this errand, and has obtained a redemption, which is precious, plenteous, compleat and eternal: it is now with him, and in him; and he is made this, and every thing elſe to his people, that they want. The ſubjects of this bleſſing are, not angels, but men; and not all men, but ſome that are redeemed from among men, out of every kindred, tongue, people, and nation; who are called by the name of Jacob, the people of Chriſt, a peculiar people, and the church of God; and evidentially are ſuch, who have faith in Chriſt, love to the ſaints, and good hope of eternal life; who know the grace of God in truth, are made meet to be partakers of the eternal inheritance, being delivered from the power of darkneſs, and tranſlated into the kingdom of Chriſt, and are deſigned by the we in this text: the means by which this bleſſing is procured, is through his blood. This phraſe is left out indeed in the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions, and in the Complutenſian edition, and in ſome copies; but rightly ſtands here, as it does in Eph. i. 7. where there is another clauſe added, which is here omitted, at the end of the verſe, according to the riches of his grace. This is the blood of Chriſt, his own blood, and not the blood of bulls and goats, and the ſame with that of the perſons he redeems, but untainted with ſin; the blood of Chriſt, as of a lamb without ſpot and blemiſh, of original or actual ſin, otherwiſe it would not have been a ſufficient redemption-price for his people; nor even then, were it not as it was the blood of the Son of God, of one that was God as well as man, whereby it came to have a proper value and efficacy in it to obtain this bleſſing: Chriſt's ſhedding his blood freely on this account, is a proof of his great love to his redeemed ones; the efficacy that was in it to anſwer this purpoſe, ſhews the dignity and greatneſs of his perſon; and it not being to be effected without it, demonſtrates the ſtrictneſs of divine juſtice, and that the redemption of men is brought about in a way entirely conſiſtent with the righteouſneſs and holineſs of God. A particular branch of this bleſſing follows, and which ſerves, in ſome ſenſe, to illuſtrate and explain it, even the forgiveneſs of ſins; of all ſin, original and actual; of heart, lip, and life, ſecret and open, paſt, preſent, and to come; which lies in a non-imputation of ſin, a remembrance of it no more, a removing of it entirely out of the way, a covering and blotting it out of ſight, ſo as to be no more viſible and legible: this is in Chriſt, where all ſpiritual bleſſings are; nor is it to be had or expected from an abſolute God, but from God in Chriſt, and thro' him, thro' his propitiatory ſacrifice; for as redemption, ſo forgiveneſs of ſin is thro' his blood, which was ſhed for it; ſo that it proceeds upon the foot of ſatisfaction made to the juſtice of God by a price paid, and is an act of juſtice as well as grace, and belongs to the ſame perſons as redemption does; hence thoſe that are redeemed are repreſented as without fault before the throne; and indeed, the reaſon why their iniquities are blotted out, and will be remembred no more againſt them is, becauſe they are redeemed.

[e] Shirhaſhirim Rabba, fol. 25. 4.

Ver. 15. Who is the image of the inviſible God, &c.] Not of deity, tho' the fulneſs of it dwells in him; nor of himſelf, tho' he is the true God, and eternal life; nor of the Spirit, who alſo is God, and the Spirit of the Son; but the Father, called God, not to the excluſion of the Son or Spirit, who are with him the one God: and he is inviſible; not to the Son who lay in his boſom, and had perfect and infinite knowledge of him; nor, in ſome ſenſe, to angels, who always behold his face, but to men: no man hath ſeen him corporally with the eyes of his body, tho' intellectually with the eyes of the underſtanding, when enlightned; not in his eſſence and nature, which is infinite and incomprehenſible, but in his works of creation, providence, and grace; nor immediately, but mediately, in and thro' Chriſt, in whom he gives the light of the knowledge of the glory of his perſon and perfections; and this not perfectly now, but in the other ſtate, when the ſaints ſhall ſee him face to face. But chiefly the Father is ſaid to be inviſible, becauſe he did not appear to Old Teſtament ſaints; as his voice was never heard, ſo his ſhape was never ſeen; he never aſſumed any viſible form; but whenever any voice was heard, or ſhape ſeen, it was the ſecond perſon that appeared, the Son of God, who is here ſaid to be his image, and that, as he is the Son of God; in which ſenſe he is the natural, eſſential, and eternal image of his Father, an increated one, perfect and compleat, and in which he takes infinite complacency and delight: this deſigns more than a ſhadow and repreſentation, or than bare ſimilitude and likeneſs; it includes ſameneſs of nature and perfections; aſcertains the perſonality of the Son, his diſtinction from the Father, whoſe image he is; and yet implies no inferiority, as the following verſes clearly ſhew, ſince all that the Father hath are his. Philo the Jew [f] often ſpeaks of the Λογος, or Word of God, as the image of God. Alſo, this may be underſtood of him as mediator, in whom, as ſuch, is a moſt glorious diſplay of the love, grace, and mercy of God, of his holineſs and righteouſneſs, of his truth and faithfulneſs, and of his power and wiſdom: the firſt-born of every creature; not the firſt of the creation, or the firſt creature God made; for all things in the next verſe are ſaid to be created by him, and therefore he himſelf can never be a creature; nor is he the firſt in the new creation, for the Apoſtle in the context is ſpeaking of the old creation, and not the new: but the ſenſe either is, that he was begotten of the Father in a manner unconceivable and inexpreſſible by men, before any creatures were in being; or that he is the firſt parent, or bringer forth of every creature into being, as the word will bear to be rendered, if inſtead of πρωτότοκος, we read πρωτοτόκος; which is no more than changing the place of the accent, and may be very eaſily ventured upon, as is done by an ancient writer [g], who obſerves, that the word is uſed in this ſenſe by Homer, and is the ſame as πρωτογόνος, firſt parent, and πρωτοκτίστης, firſt creator; and the rather this may be done, ſeeing the accents were all added ſince the Apoſtles days, and eſpecially ſeeing it makes his reaſoning, in the following verſes, appear with much more beauty, ſtrength, and force: he is the firſt parent of every creature, for by him were all things created, &c. or it may be underſtood of Chriſt, as the king, Lord, and governour of all creatures; being God's firſt-born, he is heir of all things, the right of government belongs to him; he is higher than the kings of the earth, or the angels in heaven, the higheſt rank of creatures, being the creator and upholder of all, as the following words ſhew; ſo the Jews make the word, firſt-born, to be ſynonymous with the word king, and explain it by גדול ושר, a great one, and a prince [h]; ſee Pſ. lxxxix. 27. and Heb. i. 2, 6.

Ver. 16. For by him were all things created, &c.] This is a reaſon proving Chriſt to be before all creatures, to be the common parent of them, and to have the government over them, ſince he is the creator of them. The creation of all things, by him, is not to be underſtood of the new creation, for whenever that is ſpoken of, the word new is generally uſed, or what is equivalent to it, or ſome clauſe or phraſe added, which determines the ſenſe, and is not the caſe here: beſides, all things that are in heaven are ſaid to be created here; which, to ſay nothing of the ſun, moon, and ſtars, which are not capable ſubjects of the new creation, to reſtrain them to angels, cannot be true of them; for as for thoſe who were once in heaven, but kept not their firſt eſtate, and quitted their habitation, theſe find no place there any more; they never were, nor will be renewed and reſtored by Chriſt; and as for the good angels, ſince they never ſinned, they ſtand in no need of renovation. Moreover, all things that are on earth are alſo ſaid to be created by him, and are, but not a-new: for to confine theſe only to men, all men are not renewed in the ſpirit of their minds; all have not faith, nor a good hope thro' grace, nor love to God and Chriſt, the greater part of the world lies in open wickedneſs; and all that profeſs religion are not new creatures, theſe are a choſen generation, and a peculiar people: wherefore theſe words muſt be underſtood, not metaphorically, but literally; in which ſenſe all things are created by Chriſt, not by him as an inſtrument, but as the efficient cauſe; for the prepoſition by does not always ſignify the former, but ſometimes the latter; ſee 1 Cor. i. 9. Gal. i. 1. nor to the excluſion of the Father and Spirit, who with the Son, were jointly concerned in the creating of all things out of nothing: and theſe, all things, can only refer to the things that are made; increated things can never be ſaid to be created; this is a contradiction in terms; the Father is not created by him, nor he himſelf as the Son of God, nor the Spirit; but every thing that is made is created by him: hence it follows, that he himſelf is no creature, otherwiſe he muſt create himſelf, which alſo is a contradiction, ſince every creature is made by him; and conſequently he muſt be God, for he that made and built all things is God. Theſe are divided as to the ſubject of them, or place where they are, into things that are in heaven, and that are in earth. The things that are in heaven, are the things that are in the airy and ſtarry heavens, and in the heaven of heavens. The things in the airy heavens, the fowls thereof, were on the fifth day created by him; and the things in the ſtarry heaven, the ſun, moon, and ſtars, were on the fourth day ordained by him; and the inhabitants of the third heaven, the angels were made by him, Heb. i. 7. and as the Jewiſh writers [i] ſay, on the ſecond day of the creation, tho' ſome ſay on the fifth. The earth comprehends the whole terraqueous globe, conſiſting of land and ſea; and the things in it, are all that are in the ſeas, the fiſhes and other things in it; and all that are in the bowels of the earth, as well as on the ſurface of it, all metals and minerals, all plants, herbs, and trees, every beaſt of the foreſt, the cattle on a thouſand hills, the fowls on the mountains, and the wild beaſts of the field, and all human creatures. Again, theſe all things are, as to the quality of them, diſtributed into viſible and inviſible, both in heaven and in earth: the viſible things in heaven are the fowls that fly in the airy heaven, the ſun, and moon, and ſtars in the ſtarry heaven, and the bodies of thoſe ſaints that have been either tranſlated, or raiſed, in the third heaven; the viſible things in the earth are all creatures, animate and inanimate, rational and irrational, all bodies, all corporeal and material beings: the inviſible things in earth are not only thoſe that are in the innermoſt parts of it, but the ſpirits or ſouls of men; and thoſe in heaven are not the inviſible God, Father, Son, and Spirit, but the angels, who are incorporeal and immaterial ſpirits, and ſo inviſible; and which, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers, are all made by him; by theſe ſome underſtand civil magiſtrates among men, and the various degrees and orders of them. By thrones they think kings, or monarchs, are meant, who ſit on thrones; and by dominions, little petty kings, or lords, dukes, and earls; and by principalities, governours of provinces and cities; and by powers, inferior magiſtrates; and indeed, political governours are ſometimes called dominion, dignities, principalities, and powers; and there are different orders of them, the king as ſupreme, and governours under him; ſee Jud. viii. Tit. iii. 1. 1 Pet. ii. 13, 14. But ſince theſe ſeem rather to be ſaid of the inviſible things in heaven, and to be an explanation of them, angels may rather be thought to be intended; and are ſo called, not as denoting different orders and degrees among them, which ſome have raſhly ventured to deſcribe, but becauſe of the uſe that God makes of them in the government of the world, and the executions of the various affairs of providence relating to particular perſons and kingdoms; tho' theſe ſeveral names are not ſo much ſuch as the Apoſtle choſe to call them by, as what they were called by others; the three latter are indeed elſewhere uſed by himſelf, Eph. i. 21. and iii. 10. Col. ii. 10. but not the former, thrones, which yet are uſed by Jewiſh writers, and given to angels. Thus in a book of theirs, which they eſteem very ancient, and aſcribe to the patriarch Abraham, it is ſaid [k], "there is no angel "in which the name Jehovah is not found, which "is every where, as the ſoul is in every member; "wherefore men ought to allow Jehovah to reign "in all the members, ובכל כרסין, and in all the "thrones, and in all the angels, and in every "member of men." And elſewhere, ſpeaking of the garments of God, "by theſe, ſay they [l], "ברא קבה״ כרסיין, the holy bleſſed God created the "thrones, and the angels, and the living creatures, "and the ſeraphim, and the heavens, and the earth, "and all that he created." And the thrones in Dan. vii. 9. are interpreted [m], of "the ſuperior princes, "למלאכים רוחניים, the ſpiritual angels, who ſit "firſt in the kingdom; and they are called in the "words of the Rabbins, the throne of glory; for "ſo is the way of kings, that their princes ſit before them, every one on his throne, according "to their dignity." Now the Apoſtle's ſenſe is, that the angels, the inviſible inhabitants of the upper world, are all created by Chriſt, let them be called by what names they will, that the Jews, or the falſe teachers, or any ſort of hereticks of thoſe times thought fit to give them, whether they called them thrones or dominions, &c. And ſo the Arabic verſion, rather interpreting than tranſlating the words, renders them thus, whether you ſay thrones, or whether you mention dominions, or whether you underſtand princes, or whether you ſay powers; ſpeak of them under what title or appellation you pleaſe, they are all the creatures of the Son of God. The Apoſtle ſeems to have in view, and to oppoſe ſome notions of ſome hereticks of his time, the followers of Simon Magus, who held, that the angels were created by his Helena; or, as others, by what they call Ennea, and that theſe angels created the world, and are to be worſhipped; but he here affirms, that all things are created by Chriſt, even all the angels; and therefore he and not they are to be worſhipped, a notion he afterwards takes notice of in the following chapter: and as all things are affirmed to be created by him, which demonſtrates the dignity and deity of his perſon, ſo likewiſe for him; that is for his pleaſure, that he may take delight and complacency in them, and in his own perfections diſplayed by them; and for his ſervice and uſe, as the angels, to worſhip him and miniſter to him and for others, he ſends them to: elect men are made to ſerve and glorify him with their bodies and ſpirits, which are his; and even the non elect are made to ſubſerve his mediatorial kingdom and intereſt; yea, the whole world is built and kept in being purely on his account, until he has finiſhed the great affair of the ſalvation of his people, in the application of it to each of them, as he has compleated the impetration of it; and then he will diſſolve the heavens, and burn up the earth and all the works that are therein: all are made for his glory, and that end is, and will be anſwered by them in one way or another.

Ver. 17. And he is before all things, &c.] Not only in dignity, being preferable to angels and men in his nature, names, offices, and works, and worthy of more honour than all creatures; but he is before them in exiſtence, as he muſt needs be, ſince they are all made by him; he was not only before John the Baptiſt, his fore-runner, before Abraham who ſaw his day and was glad, before the firſt man was made, but before the angels were in being, or the heavens and the earth, or any creature were formed; and therefore muſt be God, who is from everlaſting to everlaſting: and by him all things conſiſt; he upholds all things by the word of his power; the heavens have their ſtability and continuance from him; the pillars of the earth are bore up by him, otherwiſe that and the inhabitants of it would be diſſolved; the angels in heaven are confirmed in their eſtate by him, and have their ſtanding and ſecurity in him; the elect of God are in his hands, and are his peculiar care and charge, and therefore ſhall never periſh; yea, all mankind live and move, and have their being in him; the whole frame of nature would burſt aſunder and break in pieces, was it not held together by him; every created being has its ſupport from him, and its conſiſtence in him; and all the affairs of providence relating to all creatures, are governed, directed, and managed by him, in conjunction with the Father and the bleſſed Spirit.

Ver. 18. And he is the head of the body, the church, &c.] By the church is meant, not any particular congregated church, as the church at Coloſſe, or Corinth, or any other; but the whole election of grace, the general aſſembly and church of the firſt-born, whoſe names are written in heaven in the lamb's book of life; the church which Chriſt has given himſelf for, and has purchaſed with his blood, and builds on himſelf the rock, and will at laſt preſent to himſelf a glorious church without ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing; this is compared to an human body, and therefore called the body; which is but one, conſiſting of many members in union with each other, ſet in their proper places, in juſt ſymmetry and proportion to each other, and ſubſervient to one another, and are neither more nor fewer; ſee 1 Cor. xii. 12, 13, 14, &c. and of this body, the church, Chriſt is the head; he was the repreſentative head of this body of elect men from all eternity, and in time; he is a political head of them, or in ſuch ſenſe an head unto them, as a king is to his ſubjects, he reigns in them by his Spirit and grace, and rules them by wholeſome laws of his own enacting, and which he inſcribes on their hearts, and he protects and defends them by his power; he is an œconomical head, or in ſuch ſenſe an head of them, as the huſband is the head of the wife, and parents and maſters are the heads of their families, he ſtanding in all theſe relations to them; and he is to them what a natural head is to an human body; of all which ſee the note on 1 Cor. xi. 3. The Meſſiah is called one head, in Hoſ. i. 11. which Jarchi explains by David their king, and Kimchi on the place ſays, this is the king Meſſiah: who is the beginning; which either denotes the eternity of Chriſt, who was not only in the beginning, and was ſet up from the beginning, from everlaſting, but is alſo the beginning, and the end; and who is indeed without beginning of days, or end of life: or his dominion; he is the principality as the word may be rendered; he is the principality of principalities, the head of all principality and power, the angels; he is the prince of the kings of the earth; he is king of ſaints; the kingdom of nature and providence is his, and the government of his people in a ſpecial manner is on his ſhoulders: or this may deſign his being the firſt cauſe of all things; he is the beginning of the creation of God; the efficient cauſe of all created beings; he is the beginning of the church, of which he is the head; as Eve was from Adam, ſo is the church from Chriſt; it is a body of his preparing, and a temple of his building, and where he ſits as a prieſt on his throne, and has the goverment of it: the ſecond number, wiſdom, in the cabaliſtic tree of the Jews, is called the beginning[n], as is the logos or word by Philo the Jew[o]: the firſt-born from the dead; the firſt that roſe from the dead by his own power, and to an immortal life; for tho' others were raiſed before him and by him, yet not to a ſtate of immortality; the path of life, to an immortal life was firſt ſhewn to him as man; and who alſo is the firſt-fruits of them that ſleep, and ſo the pledge and earneſt of the future reſurrection of the ſaints; and is both the efficient and exemplary cauſe of it; the reſurrection of the dead will be by him as God, and according to his own as man: that in all things he might have the preeminence; or might be the firſt and chief over all perſons, angels and men; having a ſuperior nature, name, and place, than the former, and being the firſt-born among many brethren deſigned by the latter: and in all things he is the firſt, and has the precedence and primacy; in ſonſhip, no one is a ſon in the ſenſe he is; in election, he was choſen firſt, and his people in him; in the covenant, he is the ſurety, mediator, and meſſenger of it, he is that itſelf; in his human nature, he is fairer than the children of men; in redemption, he was alone, and wrought it out himſelf; in life, he exceeded all others in purity, in doctrine and miracles; and in dying he conquered death, and roſe firſt from it; in ſhort, he died, revived, and roſe again, that he might be lord both of dead and living; and he ought to have the pre-eminence and firſt place in the affections of our hearts, in the contemplations of our minds, in the deſires of our ſouls, and in the higheſt praiſes of our lips.

Ver. 19. For it pleaſed the Father, &c.] The phraſe the Father, is not in the original text, but is rightly ſupplied; ſince he is expreſsly mentioned in the context, as he who makes the ſaints meet to be partakers of the heavenly glory; who delivers them from the power and dominion of ſin, and tranſlates them into the kingdom of his dear Son; and who by Chriſt reconciles all things to himſelf, ver. 12, 13, 20. and whoſe ſovereign will and pleaſure it is, that in him ſhould all fulneſs dwell; by which is meant, not the fulneſs of the deity, tho' it is read by ſome, the fulneſs of the Godhead; which ſeems to be tranſcribed from chap. ii. 9. but tho' all the perfections of God are in Chriſt, as eternity, omnipotence, omniſcience, omnipreſence, immutability, independence and neceſſary exiſtence, and every other, or he would not be equal with God; nor could all the fulneſs of the Godhead be ſaid to dwell in him, ſhould any one be wanting; yet this is a fulneſs poſſeſſed by him, that does not ſpring from, nor depend upon the Father's good will and pleaſure; but what he naturally and neceſſarily enjoys by a participation of the ſame undivided nature and eſſence with the Father and Spirit: nor is the relative fulneſs of Chriſt intended, which is his church, ſo called, Epheſ. i. 23. and will be ſo when all the elect are gathered in, and filled with all the gifts and graces of his Spirit, and are arrived to the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt; for tho' every believer dwells in Chriſt, and Chriſt in him, yet the church is not ſaid to dwell in Chriſt, but Chriſt in the church; moreover, as yet ſhe is not his fulneſs, at leaſt in the ſenſe ſhe will be, and much leſs can ſhe be ſaid to be all fulneſs: nor is this to be underſtood of Chriſt's fulneſs of fitneſs and abilities, as God-man and mediator, to perform his work and office as ſuch; tho' this may be taken into the ſenſe of the text as a part, yet is not the whole; but rather chiefly that diſpenſatory, communicative fulneſs, which is of the Father's good will and pleaſure, put into the hands of Chriſt to be diſtributed to others, is here deſigned. There is a fulneſs of nature in Chriſt; the light of nature is from him, and communicated by him to mankind; the bleſſings of nature are the bleſſings of his left hand, which he diſtributes to his people as he thinks fit; and all things in nature are ſubſervient to his mediatorial kingdom and glory. There is a fulneſs of grace in him, out of which ſaints receive, and grace for grace, or a large abundance of it; the fulneſs of the Spirit of grace, and of all the graces and gifts of the Spirit is in him; and of all the bleſſings of grace, as a juſtifying righteouſneſs, pardon of ſin, adoption, ſanctification, even of all that grace that is implanted in regeneration, that is neceſſary to carry on and finiſh the good work upon the ſoul; there is a fulneſs of all light and life, of wiſdom and ſtrength, of peace, joy, and comfort, and of all the promiſes of grace, both with reſpect to this world and that which is to come; and there is alſo a fulneſs of glory in him, not only the grace, but the glory of the ſaints, is laid up and hid with him, and is ſafe and ſecure in him: this is ſaid to dwell in Chriſt, which implies its being in him; it is not barely in intention, deſign, and purpoſe, but it is really and actually in him, nor is it in any other; and hence it comes to be communicated to the ſaints: and it alſo denotes the continuance of it with him; it is an abiding fulneſs, and yields a continual daily ſupply to the ſaints, and will endure to the end of time, and be as ſufficient for the laſt as the firſt believer; it is like the ſubject of it, the ſame yeſterday, to day, and for ever: and it alſo intends the ſafety of it; the ſaints life both of grace and glory is hid with Chriſt, and is ſecure, it is out of the reach of men and devils, and can never be loſt, or they deprived of it; and all this is owing not to any merits of men, to their faith and holineſs, or good works, which are all the fruits of this fulneſs, but to the good will of God; it pleaſed the Father to place it here for them; it was owing to his good will to his Son, and therefore he puts all things into his hands; and to his elect in him, for having loved them with an everlaſting love, he takes everlaſting care of them, and makes everlaſting proviſion for them; it was his pleaſure from all eternity to take ſuch a ſtep as this, well knowing it was not proper to put it into the hands of Adam, nor into the hands of angels, nor into their own at once; he ſaw none ſo fit for it as his ſon, and therefore it pleaſed him to commit it unto him; and it is his good will and ſovereign pleaſure, that all grace ſhould come thro' Chriſt, all communion with him here, and all enjoyment of him hereafter; which greatly enhances and ſets forth the glory of Chriſt as mediator, one conſiderable branch of which is, that he is full of grace and truth; this qualifies him to be the head of the church, and gives a reaſon, as theſe words be, why he has, and ought to have the pre-eminence in all things.

[o] Philo de Conf. ling. p. 341.

Ver. 20. And by him to reconcile all things to himſelf, &c.] This depends upon the preceding verſe, and is to be connected with that phraſe in it, it pleaſed the Father; and the ſenſe is, that it was the good will and pleaſure of God from all eternity, as to lay up all fulneſs in Chriſt for his choſen people, ſo to reconcile them to himſelf by him; and which is another reaſon why Chriſt is, and ought to be conſidered as the head of the church, whoſe reconciliation he has procured, and why he ought to have the chief place in all things, and among all perſons. Reconciliation ſuppoſes a former ſtate of amity and friendſhip, and in ſuch an one, man was originally with God; and a breach of that friendſhip, which was made and iſſued in real enmity in the heart of man; and alſo a reſtoration to friendſhip again: and it is to be underſtood not of a reconciliation of God to men, which the ſcriptures no where ſpeak of, but of men to God; and is a reconciliation of them, not to the love of God, which his elect always ſhared in, but to the juſtice of God, offended by the tranſgreſſion of a righteous law; and is, indeed, properly a reconciliation, atonement, and ſatisfaction for their ſins, and ſo of their perſons, and whereby all the perfections of God are reconciled to and agree with each other in the ſalvation of ſuch ſinners: now this takes its firſt riſe from God the Father; it is owing to his ſovereign good will and pleaſure; he took the firſt ſtep towards it; he knew what a ſtate of enmity and rebellion his people would fall into; his thoughts ran upon their peace and reconciliation from everlaſting; he called a council of peace about it, and in it drew the model of it; he entered into a covenant of peace with his Son, and in conſequence of it, ſent him in the fulneſs of time to effect it, laying on him the chaſtiſement of their peace; it was his pleaſure that this affair of reconciliation ſhould be brought about, not by the means of angels, in whom he could put no ſuch truſt and confidence, and who tho' they rejoice at peace being made on earth, could never have effected it; nor that it ſhould be done by men, who have no knowledge of the way of it, no inclination to it, nor power to make it; but by him, his Son Jeſus Chriſt, whom he appointed and called to this work, and ſent to do it; and who is therefore in prophecy before this reconciliation was actually made, ſtiled Shiloh, the prince of peace, and the peace: and this when made, was made to himſelf; meaning either to Chriſt, in whom all the elect were gathered together, as in one head, and were reconciled in one body, whether Jews or Gentiles thro' him; or rather to God the Father, to whom they were enemies, yea, enmity itſelf, and to whom the ſatisfaction and atonement were made; it being his law that was broken, and his juſtice that was injured, and to whom they are always in ſcripture ſaid to be reconciled; tho' not to the excluſion of the Son and Spirit, the one God with the Father: moreover, the ſenſe of this phraſe may be, that the reconciliation of the elect made by Chriſt, in a way of full ſatisfaction to law and juſtice, is to the glory of God, the glory of all his perfections; as of his grace and mercy, wiſdom, power, and faithfulneſs, ſo of his righteouſneſs and holineſs: the means by which Chriſt has effected it are, his ſacrifice, ſufferings, and death, expreſſed in the following clauſe; having made peace thro' the blood of his croſs. This was what man could not do, what Chriſt was appointed and ſent to do, and what he was every way qualified for as God and man; as man he had blood to ſhed, and could make reconciliation for ſin in the nature which had ſinned, and as God, could draw nigh to his Father, and treat with him about terms of peace, and perform them; and ſo a fit day's man and mediator, between God and man: this peace he has made by his blood, that is by the ſhedding of it, by his death as a ſacrifice, which he underwent on the croſs; partly to denote the ſhame, and chiefly to ſignify the curſe he endured in the room of his people: all which ſhews the malignant nature of ſin, the ſtrictneſs of juſtice, and that peace is made in a way of full ſatisfaction, is upon honourable terms, will be laſting, as it is joyful, being attended with a train of bleſſings: by him, I ſay, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven; by which are intended not the whole univerſe and fabric of the world, all creatures and things, animate and inanimate, rational and irrational, which have been curſed for the ſin of man, and have proved unfriendly to him, but in conſequence of redemption and reconciliation by Chriſt, will, as ſome think, in the time of the reſtitution of all things, be reſtored to their former ſtate, and to their friendly uſe to mankind; nor elect men and elect angels, and their reconciliation together, for the Apoſtle is not ſpeaking of the reconciling of theſe things together, but of the reconciling of them to God, which tho' it is true of elect men, is not of elect angels, who never fell, and tho' they have confirming grace, yet not reconciling grace from Chriſt, which they never needed; nor Jews and Gentiles, for tho' it is true that God was in Chriſt reconciling the world of the Gentiles, as well as of the Jews to himſelf, and the choſen of God among both are actually reconciled to God by the death of Chriſt, yet the one are never called things in heaven, or the other things on earth, in diſtinction from, and oppoſition to each other; but rather all the elect of God are here meant, the family of God in heaven and in earth; all the ſaints that were then in heaven, when actual reconciliation was made by the blood of Chriſt, and who went thither upon the foot of peace, reconciliation, and redemption, to be made by his ſacrifice and death; and all the choſen ones that were or ſhould be on the face of the earth, until the end of time; all theſe were reconciled to God by Chriſt: and then the Apoſtle proceeds particularly to mention the Coloſſians, as alſo being inſtances of this grace, good will, and pleaſure of God by Chriſt.

Ver. 21. And you that were ſometime alienated, &c.] The general bleſſing of grace, reconciliation, which belongs to the whole body of Chriſt, the church univerſal, all the elect of God, whether in heaven or in earth, is here particularly applied to the ſaints at Coloſſe, who were eminent inſtances of it; and that the free grace of God towards them in it might more illuſtriouſly appear, the Apoſtle takes notice of what they were before the coming of Chriſt in the fleſh, before the Goſpel came among them, and whilſt in a ſtate of unregeneracy, as that they were alienated; that is from God, not from his general preſence, power, and providence, which reach to all his creatures, but from the life of God; ſee Epheſ. iv. 18. from living agreeably to the will of God, being eſtranged from him who is the fountain of moral and ſpiritual, as well as natural life; from the law, the rule of life, and from a principle of life in themſelves; and altogether diſapproving of ſuch a life as contrary to their carnal affections and luſts: and which alienation from God greatly lay in their forſaking him, the one only and true God, and following and ſerving ſtrange Gods, not attending to the dictates and light of nature; and being deſtitute of a divine revelation, they went further and further off from God, and from his people, worſhip, and ordinances; and were aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael, and ſtrangers to the covenants of promiſe; the ſource of all which was ſin, and was owing to themſelves: God did not alienate himſelf from them firſt; they alienated themſelves from him; their ſins ſeparated between God and them, ſet them at a diſtance from him, and at enmity to him, and which very early appeared, for they were eſtranged from the womb: and enemies in your mind by wicked works. They were enemies to God, the true God, and were lovers and worſhippers of idols; they were enemies to the being and perfections of God, as all men in a ſtate of nature are; and more or leſs ſhew it, by either denying there is a God, or wiſhing there was none, or fancying him to be ſuch an one as themſelves; or they diſpute his ſovereignty, deny his omniſcience, arraign his juſtice and faithfulneſs, and deſpiſe the riches of his grace and goodneſs: they are enemies to his purpoſes, providences, and word; cannot bear that he ſhould determine any thing concerning them or others; their eye is evil to him becauſe he is good to others; they reply againſt him, they run upon him, and charge his decrees with unrighteouſneſs and cruelty; murmur at and quarrel with the diſpenſations of his providence, as unequal and unjuſt; caſt away the law of the Lord, will not be ſubject to it, and contemn the revelation of his will. They are enemies to Chriſt in one ſhape or another; either to his perſon, denying his proper deity, or real humanity; or to his offices, not hearkening to him as a prophet, trampling on his blood and ſacrifice as a prieſt, and unwilling to have him to rule over them as a king; or to the way of ſalvation by him, of pardon by his blood, atonement by his ſacrifice, juſtification by his righteouſneſs, and acceptance with God thro' his perſon; or to his doctrines and ordinances, which are unſuitable to their vicious taſtes, carnal affections and appetites: they are enemies to the Spirit of Chriſt, by either denying his deity and perſonality, or by ridiculing the operations of his grace; or treating with contempt, and as fooliſh, every thing of his, the Bible and all the truths contained in it, dictated by him. They are enemies to the people of God, exceeding mad againſt them, hate them and perſecute them, reckon them the filth of the world, and the off-ſcouring of all things, living in malice to them, and hateful and hating one another: and this enmity to every thing divine and good, is ſeated in the mind; the mind is not the object of this enmity, as ſome read the words, to the mind; for the mind of a carnal man is enmity itſelf againſt God; but it is the ſubject of it, where it has its chief place, and from whence it proceeds, and ſhews itſelf in evil actions; and tho' the word your is not in the original text, it is rightly ſupplied; for the meaning is not that they were enemies of his mind; of the mind of the Lord, of his counſels and will, as ſome read and explain the words, tho' there is a truth in this, but in their own minds: ſo that not the body but the ſoul is the ſeat of this enmity; and not the inferiour faculties of the ſoul only, the ſenſitive appetite and paſſions, but the underſtanding, the judgment and will, the more noble and rational powers of the ſoul; from hence ſpring all the malice and enmity expreſſed in word and actions: where then is man's free will to that which is good? and hence it is that the mind ſtands in need of being renewed, enlightened, cleanſed and ſanctified, and renovation begins here, which is the effect of almighty power; for nothing elſe can remove the rooted enmity in the heart of men; and which as deep and as ſecret as it is, ſooner or later, in one way or another, ſhews itſelf by wicked works; and that frequently, as by loving what God hates, and hating what he loves; by omitting what he commands, and committing what he forbids; by maintaining friendſhip with the world, and by harbouring his profeſſed enemies, and perſecuting his dear friends; and by their wicked words, and evil lives and converſations; and by the various works of the fleſh, which are manifeſt, ſome being more directly againſt God, others by which they wrong themſelves, and others by which they injure their neighbours: yet now hath he reconciled; which may be underſtood either of the Father's reconciling them to himſelf by his Son; and ſo the words are a continuation of the account of the Father's grace, as to all the elect in general, ſo to the Coloſſians in particular, notwithſtanding the black characters in which they ſtand deſcribed in their natural eſtate: or elſe of Chriſt's reconciling them to his Father, by the ſacrifice of himſelf, which he voluntarily offered for them, tho' this was their caſe, and of enemies made them friends: and may be meant either of the impetration of reconciliation for them by his ſufferings and death; or of the virtue and efficacy of it in the application of it; in the former ſenſe the now refers to the coming of Chriſt into the world, and the time of his death, and the offering up of his body once for all, when peace and reconciliation were compleatly made at once for all God's elect; in the latter ſenſe it refers to the time of the converſion of theſe Coloſſians, when Chriſt by his Spirit, in conſequence of reconciliation made in the body of his fleſh, thro' death reconciled them to God; to his mind and will, to the way of ſalvation by himſelf, to the ſaints the excellent in the earth, to the Goſpel and the ordinances of it, and to all his ways and worſhip.

Ver. 22. In the body of his fleſh thro' death, &c.] Or thro' his death, as the Alexandrian copy and ſome others, and all the Oriental verſions read. Theſe words expreſs the means by which that reconciliation was made, which in the virtue and efficacy of it was applied particularly to theſe Coloſſians at their converſion, whereby their minds were actually reconciled to God, as in or by the body of his fleſh; that is, by the offering up of his body on the accurſed tree, in which he bore the ſins of his people, and made reconciliation for them: and it is ſo called either to diſtinguiſh it from his myſtical and ſpiritual body the church, of which he is the head before ſpoken of; or from his glorious and immortal body, as now raiſed and exalted at God's right hand; and to denote the truth of his human body, that it was a real fleſhly body, conſiſting of fleſh and blood as ours does, and the ſame with ours, and not an aerial, celeſtial body, or a mere phantom; and alſo to ſignify the infirmity and mortality of it, being, excepting, ſin in all points like to ours, and ſubject to death; and that it was in that body his Father prepared for him, and he aſſumed, and as he was clothed with it in the days of his fleſh, or mortal ſtate, that he made reconciliation for the ſins of his people, and that thro' death in it; even the death of the croſs, by which he bore the penalty of the law, the curſe of it, made ſatisfaction to juſtice, obtained life, aboliſhed death, and deſtroyed him that had the power of it, and fixed a ſure and laſting peace for all his ſaints: his end in which was, to preſent you holy and unblameable, and unreproveable in his ſight. This preſentation of the ſaints by Chriſt is either in his own ſight, before himſelf, as the Arabic verſion reads it; and is here in this preſent ſtate, they being conſidered by him both as ſanctified and as juſtified; he taking delight in the graces of his Spirit, and the exerciſe of them on himſelf, tho' imperfect, and in them as clothed with his ſpotleſs righteouſneſs, in which they are perfectly comely, all fair, and without ſpot: or in the latter day glory, the new Jeruſalem-church-ſtate; when the church will be as a bride prepared for her huſband, will be brought into his preſence in raiment of needlework, in fine linen clean and white, the righteouſneſs of the ſaints, and be preſented to himſelf a glorious church, without ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing: or in the ultimate glory, when all the ſaints ſhall be for ever with him, continually before him, and in his ſight; which is what his heart was ſet upon from everlaſting, which he had in view in his ſufferings and death, and ſtill has in his prayers and preparations: or elſe this preſentation is what has been or will be made before his Father, and in his ſight; and which was partly done, when he gathered together all the elect in himſelf, and repreſented them on the croſs, in the body of his fleſh; and partly is now doing in heaven, where he appears in the preſence of God for them, bears their names on his breaſt-plate, preſents their perſons and their caſes; and eſpecially will be done at the laſt day, when he will deliver up the kingdom to the Father, and ſay, lo, I and the children thou haſt given me: and who will be preſented holy by him; he being their ſanctification, and they having all their ſins expiated by his ſacrifice, and their perſons waſhed and cleanſed in his blood, and their hearts ſanctified by his Spirit; which ſanctification, tho' it is imperfect in this life, yet will be compleated by the author of it at death; for without perfect holineſs no man ſhall ſee God, or be preſented in his ſight: and this is in conſequence of the death of Chriſt and reconciliation by it, and a fruit of electing grace, by which perſons are choſen in Chriſt, that they ſhould be holy and without blame; and as here, unblameable and unreproveable: as they are, not now in themſelves, but in Chriſt, as arrayed with his robe of righteouſneſs and garments of ſalvation, being all glorious within, and their cloathing of wrought gold, in which they will be introduced and preſented to himſelf, and to his Father faultleſs, with exceeding joy, and ſtand ſo before the throne, and that to all eternity.

Ver. 23. If ye continue in the faith, &c.] In the doctrine of faith which they had received and embraced; and in the grace of faith, and the exerciſe of it, which was implanted in them; and in the profeſſion of faith which they had made: not that the virtue and efficacy of Chriſt's blood, ſufferings, and death, and reconciliation of their perſons to God thereby, depended upon their faith, and abiding in it; but that faith and continuance in it were neceſſary means of their preſentation in unblemiſhed holineſs and righteouſneſs; for if they had not faith, or did not abide in it, or if the good work of grace was not wrought upon their ſouls, and that performed until the day of Chriſt, they could not be preſented holy and blameleſs: this ſhews the neceſſity of the ſaints final perſeverance in faith and holineſs, and is mentioned with this view, to put them upon a concern about it, and to make uſe of all means, under divine grace, to enjoy it; and nothing could more ſtrongly incline and move unto it, than the bleſſed effect of Chriſt's death, reconciliation, and the end of it, to preſent the reconciled ones blameleſs; in order to which 'tis neceſſary they ſhould hold on and out to the end: hence the Ethiopic verſion reads the words, not as a condition, but as an exhortation enforced by what goes before; therefore be ye eſtabliſhed in the faith: it follows, grounded and ſettled; not on the ſandy foundation of man's own righteouſneſs, and peace made by his own performances; but upon the foundation and rock, Chriſt, againſt which the gates of hell cannot prevail; and ſo ſhall never finally and totally fall away, being rooted and built up in him, and eſtabliſhed in the faith of him, in the doctrines of faith, reſpecting peace by his blood, juſtification by his righteouſneſs, and life by his death; and ſo continue ſtedfaſt and immoveable, always abounding in his work: and be not moved away from the hope of the Goſpel; the hope of eternal life and happineſs, which is ſet before us in the Goſpel; which that gives a good and ſolid ground and foundation of, in the perſon, blood, and righteouſneſs of Chriſt; and is the inſtrumental means in the hand of the Spirit, of begetting to it, and of encouraging and increaſing it: the law gives no hopes of eternal life to a poor ſinner; it works wrath, and miniſters death; there is nothing but a fearful looking for of judgment by it; but the Goſpel encourages to hope in the Lord, from the conſideration of rich mercy and plenteous redemption in him; and this hope of the Goſpel is an anchor of the ſoul, ſure and ſtedfaſt, and not to be let go; this confidence and rejoicing of the hope is to be kept firm unto the end: which ye have heard; that is, which Goſpel they had heard from Epaphras their faithful miniſter, and that not only externally, but internally; they had heard it and believed it, and it had brought forth fruit in them; for it came to them not in word only, but in power; which is ſaid in commendation of it, and to engage them to continue in it, and abide by it; as is alſo what follows: and which was preached to every creature which is under heaven; and therefore ſince it was the ſame which was every where preached, they might depend upon the truth of it, ſhould have the greater value for it, and by no means relinquiſh it. This muſt be underſtood not of every individual creature, even human and rational, that was then, or had been in the world; but that it had been, and was preached far and near, in all places all over the world, to the Gentiles as well as to the Jews; who are ſometimes ſtiled, every creature, the creature, the whole creation, all men, &c. ſee Mark xvi. 15. Rom. viii. 19, 20, 21, 22. Titus ii. 11. and of this, the firſt preaching of the Goſpel by Peter after our Lord's reſurrection, was an emblem and pledge, Acts ii. 5. and ſome time after that, the ſound of all the Apoſtles went into all the earth, and their words to the end of the world: whereof I Paul am made a miniſter; by Jeſus Chriſt, who appeared unto him, and called, qualified and ſent him forth as ſuch; and this is mentioned to encourage the Coloſſians to abide by the truths of the Goſpel, ſince what they had heard and received were what were every where preached by the faithful miniſters of the word; and particularly by the Apoſtle, who was ordained to be a teacher and preacher of it to the Gentiles. The Alexandrian copy reads, a preacher and an Apoſtle, and a miniſter; ſee 1 Tim. ii. 7.

Ver. 24. Who now rejoice in my ſufferings for you, &c.] The Apoſtle, as ſoon as he had made mention of his being a miniſter of the Goſpel, thinks and ſpeaks of his ſufferings; for thoſe are what always more or leſs attend perſons in ſuch an office; they are appointed to them by God; Chriſt has foretold them of them; they are neceſſary for them; they muſt expect them, and patiently endure them: the Apoſtle was under them now at this preſent time, for he wrote this epiſtle in his bonds when a priſoner at Rome, not for any immorality, any crime he had committed, but for Chriſt's ſake, for his Goſpel's ſake, for the ſake of the churches of Chriſt to whom he preached, for the confirmation of them, and ſo of theſe Coloſſians; and therefore he ſays, for you; and which he mentions to animate them to abide by the Goſpel, for which he was ſuffering, that it might continue with them and others: nor was he diſtreſſed and diſcouraged at his afflictions, he rejoiced in them, becauſe he had the preſence of God in them, the Spirit of God and of glory reſted on him, and God was glorified by them; he eſteemed it an honour done him that grace was given, and he counted worthy to ſuffer for the ſake of Chriſt; and as well knowing that he ſhould live and reign with him, ſince he ſuffered with him and for him: and what greatly cauſed and increaſed his joy was what follows, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Chriſt in my fleſh; by which are meant not the afflictions or ſufferings of Chriſt in his own perſon; for theſe were all over, he was now entered into his glory, was exalted at the Father's right hand, and was crowned with glory and honour: there was nothing left behind of his ſufferings, to be undergone by any of his people; he had drank of the cup, and all the dregs of it; he had ſuſtained the whole of his Father's wrath, and all the curſes of the law, being abated nothing, but was made perfect thro' ſufferings; having perfectly ſuffered all, he ſuffered once and once for all, he will ſuffer no more; nor is there any need of his ſuffering more or again, for he has finiſhed ſin, wrought righteouſneſs, made peace, and obtained eternal redemption; nor had he any partner in his ſufferings, nor did he need any, or left any part of his ſufferings to be filled up by others; for he endured all and the whole, which the law and juſtice of God could require in his own body, in the body of his fleſh thro' death; of theſe ſufferings the Apoſtle does not ſpeak, but of ſuch which he filled up in his own fleſh; and deſign the afflictions of Chriſt in his members, which are called his, becauſe of that near union there is between Chriſt and them; ſo that what befalls them may be predicated of him, when any one of them ſuffers, he ſuffers with him, as the ſufferings of a part of the body are aſcribed to the whole perſon; and becauſe of that ſympathy there is between them, he has a fellow-feeling with his people in all their infirmities; in all their afflictions he is afflicted; if Saul perſecutes his ſaints, he perſecutes him; whatever injury is done to them, he takes it as done to himſelf, who are to him as the apple of his eye. Moreover, hereby they are conformed unto him, and made like him; as he was ſo are they in this world; there is a good deal of likeneſs between the afflictions of Chriſt and his people, tho' in ſome things there is a great diſparity; add to this, that the afflictions of the ſaints are endured for Chriſt's ſake, for the ſake of his Goſpel, and the profeſſion of his name, and therefore called his, and the more chearfully bore by them: now of theſe there were ſome remains to be filled up by the Apoſtle; not that all the afflictions of the whole body of Chriſt were to be, or have been filled up by him; there was a great deal left behind by him to be filled up by others, and which has been filling up ever ſince, and ſtill is, and yet all is not fulfilled to this day, nor will be till the end of time; but he ſpeaks only of that part and meaſure of them, which was to be filled up in his fleſh; he had his meaſure of afflictions allotted to him, great part of which he had endured already but ſome remained, the meaſure was not yet full, tho' pretty near being compleated, which gave him pleaſure; it was juſt filling up, and the time of his departure was at hand, when there would be no more ſorrow; for it was only while he was in the fleſh, he was filling up this meaſure, and would be quickly up: and what added to his joy was that as theſe were the afflictions of Chriſt, and the meaſure of them was appointed by his heavenly Father, to be filled up by him in this mortal ſtate, ſo they were for his body's ſake, which is the church; not in the room and ſtead of the church, and people of Chriſt, as were the ſufferings of Chriſt perſonal; or to exempt them from ſufferings who all have their ſhare in this life; nor for their ſins to make reconciliation for them, and procure the remiſſion of them; nor to redeem them, or obtain ſalvation for them, all which is compleated by Chriſt; but for their good and profit, that the Goſpel might continue and be bleſſed to the converſion of many, for the increaſe of the church and additions to it, and for the furtherance of the Goſpel, and that ſuch who profeſſed it might be eſtabliſhed and confirmed in it, by the ſufferings of the Apoſtle for it: and ſuch good effects did follow upon his ſufferings and afflictions; they were for the conſolation of many ſouls, the ſtrengthening of weak believers, and cauſing even preachers of the Goſpel to wax more confident, and more boldly preach the Goſpel without fear of man.

Ver. 25. Whereof I am made a miniſter, &c.] Not of Chriſt, or of the Goſpel as before, tho' both were true; but of the churches for whoſe ſake he endured afflictions; and which carries in it a reaſon of his ſuffering for them: he was not a ſaviour of the body, nor a redeemer of the church, nor Lord of it; but a miniſter, a ſervant of it, that miniſtered to it in holy things, in the word and ordinances; not a deacon, as the word ſometimes ſignifies, nor an ordinary miniſter, or a paſtor of a particular church; but a miniſter of the church in general, being an Apoſtle ſent to preach the Goſpel every where: he was made a miniſter of it, not by men, or any thing he received from men; nor by himſelf, not by uſurpation, he did not thruſt himſelf into this office, or take it upon him of himſelf; but was put into it by Chriſt, who counted him faithful, he appeared to him, and made him a miniſter, qualified him for this office, called him to it, and ſent him to perform it: and which he executed according to the diſpenſation of God; or divine œconomy, which denotes ſuch an authority and adminiſtration, which is uſed in a family. The church is God's family; it is called the houſe and houſhold of God, and the houſhold of faith, part of which is in heaven and part on earth; God is the houſholder or maſter of the family; Chriſt is the Son over his own houſe; miniſters are ſtewards in it, and their work is to give to every one their portion of meat in due ſeaſon; their authority from God to do ſo, and the exerciſe of it are the œconomy or diſpenſation of the Goſpel committed to them: this is of God and not man, for none but God can give them a power to diſpenſe it, and which is purely of his grace, called therefore the diſpenſation of the grace of God, Epheſ. iii. 2. and here ſaid to be given, which is given to me for you; not according to any merits of his, who was before a blaſphemer, a perſecutor, and an injurious perſon to Chriſt and his Goſpel; but according to the pure grace of God, and that not for himſelf, but for the good of others, for the Gentiles eſpecially, and ſo for the Coloſſians: to fulfil the word of God; either the promiſes and propheſies contained in the word of God, reſpecting the preaching of the Goſpel to the Gentiles, and their converſion by it; which had in a great meaſure their accompliſhment thro' the miniſtry of the Apoſtle: or to fill all places with the word of God and Goſpel of Chriſt, as the Apoſtle did from Jeruſalem, and round about to Illyricum, diffuſing the ſavour of the knowledge of Chriſt in every place; and ſinners being converted, churches were planted and daily filled with ſuch as ſhould be ſaved: or to preach fully and faithfully the Goſpel, keeping back nothing that was profitable, but declaring the whole counſel of God, continuing faithful to it to the end, as he did: to fill up or fulfil words, is an Hebraiſm, and ſignifies to confirm them, or act according to them; ſee 1 Kings i. 14. and the Septuagint there.

Ver. 26. Even the myſtery which hath been hid from ages and generations, &c.] This is ſaid, as explanative of the word of God; ſignifying that he did not mean the ſcriptures in general, which are the word of God, and every part of them; ſome part of which is hiſtorical, another prophetical, another practical, and another doctrinal; nor the law, which alſo is the word of God, but the Goſpel, called the myſtery, as it often is; becauſe it contains things, which though revealed, are myſteries to a natural man; and even to enlightened perſons, who have the cleareſt view of them, the modus of them is not to be accounted for; ſuch as the doctrines of the Trinity, of the union of the two natures in Chriſt, the incarnation of the Son of God, the union and communion of the church with Chriſt, the reſurrection of the dead, &c. And though perhaps great and ſpecial regard may be here had to the calling of the Gentiles, which though revealed in the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, was in a great meaſure hid in them, and not ſo clearly known in ages and generations paſt as now, yet the whole may be applied to the Goſpel-myſtery in general; which was firſt hid in the heart of God, in his thoughts and purpoſes, in his counſel and covenant, and in his Son, in whom are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge; and then in the ceremonies and ſhadows of the law, which but few had any inſight into, and diſcerning of; and during that diſpenſation, was wholly hid from the Gentiles; and but in part known by the Jews, and but by a few, and comparatively by them very darkly; and not ſo clearly by the angels themſelves, who pry into theſe myſteries, and now under the Goſpel diſpenſation, learn from the church the manifold wiſdom of God; and indeed it was hidden from all men, Jews and Gentiles, in a ſtate of nature, and even from the wiſe and prudent of this world: but now is made manifeſt to his ſaints; now under the Goſpel diſpenſation, ſince the coming of Chriſt; there is an external revelation of the Goſpel by him more clearly, by whom grace and truth came, called the revelation of Chriſt; and an internal revelation of it by his Spirit, who is the Spirit of wiſdom and revelation, in the knowledge of him; which is made to ſaints, the holy Apoſtles and Prophets, who are the ſaints to whom this faith, and the myſtery of it, were firſt delivered with ſo much power and evidence; and to all the elect of God, whom he has ſeparated for himſelf in eternal election; whom Chriſt has ſanctified by his blood, and to whom he is made ſanctification; and who are called with an holy calling, have principles of grace and holineſs wrought in them by the Spirit of God, and therefore called his ſaints; theſe have only a ſpiritual diſcerning of the Goſpel, for the natural man neither knows nor receives it.

Ver. 27. To whom God would make known, &c.] The ſpring and cauſe of the manifeſtation of the Goſpel to the ſaints, and choſen of God, is not their works, for God does not call them with an holy calling according to them, but according to his own grace; nor any preparations and diſpoſitions in them before ſuch manifeſtation, towards the Goſpel and the truths of it, for there are none ſuch naturally in men, but all the reverſe; nor a foreſight of their better improvement of it, when made known, for this is not the method of divine grace, witneſs the inſtances of Sodom and Gomorrha, Tyre and Sidon; nor any holineſs in them, or becauſe they were ſanctified, for they became ſo by the power of divine grace, through the Goſpel revelation; but it is the pure ſovereign good-will and pleaſure of God; ſee Eph. i. 9. Matt. xi. 25, 26. as appears from what they were before the Goſpel came unto them, what is made known to them in it and by it; and from this, that they and not others equally as deſerving, are favoured with it: what is the riches of the glory of this myſtery among the Gentiles. The Apoſtle beſides calling the Goſpel a myſtery, as before, aſcribes glory to it; 'tis a glorious myſtery, there's a glory in all the myſteries of it; 'tis a glorious Goſpel, as it is often called, in its author, ſubject, matter, uſe, and efficacy: and alſo riches of glory, or glorious riches; containing rich truths, an immenſe treaſure of them, comparable to gold, ſilver, and precious ſtones; rich bleſſings of juſtification, pardon, reconciliation, adoption, and eternal life; and rich promiſes, relating both to this life, and that which is to come: all which were opened and made known, not to the Jews only, but among the Gentiles alſo; who before were aliens, enemies, exceeding wicked, poor, blind, and miſerable, but now through the Goſpel, were become rich and glorious, wiſe, knowing, and happy: which is Chriſt in you, the hope of glory; this is to be connected with all that goes before: Chriſt is the riches of the Goſpel; the riches of the divine perfections, which the Goſpel more clearly diſplays than the works of creation or providence are all in Chriſt, the fulneſs of them dwells in him; and this is the grace the Goſpel reveals, that he who was rich with all theſe, became poor to make us rich; the rich promiſes of the Goſpel were all made to Chriſt, and are all yea and Amen in him; the rich bleſſings of it are all in his hands, righteouſneſs, peace, and pardon, the riches both of grace and glory; the rich treaſures of its divine truths are hid in him, and he is the ſubſtance of every one of them: Chriſt is alſo the glory of the Goſpel, inaſmuch as he is the author, preacher, and ſubject of it; it is full of the glory of his perſon, both as the only begotten of the Father, and as the only mediator between God and man; it is the glaſs through which this is ſeen: moreover, the glory of God in him, is expreſſed hereby; the glory of his wiſdom and power, of his truth and faithfulneſs, of his juſtice and holineſs, of his love, grace, and mercy, and every other perfection, is eminently held forth in the Goſpel; as this is great in the ſalvation and redemption of his people by Chriſt, which the Goſpel brings the good news of; add to this, that that glory which the ſaints ſhall have with Chriſt, and will lie in the enjoyment of him to all eternity, is brought to light in the Goſpel: Chriſt is alſo the myſtery of the Goſpel; he is one of the perſons in the myſtery of the Trinity; the myſtery of his divine ſonſhip, of his divine perſon, being God and yet man, man and yet God, and both in one perſon, and of his incarnation and redemption, makes a conſiderable part of the Goſpel: and Chriſt who is the ſum and ſubſtance of it, is in his people; not only as the omnipreſent God, as the author of the light of nature, as the creator of all things, in whom all live, move, and have their beings, but in a way of ſpecial grace; and the phraſe is expreſſive of a revelation of him in them, of their poſſeſſion of him, of his inhabitation in them by his Spirit and grace, particularly by faith, and of their communion with him, in conſequence of their union to him; and being ſo, he is the ground and foundation of their hopes of glory. There is a glory which the ſaints are hoping for, which the glories of this world are but a faint reſemblance of; which is unſeen at preſent, and which the ſufferings of the preſent time are not worthy to be compared unto; 'tis what is eternal, and which Chriſt has entered into, and took poſſeſſion of; and what will greatly conſiſt in beholding his glory, and in everlaſting communion with him; this through grace ſaints have a good hope of, and are waiting for, and even rejoice at times in the hope of it; of which hope, Chriſt is the foundation: for not only the promiſe of it is with him, but the glory itſelf is in his hands; the gift of it is with him, and through him; he has made way by his ſufferings and death for the enjoyment of it, and is now preparing it for them, by his preſence and interceſſion; his grace makes them meet for it, his righteouſneſs gives them a title to it, and his Spirit is the earneſt of it, and the ſubſtance of it will be the fruition of himſelf.

Ver. 28. Whom we preach, &c.] Under the above conſiderations; as the riches, the glory, and the myſtery of the Goſpel; as the hope ſet before loſt ſinners to lay hold upon; as the only Saviour and Redeemer, by whoſe righteouſneſs believers are juſtified, through whoſe blood their ſins are pardoned, by whoſe ſacrifice and ſatisfaction atonement is made, and in whoſe perſon alone is acceptance with God: Chriſt and him crucified, and ſalvation by him, were the ſubject of the miniſtry of the Apoſtles; on this they dwelt, and it was this which was bleſſed for the converſion of ſinners, the edification of ſaints, the planting of churches, and the ſetting up and eſtabliſhing the kingdom and intereſt of Chriſt: warning every man; of his loſt ſtate and condition by nature; of the wrath to come, and the danger he is in of it; of the terrors of the Lord, and of an awful judgment; ſhewing ſinners that they are unrighteous and unholy, that their nature is corrupt and impure, their beſt righteouſneſs imperfect, and cannot juſtify them before God, that they ſtand guilty before him, and that deſtruction and miſery are in all their ways; and therefore adviſe them to flee from the wrath to come, to the hope ſet before them in the Goſpel: teaching every man in all wiſdom; not natural, but ſpiritual and evangelical; the whole Goſpel of Chriſt, the counſel of God, the wiſdom of God in a myſtery, and all the branches of it; teaching them to believe in Chriſt for ſalvation, to lay hold on his righteouſneſs for juſtification, to deal with his blood for pardon, and with his ſacrifice for the atonement of their ſins; and to obſerve all things commanded by Chriſt, and to live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly: by theſe two words, warning and teaching, the ſeveral parts of the Goſpel miniſtry are expreſſed; and which extend to all ſorts of men, rich and poor, bond and free, greater and leſſer ſinners, Gentiles as well as Jews; and who are chiefly deſigned here, and elſewhere by every man and every creature: that we may preſent every man perfect in Chriſt Jeſus; not in themſelves, in which ſenſe no man is perfect in this life; but in the grace, holineſs, and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, in whom all the ſaints are compleat: or it may regard that ripeneſs of underſtanding, and perfection of knowledge, which when arrived unto, ſaints become perfect men in Chriſt; and is the end of the Goſpel miniſtry, and to which men are brought by it; ſee Eph. iv. 13. and to be underſtood of the preſentation of the ſaints, not by Chriſt to himſelf, and to his Father, but by the miniſters of the Goſpel, as their glory and crown of rejoicing in the day of Chriſt.

Ver. 29. Whereunto I alſo labour, &c.] In the word and doctrine, by preaching Chriſt, warning ſinners of their danger, teaching them the way of ſalvation, and their duty; with this view, that in the great day of account, he might bring a large number of them, and ſet them before Chriſt as the ſeals of his miniſtry, as inſtances of the grace of Chriſt, and as perfect in him: ſtriving according to his working, which worketh in me mightily; meaning either in his prayers, earneſtly intreating of God that he would ſucceed his labours, and bleſs them to the converſion of many; which ſenſe is favoured by the Syriac verſion, which renders it, ומתכשף, and make ſupplication; that is, with that effectual fervent prayer, which was powerfully wrought in him: or in his miniſtry, combating with many enemies, fighting the good fight of faith; not in his own ſtrength, but through the power of Chriſt; which enabled him to preach the Goſpel far and near, in ſeaſon and out of ſeaſon; which ſupported his outward man, and ſtrengthened his inward man for that ſervice, and made it effectual to the good of the ſouls of many: ſome refer this to the ſigns, wonders, and miracles, which Chriſt wrought by him, for the confirmation of the Goſpel; but the other ſenſe, which takes in both the power by which he was aſſiſted in preaching, both in body and ſoul, and that which went along with his miniſtry to make it uſeful to others, is to be preferred.

CHAP. II.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle expreſſes his great concern for the Coloſſians, and others he had never ſeen; exhorts them to conſtancy in the faith of Chriſt; warns them of falſe teachers, and their tenets; takes notice of various bleſſings and privileges they had by Chriſt, and cautions againſt ſeveral ſuperſtitions and corruptions, which were obtaining among the churches of Chriſt: in ver. 1. the Apoſtle declares the conflict he had for the perſons he writes to, and for others, though they had never ſeen him, which he was deſirous they might be acquainted with; partly for the comfort of their hearts, their cement in love, and the improvement of their knowledge of divine things, the treaſures of which are in Chriſt, ver. 2, 3. and partly that they might not be deceived, by the enticing words of the falſe teachers, ver. 4. and ſhould his abſence and diſtance from them, be objected to his profeſſed concern and affection for them, he anſwers, that notwithſtanding that, he was preſent with them in ſpirit, and had a diſcerning of their faith and order, and the ſtedfaſtneſs thereof with pleaſure, ver. 5. wherefore he exhorts them to perſeverance in the faith of Chriſt, and to an abounding in it, ver. 6, 7. and to take heed of being hurt by the vain philoſophy and traditions of the Jews, but to keep cloſe to Chriſt, and the truths of his Goſpel, ſeeing all fulneſs is in him, and they were full in him, who is over all, and ſuperior to all, and therefore had no need to have recourſe unto, and hearken to any other, ver. 9, 10. nor did they need any Jewiſh ordinances, particularly circumciſion, ſince they were partakers of another and better circumciſion in Chriſt; and beſides, were buried in baptiſm with him; and even though they had been dead in ſin, and in their fleſhly uncircumciſion, yet they were alive, quickened with Chriſt, and had the forgiveneſs of all their ſins for his ſake; who had freed them from the ceremonial law, and had rid them of all their former lords and maſters, and had brought them into the liberty of the Goſpel, ver. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. wherefore he concludes, by way of exhortation and advice, firſt with reſpect to Jewiſh ceremonies, not to ſuffer them to be impoſed upon them, or to regard the cenſures of men for the non-obſervance of them, ſince theſe were but ſhadows, of which Chriſt is the ſubſtance, ver. 16, 17. and next with reſpect to the worſhip of angels, under a notion of humility, ſome were for introducing; who are deſcribed as bold intruders, vain, proud, and conceited perſons, and as not holding the head Chriſt, to whom the body the church is joined, and by whom it is nouriſhed and increaſed, ver. 18, 19. and ſeeing now they that are Chriſt's, are dead with him to the ceremonial law, and that dead to them, the Apoſtle argues that they ſhould not be ſubject to the ordinances, commands, and doctrines of men; ſome of which he inſtances in, as if they were ſtill under the rudiments of the world; and the rather, ſince theſe things had no true wiſdom in them, only a ſhew of it, and were no other than will-worſhip and ſuperſtition, and lay in a negligence of the body, and were diſhonourable and unſatisfying, ver. 20, 21, 22, 23.

Ver. 1. For I would that ye knew what great conflict I have for you, &c.] This is occaſioned by what he had ſaid in the latter part of the former chapter, that he laboured and ſtrove according to the energy of divine power in him, to preſent every man perfect in Chriſt; and leſt theſe Coloſſians ſhould think that theſe labours and ſtrivings of his, were only for all and every of thoſe perſons among whom he was, and to whom he perſonally preached, he would have them know, obſerve, and aſſure themſelves, that the great conflict, ſtrife, and agony, in which he was engaged, was for them alſo; by which he means, his fervent prayers and wreſtlings with God, the conflicts he had in his own mind, with his own ſpirit, about the good of the churches of Chriſt, the care of which were upon him, and even of thoſe to whom he was by face unknown, ſometimes hoping, ſometimes fearing, ſometimes rejoicing, at other times weeping, at what he heard concerning them; alſo his combats with the falſe Apoſtles, ſtriving and earneſtly contending for the faith of the Goſpel, giving no place to them, no, not for an hour, defending truth, refuting error, and fighting the good fight of faith, by preaching, writing, and diſputing; likewiſe the various perſecutions, great afflictions and hardſhips he met with from men, for the ſake of the Goſpel; add to all this, the frequent battles he had with the enemy of ſouls, his wreſtlings againſt principalities and powers, the many temptations of ſatan with which he was attacked, to draw him off from the ſervice of Chriſt, to weaken his hands, and hinder his ſucceſs in it; all which he endured and went through with a greatneſs of mind, and that for the good of the churches of Chriſt, and the glory of his name, which were the great things he had in view: and among others, for the good of theſe Coloſſians, and for them at Laodicea; the ſaints of that place, the church of Chriſt which was there; and is the rather mentioned, becauſe near to Coloſſe: it was a famous city by the river Lycus, firſt called Dioſpolis, and then Rhoas[p], and afterwards Laodicea; it was the metropolis of Phrygia, in which Coloſſe ſtood: hence this Epiſtle is ordered to be read to them alſo, they being infeſted with falſe teachers, and in the ſame ſituation and circumſtances as the Coloſſians were; and though the Apoſtle was unknown to both of them, having never been at either place, yet was heartily concerned for each of their welfare, and he ſtrove for them as he did for others; one of Stephens's copies adds, and them in Hierapolis; ſee ch. iv. 13. And for as many as have not ſeen my face in the fleſh; meaning the churches of Chriſt, and believers in him; ſuch as had never heard him preach, nor had any perſonal knowledge of him, and converſation with him, which tend to knit the hearts of chriſtians more firmly together; yet his heart was towards them, he laboured for them, by praying for them, writing to them, ſuffering all things for their ſakes, for the confirmation of them, and of the Goſpel of Chriſt. Chriſtian love and care, and the benefit of the labours and ſufferings of Goſpel miniſters, extend and reach to perſons that never ſaw them.

Ver. 2. That their hearts might be comforted, &c.] Here follow the reaſons why the Apoſtle had ſo great a conflict, on account of the above perſons, and why he was ſo deſirous they ſhould know it; one is, the conſolation of their hearts. The hearts of God's people often need comfort, by reaſon of indwelling ſin, the temptations of ſatan, the hidings of God's face, and afflictive providences; and by reaſon of falſe teachers, who greatly trouble them, unſettle their minds, weaken their faith, and fill them with doubts and perplexities, and which was the caſe with theſe churches: now the buſineſs of Goſpel miniſters, is to comfort ſuch; this is the commiſſion they are ſent with; the doctrines of the Goſpel are calculated for this very purpoſe, ſuch as full redemption, free juſtification, compleat pardon of ſin, peace and reconciliation; and the bent of their miniſtry is to comfort diſtreſſed minds, upon what account ſoever; and it muſt be a comfort to theſe churches, when they found that they were regarded by ſo great an Apoſtle; and it might tend to confirm them in the doctrine they had received at firſt, and deliver them from the ſcruples the falſe Apoſtles had injected into their minds, and ſo adminiſter comfort to them, when they perceived that the Apoſtle approved of the Goſpel they had heard and embraced, and rejected the notions of the falſe teachers: being knit together in love; as the members of an human body are, by joints and bands; as love is the bond of union between God and his people, Chriſt and his members, ſo between ſaints and ſaints; it is the cement that joins and keeps them together, and which edifies and builds them up, and whereby they increaſe with the increaſe of God; it makes them to be of one heart and one ſoul; it renders their communion with one another comfortable and delightful, and ſtrengthens them againſt the common enemy, who is for dividing, and ſo deſtroying; and is what is the joy of Goſpel miniſters, and what they labour at and ſtrive for, and which is another reaſon of the Apoſtle's conflict: and unto all riches of the full aſſurance of underſtanding; that is, ſpiritual knowledge and underſtanding, or the underſtanding of ſpiritual things; for the underſtanding of things natural and civil, is not deſigned; nor a mere notional knowledge of ſpiritual things, which perſons may have, and yet not charity, or love, with which this is here joined; and ſuch an one alſo, which is ſure and certain: for as there is ſuch a thing as the aſſurance of faith, and the aſſurance of hope, ſo likewiſe of underſtanding of the Goſpel, and the truths of it; concerning which there ought to be no doubt, being to be received upon the credit of a divine teſtimony: moreover, ſuch a knowledge and underſtanding of divine things is intended, as is large and abundant, ſignified by all riches; for though it is not compleat and perfect in this life, yet it takes a vaſt compaſs, and reaches to all the deep things of God; to whatever relates to the perſon and grace of Chriſt; to all the things of the Spirit of God; to all the bleſſings and promiſes of the covenant of grace; to the riches both of grace and glory, to the things of time and eternity, and which is more clearly explained by the following clauſe: to the acknowledgment of the myſtery of God, and of the Father, and of Chriſt; that is, to a greater and more perfect knowledge, approbation, and confeſſion of the Goſpel, which he had in the preceding chapter called the myſtery; ſee ver. 26, 27. and here the myſtery of God, which he is both the author and ſubject of; it is by him as the efficient cient cauſe, ordained by him, and hid in him before the world was; and it is of him, as the ſubject-matter of it; not as the God of nature and providence, which the works of both declare; but as the God of all grace, as God in Chriſt, which is the peculiar diſcovery of the Goſpel: and of him as the Father of Chriſt, which is not diſcoverable by the light of nature, nor known by natural reaſon, but is a point of divine revelation; and of him as the Father of his people by adoption; and of all his grace, in election to grace and glory; in predeſtination to ſonſhip, and in the council and covenant of grace; in the ſcheme of ſalvation and redemption; in the miſſion of his Son, and the gift of him as a ſaviour and redeemer. The copulative and before the Father, is left out in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions, which read the myſtery of God the Father; and with it it may be rendered, as it ſometimes is, God, even the Father: though the word God may be conſidered eſſentially, and as after diſtinguiſhed into two of the perſons of the Godhead; the Father the firſt perſon, ſo called, in relation to his Son, which is no ſmall part of the myſtery of the Goſpel; and Chriſt the ſecond perſon, who is equally God with the Father; and the Spirit, who though not mentioned, is not excluded from this adorable myſtery: and which is the myſtery of Chriſt, he being both the efficient cauſe, and the ſubject-matter of it; it treats of his deity and perſonality; of his offices, as mediator, prophet, prieſt, and king; of his incarnation and redemption; of his grace, righteouſneſs, ſacrifice, and ſatisfaction; of juſtification by him, pardon thro' him, and acceptance in him.

Ver. 3. In whom are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge.] This may be underſtood either of the myſtery of the Goſpel, which contains the rich mines and hidden treaſures of all divine truths; ſo called, becauſe of the richneſs and intrinſic value and excellency of them; and becauſe of their variety and abundance, being the unſearchable riches of Chriſt: or of Chriſt himſelf; and not ſo much of his perſonal wiſdom, either as God, being the all-wiſe God, the wiſdom of God, an omniſcient being, that knows all perſons and things whatever, within the whole circle of wiſdom and knowledge; or as man, whoſe wiſdom and knowledge though created, was very large and abundant; or as mediator, on whom the ſpirit of wiſdom and underſtanding, of counſel and of knowledge reſts; but of that fulneſs of truth as well as grace, which dwells in him as in its ſubject and fountain; by whom it comes, and from whom it is derived unto us; and our higheſt wiſdom and knowledge, lies in knowing him, whom to know is life eternal; and the excellency of whoſe knowledge, ſurpaſſes every thing elſe; it is the greateſt riches, and moſt valuable treaſure; nor is there any thing worth knowing, but what is in Chriſt, all is laid up in him: and being ſaid to be hid in him, ſhews the excellency of the wiſdom and knowledge that is in him, only valuable things being hid, or compared to hid treaſure; that this can't be had without knowing him; that it is imperfect in the preſent ſtate, and is not yet fully and clearly revealed; and therefore ſhould be enquired after, and ſearched for, and Chriſt ſhould be applied unto for it; גנזי חכמתא, treaſures of wiſdom, is a phraſe uſed by the Targumiſt[q].

Ver. 4. And this I ſay, &c.] That he had ſuch a conflict for them, and had told them of his care and fear on their account, and had ſignified his great deſire that they might arrive to a more large and certain knowledge of the myſteries of grace, and had aſſerted that all ſolid ſpiritual wiſdom and knowledge were in Chriſt; all which he ſaid, to ſhew his affection for them; to obſerve unto them, that there was no need to ſeek for wiſdom and knowledge elſewhere, ſince there was ſuch a fulneſs of it in Chriſt, and the Goſpel; and to put them upon their guard againſt falſe teachers: leſt any man ſhould beguile you with enticing words; by which are meant, not apt and pertinent words, ſuch as are ſuited to the minds of men, and proper to convey right ideas of divine truth, poignant expreſſions, ſound ſpeech, and ſtrong reaſonings; for ſuch the Apoſtle himſelf uſed, and yet not enticing words of mens wiſdom; and which deſign mere words, great ſwelling words of vanity, which like bubbles look big, and make a great noiſe, but contain nothing but wind and emptineſs; fair ſpeeches, ſpecious pretences, falſe colourings, fallacious reaſonings, a ſhew of probability, and appearance of ſcience, falſly ſo called; whereby deceitful workers, ſuch as the followers of Simon Magus and the Gnoſticks uſed, whom the Apoſtle had in view; beguiled unſtable ſouls, and deceived the hearts of the ſimple; wherefore the Apoſtle ſaid the above things, ſhewing that all true wiſdom was in Chriſt, and all ſpiritual knowledge was in the pure and unmixed Goſpel; which was not to be parted with for other things, which through art and management, and the cunning craftineſs of men, might at firſt ſight carry in them a ſhew of probability, an appearance of truth. The gold, the ſilver, and precious ſtones of divine truths, which have been proved by the ſtandard, are not to be given up for ſuch as only look like them, being wrought up through the fallacy of men; who by a ſett of unmeaning words, paralogiſms, and falſe reaſonings, lie in wait to deceive.

Ver. 5. For though I be abſent in the fleſh, &c.] Or body, as the Ethiopic verſion reads it, and as it is expreſſed in 1 Cor. v. 3. here the Apoſtle anticipates an objection which might be made, how he could have ſuch a conflict and concern for them, and expreſs ſo much affection for them, and know ſo much of their affairs, in what condition and ſituation they were, and how liable to be deceived by falſe teachers, when he was abſent from them, and had never been among them. That he had never been corporally preſent with them, nor was he then, he owns; but this did not hinder but that he might be in another ſenſe preſent with them, and ſo have cognizance of them and their ſtate, and be affected towards them, and concerned for them: yet am I with you in the ſpirit; as he was with the Corinthians in the place above cited, judging the inceſtuous perſon, determining concerning his caſe, and delivering him up to ſatan, and ſo he was with theſe Coloſſians; for as he was a member of the ſame body with them, he was actuated by the ſame Spirit; and by virtue of their union to each other in their common head, his ſpirit went out towards them, his heart was knit unto them; he had the ſame affection for them, and care of them, though he had never ſeen them with his bodily eyes, as he had for thoſe whom he had ſeen: moreover, this may regard that extraordinary diſcerning and preſence of his ſpirit which he had; and which was of the ſame kind with that of Eliſha, when his ſervant Gehazi went after Naaman the Syrian, and took a preſent of him, to whom on his return he ſaid, upon his denying that he had been any where, went not mine heart with thee, when the man turned again from his chariot to meet thee? 2 Kings v. 26. Eliſha's ſpirit went and was preſent with him, and ſaw and knew all that paſſed, being under the impulſe and inſpiration of the Spirit of God, who made all known unto him: ſo the ſpirit of the Apoſtle Paul was at the church at Coloſſe, and ſaw and diſcerned their whole eſtate; this being made known by the Spirit of God, under whoſe inſpiration he wrote this letter, ſuitable to their caſe: joying and beholding your order; or as the Syriac verſion renders it, I rejoice that I can ſee your order; that is, with pleaſure obſerve, conſider it, and contemplate on it; and that partly from the relation of Epaphras, and chiefly from the intimations of the Spirit of God in an extraordinary way: by their order is meant, either their orderly walk and converſation, which being as becomes the Goſpel of Chriſt, was very pleaſing and delightful to the Apoſtle; or rather the order of their church diſcipline, they having regular officers, paſtors, and deacons, ordained among them; who rightly performed their offices, and had reſpect and ſubjection yielded to them; the ordinances of the Goſpel were duly adminiſtered, and conſtantly attended on; the members of the church were watched over, admonitions given, and cenſures laid where they were neceſſary, and every thing was done decently and in order; which was a beautiful ſight, and gave the Apoſtle an uncommon pleaſure. The word uſed, ſignifies a military order, ſuch as is obſerved in armies, in battle array; ſuggeſting, that theſe chriſtians were good ſoldiers of Chriſt, were enliſted under his banners, and kept in due order, in rank and file; ſtood faſt in one ſpirit, contended and ſtrove together for the faith of the Goſpel, fought the good fight of faith, nor could any hardſhip move them from their ſtation; ſo that they were in the Apoſtle's eye, beautiful as Tirzah, comely as Jeruſalem, and terrible as an army with banners, Cant. vi. 4. and ſo may denote their attachment to the Goſpel, and to one another; they were united to, and abode by each other; they ſerved the Lord with one conſent, and kept the unity of the Spirit, in the bond of peace, which is a pleaſant thing to behold, as well as what follows: and the ſtedfaſtneſs of your faith in Chriſt; either in the grace of faith, and the exerciſe of it on Chriſt, in oppoſition to doubtings and unbelief; whereby God is honoured, and with which he is well pleaſed; ſouls are filled with peace and joy; ſatan is reſiſted and overcome; and the hearts of others, particularly miniſters of the Goſpel, are comforted: or in the doctrine of faith reſpecting Chriſt, in which they ſtood faſt; notwithſtanding there was a majority againſt it, the wiſe and learned, the rich and mighty, did not receive it; and tho' it was oppoſed by falſe teachers, perſecuted by profane men, and loaded with reproach and obloquy; and alſo in the profeſſion of it, which they held without wavering: now to ſee a ſett of chriſtians, a church of Chriſt walking together in Goſpel order, ſteady in their faith on Chriſt, abiding by the doctrine of faith, and maintaining an honourable profeſſion, how beautiful and delightful is it!

[q] Jonathan ben Uzziel in Exod. xl. 4.

Ver. 6. As ye have therefore received Chriſt Jeſus the Lord, &c.] Receiving Chriſt, is believing in him: faith is the eye of the ſoul, that ſees the beauty, glory, fulneſs, and ſuitableneſs of Chriſt; the foot that goes to him, and the hand that takes hold on him, and the arm that receives and embraces him; ſo that this is not a receiving him into the head by notion, but into the heart by faith; and not in part only, but in whole: faith receives a whole Chriſt, his perſon as God and man; him in all his offices, as prophet, prieſt, and king; particularly as a ſaviour and redeemer, he being under that character ſo exceeding ſuitable to the caſe of a ſenſible ſinner; and it receives all bleſſings of grace along with him, from him, and through him; as a juſtifying righteouſneſs, remiſſion of ſins, adoption of children, grace for grace, and an inheritance among all them that are ſanctified; and both Chriſt and them, as the free grace gifts of God; which men are altogether undeſerving of, and can't poſſibly give any valuable conſideration for: ſo theſe Coloſſians had received Chriſt gladly, joyfully, willingly, and with all readineſs; and eſpecially as the Lord, on which there is a peculiar emphaſis in the text; they had received him and believed in him, as the one and only Lord and head of the church; as the one and only mediator between God and man, to the excluſion of angels, the worſhip of which the falſe teachers were introducing; they had received the doctrines of Chriſt, and not the laws of Moſes, which Judaizing preachers were deſirous of joining with them; they had heard and obeyed the Son, and not the ſervant; they had ſubmitted to the authority of Chriſt as king of ſaints, and had been ſubject to his ordinances; wherefore the Apoſtle exhorts them to continue and go on, believing in him, and holding to him the head: ſo walk ye in him; not only in imitation of him as he walked, in the exerciſe of grace, as love, patience, humility, and meekneſs, and in the diſcharge of duty; but by faith in him, going on in a way of believing in him, always looking to him, leaning on him, and deriving grace and ſtrength from him: to walk in Chriſt, is to walk in and after the Spirit of Chriſt, under his influence, by his direction, and through his aſſiſtance; and to walk in the doctrine of Chriſt, abiding by it, and increaſing in the knowledge of it; and to walk in the ordinances of Chriſt, which with his preſence and Spirit, are ways of pleaſantneſs and paths of peace: particularly here it may ſignify, to make uſe of Chriſt, and walk on in him, as the way, truth and the life; as the only way of acceſs to God, and acceptance with him; as the way of ſalvation, as the only true way to eternal life and happineſs, in oppoſition to every creature, angels, or men; the worſhipping of the one, or works done by the other.

Ver. 7. Rooted and built up in him, &c.] By theſe metaphors, the Apoſtle expreſſes the ſafe and happy ſtate of theſe believers; and which he makes uſe of as arguments, to engage them to walk on in Chriſt, and as pointing out the manner in which they ſhould. Believers are ſometimes compared to trees, and are trees of righteouſneſs, the planting of the Lord; and their root is Chriſt, from whence as ſuch they ſpring, and by whom they are filled with the fruits of righteouſneſs; in him they are to abide, keep cloſe unto him, and walk in him; deriving all their life, nouriſhment, fruitfulneſs, grace, and perſeverance in it, from him as their root: they are alſo ſometimes compared to a building, to an houſe, a temple, an habitation for God; and Chriſt is the ſure and only foundation, on which they are laid, and where they are ſafe and ſecure; and being fitly joined together, grow up as an holy temple to the Lord; and this being their caſe, they are to go on laying the whole ſtreſs of their ſalvation on him, building their faith and hope of eternal glory entirely upon him; and building up one another alſo on their moſt holy faith, of which he is the ſubſtance, as it follows: and ſtabliſhed in the faith; that of Chriſt, or in the doctrine of faith which reſpects Chriſt: the Apoſtle here expreſſes the ſame thing without a figure, which he had ſignified by the two foregoing metaphors, and explains what he means by them; namely, that they were well ſettled and grounded in their faith in Chriſt, and thoroughly inſtructed and eſtabliſhed in the doctrines of the Goſpel; and a very good thing it is, to have the heart eſtabliſhed with grace, both as a principle and a doctrine; which is God's work, and was the happy caſe of theſe perſons; wherefore it became them to act as ſuch, and not be like children toſſed to and fro with every wind of doctrine, or carried about with divers and ſtrange doctrines, but abide by thoſe which had been preached to them by the faithful miniſters of Chriſt, and they had received: as ye have been taught; by Epaphras their miniſter, and others; and therefore ſhould not liſten to falſe teachers, and to a contrary doctrine taught by them; conſidering of whom they had learnt the true doctrine, what evidence it carried with it, and what uſe it had been of to them, in convincing, converting, comforting, inſtructing, and eſtabliſhing them: and therefore ſhould be abounding therein with thankſgiving; that is, in the faith; as in the grace, ſo in the doctrine of faith; for as ſaints are to abound in the work of the Lord, and in every good work, and in the exerciſe of every grace, ſo in the knowledge of truth; ſee 2 Cor. viii. 7. and to make uſe of all means for the increaſe of, and growth in Goſpel grace and light, and the knowledge of a crucified Chriſt, which is meant by abounding: for all which there's great reaſon for thankſgiving; both for the unſpeakable gift of Chriſt, who is received as ſuch by faith, and in whom believers are rooted and built up; and for faith itſelf, which is the gift of God; and alſo for the Goſpel, and the truths of it; and for every degree of ſpiritual light in it, and knowledge of it.

Ver. 8. Beware leſt any man ſpoil you, &c.] Or deſpoil you; rob you of the rich treaſure of the Goſpel, ſtrip you of your ſpiritual armour, take away from you the truths and doctrines of Chriſt, and deveſt you of your ſpiritual privileges and bleſſings; ſuggeſting, that the falſe teachers were thieves and robbers, and men of prey: or drive and carry you away as ſpoils, as the innocent harmleſs ſheep are drove, and carried away by wolves, and by the thief that comes to ſteal, to kill, and deſtroy; intimating, that ſuch as theſe were the hereticks of thoſe times; wherefore it became them to be upon their guard, to watch, look out, and beware, leſt they ſhould be ſurprized by theſe deceitful workers, who lay in wait to deceive; were wolves in ſheep's cloathing, who transformed themſelves into the Apoſtles of Chriſt; and therefore it became them to take heed, leſt any man hurt them, be he ever ſo wiſe and learned, or be thought ever ſo good, religious, and ſincere; ſince men of this caſt put on ſuch maſks and falſe appearances, on purpoſe to beguile. The things by which they impoſed upon weak minds are as follow, and therefore to be ſhunned, avoided, and rejected: through philoſophy; not right philoſophy, or true wiſdom, the knowledge of God, of the things of nature, of things natural, moral, and civil; which may be attained unto by the uſe of reaſon, and light of nature. The Apoſtle does not mean to condemn all arts and ſciences, as uſeleſs and hurtful, ſuch as natural philoſophy in its various branches, ethics, logic, rhetoric, &c. when kept within due bounds, and in their proper place and ſphere; for with inſtances of theſe, the ſcriptures themſelves abound; but he means that philoſophy, or ſcience, which is falſly ſo called, the falſe notions of philoſophers; ſuch as the eternity of matter, and of this world, the mortality of ſouls, the worſhipping of dæmons and angels, &c. and alſo ſuch principles in philoſophy, which in themſelves, and in the things of nature are true, but when applied to divine things, to things above nature, the meer effects of divine power and grace, and of pure revelation, are falſe; as that out of nothing, nothing can be made, which in the things of nature is true, but not to be applied to the God of nature, who has made the world out of nothing; as alſo that from a privation to an habit, there is no return, which is naturally true, but not to be applied to ſupernatural things, and ſupernatural agency; witneſs the miracles of Chriſt, in reſtoring ſight to the blind, life to the dead, &c. and therefore is not to be employed againſt the reſurrection of the dead: philoſophy may be uſeful as an handmaid; 'tis not to be a miſtreſs in theological things; it may ſubſerve, but not govern; it is not to be made uſe of as a judge, or rule in ſuch matters; the natural man, on theſe principles, neither knows nor receives the things of the Spirit of God; judgment is not to be made, and formed according to them; as of a Trinity of perſons in the Godhead; of the ſonſhip of Chriſt, and his incarnation; of man's redemption by him, of reconciliation and ſatisfaction by his blood and ſacrifice, of the pardon of ſin, of a ſinner's juſtification, of the reſurrection of the dead, and ſuch like articles of faith: that philoſophy which is right, can only be a rule of judgment in things relating to it, and not in thoſe which are out of its ſphere: in a word, the Apoſtle here condemns the philoſophy of the Jews, and of the Gnoſticks; the former had introduced natural philoſophy into the worſhip and ſervice of God, and the things appertaining to their religion; and had made the tabernacle and temple, and the moſt holy place, and the things belonging thereunto, emblems and hieroglyphics of natural things; as of the ſun, moon, and ſtars, and their influences, and of the four elements, and of moral virtue, &c. as appears from the writings of Joſephus[r], and Philo[s]; when they were types and repreſentatives of ſpiritual things under the Goſpel diſpenſation; and the latter had brought in the philoſophy of Pythagoras and Plato, concerning abſtinencies, purgations, ſacrifices, and ceremonies of worſhip, given to dæmons and angels: in ſhort, the Apoſtle's meaning is, that philoſophy is not to be mixed with the pure Goſpel of Chriſt; it has always been fatal to it; witneſs the ſchool of Pantænus in Alexandria, in the early times of chriſtianity, by which the ſimplicity of the Goſpel was greatly corrupted; and the race of ſchoolmen a few centuries ago, who introduced the philoſophy of Ariſtotle, Averrois, and others, into all the ſubjects of divinity: to obſerve no more, ſuch kind of philoſophy is here meant, which may be truly called vain deceit; that is, that which is vain and empty, and has no ſolid foundation, even in nature and reaſon itſelf; and which being applied to divine things and religious obſervances, is deceitful and deluſory: after the tradition of men; either of the Gentiles, who had their traditions in religion; or of the Jews, called the traditions of the elders, and of the fathers, which the Phariſees were fond of, by which they tranſgreſſed the commandments of God; which the Apoſtle was brought up in, and was zealous of formerly, but now was delivered from, and rightly condemned, as idle, trifling, and pernicious: after the rudiments of the world, or the elements of the world; not the four elements of earth, air, fire, and water; or the worſhip of the ſun, moon, and ſtars, &c. among the idolatrous Gentiles, but the ceremonial laws of the Jews; ſee Gal. iv. 3, 9. which were that to them in religion, as the A B C, or letters, are in grammar, the elements and rudiments of it; and though theſe were to them when children uſeful, but now under the Goſpel diſpenſation are weak, beggarly, and uſeleſs, and not to be attended to: and not after Chriſt; what he has taught and preſcribed, the doctrines and commandments of Chriſt, the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge which are in him; and therefore all ſuch vain and deceitful philoſophy, human traditions, and worldly rudiments, are to be rejected; Chriſt and his Goſpel, the revelation he has made, are the ſtandard of doctrine and worſhip; he only is to be heard and attended to, and whatever is contrary thereunto, is to be guarded againſt.

Ver. 9. For in him dwelleth all the fulneſs of the Godhead bodily.] This is to be underſtood, not of the doctrine, or Goſpel of Chriſt, as being a perfect revelation of the will of God; but of Chriſt, and particularly of his human nature, as conſiſting of a true body and a reaſonable ſoul, in which the Godhead dwells in a moſt eminent manner: God indeed is every where by his powerful preſence, was in the tabernacle and temple in a very ſingular manner, and dwells in the ſaints in a way of ſpecial grace; but reſides in the human nature of Chriſt, in the higheſt and moſt exalted manner; that is to deity, what the human body is to an human ſoul, it is the houſe in which it dwells: ſo Philo the Jew [t], calls the Logos the houſe of God, who is the ſoul of the univerſe; and elſewhere ſays [u], that God himſelf has filled the divine Logos wholly with incorporeal powers. The Godhead dwells in Chriſt as in a tabernacle, in alluſion to the tabernacle of Moſes, which looked mean without ſide, but glorious within; where God granted his preſence, and accepted the ſacrifices of his people; the human nature of Chriſt, is the true antitypical tabernacle, which God pitched and not man; and ſometimes is called a temple, in alluſion to Solomon's; and which is filled with the train of the divine perfections, ſignified by fulneſs here: for not the fulneſs of grace, or a communicative fulneſs, is here meant; nor the relative fulneſs the church; but the fulneſs of the divine nature, of all the perfections of deity, ſuch as eternity, immenſity, omnipreſence, omnipotence, omniſcience, immutability, neceſſary and ſelf-exiſtence, and every other; for if any one perfection was wanting, the fulneſs, much leſs all the fulneſs of the Godhead, would not be in him. The act of inhabitation, denotes the union of the two natures in Chriſt, and expreſſes the diſtinction of them; and is to be underſtood of the Godhead, as ſubſiſting in the perſon of the Son of God, and not as ſubſiſting in the perſon of the Father, or of the Spirit; and ſhews the permanency of this union, 'tis a perpetual abiding one; and this fulneſs is not dependant on the Father's pleaſure; it is not ſaid of this as of another fulneſs, ch. i. 19. that it pleaſed the Father that it ſhould dwell in him: the manner in which it dwells, is bodily; not by power as in the univerſe; nor by grace as in the ſaints; nor by any glorious emanations of it as in heaven; nor by gifts, as in the prophets and eminent men of God; nor by ſigns, ſymbols, and ſhadows, as in the tabernacle and temple; but eſſentially and perſonally, or by perſonal union of the divine nature, as ſubſiſting in the Son of God to an human body, choſen and prepared for that purpoſe, together with a reaſonable human ſoul; which is the great myſtery of godlineſs, the glory of the chriſtian religion, and what qualified Chriſt for, and recommends him to us as a Saviour; and is a reaſon why, as theſe words are, that the Goſpel ſhould be abode by, continued in, and that with thankfulneſs; nor ſhould any regard be had to vain and deceitful philoſophy, to the traditions of men, or rudiments of the world: Chriſt only is to be looked to, attended and followed, who has all fulneſs in him.

Ver. 10. And ye are compleat in him, &c.] Or filled up, or filled full in him; that is, are perfect in him: ſaints are in Chriſt, and all fulneſs being in him, they are full too, of as much as they ſtand in need, and are capable of containing: for theſe words are not an exhortation to perfection, as the Arabic verſion reads them, be ye compleat in him, like thoſe in Gen. xvii. 1. Matt. v. 48. 2 Cor. xiii. 11. but are an affirmation, aſſerting not what the ſaints ſhall be hereafter, or in heaven, but what they now are; not in themſelves, for in themſelves none are perfect, not even thoſe who are truly ſanctified; for though all grace is ſeminally implanted in them, and they have a perfection of parts, of all the parts of the new man, or new creature, and are perfect in compariſon of what they ſometimes were, and of profane perſons and hypocrites, and with reſpect to weaker believers, yet none are abſolutely perfect; the good work of grace is not yet finiſhed in them, ſin dwells in them, they are full of wants and complaints; the beſt of them diſclaim perfection as attained to by them, and expreſs their deſires of it; but they are perfect in Chriſt their head, who has all fulneſs in him, in whom they are choſen and bleſſed: they are compleat and perfect in him as to ſanctification; he having all fulneſs of grace and holineſs for them, they have it in him; and he is made perfect ſanctification to them: and as to juſtification, he has perfectly fulfilled the law for them, he has made full atonement for ſin, has obtained eternal redemption, brought in a compleat and perfect righteouſneſs, by which they are juſtified from all things; are freed from ſin, and made perfectly comely, without ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing: and as to knowledge, though it is imperfect in them in their preſent ſtate, yet in Chriſt all the treaſures of it are, and they have no need to go elſewhere for any; they are filled with the knowledge of God and of his will, and are compleat therein in Chriſt; and what knowledge they have, is eternal life, the beginning, pledge, and earneſt of it; ſo that they have no reaſon to be beholden to angels or men, only to Chriſt: which is the head of all principality and power; not only of the body the church, and who is to be held unto as ſuch, from whom all light, life, grace, and ſtrength are to be derived; but of all others, though in a different ſenſe; and not only of the kings, princes, and potentates of this world, who hold their kingdoms, and receive their crowns from him, and rule by him; but alſo of the angels good and bad, often called principalities and powers; eſpecially the former is here meant, of whom Chriſt is head, being their creator, governor, and upholder; who not only maintains them in their beings, but has confirmed them in their ſtate of holineſs; ſo that they are dependant upon him, and beholden to him for all they have and are: with the Jews, Metatron, which with them is the name of the angel in Exod. xxiii. 20. and ſeems to be a corruption of the word mediator, and to deſign the Meſſiah, is ſaid [w] to be king over all the angels. This is mentioned, partly to ſet forth the glory and excellency of Chriſt; and partly againſt worſhipping of angels, making uſe of them as mediators, or applying to them on any account, ſince Chriſt is the head of theſe, and of every creature; therefore no creature is to be looked and applied unto, truſted and depended on: unleſs rather ſhould be meant, the Jewiſh rulers, Scribes and Phariſees, their doctors, wiſe men, and Rabbins, called the princes of this world; the Jews tutors, and governors, to whom Chriſt is ſuperior; he's the only maſter and father, and in whom perfection of wiſdom is, and not in them; and therefore ſhould not regard them, their vain philoſophy, worldly rudiments and traditions.

[u] De Somniis, p. 574.

Ver. 11. In whom alſo ye are circumciſed, &c.] This is ſaid, to prevent an objection that might be made to the perfection of theſe Gentile believers, becauſe they were not circumciſed; for the Jews thought that perfection lay in circumciſion, at leaſt that there could be no perfection without it: "great is circumciſion, ſay they [x], for notwithſtanding all the commands which Abraham our father did, he was not called perfect until he was circumciſed; as it is written, Gen. xvii. 1. walk before me, and be thou perfect:" which objection the Apoſtle anticipates, by obſerving, that they were circumciſed in Chriſt their head, who is made unto them ſanctification; and by him as the meritorious and efficient cauſe of their regeneration and converſion, or internal circumciſion, the antitype and perfection of circumciſion in the fleſh; for the former, and not the latter, is here meant: theſe believers were circumciſed in Chriſt, or by him; not with external circumciſion, which was peculiar to the Jews, the natural ſeed of Abraham, prefigured Chriſt, and had its accompliſhment in him, the body, and ſubſtance of all the ſhadows of the ceremonial law; and ſo was now nothing, either to Jew or Gentile: as for the Gentiles, they never were obliged unto it; and as for the Jews, it was an inſupportable yoke to them, binding them to keep the whole law of Moſes, which they could not do, and ſo it made nothing perfect; but Chriſt the ſubſtance of that, and the end of the whole law has, the head of the body the church, in whom all the members of it are compleat, and are circumciſed: with the circumciſion made without hands; which is that of the heart, in the ſpirit; every man, though he may be circumciſed in the fleſh, is uncircumciſed in heart, until he is circumciſed by Chriſt and his Spirit; which is done, when he is pricked to the heart, and thoroughly convinced of ſin, and the exceeding ſinfulneſs of it; when the callouſneſs and hardneſs of his heart is taken off and removed, and the iniquity of it is laid open, the plague and corruption in it diſcerned, and all made naked and bare to the ſinner's view; and when he is in pain on account of it, is broken and groans under a ſenſe of it, and is filled with ſhame for it, and loathing and abhorrence of it: now this is effected not by the hand of man, as the Ethiopic verſion reads it, as outward circumciſion was; this is not done by any creature whatever; not by angels, who rejoice at the repentance of ſinners, but can't produce it; nor by miniſters of the Goſpel, who at moſt are but inſtruments of regeneration and converſion; nor by men themſelves; this is not by might or power of man, by the ſtrength of his free-will, but by the Spirit of God: for though men are ſometimes exhorted to circumciſe themſelves, as in Deut. x. 16. Jer. iv. 4. in order to convince them of the corruption of their nature, and the need they ſtand in of ſpiritual circumciſion; yet whereas there is an utter diſability in them to effect it, and they need the power and grace of God for that purpoſe, the Lord has graciouſly promiſed his people to do it himſelf for them, Deut. xxx. 6. ſo that this circumciſion is in the ſame ſenſe made without hands, as the human nature of Chriſt is ſaid to be a tabernacle not made with hands, that is of men, but of God, being what God has pitched, and not man; and it ſtands oppoſed to circumciſion in the fleſh, which was made with hands, Eph. ii. 11. and by ſome inſtrument, as a ſharp knife or ſtone: in putting off the body of the ſins of the fleſh. The Vulgate Latin verſion leaves out the word ſins, and ſo the Alexandrian copy and ſome others; and the Syriac verſion the word body: by the fleſh is meant, corrupt nature, which is born of the fleſh, and propagated in a carnal way, and is the ſource and ſpring of all ſin; by the ſins of it are intended, the works of the fleſh, the inward motions of ſin in the members, and the outward actions of it: theſe are ſaid to be a body, becauſe ſin conſiſts of various parts and members, as a body does; and theſe united together, and which receive frequent and daily additions; and which are committed and yielded to by the members of the natural body; and which body and bulk of ſins ariſing from the corruption of nature, are compared to a garment, and a very filthy one it is; in the putting off of which, lies ſpiritual circumciſion: this is done ſeveral ways; partly by Chriſt's wrapping himſelf in the ſins of his people, bearing them in his body, and becoming a ſacrifice for them, whereby the old man was crucified, and the body of ſin deſtroyed; and by an application of his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, to the conſciences of his people, whereby their iniquities are cauſed to paſs from them, and they are cloathed with change of raiment; and by the power of his Spirit, laying ſin under the reſtraints of grace, not ſuffering it to have dominion, but cauſing grace to reign through righteouſneſs; and by the ſaints themſelves, under the influence of grace, who put off the old man with his deeds, according to the former converſation: by the circumciſion of Chriſt; not that with which Chriſt was circumciſed at eight days old, that he might appear to be truly man, and a ſon of Abraham, and under the law, and to fulfil all the righteouſneſs of it, but that which he by his Spirit is the author of, and what is before expreſſed.

Ver. 12. Buried with him in baptiſm, &c.] The Apoſtle goes on to obſerve, how compleat and perfect the ſaints are in Chriſt; that they are not only circumciſed in him in a ſpiritual ſenſe, and the body of the ſins of their fleſh is put off, and removed from them, in alluſion to the cutting off and caſting away of the foreſkin in circumciſion; but that they and all their ſins, were buried with Chriſt, of which their baptiſm in water, was a lively repreſentation; ſentation: Chriſt having died for their ſins, was laid in the grave, where he continued for a while, and then roſe again; and as they were crucified with him, they were alſo buried with him, as their head and repreſentative; and all their ſins too, which he left behind him in the grave, ſignified by his grave cloaths there; and baptiſm being performed by immerſion, when the perſon baptized is covered with water, and as it were buried in it, is a very ſignificant emblem of all this; 'tis a repreſentation of the burial of Chriſt, and very fitly holds him forth to the view of faith in the ſtate of the dead, in the grave, and points out the place where the Lord lay; and it is alſo a repreſentation of our burial with him, as being dead to ſin, to the law, and to the world, by him. This ſhows now, that baptiſm was performed by dipping, or covering the whole body in water, for no other form of adminiſtration of baptiſm, as ſprinkling, or pouring water on the face, can repreſent a burial, or be called one; and this is what many learned interpreters own, and obſerve on this place: wherein alſo ye are riſen with him; Chriſt is riſen from the dead as the head and repreſentative of his people, and they are riſen with him; and their baptiſm is alſo an emblem of his and their reſurrection, being adminiſtered by immerſion, in which way only this can be ſignified; for as the going down into the water, and being under it, repreſents Chriſt's deſcending into the ſtate of the dead, and his continuance in it, ſo the emerſion, or coming up out of the water, repreſents his riſing from the dead, and that of his people in him, in order to walk in newneſs of life; for the Apoſtle's meaning is, that in baptiſm ſaints are riſen with Chriſt, as well as in it buried with him: and this through the faith of the operation of God; that is, it is through faith that ſaints ſee themſelves buried and riſen with Chriſt, to which the ordinance of baptiſm is greatly aſſiſting, where there is true faith; for otherwiſe without faith, this ordinance will be of no uſe to any ſuch end and purpoſe; and it is not any faith that will avail, but that which is of God's operation; faith is not naturally in men, all men have it not; and thoſe that have it, have it not of themſelves, it is the gift of God; it is what he works in them, and by his power performs: who hath raiſed him from the dead; this is a periphraſis of God the Father, to whom the reſurrection of Chriſt from the dead is generally aſcribed; though not to the excluſion of Chriſt, and of the Spirit, who were alſo concerned; and is here added, partly to ſhew in what reſpect faith, which is God's work, has him for its object, as having raiſed Chriſt from the dead, who was delivered for offences, but is riſen again through the power of God for juſtification, and whoever with his heart believes this, ſhall be ſaved; and partly to ſhew, that the ſame power is exerted in working true faith in the heart, as was put forth in raiſing Chriſt from the dead.

[w] Zohar in Deut. fol. 120. 3.

[x] Miſn. Nedarim, c. 3. §. 11.

Ver. 13. And you being dead in your ſins, &c.] Not corporally, though ſin had ſubjected them to a corporal death, and their bodies were really mortal, and in a little time muſt die; but morally, ſin had brought a death upon them in a moral ſenſe, they were ſeparated from God, as at death the body is from the ſoul, and ſo were alienated from the life of God, and conſequently muſt be dead; they had loſt the image of God, which conſiſted in knowledge, righteouſneſs, and holineſs; and were dead as to the underſtanding of what was good, as to their affections for it, or will and capacity to do it; and like dead men, were inſenſible of their ſtate, their ſin, and miſery; and altogether inactive and helpleſs in ſpiritual things, being deſtitute of ſpiritual life, ſtrength, and motion; and were moreover in themſelves deſerving of eternal death, and according to the law of works, under the ſentence of it, and ſo liable and expoſed unto it; and all this for, and on account of their ſins, their actual ſins and tranſgreſſions here meant; which ſeparated them from God, deformed his image in them, and hardened their hearts, that they had no true ſight and ſenſe of themſelves; as alſo on account of the corruption of their nature, ſignified in the next clauſe: and the uncircumciſion of your fleſh; which is to be taken not literally, for the prepuce, or foreſkin of their fleſh, which was a ſign and token of the corruption of nature, but figuratively, that itſelf; it being uſual with the Jews, to call the vitioſity of nature, ערל, uncircumciſion; which they ſay [y], is one of the ſeven names of, יצר רע, the evil imagination, or corrupt nature, denoting the pollution, loathſomeneſs, and abominableneſs of it: hath he quickned together with him; that is, with Chriſt: this may be underſtood either of the quickening of them in converſion and ſanctification; for as they were dead in ſin in a moral ſenſe, in converſion a principle of life was implanted in them, or grace as a living principle, was wrought in their ſouls by the Spirit of life from Chriſt; ſo that they could ſee their loſt ſtate, their need of Chriſt, the glory of his perſon and righteouſneſs, the fulneſs and ſuitableneſs of his grace; feel their burdens, and handle the word of life; could hear the Goſpel, ſpeak the language of Canaan, breathe in prayer and ſpiritual deſires, walk in Chriſt, and do all things through him; and this was God's act and not theirs, and owing to his rich mercy and great love: and this may be ſaid to be done with Chriſt, becauſe this is in conſequence of his being quickened, or raiſed from the dead; and by it they were made partakers of the life of Chriſt, they became one ſpirit with him; and it was not ſo much they that lived, but Chriſt lived in them; and beſides, they were quickened in order to live a life of grace and communion with him here, and of glory hereafter: or it may be interpreted of the quickning of them in juſtification; and the rather, becauſe of what is ſaid in the next clauſe; and that either openly, as when a ſinner is convinced that he is dead in a law ſenſe, and faith is wrought in him to behold pardon and righteouſneſs in Chriſt; upon which he prays for the one, and pleads the other; and the Spirit of God ſeals unto him the pardon of his ſins, brings near the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, enables him to lay hold on it as his, and pronounces him juſtified by it; and may well be called juſtification of life, for he is then alive in a law ſenſe, in his own comfortable view and apprehenſion of things: or ſecretly in Chriſt, as the head and repreſentative of all his people; who when he was quickned, they were quickned with him; when he roſe from the dead, they roſe with him; and when he was juſtified, they were juſtified in him, and this ſeems to be the true ſenſe of this paſſage: having forgiven you all treſpaſſes. This was a paſt act, being done and over; not only at firſt converſion, when a diſcovery of it was made, but at the death of Chriſt, whoſe blood was ſhed for the remiſſion of ſin; yea, even as early as Chriſt became a ſurety, when the ſins of his people were not imputed to them, but to him: and this was a ſingle act, and done and compleat at once; forgiveneſs of ſin is not done by piece-meals, or at different times, or by divers acts, but is done at once, and includes ſin paſt, preſent, and to come; and is univerſal, reaches to all ſin, original and actual, before and after converſion; ſins of thought, word, and action: and this is God's act, and his only; not men, nor miniſters, nor angels, can forgive ſin; this is the peculiar prerogative of God, and is owing to his abundant mercy and free grace, and which is ſignified by the word here uſed. The Syriac and Arabic verſions read, having forgiven us all our treſpaſſes; and ſo the Alexandrian copy and ſome others, read us inſtead of you.

[y] Zohar in Exod. fol. 106. 1. Caphtor, fol. 52. 2.

Ver. 14. Blotting out the hand-writing of ordinances, &c.] Various are the ſenſes interpreters give of theſe words; ſome think by the hand-writing is meant, the covenant God made with Adam, Gen. ii. 17. which being broken, obliged him and all his poſterity to the penalty of death, but is cancelled and aboliſhed by Chriſt; others the agreement which the Iſraelites made with God at mount Sinai, when they ſaid, all that the Lord hath ſaid will we do, and be obedient, Exod. xxiv. 7. which was as it were ſetting their hands, and laying themſelves under obligation to obedience, and in caſe of failure, to the penalty of the law; others, God's book of remembrance of the ſins of men, out of which they are blotted when pardoned; others the book of conſcience, which bears witneſs to every debt, to every violation and tranſgreſſion of the law, which may be ſaid to be blotted out, when pacified with an application of the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt; rather with others it ſignifies the ceremonial law, which lay in divers ordinances and commands, and is what the Apoſtle afterwards ſpeaks of more clearly and particularly; and may be called ſo, becauſe ſubmiſſion to it was an acknowledgment, both of the filth and guilt of ſin; every waſhing was ſaying, that a man was polluted and unclean; and every ſacrifice was ſigning a man's own guilt and condemnation, and teſtifying that he deſerved to die as the creature did, which was offered in ſacrifice: or rather the whole law of Moſes is intended, which was the hand-writing of God, and obliged to obedience to it, and to puniſhment in caſe of diſobedience; and this the Jews[z] call, שטר חוב, the writing of the debt, and is the very phraſe the Syriac verſion uſes here: now this was as a debt book, which ſhewed and teſtified the debts of men; that is, their ſins, how many they are guilty of, and what puniſhment is due unto them: and may well be ſaid to be that that was againſt us, which was contrary to us; its nature being holy, juſt, good, and ſpiritual, is contrary to the unholy and carnal heart of man, and its commands diſagreeable to his mind and will; nor can he perform what it requires; nor can he be ſubject to it without the grace of God, any more than he can like its precepts; and beſides, it is contrary to him, and againſt him, as it charges him with debts, and proves them upon him, ſo that he has nothing to ſay in his defence; yea, it proceeds againſt him, and curſes and condemns, and kills him: but God has blotted it out, Chriſt having engaged as a ſurety for his people, to pay off all their debts; and this being done by him, God has croſſed the debt book of the law, has blotted it out, ſo that this book is of no force; it does not ſtand againſt theſe perſons, it can't ſhew or prove any ſtanding debt, it can't demand any, or inflict any penalty: nay, he has took it out of the way; it is not to be ſeen or looked into as a debt book; it is aboliſhed and done away; it is no more as adminiſtered by Moſes, as a covenant of works, or as to its rigorous exaction, curſe, and condemnation; this is true of the whole law of Moſes, as well as of the ceremonial, which is utterly aboliſhed and diſannulled in every ſenſe, becauſe of the weakneſs and unprofitableneſs of it: nailing it to his croſs; to the croſs of Chriſt, ſhewing that the abolition of it is owing to the croſs of Chriſt; where and when he bore the curſe and penalty of the law for his people, as well as anſwered all the types and ſhadows of it: it is thought to be an alluſion to a cuſtom in ſome countries, to cancel bonds, or antiquate edicts and decrees, by driving a nail through them, ſo that they could not be legible any more: or it may be to the writing of Pilate, which contained the charge and accuſation againſt Chriſt; and which was placed over his head upon the croſs, and faſtened to it with nails[a]; every nail in the croſs made a ſciſſure in this hand-writing, or bond of the law, that lay againſt us, whereby it was ſo rent and torn, as to be of no force: thus the Holy Ghoſt makes uſe of various expreſſions, to ſhew that there is nothing in the law ſtanding againſt the ſaints; it is blotted out, and can't be read; it is took away, and can't be ſeen; it is nailed to the croſs of Chriſt, and is torn to pieces thereby, that nothing can ever be produced from it to their hurt and condemnation.

Ver. 15. And having ſpoiled principalities and powers, &c.] Principalities of hell, the infernal powers of darkneſs, the devil that had the power of death, the accuſer of the brethren, who often objected their debts, with all his works and poſſe: theſe Chriſt has deveſted of their armour, wherein they truſted to have ruined men, as ſin, the law, and death; he has ranſomed his people from him that was ſtronger than they, and taken the prey out of the hands of the mighty; he has bruiſed the ſerpent's head, demoliſhed his works, deſtroyed him himſelf, and all his powers, and defeated all their counſels and deſigns againſt his elect: ſome render the word απεκδυσαμενος, having put off, or uncloathed; and which ſome of the ancient writers apply to the fleſh of Chriſt, and underſtand it of his putting off the fleſh by death, whereby he gave the death-blow to ſatan and his powers, Heb. ii. 14. to which ſenſe agrees the Syriac verſion, which renders the words, ובשלה פגרה, and by the putting off of his body, he expoſed to ſhame principalities and powers: but it may be better interpreted of uncloathing, or ſtripping principalities and powers of their armour, with which they were cloathed; as is uſually done to enemies, when they fall into the hands of their conquerors: unleſs rather this is to be underſtood, of Chriſt's taking away the power and authority of the Jewiſh eccleſiaſtical rulers and governors, by aboliſhing the ceremonial law, and the ordinances of it; declaring himſelf to be the alone king and law-giver in his houſe, and requiring ſubjection to his inſtitutions and appointments, which ſenſe agrees with the context: he made a ſhew of them openly; when being raiſed from the dead, he aſcended on high, and led captivity captive; he led ſatan and his principalities and powers captive, who had led others, as he paſſed through the air, the territories of the devil, in the ſight of God and the holy angels: triumphing over them in it; which ſome underſtand of the croſs, as if where and by what he got the victory, there he triumphed; the croſs where his enemies thought to make a ſhew of him, expoſe him to public ſcorn and contempt, and to triumph over him, was as it were the triumphant chariot, in which he triumphed over all the powers of hell, when he had conquered them by it: but the words may be rendered in himſelf, as they are by the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions; and the ſenſe be, that as he by himſelf got the victory, his own arm brought ſalvation to him, ſo he alone ſhared the glory and honour of the triumph: or it may be rendered in him, and the whole in this and the preceding verſe, be applied to God the Father, who as in ver. 12, 13. is ſaid to raiſe Chriſt from the dead, to quicken ſinners dead in ſins, and to forgive all their treſpaſſes; ſo he may be ſaid to blot out the hand-writing of ordinances, and to ſpoil principalities and powers, expoſe them to public view and ſhame, and triumph over them, in him, in and by his Son Jeſus Chriſt: the whole is an alluſion to the victories, ſpoils, and triumphs, of the Roman emperors, who when they had obtained a victory, a triumph was decreed for them by the ſenate; in which the emperor was drawn in an open chariot, and the captives being ſtript of their armour, and their hands tied behind them, were led before him and expoſed to public view and diſgrace; whilſt he was ſhouted and huzza'd thro' the city of Rome, and had all the marks of honour and reſpect given him [b]: now all that is ſaid in the preceding verſes, ſhew how compleat the ſaints are in and by Chriſt; and ſtand in no need of the philoſophy of the Gentiles, or the ceremonies of the Jews; nor have any thing to fear from their enemies, ſin, ſatan, and the law, for ſin is pardoned, the law is aboliſhed, and ſatan conquered.

[a] Nonnus in Joh. xix. 19. Vid. Niccqueti Titulus S. Crucis, l. 1. c. 18. p. 128.

Ver. 16. Let no man therefore judge you, &c.] Since they were compleat in Chriſt, had every thing in him, were circumciſed in him; and particularly ſince the hand-writing of the law was blotted out, and torn to-pieces through the nails of the croſs of Chriſt, the Apoſtle's concluſion is, that they ſhould be judged by no man; they ſhould not regard or ſubmit to any man's judgment, as to the obſervance of the ceremonial law: Chriſt is the prophet who was to be raiſed up like unto Moſes, and who only and not Moſes, is to be heard; ſaints are to call no man maſter upon earth but him; they are not to be the ſervants of men, nor ſhould ſuffer any yoke of bondage to be impoſed upon them; and ſhould they be cenſured and condemned by others, as if they were tranſgreſſors of the law, and their ſtate bad, for not obſerving the rituals of the former diſpenſation, they ſhould not regard ſuch cenſures; for the Judaizing chriſtians were very cenſorious, they were ready to look upon and condemn a man as an immoral man, as in a ſtate of damnation, if he did not keep the law of Moſes; but ſuch rigid cenſures were to be diſregarded, let no man judge, or condemn you; and though they could not help or hinder the judgment and condemnation of men, yet they could deſpiſe them, and not be uneaſy with them, but ſet light by them, as they ought to do. The Syriac verſion renders it, נדוחכן, let no man trouble you, or make you uneaſy, by impoſing ceremonies on you: the ſenſe is, that the Apoſtle would not have them ſubmit to the yoke they would lay upon them, nor be terrified by their anathema's againſt them, for the non-obſervation of the things that follow: in meat or in drink; or on account of not obſerving the laws and rules about meats and drinks, in the law of Moſes; ſuch as related to the difference between clean and unclean creatures, to abſtinence in Nazarites from wine and ſtrong drink, and which forbid drinking out of an uncovered veſſel, and which was not clean; hence the waſhing of cups, &c. religiouſly obſerved by the Phariſees. There was no diſtinction of meats and drinks before the law, but all ſorts of herbs and animals without limitation, were given to be food for men; by the ceremonial law a difference was made between them, ſome were allowed, and others were forbidden; which law ſtood only in meats and drinks, and ſuch like things, but is now aboliſhed; for the kingdom of God, or the Goſpel diſpenſation, does not lie in the obſervance of ſuch outward things, but in internal ones, in righteouſneſs and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghoſt; it is not any thing that goes into the man that defiles, nor is any thing in its own nature common or unclean, but every creature of God is good, ſo be it it be uſed in moderation and with thankfulneſs: or in reſpect of an holy-day; or feaſt, ſuch as the feaſt of the paſſover, the feaſt of tabernacles, and the feaſt of pentecoſt; which were three grand feſtivals, at which all the Jewiſh males were obliged to appear before the Lord; but were never binding upon the Gentiles, and were what the chriſtians under the Goſpel diſpenſation had nothing to do with, and even believing Jews were freed from them, as having had their accompliſhment in Chriſt; and therefore were not to be impoſed upon them, or they condemned for the neglect of them. The phraſe εν μερει, which we render in reſpect, has greatly puzzled interpreters; ſome reading it in part of a feaſt, or holy-day; as if the ſenſe was, that no man ſhould judge or condemn them, for not obſerving ſome part of a feſtival, ſince they were not obliged to obſerve any at all: others in the partition, or diviſion of a feaſt; that is, in the ſeveral diſtinct feaſts, as they come in their turns: ſome [c] think the Apoſtle reſpects the Miſna, or oral law of the Jews, in which are ſeveral treatiſes concerning a good day, or an holy-day, the beginning of the new year, and the ſabbath, which treatiſes are divided into ſections or chapters; and that it is one of theſe ſections or chapters, containing rules about theſe things, that is here regarded; and then the ſenſe is, let no man judge you or condemn you, for your non-obſervance of feaſt days, new moons, and ſabbaths, by any part, chapter, or ſection of, יום טוב, or by any thing out of the treatiſe concerning a feaſt day; or by any part, chapter, or ſection, of, ראש השנה, the treatiſe concerning the beginning of the year; or by any part, chapter, or ſection of, שבת, the treatiſe concerning the ſabbath; and if theſe treatiſes are referred to, it proves the antiquity of the Miſna. The Syriac verſion renders it, בפולגא דעאדא, in the diviſions of the feaſt: frequent mention is made of, פרום החג, the diviſion, or half of the feaſt, in the Jewiſh writings: thus for inſtance it is ſaid [d], "three times in a year they clear the chamber "(where the half ſhekels were put) בפרום, in the half, or middle of the paſſover, in the middle "of pentecoſt, and in the middle of the feaſt:" again [e], "there are three times for tithing of beaſts, "in the middle of the paſſover, in the middle of "pentecoſt, and the middle of the feaſt;" that is, of tabernacles: and this the Jewiſh commentators ſay [f], was fifteen days before each of theſe feſtivals: now whether it was to this, פרום, middle, or half ſpace before each, and any of theſe feaſts the Apoſtle refers to, may be conſidered: or of the new moon; which the Jews were obliged to obſerve, by attending religious worſhip, and offering ſacrifices; ſee Numb.

Numb. xxviii. 11. 2 Kings iv. 23. Or of the ſabbath-days, or ſabbaths; meaning the jubilee-ſabbath, which was one year in fifty; and the ſabbath of the land, which was one year in ſeven; and the ſeventh day ſabbath, and ſome copies read in the ſingular number, or of the ſabbath; which were all peculiar to the Jews, were never binding on the Gentiles, and to which believers in Chriſt, be they who they will, are by no means obliged; nor ought they to obſerve them, the one any more than the other; and ſhould they be impoſed upon them, they ought to reject them; and ſhould they be judged, cenſured, and condemned, for ſo doing, they ought not to mind it. It is the ſenſe of the Jews themſelves, that the Gentiles are not obliged to keep their ſabbath; no, not the proſelyte of the gate, or he that dwelt in any of their cities; for they ſay [g], that "it is lawful for a proſelyte of the gate to do work on the ſabbath-day, for himſelf as for an Iſraelite on a common feaſt-day; R. Akiba ſays, as for an Iſraelite on a feaſt-day; R. Joſe ſays, it is lawful for a proſelyte of the gate to do work on the ſabbath-day for himſelf, as for an Iſraelite on a common or week day:" and this laſt is the received ſenſe of the nation; nay, they aſſert that a Gentile that keeps a ſabbath, is guilty of death [h]; ſee the note on Mark ii. 27. Yea, they ſay [i], that "if a Gentile ſabbatizes, or keeps a ſabbath, though on any of the days of the week, if he makes or appoints it as a ſabbath for himſelf, he is guilty of the ſame." It is the general ſenſe of that people, that the ſabbath was peculiarly given to the children of Iſrael; and that the Gentiles, ſtrangers, or others, were not puniſhable for the neglect and breach of it [k]; that it is a ſpecial and an additional precept, which with ſome others, were given them at Marah, over and above the ſeven commands, which the ſons of Noah were only obliged to regard [l]; and that the bleſſing and ſanctifying of it, were by the manna provided for that day; and that the paſſage in Gen. ii .3. refers not to the then preſent time, but, על העתיד, to time to come, to the time of the manna [m].

Ver. 17. Which are a ſhadow of things to come, &c.] By Chriſt, and under the Goſpel diſpenſation; that is, they were types, figures, and repreſentations of ſpiritual and evangelical things: the different meats and drinks, clean and unclean, allowed or forbidden by the law, were emblems of the two people, the Jews and Gentiles, the one clean, the other unclean; but ſince theſe are become one in Chriſt, the diſtinction of meats is ceaſed, theſe ſhadows are gone; and alſo of the different food of regenerate and unregenerate ſouls, the latter feeding on impure food, the aſhes and huſks of ſenſual luſts, or their own works, the former on the milk and meat in the Goſpel, the wholeſome words of Chriſt; and likewiſe the clean meat was a ſhadow of Chriſt himſelf, whoſe fleſh is meat indeed, and whoſe blood is drink indeed. The holy-days, or feaſts of the Jews, the feaſts of tabernacles, of the paſſover and pentecoſt, were types of Chriſt; the feaſt of tabernacles, though it was in remembrance of the Iſraelites dwelling in tents and booths when they came out of Egypt, yet was alſo a repreſentation of the people of God dwelling in the earthly houſes of their tabernacles here on earth; and particularly of Chriſt's dwelling, or tabernacling in human nature, and who likewiſe was born at the time of this feaſt; ſee the note on John i. 14. The paſſover, as it was a commemoration of the deliverance of the Iſraelites out of Egypt, and of God's paſſing over their houſes when he ſmote the firſt-born of the Egyptians, ſo it was a type of Chriſt our paſſover ſacrificed for us, and was kept by Moſes in the faith of him, Heb. xi. 28. there is a very great reſemblance in many particulars, between Chriſt and the paſchal lamb; ſee the note on 1 Cor. v. 7. The feaſt of pentecoſt, or the feaſt of harveſt and firſt-fruits, was a ſhadow of the firſt-fruits of the Spirit, which Chriſt having received, gave to his diſciples on that day; and of the harveſt of ſouls to be gathered in under the Goſpel diſpenſation, of which the converſion of the three thouſand on the day of pentecoſt, was an earneſt and pledge. The new moon was typical of the church, which is fair as the moon, and receives all her light from Chriſt the ſun of righteouſneſs; and of the renewed ſtate of the church under the Goſpel diſpenſation, when the old things of the law are paſſed away, and all things relating to church order, ordinances, and diſcipline, are become new. The ſabbaths were alſo ſhadows of future things; the grand ſabbatical year, or the fiftieth year ſabbath, or jubilee, in which liberty was proclaimed throughout the land, a general releaſe of debts, and reſtoration of inheritances, prefigured the liberty we have by Chriſt, from ſin, ſatan, and the law, the payment of all our debts by Chriſt, and the right we have through him to the heavenly and incorruptible inheritance. The ſeventh year ſabbath, in which there was no tilling of the land, no plowing, ſowing, nor reaping, was an emblem of ſalvation through Chriſt by free grace, and not by the works of men; and the ſeventh day ſabbath, was a type of that ſpiritual reſt we have in Chriſt now, and of that eternal reſt we ſhall have with him in heaven hereafter: now theſe were but ſhadows, not real things; or did not contain the truth and ſubſtance of the things themſelves, of which they were ſhadows; and though they were repreſentations of divine and ſpiritual things, yet dark ones, they had not ſo much as the very image of the things; they were but ſhadows, and like them fleeting and paſſing away, and now are gone: but the body is of Chriſt; or as the Syriac verſion reads it, the body is Chriſt; that is, the body, or ſum and ſubſtance of theſe ſhadows is Chriſt; he gave riſe unto them, he exiſted before them, as the body is before the ſhadow; not only as God, as the Son of God, but as mediator, whom theſe ſhadows regarded as ſuch, and as ſuch he caſt them; and he is the end of them, the fulfilling end of them; they have all their accompliſhment in him: and he is the body of ſpiritual and heavenly things; the ſubſtantial things and doctrines of the Goſpel, are all of Chriſt, they all come by him; all the truths, bleſſings, and promiſes of grace, are from him and by him, and he himſelf is the ſum of them all. The alluſion ſeems to be to a way of ſpeaking among the Jews, who were wont to call the root, foundation, ſubſtance, and eſſence of a thing, גופא, the body of it [n]: ſo they ſay [o], "the conſtitutions concerning the ſanctification of the offerings and the tithes, are both the one and the other, גופי תורה, the bodies, or ſubſtantial “ parts of the law:” and again [p]; that “ the “ conſtitutions or rules about the ſabbath, the feſti- “ vals and prevarications, they are as mountains “ that hang by an hair; for the ſcripture is ſmall, “ and the conſtitutions are many; the judgments “ and the ſervices, the purifications and unclean- “ neſſes, and the inceſts, they have, upon which they “ can ſupport themſelves, and theſe, and theſe, are “ גופי תורה, the bodies of the law:” they ſay [q] of a ſmall ſection, or paragraph, that all the bodies of the law depend upon it: once more [r], “ the ſab- “ baths, and the good days (the feaſts or holy-days) “ are, גופן, the bodies of the ſign;” which the phylacteries or frontlets were for; but our Apoſtle ſays, that Chriſt is the body and ſubſtance of all theſe ſhadows, in oppoſition to theſe ſayings and notions of the Jews: ſome connect this laſt clauſe with the former part of the following verſe, rendering it as the Arabic verſion thus, becauſe of the communion of the body of Chriſt, let no man condemn you; and the Ethiopic verſion thus, and let no man account you fools, becauſe of the body of Chriſt, but there is nothing in the text to ſupport theſe verſions.

Ver. 18. Let no man beguile you of your reward, &c.] Or prize; the alluſion is to the Olympic games, one of which was running races; in which the ſtadium, or race-plot was fixed, a mark ſet up to look and run unto, a corruptible crown propoſed to be run for, and which was held by one who ſat as judge, and determined who got the victory, and to whom the crown belonged; theſe judges ſometimes acted the unfair part, and defrauded the victors of their proper right, and to ſuch the Apoſtle compares the falſe teachers: the chriſtian's reward, or prize he is running for, is the incorruptible and never fading crown of glory, life, and righteouſneſs; the race-plot is the chriſtian life, ſpent in the exerciſe of grace, and diſcharge of duty, and in holding faſt, and holding out in a profeſſion of faith unto the end; the mark he looks at, and preſſes towards, is Jeſus Chriſt; and his great concern, the Apoſtle by this metaphor ſuggeſts ſhould be, leſt by falſe teachers he ſhould be defrauded of the prize of the high calling of God, through their removing the mark Chriſt from him, by denying his perſon and Godhead; or by intercepting his ſight of him, placing other objects before him, ſuch as angels, to be worſhipped and adored; or by darkening of it, joining Moſes and Chriſt, law and Goſpel, works and grace together, in the buſineſs of ſalvation; whereby he might ſeem to come ſhort, or be in danger of coming ſhort of the heavenly glory: in a voluntary humility and worſhipping of angels; theſe things the Apoſtle inſtances in, as in what lay their danger of being beguiled of their reward, or prize. True humility is an excellent grace; 'tis the cloathing and ornament of a chriſtian; nor is there any thing that makes a man more like Chriſt, than this grace; but in theſe men here reſpected, it was only the appearance of humility, it was not real; it was in things they deviſed and willed, not in things which God commanded, Chriſt required, or the ſcriptures pointed at; they would have been thought to have been very lowly and humble, and to have a great conſciouſneſs of their own vileneſs and unworthineſs to draw nigh to Chriſt the mediator immediately, and by him to God; wherefore in pretence of great humility, they propoſed to make uſe of angels as mediators with Chriſt; whereby Chriſt the only mediator between God and man, would be removed out of ſight and uſe; and that humble boldneſs and holy confidence with God at the throne of grace, through Chriſt, which believers are allowed to uſe, would be diſcouraged and deſtroyed, and the ſaints be in danger as to the outward view of things, and in all human appearance of loſing their reward: worſhipping of angels, was a practice which very early prevailed among ſome that were called chriſtians, and for a long time continued in Phrygia and Piſidia; ſome make Simon Magus, and others Cerinthus, the author of this idolatry; but it was not only a branch of the Platonic philoſophy, and ſo a part of that philoſophy and vain deceit before mentioned, which theſe men might have borrowed from the Gentiles, but was a notion and practice of the Jews: before the Babyloniſh captivity, the names of angels were not known, nor are they ever mentioned by name in ſcripture; hence they ſay [s], that “ the names of angels came up with them, or by “ their means from Babylon:” after this they began to talk much of them, and to have too high a veneration for them, and aſcribe too much to them; and obſerving that the law was ordained, ſpoken, and given by them, and that the adminiſtration of things under the former diſpenſation was greatly by their means, they fell to worſhipping of them [t]; and the believing Jews were hereby in great danger of falling into the ſame practice: hence the author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews writing to the Jewiſh church, largely inſiſts on the proof of Chriſt being ſuperior to angels; ſhewing that he has a more excellent name than they had; that he was the Son of God in ſuch ſenſe as they were not the ſons of God; that they were worſhippers of him, yea, that they were creatures made by him, and even miniſtring ſpirits to his ſaints, the heirs of ſalvation: and very rightly is worſhipping of angels condemned here by the Apoſtle, ſince God only is the object of worſhip; ſince theſe are creatures, and ſo not to be adored; are worſhippers of God and Chriſt themſelves, and have refuſed adoration when it has been offered to them: that the Jews did, and do worſhip angels, and make uſe of them as mediators and interceſſors, is clear from their liturgy, or prayer-books, where they ſay [u], “ מלאכי רחמים, O ye “ angels of mercies, or ye merciful angels, miniſters “ of the moſt high, intreat now the face of God “ for good:” and elſewhere [w], “ they ſay three “ times, let Jubach keep us, let Jubach deliver us, “ and let Jubach help us:” now Jubach was the name of an angel, who they ſuppoſed had the care of men, and is taken from the final letters of thoſe words in Pſal. xc. 11. for he ſhall give his angels charge over thee: ſo they ſpeak of an angel whom they call Sandalphon, who they ſay is appointed over the prayers of the righteous [x]: with this notion the Judaizing and falſe teachers ſeem to have been tinctured, and againſt which the Apoſtle here cautions the ſaints, leſt under a ſhew of humility, they ſhould be drawn into it: and to preſerve them from it, he obſerves, that ſuch an one who ſhould ſpread and propagate ſuch a notion, was one that was intruding into thoſe things which he hath not ſeen; thruſting himſelf in a bold and daring manner into an enquiry and ſearch after, debate upon, and affirmation of things he could have no certain knowledge of; as of angels, whoſe nature, qualities, works, and miniſtrations, he had never ſeen with his bodily eyes; nor could ever diſcern with the eyes of his underſtanding, any ſuch things in the ſcriptures, which he aſcribed to them; but they were the birth of his own mind, the fruits of his own fancy and imagination, things deviſed in his own brain: being vainly puft up by his fleſhly mind; judging of things not according to the word of God, and with a ſpiritual judgment, and according to a ſpiritual ſenſe and experience, but according to his own carnal reaſon, and the vanity of his mind; being puffed and ſwelled with an high opinion of himſelf, of his great parts and abilities, of his knowledge of things above others, and of his capacity to penetrate into, and find out things which were not ſeen and known by others: this ſhows that his humility was forced, and only in outward appearance, and was not true and genuine.

Ver. 19. And not holding the head, &c.] Chriſt, as ſome copies expreſs it; for by making uſe of angels as mediators and interceſſors, Chriſt the only mediator, the Lord and head of angels, and of the church, was dropped and laid aſide; which is another reaſon the Apoſtle gives, why ſuch men, and their principles and practices, ſhould be ſhunned and avoided, by all thoſe that had a regard for Chriſt the head: from which all the body by joints and bands having nouriſhment miniſtred, and knit together, increaſeth with the increaſe of God; by all the body, or the whole body, is meant the church, the myſtical body of Chriſt; which like an human body, conſiſts of various members, all in union with one another, and with Chriſt the head: and by joints and bands are intended, either the grace of chriſtian charity, or love, the bond of perfectneſs; which is that in Chriſt's myſtical body, as joints and bands are in an human body; for by this the members of Chriſt are joined, united, and knit together, and make increaſe: or elſe the ordinances of the Goſpel, by which the ſaints are kept together in order, and through which is ſpiritual nouriſhment miniſtred, from Chriſt the head to them; who hates not his own fleſh, the members of his body, but nouriſhes and cheriſhes them, with the wine of divine love, with the water of life, with himſelf the bread of life, with his fleſh which is meat indeed, and with his blood which is drink indeed; with his own wholeſome words, even the words of faith and ſound doctrine: and it is from him, that the ſaints are knit together; both to one another in him the corner-ſtone, and alſo to him, being made one body and one ſpirit with him; and ſo from and through him, this body increaſeth with the increaſe of God; that which God has appointed for his church, and which he gives; and which it will arrive unto, when all the elect are gathered in, and they are filled with all the gifts and graces of the Spirit, and theſe are brought to their proper pitch and full degree; all which is had from, and owing to Chriſt: for if Chriſt the head is not held, the body will have no nouriſhment, but ſoon become a ſkeleton; the members of it will ſoon looſen from one another and fall into pieces, and there will be no ſpiritual increaſe or edification: all which are ſo many reaſons, why the ſaints ſhould be upon their guard againſt theſe falſe teachers, and Judaizing chriſtians, and which argument and exhortation the Apoſtle further purſues in the following verſes.

Ver. 20. Wherefore if ye be dead with Chriſt, &c.] Or ſeeing ye are dead with Chriſt; for theſe words do not ſignify any doubt about it, but ſuppoſe it, and expreſs what is taken for granted. They were dead with Chriſt by vertue of union to him; they being one with him, and conſidered in him as their head and repreſentative, died in him, and with him; they were crucified with him, as they are ſaid to be buried with him, and riſen with him; they were dead with him, by having communion with him in his death; they partook of the benefits of it, as redemption, pardon, juſtification, and reconciliation; and they were planted together with him in the likeneſs of his death, not merely partakers of his ſufferings, or ſuffered with him, and were conformable unto his death, by undergoing ſuch like things as he did, but as he died unto ſin, and lived unto God, ſo did they; and thro' the vertue and efficacy of his death were dead to ſin, ſo as that it was not imputed to them, ſo as to be freed and diſcharged from it, that it could not damn and deſtroy them; yea, ſo as that itſelf was crucified with him, and deſtroyed by him: and alſo to the law, to the moral law; not but that they lived according to it, as in the hands of Chriſt, in their walk and converſation, but did not ſeek for life, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation by it; they were dead unto it as to juſtification by it, and even to obedience to it in a rigorous and compulſive way; and to all its terrors and threatenings, being moved to a regard to it from a principle of love to Chriſt; and to all its accuſations and charges, its curſes and condemnation, and as a miniſtration of death, fearing neither a corporal, nor an eternal one: they were dead alſo to the ceremonial law, and were free from the rudiments, or elements of the world; the ordinances of a worldly ſanctuary, the rites and ceremonies of the world, or ſtate of the Jews, in oppoſition to, and diſtinction from, the Goſpel-diſpenſation, or times of the Meſſiah, called, and that by them, עולם הבא, the world to come: theſe were like letters to a language, or like the grammar, which contains the rudiments of it; theſe were the firſt principles of the oracles of God, which led to Chriſt, and had their accompliſhment and end in him; and ſo believers were dead unto them, and delivered from them, as they were alſo to the world, the Jewiſh ſtate, and were entered into the world to come; and even to this preſent evil world, and to the men and things of it, being by Chriſt crucified to it, and that to them: upon all which the Apoſtle thus reaſons, why, as though living in the world; ſince ye are dead unto it, and from the rudiments of it, why ſhould ye be as tho' ye lived in it? his meaning is not, that they ſhould not live in the world, nor among the men of it, for then they muſt needs go out of the world; ſaints may live in the world, tho' they are not of it, and among the inhabitants of it, tho' they don't belong to them, but to another and better country: nor does he ſuggeſt, that they lived according to the courſe of the world, as they did in their unregenerate ſtate; but what he ſeems to blame them for, and reaſon with them about, was, that they acted as if they ſought for life and righteouſneſs in the rudiments of the world, or by their obedience to ceremonial rites, or human inventions: for he adds, are ye ſubject to ordinances? not civil and political ones, which are for the better, and more orderly government of kingdoms, ſtates, and cities, for theſe the ſaints ought to be ſubject to, both for the Lord's ſake, and conſcience ſake; nor Goſpel-ordinances, as baptiſm, and the Lord's ſupper, for ſuch all believers ought to ſubmit unto; but either legal ones, the weak and beggarly elements, the yoke of bondage, the law of commandments contained in ordinances, the hand-writing of ordinances, which ſome were deſirous of conforming to; or rather, the ordinances and appointments of the Jewiſh fathers, the traditions of the elders, their conſtitutions and decrees, which are collected together, and make up their Miſna, or oral law; and ſo the argument is from the one to the other, from the greater to the leſs, that if they were delivered by Chriſt from the burdenſome rites of the ceremonial law, which were originally appointed by God, it muſt be great weakneſs in them to be ſubject to the ordinances of men; or both the inſtitutions of the ceremonial law, and the decrees of the Jewiſh doctors about them, which were deviſed by them, and added to them, and impoſed as neceſſary to be obſerved, may be intended; of which the Apoſtle gives ſome particulars in the next verſe.

Ver. 21. Touch not, taſte not, handle not.] This the Apoſtle ſays, not of himſelf, but in the perſon of the Jewiſh doctors; who urging the uſe of the ceremonial law, to which they added decrees and conſtitutions of their own, ſaid, touch not the dead body of any man, the bone of a man, or a grave, any man or woman in their uncleanneſs; not only their fleſh, but the bed they lay on, or the ſeat they ſat on; or any creature that was by the law unclean; or a Gentile, or any notorious ſinner, or common man: hence the Phariſees uſed to waſh themſelves when they returned from market, leſt they ſhould have been by any means accidentally defiled by touching any thing unclean. There is a treatiſe in their Miſna, called Oholot, which gives many rules, and is full of decrees about things, מטמאים במגע, that defile by touching. And ſo they likewiſe ſaid, taſte not, neither the fat, nor the blood of any creature which might be eaten itſelf, nor ſwines fleſh, nor the fleſh of any creature that chewed the cud, or divided the hoof; nor might the Nazarites taſte wine, or ſtrong drink, or vinegar made of either, or moiſt grapes, or even the kernels and huſks; and if a man eat but the quantity of an olive of any of the above things, he was, according to the Jewiſh canons, to be cut off, or beaten [*]: and they alſo ſaid, handle not; or, as the Syriac and Arabic read, do not come near, or draw not nigh, to a Gentile, to one of another nation, or any unclean perſon, to whom they forbid any near approach or converſation; or handle not any of the above things. Some think, that theſe ſeveral rules have reſpect only to meats; as touch not, that is, do not eat of things forbidden ever ſo little; nay, taſte not, do not let any thing of them come within your lips; yea, handle not, do not ſo much as touch them with your fingers. Others think, that touch not regards abſtinence from women; ſee 1 Cor. vii. 1. and reſpects the prohibition of marriage by ſome in thoſe times; and taſte not, the forbearance of certain meats, at certain times, which God had not reſtrained any from; and handle not, that is, make no uſe of, or enjoy your own goods, and ſo deſigns that voluntary poverty which ſome entered into under the direction of falſe teachers.

Ver. 22. Which all are to periſh with the uſing, &c.] Meaning either the ordinances concerning touching, taſting, and handling, which bring deſtruction and death on them that uſe them, and comply with them, in order to obtain righteouſneſs and life; for inſtead of enjoying ſalvation thro' them, they were the cauſe of damnation to them. Or rather the meats not to be touched, taſted, or handled; theſe are in their own nature periſhing things, and periſh by being uſed; they are only of ſervice to the body, and can be of none to the ſoul; the uſing of them cannot defile the man, nor an abſtinence from them ſanctify him, or commend him to God; they only relate to this preſent life, and will ceaſe with it, and can have no manner of influence on the ſpiritual and eternal concerns of men: and beſides, the ordinances concerning them are not of God, but are after the commandments and doctrines of men; for ſo even the ceremonial law, being now aboliſhed, tho' originally of God, yet the impoſition of it, as neceſſary to ſalvation, was a commandment and doctrine of man's; and particularly the traditions of the elders, and the various rules and decrees, which the doctors among the Jews obliged men to regard, were human inventions and devices: and this is another reaſon the Apoſtle makes uſe of to diſſuade from any regard unto them; for whatever is of man, and not of God, in religious worſhip, ought to be rejected.

Ver. 23. Which things have indeed a ſhew of wiſdom, &c.] The authors of them ſet up for men of wiſdom, and were eſteemed ſuch, and are often ſtiled, חכמים, wiſe men; and their ſcholars that received their traditions, and explained and enforced them on others, תלמידי החכמים, the diſciples of the wiſe men; and they pretended, that theſe conſtitutions of theirs were a hedge for the law, and for the honour of it, and to preſerve it, and keep men from tranſgreſſing it; and this carried in it ſome appearance of wiſdom: and their pretenſions to it lay in the following things, in will-worſhip; being what was over and above that which was commanded by God, and ſo like the free will-offerings under the law, muſt be acceptable to him; this was one of their colours, which had ſome ſhew of wiſdom, religion, and zeal: and humility; in worſhipping of angels, and not coming directly, and with boldneſs, to God or Chriſt; or rather in ſubjecting themſelves to the yoke of the law, and ſubmitting to the decrees of the fathers and doctors of the church, who were more wiſe, and learned, and knowing than they, and ſo had the appearance of prudence, gentleneſs, and goodneſs: and neglecting of the body; by faſtings and watchings, whereby they ſeemed to be very religious and devout, holy and mortified perſons, who kept under their bodies, ſubdued their unruly appetites, and fulfilled not the luſts of the fleſh: but then this was only a ſhew of wiſdom and godlineſs; there was no truth nor reality in theſe things; they were only a mere form, an outſide ſhew, a mere pretence; there was no true devotion nor religion in them: and ſo not in any honour; or to be had in any eſteem; for if the rites of the ceremonial law itſelf were weak and beggarly elements, much more muſt theſe additions to it, and corruptions of it, be ſuch; and at moſt only regarded things external, that were to the ſatisfying of the fleſh; either the body, or the carnal mind, in which they were vainly puffed up: tho' ſome conſider this laſt clauſe as explanative of the former, neglecting of the body, or not ſparing it, but afflicting it with auſterities of life; depriving it of its proper right, what is neceſſary for it, not taking due care of it, ſo as to ſatisfy nature; whereby inſtead of honouring, they diſhonoured it: for tho' the body is not to be pampered, and the luſts of it indulged, or luxury and intemperance to be encouraged; yet ſince the body is the work of God's hands, is the habitation of the ſoul, and by which it performs its offices, and is the purchaſe of Chriſt, the temple of the holy Spirit, and will be raiſed a glorious body at the laſt day, it ought not to be neglected and diſhonoured; but ſhould have a ſufficiency of food and cloathing, whereby it may be comfortably and honourably nouriſhed and ſupported.

CHAP. III.

THIS chapter contains exhortations to ſeveral duties, ſome more general, which relate to all chriſtians, and others more particular, which belong to ſaints in ſuch and ſuch a ſtate of life. The Apoſtle begins with an exhortation to ſeek things heavenly, and not earthly, and to ſet the affections on the one, and not on the other: the arguments uſed to enforce it are taken from the ſaints being riſen with Chriſt; from Chriſt being in heaven at the Father's right hand; from their being dead to ſin, the law, and the world; from their having life in Chriſt ſafe and ſecure; yea, from Chriſt, being their life, and their appearance with him in glory, ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. And next he proceeds to an exhortation to the mortification of ſin, and the deeds of it, which he urges from the wrath of God coming upon men for theſe things, and from the conſideration of their former ſtate and condition, expreſſed by walking and living in them, ver. 5, 6, 7. and by a metaphor taken from the putting off and on of garments, he exhorts to the putting off of the old man, with his deeds, ſeveral of which are mentioned, ver. 8, 9. and to the putting on of the new man, and to the exerciſe of various graces, as mercy, meekneſs, forbearance, forgiveneſs, charity, and peace, ver. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. And then he proceeds to exhort to ſuch duties as relate to the word and worſhip of God; as that the word of Chriſt ſhould have an abiding place in them, and that they ſhould teach and inſtruct one another by ſinging pſalms, hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs, and do all they did in a religious way, in the name of Chriſt, with thankfulneſs to God by him, ver. 16, 17. And cloſes the chapter with the duties of wives to their huſbands, and of huſbands to their wives, and of children to their parents, and of parents to their children, and of ſervants to their maſters, ver. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25.

Ver. 1. If ye then be riſen with Chriſt, &c.] The Apoſtle having obſerved in the former chapter, that the believing Coloſſians were dead with Chriſt from the rudiments of the world, were buried with him in baptiſm, and were riſen with him thro' the faith of the operation of God, argues from hence, how much it became them to regard a new and ſpiritual life, and to ſeek after ſuperior and heavenly things, and treat with neglect and contempt carnal and earthly ones. For he does not here call in queſtion their being riſen with Chriſt, but takes it for granted that they were, and makes uſe of it as an argument for his preſent purpoſe. They were riſen with Chriſt as their head, and as members in union with him repreſentatively, when he roſe from the dead; and emblematically in their baptiſm, when having gone ~~done~~ down into the water, and being baptized, they emerſed from it; and ſpiritually in converſion, when they were raiſed from a death of ſin, to a life of grace, by Chriſt, as the reſurrection and the life, the efficient cauſe of it, and in vertue of his reſurrection from the dead: wherefore being thus raiſed again in every ſenſe, it highly became them to ſeek thoſe things which are above; the better and heavenly country, the continuing city, which is above the heavens, whoſe builder and maker is God; Chriſt who is in heaven, and ſalvation alone by him without the works of the law; all ſpiritual bleſſings, ſuch as pardon, peace, righteouſneſs, life, and glory, which are in heavenly places in him; doctrines and ordinances, which come from heaven, and are the means of ſupporting a ſpiritual and heavenly life; eſpecially that bread of life which came down from heaven, and gives life unto the world, and of which if a man eats, he ſhall never die, but live for ever; and particularly glory, honour, immortality, and eternal life, the crown of righteouſneſs laid up above, the kingdom of God, and the righteouſneſs of it; which are to be ſought for in the firſt place with all affection, earneſt deſire, care and diligence; not by or for works of righteouſneſs; but in Chriſt, and as the gifts of God's grace thro' him. Where Chriſt ſitteth on the right hand of God; which contains other reaſons and arguments to engage believers to look upwards, and ſeek after heavenly things; that as Chriſt, when he died and roſe again from the dead, did not ſtay long on earth, nor minded the things of the world, but aſcended up to heaven, where he now is, and will remain until his ſecond coming; ſo they, being dead and riſen with him, ſhould, in their thoughts, deſires, and affections, in the exerciſe of the graces of faith, hope, and love, aſcend heavenwards, like pillars of ſmoke perfumed with frankincenſe; and the more ſhould their hearts be where he is, and intent on things above there, from the conſideration of that great honour and dignity in which he is. He is on the right hand of God; in human nature, an honour which none of the angels were ever admitted to: here he ſitteth, as having done the work of redemption, and entered into his reſt, beholding the travail of his ſoul with ſatiſfaction, tho' he continues to be an advocate, and to make interceſſion for his people; which is another reaſon inforcing this exhortation.

Ver. 2. Set your affections on things above, &c.] For unleſs the affections are ſet on them, they will never be ſought after in a proper manner. The word ſignifies to mind them, and think on them, to favour and approve of them, to be affectionately deſirous of them, and concerned for them; for where the treaſure is, the heart ſhould be; and as the ſaints beſt things are above, their minds and affections ſhould be there likewiſe; their contemplation ſhould be on thoſe things, and their converſation ſhould be in heaven; nor ſhould they regard any thing but what is there, or comes from thence, for they belong not to this world, but to another and better country: their citizenſhip is in heaven, and there, in a ſhort time, they muſt have their everlaſting reſidence; and therefore ſhould ſeek after, and highly prize and value heavenly things, and ſet their affections on them, and not on things on the earth; not mind earth and earthly things, temporal enjoyments, riches, and honours; and tho' food and raiment, and the neceſſaries of life, are to be ſought after, and cared and provided for, yet not with anxiety and perplexity of mind, in an overthoughtful and diſtreſſing manner; nor ſhould the heart be ſet on thoſe outward things, or happineſs placed in the poſſeſſion of them. Moreover, worldly luſts, the members which are on the earth, earthly pleaſures that are ſinful, may be here meant. Worldly luſts are to be denied, the deeds of the body are to be mortified, carnal deſires are not to be gratified and indulged, proviſion is not to be made for the fleſh, to fulfil its luſts; and particularly the vain philoſophy of Jews and Gentiles, the traditions of the elders, the ceremonies of the law, which lay in earthly things, in worldly obſervances, the difference of meats and drinks, keeping of days, months, and years, new moons, feaſts, and ſabbath-days; the rudiments of the world, the commandments and doctrines which were of the earth, and lay in not touching, taſting, and handling certain things that are on earth, and which periſh with the uſing, as oppoſed to the doctrines of the Goſpel, and ordinances of Chriſt, which are from above, and come from heaven, and have a ſpiritual and heavenly uſe: and which is the ſenſe chiefly intended, tho' it is beſt to underſtand the words in their largeſt compaſs.

Ver. 3. For ye are dead, &c.] Not in a natural or corporal ſenſe, for they were living in the world; nor in a moral ſenſe, for tho' they had been dead in ſins, were quickened by the grace of God; nor in a law ſenſe, for all their treſpaſſes were forgiven them; ſee ch. ii. 13, 20. but they were dead to the law, moral, ceremonial, and judicial, by the body of Chriſt; and to ſin, as to its damning power, thro' his bearing it in his own body on the tree; and to the world by his croſs: and therefore, as dead men have nothing to do with the world, and the things of it, ſo believers being dead with Chriſt, ſhould have no regard to the rudiments of the world, the ceremonies of the law, and the ordinances of men; to worldly luſts, and to the things that are in the world, the luſt of the fleſh, the luſt of the eyes, and the pride of life; but ſhould be dead as to their deſires after, affections for, and ſubjection to theſe things; and your life is hid with Chriſt in God; which is another reaſon why they ſhould not mind things on earth, but things in heaven. The ſaint's life is either ſpiritual, and is a life of grace from Chriſt, a life of faith on him, and a life of communion with him, and may be diſtinguiſhed into a life of ſanctification, both internal and external, and into a life of juſtification; or eternal, which is a life free from all the ſorrows of this, both outward and inward; a life of perfection and pleaſure, of viſion and enjoyment of God and Chriſt, and of fellowſhip with Father, Son, and Spirit, angels and ſaints, and which will never end. This is theirs, what they have a right unto, and ſhall everlaſtingly enjoy: it is not only promiſed to them, and prepared and laid up for them, but it is given unto them in Chriſt; and who has made way for their full poſſeſſion of it, into which he himſelf will put them, having power, as mediator, ſo to do; and even now they have it, the beginning, pledge, and earneſt of it. This is ſaid to be hid, which denotes the ſecrecy of it, and is true both of ſpiritual and eternal life. The ſpiritual life of the ſaints is hid from the men of the world, who are alienated from the life of God, are ignorant of the Lord of life, and know nothing of the Spirit of life; they are ſtrangers to the nature of this life, and to the food on which believers live, the hidden manna; and to the doctrines of the Goſpel, by which they are nouriſhed, theſe are hid to them that are loſt; and to all the joys and pleaſures of it: and this is ſometimes hid from the ſaints themſelves, when temptations are violent, corruptions prevail, grace is low, and ſeems to be gone, and God hides his face. Eternal life is alſo an hidden one, from natural men; the things that are eternal, are things unſeen by the carnal eye, and not to be conceived of by a carnal heart; and can only be beheld, and that in a very glimmering and imperfect manner, by an eye of faith, which is the evidence of things not ſeen, the cleareſt one ſaints have in this life; for eternal glory and happineſs is in part hid from the ſaints themſelves; they ſee it but thro' a glaſs darkly; nor does it appear to themſelves, as yet, what that felicity is in its fulneſs and perfection they ſhall enjoy. Moreover, this phraſe is expreſſive of the ſafety, as well as of the value and preciouſneſs of this life, things of worth being hid for ſecurity. It is hid, and it is hid with Chriſt; ſpiritual life is with him, as the head, root, and fountain of it, and ſo is ſafe, and can never be loſt; becauſe he the head lives, the members ſhall live alſo; and as long as it is in him, as the fountain, the ſtreams and ſupplies of it ſhall not be wanting to his people; nor can the communication between him and them be ever cut off: eternal life is depoſited in his hands by the Father; it is bound up in the bundle of life with the Lord God, and is in him for ever ſafe: nay, it is not only with Chriſt, where it is ſecure enough, but it is with Chriſt in God; Chriſt is in God, the Father is in the Son, and the Son is in the Father; they are one in nature, and ſo in power and glory; and this union between them, which is natural and perfect, is the foundation of the ſecurity both of the perſons, and of the life, ſpiritual and eternal, of God's elect; ſee John x. 28, 29, 30. Moreover, this life itſelf is in God. Not only our natural life is in him; we live and move, and have our being in him; but our ſpiritual and eternal life: he is the ſpring of it; it ariſes originally from him; it was purpoſed in him; it was promiſed by him; the ſcheme of it, or what is called the fellowſhip of the myſtery, was hid in him; it was given by him; he is the fountain of it, and that itſelf; and therefore the ſaints can never periſh, nor need they fear any enemy.

Ver. 4. When Chriſt, who is our life, ſhall appear, &c.] The Vulgate Latin verſion, and ſome copies, read, your life. Chriſt is the author of ſpiritual life, the fountain from whence it ſprings, the object on which the ſaints live, yea, their very life itſelf; it is not ſo much they that live, as Chriſt that lives in them; and he is their eternal life; it is in him, and given forth by him; to know him now is the beginning of it; and its perfection hereafter will lie in the viſion of him, communion with him, and conformity to him. The Jews have a ſaying [r], "that lives depend upon the ſon of Jeſſe," all ſorts of life, natural, ſpiritual, and eternal. At preſent, Chriſt the life of his people, is, as it were, hid; when he had done the work he came into this world about, and for which he was manifeſt in the fleſh, he departed out of it, aſcended up into heaven, and went to his God and Father, where he is, and will be retained, until the time of the reſtitution of all things; and tho' he appears in the preſence of God, and on the behalf of his redeemed ones, yet he is now out of ſight, and not to be ſeen with their bodily eyes; but, e'er long, he'll be revealed from heaven, and come in the clouds of it, and be ſeen by all, to the terror and confuſion of ſome, and to the joy and ſalvation of others; when his appearance will be exceeding glorious, not only in his glorified body, or exalted human nature, and as the judge of the whole earth, clothed with majeſty, authority, and power, but as the Son of God, God equal with the Father, in all the perfections and glory of deity, which will be manifeſt and apparent to every one: then ſhall ye alſo appear with him in glory; the dead bodies of the ſaints will then be raiſed and united to their ſouls, which he will bring with him, when he appears; and living ſaints ſhall be changed, and be caught up together with the raiſed ones, into the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and ſo they all ſhall be with him together, where-ever he is, whether in the air, or on earth, or in heaven, and whilſt he is in either; and ſhall be for ever with him, enjoy communion with him, be made like unto him, and behold his glory: yea, they ſhall appear in glory too; with a glory on their bodies, which will be raiſed in glory like unto the glorious body of Chriſt; and on their ſouls, being in perfect holineſs, having on the wedding-garment, or robe of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, being clothed upon with their houſe from heaven, and appearing in the ſhining robes of immortality, incorruption, and glory; having the glory of God upon them in ſoul and body, and ſuch a glory revealed in them, as the ſufferings of this preſent life, and all the enjoyments of it, are not to be compared with. All which furniſh out ſtrong arguments and reaſons, enforcing the above exhortations to ſeek for, and ſet the affections on things in heaven, and not on earth.

[r] Zohar in Gen. fol. 2, 3.

Ver. 5. Mortify therefore your members, &c.] Not your bodies, as the Ethiopic verſion reads, nor the members of the natural body, but of the body of ſin, indwelling ſin; which as a body conſiſts of various members, which are parts of it, riſe out of it, and are uſed by it, as the members are by the body; and intend the ſins of the fleſh, or ſinful actions, which are generally performed by the members of the natural body, in which the law of ſin is, and by which it operates; ſo that the mortification the ſaints are here exhorted to, in conſideration of having a ſpiritual life in them, and a hope of eternal life in Chriſt, from whence the Apoſtle argues, is not a mortification or deſtruction of the body of ſin itſelf, or of the being and principle of it in the ſoul, where it is, and lives, and dwells, and will as long as the ſaints are in this tabernacle, but of the deeds of the body, or of ſinful actions, as to the life and converſation; and ſignifies a denial of them, an abſtinence from them, and a non-performance of them; ſee the note on Rom. viii. 13. Theſe members, or deeds of the body, or acts of ſin, are called your; for as the old man is ours, the vitioſity of nature is what we bring into the world with us, and is rooted and incorporated into us; ſo the actions that flow from it, and are done by it, are not to be aſcribed to God, nor even to ſatan, but they are our own actions, and which are performed by the members of our mortal body, or by the faculties of our ſouls: and are, which are on earth; or earthly; are concerned about earthly things, the things of the world, worldly luſts and pleaſures, which riſe out of earthly-mindedneſs, and incline unto it, and are only what are done here on earth, and will have no place in heaven. The particulars of which follow: fornication; the ſin of uncleanneſs committed by ſingle perſons, or out of the ſtate of marriage, and which the Gentiles did not account ſinful: hence ſo much notice is taken of it, with a cenſure, and ſo often, by the Apoſtle, in almoſt all his Epiſtles, and dehorted from, as a ſin againſt the body, as what diſqualified for church-communion, and was not to be named among the ſaints, who ſhould be dead to that, and that to them, as to the commiſſion of it. Uncleanneſs; of every ſort, all other impure actions, as adultery, inceſt, ſodomy, and every other unnatural luſt; all which ſhould be abſtained from, and never committed by thoſe who profeſs to be alive unto God. Inordinate affection; which may intend the paſſions, or firſt motions of ſin, ſtirred up by the law, and which work in, and operate by the members of the body, and bring forth fruit unto death, and therefore to be oppoſed by ſuch as have a life in Chriſt; and alſo thoſe vile affections, which ſome in a judicial way are given up unto, and prevail with thoſe who are effeminate, and abuſers of themſelves with mankind, and which are to be abhorred and denied by all who are heirs of the grace of life, and expectants of an heavenly one. Evil concupiſcence; ſo called, to diſtinguiſh it from that natural concupiſcence, or deſire after things lawful and neceſſary, and which is implanted in nature by God himſelf; and from that ſpiritual concupiſcence or deſire after ſpiritual things, and that luſting againſt the fleſh, and carnal things, which is formed in the heart of a regenerate man by the Spirit of God. It is the ſame with, יצר רע, the evil imagination, or corruption of nature, ſo much ſpoken of by the Jews. This here is what is forbidden by that law, thou ſhalt not covet; and includes every fleſhly luſt, and inordinate deſire, or every deſire after that which is not lawful, or does not belong to a man; as what is another's property, his wife, or goods, or any thing that is his: and ſo very naturally follows, covetouſneſs; an immoderate love of money, the root of all evil, an inſatiable deſire of having more, and of having more than a man's own; and is enlarged as hell, and as death is not ſatisfied, but ſtill craves more, without making any good uſe of what is poſſeſſed: which is idolatry. The covetous man, and the idolater, worſhip the ſame for matter and ſubſtance, even gold and ſilver: the covetous man lays up his money, makes no uſe of it, as if it was ſomething ſacred; he looks at it, and adores it, and puts his truſt and confidence in it, and his heart is ſo much ſet upon it, that he neglects the worſhip of the true God; and indeed no man can ſerve God and mammon. Some think, that by this πλεονεξια, rendered covetouſneſs, is meant, that greedy deſire after the commiſſion of all uncleanneſs, and impure actions, which were perpetrated by the followers of Simon Magus in their religious aſſemblies, and under the notion of worſhip, and as acceptable to God, and therefore called idolatry; and which ought not to be once named, much leſs practiſed, among the living members of Chriſt. Moreover, ſuch filthy actions were performed by the Gentiles in the worſhip of their deities.

Ver. 6. For which things ſake, &c.] Thoſe ſins above-mentioned: the wrath of God; the effects of it in temporal judgments, and eternal ruin and deſtruction, the wrath to come, which all are deſerving of, and there is only deliverance from by Chriſt: cometh upon the children of diſobedience; who are diſobedient both to the law of God, and Goſpel of Chriſt; who are unbelievers in him, are rebellious and gain-ſaying, reject his calls, the perſuaſions of his miniſters, ſet at nought his counſel, and will have none of his reproof. There have been already inſtances of God's diſpleaſure at ſin, his indignation againſt it, and his judgments on account of it: his wrath is revealed from heaven, and it will come down from thence on diſobedient and rebellious ſinners, and that ſuddenly, and with great power, like a mighty torrent, that there will be no ſtanding before it. This is a reaſon why ſuch who have life in Chriſt ſhould mortify, repreſs, and abſtain from the above ſins; for tho' this regards ſinners, and ungodly perſons, yet the effects of God's wrath on ſuch ſhew, how much ſuch ſins are diſpleaſing to him, and deteſted by him, and therefore to be avoided by the ſaints.

Ver. 7. In the which ye alſo walked ſome time, &c.] Either in or among the children of diſobedience, or rather in the fore-mentioned ſins. Sin is a road or path, in which ſinners walk, a way of their own, of their own chuſing and approving, tho' a dark and crooked one, and which leads to deſtruction: walking herein denotes a continued ſeries of ſinning, a perſiſting in it, a progreſs therein, a proceeding from evil to evil, taking pleaſure, and going on ſecurely in it; and which is the caſe and ſtate of God's elect before converſion, which is a turning of them from darkneſs to light, from the power of ſatan to God, and out of the ways of ſin, into the paths of righteouſneſs, when the courſe of their walk, of their lives and converſations, is altered; and which is ſuggeſted here, and made uſe of as another reaſon for the mortification of the deeds of the body of ſin, taken from their former ſtate, and their deliverance out of it; and therefore the time paſt of their lives, when they walked in theſe things, ſhould ſuffice, and they ſhould now ceaſe from ſin, from a ſeries and courſe of ſinning: when ye lived in them; in ſins, and were dead in them; for to be dead in ſin, and to live in ſin, is the ſame thing; living in ſin is the death of ſin. To live in ſin is to live after the fleſh, after the dictates of corrupt nature, to live a ſinful courſe of life; it is for a man to give up himſelf to ſin, be wholly bent upon it, take delight in it, and make it his work and buſineſs. This had been the caſe of theſe believers, but now they were dead to ſin, and it became them to live no longer therein, but to mortify it by denying it, and abſtaining from it, and living ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly.

Ver. 8. But now you alſo put off all theſe, &c.] Intimating, that now ſince they were converted and delivered out of the former ſtate in which they were once, and profeſſed not to walk and live in ſin, it became them to ſeparate, remove, and put at a diſtance from them all ſins, and every vice, to lay them aſide as dead weights upon them, and put them off as filthy garments; for ſuch ſins are never to be put on, and cleaved to again as formerly; and that not only thoſe, the above-mentioned, fornication, uncleanneſs, inordinate affection, evil concupiſcence, and covetouſneſs, but the following alſo, anger, wrath, malice, blaſphemy, or evil ſpeaking; what vices are here intended, ſee the note on Eph. iv. 31. to which is added, filthy communication, which comes out of the mouth; and is to be removed and put out of it, or abſtained from; and which is to be underſtood alſo of blaſphemy, or evil ſpeaking of one another, whereby the credit and reputation of each other may be hurt. Filthy communication is the ſame with that which is ſaid to be corrupt, Eph. iv. 29. and which, tho' it is applicable to all ſpeech that is unſavoury, unedifying, idle, and uſeleſs, and may be properly enough ſaid of flattery, lying, curſing, and ſwearing; yet chiefly regards obſcene language, unchaſte words, and filthy talking, which tend to encourage and cheriſh the ſin of uncleanneſs in any of its branches.

Ver. 9. Lye not one to another, &c.] Which is another vice of the tongue, and to which mankind are very prone, and ought not to be done to any, and particularly to one another; ſince the ſaints are members one of another, and of the ſame body, which makes the ſin the more unnatural; of this vice, ſee the note on Eph. iv. 25. and is another ſin that is to be put off, or put away; that is, to be abſtained from, and not uſed. The arguments diſſuading from this, and the reſt, follow, ſeeing that ye have put off the old man, with his deeds. The Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read this as an exhortation, as they do the next verſe alſo. Who is meant by the old man, ſee the note on Rom. vi. 6. and what by putting him off, ſee on Eph. iv. 22. and as for his deeds, they are the ſame with the deceitful luſts there mentioned, and the works of the fleſh in Gal. v. 19. and with the members of the body of ſin in the context, ver. 5, 8. Some, as Beza, think, that here is an alluſion to the rite of baptiſm in the primitive church; which, as he truly obſerves, was performed not by aſperſion, but immerſion; and which required a putting off, and a putting on of clothes, and when the baptized perſons profeſſed to renounce the ſins of the fleſh, and their former converſation, and to live a new life.

Ver. 10. And have put on the new man, &c.] Concerning which, and the putting it on, ſee the note on Eph. iv. 24. which is renewed in knowlegde; this man, or principle of grace in the ſoul, is a new one, which never was there before; and there is a daily renovation of it in the ſpirit of the mind, by the Spirit of God; for as the outward man decays, the inward man, which is the ſame with this new man, is renewed day by day, increaſes in holineſs and righteouſneſs, grows in grace, and particularly in knowledge: light and knowledge of a man's ſelf, of his loſt ſtate and condition by nature, of his need of Chriſt, and of his ſalvation, is what appears at the firſt formation of this new man; and the daily renovation of him lies in an increaſe of a ſpiritual, experimental, and ſaving knowledge of God, and Chriſt, and divine things; and indeed, until a man becomes a new creature, he neither knows, nor is he capable of knowing, the things of the Spirit of God; ſo that this new man, or principle of grace, begins with ſpiritual knowledge, and is formed in order to it, and its increaſe lies in it: after the image of him that created him; the new man; for this is a creation-work, and ſo not man's, but God's; and is made not after the image of the firſt man, no not as innocent, and much leſs as fallen; but after the image of Chriſt, to which the elect of God are predeſtinated to be conformed, and which is inſtamped in regeneration; and more and more appears by every transforming view of Chriſt, and will be perfected in heaven, when they ſhall ſee him as he is, and be perfectly like him, who is not only the pattern, but the creator of it, even the author and finiſher of faith.

Ver. 11. Where there is neither Greek nor Jew, &c.] That is, either in Chriſt, after whoſe image the new man is created; ſee Gal. v. 6. and vi. 15. or in the new man, and with reſpect to regeneration; or in the whole buſineſs of ſalvation: it matters not of what nation a man is; this has no influence on his new birth, either to forward or hinder it; for he is never the more a new creature, a regenerate man, and intereſted in ſalvation, becauſe he is a Jew, which he may be outwardly, and not inwardly; and he may be born again, tho' he's a Greek or Gentile, as the Syriac verſion reads; for God of his own will, and abundant mercy, and not out of reſpect to nations and perſons, begets ſouls again to a lively hope of the heavenly inheritance: circumciſion or uncircumciſion; a man's being circumciſed in the fleſh ſignifies nothing; this he may be, and not a new creature; for that is not true circumciſion, but that which is of the heart, and in the ſpirit: and, on the other hand, it is no objection to a man's being born again, that he is uncircumciſed circumciſed in the fleſh; this may be his caſe, and yet may be circumciſed with the circumciſion made without hands; neither one nor the other is of any account with God, nor makes the man either better or worſe. Barbarian, Scythian; all ſuch were Barbarians to the Romans, that did not ſpeak their language; and as were ſuch alſo to the Greeks, who were not of their nation, and therefore Greeks and Barbarians are oppoſed to each other, Rom. i. 14. and ſo they are here in the Syriac verſion, which reads Greek and Barbarian. The Arabic verſion, inſtead of Barbarian, reads Perſian, becauſe it may be, a Perſian is ſo accounted by the Arabians; and becauſe the Scythians were, of all people, the moſt barbarous and unpoliſhed [z], and were had in great diſdain by others, therefore the Apoſtle mentions them, as being within the reach of the powerful and efficacious grace of God; nor were the fierceneſs of their diſpoſitions, and the impoliteneſs of their manners, any bar unto it. Remarkable is the ſaying of Anacharſis the Scythian, who being reproached by a Grecian, becauſe he was a Scythian, replied [a], "my country is a reproach to me, but "thou art a reproach to thy country." It matters not of what nation a man is, ſo be it he is but a good man; eſpecially in chriſtianity, all diſtinctions of this kind ceaſe. It is added, bond or free; the grace of God in regeneration is not beſtowed upon a man becauſe he is a free man, or with-held from another becauſe he is a bond-ſervant. Oneſimus, a fugitive ſervant, was converted by the Apoſtle Paul in priſon; and whoever is called by grace, if he is a free man in a civil ſenſe, he is Chriſt's ſervant in a religious one; and if he is a ſervant of men, he is, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, the Lord's free man. It is not nation, nor outward privileges, nor the civil ſtate and condition of men, which are regarded by God, or are any motive to him, or have any influence upon the ſalvation of men: but Chriſt is all, and in all; he is all efficiently; he is the firſt cauſe of all things, the beginning of the creation of God, the author of the old, and of the new creation, of the regeneration of his people, and of their whole ſalvation: he is all comprehenſively; has all the fulneſs of the Godhead, all the perfections of deity in him; he is poſſeſſed of all ſpiritual bleſſings for his people; and has all the promiſes of the covenant of grace in his hands for them; yea, all fulneſs of grace dwells in him, in order to be communicated to them: and he is all communicatively; he is their light and life, their wiſdom, righteouſneſs, ſanctification, and redemption, their food and cloathing, their ſtrength and riches, their joy, peace, and comfort, who gives them grace here, and glory hereafter. So with the Jews, the Shekinah is called, כל, all [b]: and this likewiſe, with the cabbaliſts [c], is one of the names of the living God, and well agrees with Chriſt, who has all things in him; and is the reaſon they give for this divine appellation: and Chriſt is in all; in all places, being infinite, immenſe, and incomprehenſible, as God, and ſo is every where by his power, upholding all things by it; and in all his churches, by his gracious preſence, and in the hearts of all his regenerate ones, of whatſoever nation, ſtate, and condition they be: he is revealed in them, formed within them, and dwells in their hearts by faith; and is all in all to them, exceeding precious, altogether lovely, the chiefeſt among ten thouſands, and whom they eſteem above all creatures and things. The Arabic verſion reads, Chriſt is above all, and in all.

Ver. 12. Put on therefore, &c.] As the Apoſtle had argued for the putting off of the members of the body, from their having put off the old man himſelf; ſo he now argues from their having put on the new man, to their putting on of his members; that is, to the exerciſe of the various graces of the Spirit, and the diſcharge of the ſeveral duties of religion; which tho' they would not be a robe of righteouſneſs, or garments of ſalvation to them, yet would be very becoming converſation-garments, ſuch as would be adorning to themſelves, to the doctrine of Chriſt, and their profeſſion of it, without which they would be naked in their walk, and expoſed to ſhame. להתלבשא ברוח קדושה, to be clothed with the holy Spirit, is a phraſe uſed by the Cabbaliſtic doctors [d]; and is indeed a ſcripture phraſe, the Spirit of the Lord came upon, לבשה, clothed Zechariah, 2 Chron. xxiv. 20. and ſo Eſther is ſaid, by the Jewiſh writers [e], to be clothed with the Holy Ghoſt. Here the metaphor is taken from the putting off of clothes; and what is here directed to, is like Joſeph's coat, a coat of many colours. The arguments made uſe of lie in the characters under which the ſaints are addreſſed, as the elect of God, holy and beloved; that is, as becomes the elect of God, as the Arabic verſion renders it; as ſuch who were choſen in Chriſt from eternity, according to the ſovereign will and pleaſure of God, and his free grace unto ſalvation and eternal life; which carries in it a ſtrong argument to enforce the performance of good works, ſince men are hereby choſen unto holineſs, and good works are what God has fore-ordained, that they ſhould walk in, and eſpecially to mercy, and acts of it; ſince hereby their ſalvation appears to be not of man's will and works, but of God, that ſheweth mercy; and ſuch who are the objects of this grace are veſſels of mercy. The Apoſtle calls all the members of this church by this name, tho' every individual of them might not be choſen of God; but becauſe they were all under a viſible profeſſion of faith and holineſs, and the greater part of them were truly believers, he in a judgment of charity gives them all this appellation, and upon the ſame foot, the next, holy; not by birth, for they were by nature unclean and filthy, conceived in ſin, and ſhapen in iniquity; nor by baptiſm, which takes away neither original nor actual ſin, but leaves men as it finds them, and who ought to be holy before they partake of that; but in Chriſt imputatively, as he was made of God unto them ſanctification; and by him efficaciouſly, in virtue of his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, by which he ſanctifies his people; and by his Spirit inherently and internally, who is the author of the work of ſanctification in the heart; and they were likewiſe ſo externally in a profeſſional way, and therefore it highly became them to exerciſe and practiſe the following graces and duties, to which they were ſtill more obliged, inaſmuch as they were beloved; that is, of God, as appeared both from their election and ſanctification. God had loved them, and therefore had choſen them in his Son, and had given his Son to die for them, that he might ſanctify them; and becauſe of his great love to them, had quickened them when dead in ſin, and ſanctified them by his Spirit: wherefore, ſince God had ſo loved them, they ought to ſhew love again to him, and to one another, and put on bowels of mercies; a ſympathizing ſpirit with ſaints in diſtreſs, weeping with them that weep, ſuffering with them that ſuffer, being touched, as their high-prieſt is, with a feeling of their ſorrows and weakneſſes: it denotes inward pity and compaſſion to diſtreſſed objects, the moſt tender regard to perſons in miſery, and ſuch compaſſion as is free from all hypocriſy and deceit, and therefore is expreſſed by bowels; and what is very large, and reaches to multitudes of objects, and is diſplayed and exerted various ways, and therefore ſignified by mercies. Now ſuch a ſpirit is a very beautiful one; the Apoſtle begins with the innermoſt of theſe garments, adding to it kindneſs, which is this inward, tender, unfeigned, and abundant mercy put into act and exerciſe; this is doing good to all men, eſpecially to the houſhold of faith, diſtributing to the neceſſities of the ſaints, and a ſhewing mercy with chearfulneſs, and is very ornamental to a chriſtian profeſſor: as is alſo humbleneſs of mind; which lies in the ſaints entertaining mean thoughts of themſelves, looking upon themſelves as the chief of ſinners, and leſs than the leaſt of all ſaints; as inferior to others in knowledge, experience, gifts, and graces; in eſteeming others better than themſelves; in aſcribing all they have, and are, to the grace of God; in doing works of mercy and righteouſneſs without oſtentation, and boaſting of them, or depending on them; owning, that when they have done all they can, they are but unprofitable ſervants; and this is a beautiful dreſs for a believer to appear in: be ye clothed with humility, 1 Pet. v. 5. And of the like nature is meekneſs; which ſhews itſelf in not envying the gifts and graces, the uſefulneſs and happineſs of others, but rejoicing therein; in quietly ſubmitting to the will of God in all adverſe diſpenſations of providence, and patiently bearing what he is pleaſed to lay on them; and in enduring all the inſults, reproaches, and indignities of men with calmneſs. This ornament of a meek and quiet ſpirit, is in the ſight of God of great price, 1 Pet. iii. 4. And what follows is natural to it, and explanative of it, long-ſuffering; whereby a perſon patiently bears the evil words and actions of others, and is not eaſily provoked to wrath by them, but puts up with injuries, and ſits down contented with the ill uſage he meets with.

Ver. 13. Forbearing one another, &c.] Not only bearing one another's burdens, and with one another's weakneſſes, but forbearing to render evil for evil, or railing for railing, or to ſeek revenge for affronts given, in whatſoever way, whether by words or deeds: and forgiving one another; all treſpaſſes and offences, ſo far as committed againſt themſelves, and praying to God to forgive them, as committed againſt him: if any man have a quarrel againſt any; let him be who he will, high or low, rich or poor, of whatſoever age, ſtate, or condition, and let his quarrel or complaint be what it will, ever ſo great, or ever ſo juſt and well-founded, yet let him put up with it, and forgive it: even as Chriſt forgave you, ſo alſo do ye; what God is ſaid to do for Chriſt's ſake, Eph. iv. 32. ſee the note there, that here Chriſt is ſaid to do: as mediator, he has procured the remiſſion of ſins by the ſhedding of his blood; and as God he forgives ſins freely, fully, forgetting the injuries done, not upbraiding with former offences, and that too without aſking, and before there is any appearance of repentance; and ſo ſhould the ſaints forgive one another, as they expect to have an application and manifeſtation of forgiveneſs to themſelves.

Ver. 14. And above all theſe things, &c.] Bowels of mercies, kindneſs, &c. put on charity, or brotherly love, for without this all is nothing; they will only be done in ſhow and appearance, in mere guiſe and hypocriſy, if love is wanting; this actuates and exerciſes all the reſt; 'tis only from this principle, that true ſympathy, real kindneſs, undiſguiſed humility, and meekneſs, patient long-ſuffering, and forbearance, and hearty forgiveneſs proceeds: this is greater, and more excellent, than all the other, and adds a glory, luſtre, and beauty to them; this is the upper garment that covers all the reſt, for ſo the words may be rendered, upon all theſe things put on charity; whereby a diſciple of Chriſt is viſible, and diſtinguiſhed, and is known to be what he is; this is like a ſtrait and upper garment, keeps cloſe all that is under it, and within it: and it is called, the bond of perfectneſs; either of the law, and the duties of religion, which it is ſaid to be the fulfilling of; or rather of the ſaints, for this is the bond of union between them, which knits and cements them together, ſo that they are perfectly joined together, and are of one mind and one heart: it is the bond of peace among them, of perfect unity and brotherly love; and a moſt beautiful and pleaſant thing it is for brethren to live and dwell together in unity; ſuch are beautiful as Tirzah, comely as Jeruſalem among themſelves, and terrible to their enemies as an army with banners, being not to be divided or broken by them. The Claromontane exemplar reads, the bond of unity.

Ver. 15. And let the peace of God rule in your hearts, &c.] By the peace of God is meant, either the peace believers have with God, which is his gift, and paſſes all underſtanding, and flows from a comfortable apprehenſion of intereſt in the blood, righteouſneſs, and atonement of Chriſt; or rather that peace which does, or ſhould ſubſiſt among the ſaints themſelves, which God is the author of, calls for, and requires, and encourages in them. The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read, the peace of Chriſt; and ſo the Alexandrian copy, and ſome others. This may be ſaid to reign in their hearts, when it is the governing principle there; when it reſtrains the turbulent paſſions of anger, wrath, and revenge, allays undue heats, moderates the ſpirits, and compoſes differences. The metaphor is taken from the judge in the Olympic games, who was the umpire, the moderator, and who determined whoſe the victory was, and to whom the crown belonged; the Apoſtle would have no other umpire among the ſaints than the peace of God: and the arguments he uſes follow, to the which alſo you are called in one body; the ſaints in their effectual vocation are called to peace by God, who is the God of peace; by Chriſt, who is the prince of peace; and by the Spirit, whoſe fruit is peace; and thro' the Goſpel, which is the Goſpel of peace, and into a Goſpel-ſtate, which lies in peace, righteouſneſs, and joy in the Holy Ghoſt: and they are not only called to this, but they are called in one body; tho' they are many members, yet they are but one body; and therefore ought to be in peace, and that ſhould bear the ſway in them, ſeeing it is unnatural for members of the ſame body to quarrel with each other. And be ye thankful; which intends either gratitude to men, to fellow-creatures, for any ſervice or kindneſs done by them, eſpecially to the ſaints, the members of the ſame body, who are placed in a ſubſervience, and in order to be uſeful to each other; or elſe to God, for all ſpiritual bleſſings in Chriſt, and particularly the peace he gives, for effectual vocation, and a place in the body, the church; and to Chriſt, as the Syriac verſion reads, for all thoſe graces which come from him, and ſtrength to exerciſe them, and for himſelf, and an intereſt in him, who is all in all; and a grateful ſpirit, both for ſpiritual and temporal mercies, is a very becoming and beautiful one, and is another part of the ornament of a chriſtian: this laſt is added to make way for what follows.

Ver. 16. Let the word of Chriſt dwell in you, &c.] The Alexandrian copy, and Arabic verſion read, the word of God; by which may be meant the whole ſcripture, all the writings of the Old and New Teſtament, which are by inſpiration of God, were endited by the Spirit of Chriſt, ſpeak and teſtify of him, and were written for his ſake, and on his account, and therefore may be called his word; and are what ſhould be ſearched into, carefully attended to, diligently read, and frequently meditated upon; and which are able, under a divine bleſſing, to furniſh with all ſpiritual wiſdom, or to make men wiſe unto ſalvation: or by the word of Chriſt, may be meant more eſpecially the Goſpel, which Chriſt is the author of as God, the preacher of as man, and the ſubject-matter of as God-man and mediator: it is the word concerning him, his perſon and offices; concerning peace and pardon by his blood, juſtification by his righteouſneſs, and compleat ſalvation thro' his obedience, ſufferings, and death. The exhortation to let it dwell in them, ſuppoſes that it had entered into them, and had a place in them thro' the Spirit and power of Chriſt; and that it ſhould have a conſtant and fixed place there, and not be like a ſtranger or wayfaring man, that tarries but for a night, or like a ſojourner, that continues but for a while; but as an inhabitant that takes up its reſidence and abode, never more to depart; and intends not only a frequent reading, and hearing of, and meditating upon the word of God, but continuance in the doctrines of the Goſpel, with a ſteady faith in them, and a hearty affection for them; for ſuch an inhabitation imports a very exact knowledge of the Goſpel, and familiarity with it, and affectionate reſpect for it; as perſons that dwell in a houſe, they are well known by thoſe of the family, they are familiarly converſed with, and are treated with love and reſpect by them: and ſo the word of Chriſt, when it has a fixed and eſtabliſhed abode in a man's heart, he has an inward, ſpiritual, experimental knowledge of it; he is continually converſant with it; this word of Chriſt is his delight, and the men of his counſel, his guide, his acquaintance, with whom he takes ſweet counſel together, and eſteems it above the moſt valuable things in the world, and receives and retains it as the word of God. The manner in which the Apoſtle would have it dwell, is richly; that is, largely, plentifully, in an abundant manner, as this word ſignifies; ſee 1 Tim. vi. 17. and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it here, abundantly; and to the ſame ſenſe the Arabic verſion. His meaning is, that not one part of the ſcripture only ſhould be regarded and attended to, but the whole of it, every truth and doctrine in it, even the whole counſel of God; which as it is to be declared and preached in its utmoſt compaſs, ſo all and every part of it is to be received in the love of it, and to be abode in and by; there is a fulneſs in the ſcriptures, an abundance of truth in the Goſpel, a large affluence of it; it is a rich treaſure, an invaluable mine of precious truths; all which ſhould have a place to their full extent, in both preacher and hearer: and that in all wiſdom; or unto all wiſdom; in order to attain to all wiſdom; not natural wiſdom, which is not the deſign of the ſcriptures, nor of the Goſpel of Chriſt; but ſpiritual wiſdom, or wiſdom in ſpiritual things, in things relating to ſalvation; and which is, and may be arrived unto thro' attendance to the word of Chriſt, reading and hearing of it, meditating on it; and eſpecially when accompanied with the ſpirit of wiſdom and revelation in the knowledge of Chriſt, and which is to be deſired and prayed for. Teaching and admoniſhing one another. The Syriac verſion renders it, teach and inſtruct yourſelves; and may regard not only public teaching Chriſt, his Goſpel, the truths and doctrines of it, and all his commands and ordinances, for which he qualifies men, and ſends them forth in his name; but private teaching by conference, prayer, and ſinging the praiſes of God, according to the meaſure of the gift of grace beſtowed on every one: and ſo admoniſhing may not only reſpect that branch of the publick miniſtry, which is ſo called, and intends a putting into the mind, or putting perſons in mind both of their privilege and duty; nor only that part of church-diſcipline which lies in the admonition of a delinquent, but private reproofs, warnings, and exhortations; and as by other ways, ſo among the reſt, in pſalms, and hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs; referring very probably to the title of ſeveral of David's pſalms, מַשְׂכִּיל, Maſchil, which ſignifies giving inſtruction, or cauſing to underſtand; theſe pſalms, and the ſinging of them, being appointed as an ordinance of God to teach, inſtruct, admoniſh, and edify the ſaints: for the meaning of theſe three words, and the difference between them, ſee the note on Eph. v. 19. ſinging with grace in your hearts to the Lord; that is, ſinging pſalms, hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs; and what is meant by ſinging of them, ſee the note on the above place: the manner in which they are to be ſung, is, with grace; meaning either by the aſſiſtance of the Spirit and grace of God, without which no ordinance can be performed aright, to the glory of God, and to ſpiritual profit and edification, 1 Cor. xiv. 15. or with grace in the heart in exerciſe, particularly faith, without which it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, Heb. xi. 6. or with gratitude to God, with thankfulneſs of heart for his mercies, and under a grateful ſenſe of them; or in ſuch a manner as will miniſter grace unto the hearers, be both amiable and edifying, Col. iv. 6. all theſe ſenſes may be taken in: that the phraſe, in your hearts, does not mean mental ſinging, or what is oppoſed to ſinging with the voice, ſee the note on Eph. v. 19. The object here, as there, is to the Lord; the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, to the glory of his perſon and grace: the Alexandrian copy, and the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read, to God; and indeed God, in the three divine perſons, and in all his perfections and works, is the object of praiſe, and his glory is the end of ſinging praiſe.

Ver. 17. And whatſoever ye do in word or deed, &c.] Whether in preaching the word of Chriſt, in hearing the Goſpel, in ſinging pſalms, hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs, and in conference and converſation with each other; or in whatſoever action, civil or religious, throughout the whole life and converſation, in the performance of things natural, moral, and evangelical, relating to God or man, or one another, in the world or church: do all in the name of the Lord Jeſus; both in the ſtrength of Chriſt, without whom nothing can be well ſaid or done; and according to the mind and will of Chriſt declared in the Goſpel, which is his name; and calling upon his name for aſſiſtance in the miniſtration of his word, adminiſtration of his ordinances, and in the performance of every duty, directing all to, and having ſolely in view his honour and glory: giving thanks to God, and the Father by him; this ſhows, that ſinging of pſalms, hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs, is a diſtinct thing from giving of thanks, mentioned in the preceding verſe. The things for which thanks are to be given, are all things; and the time when, always, as in Eph. v. 20. ſee the note there. The perſon to whom they are to be given, is God the Father, the Father of our ſpirits, and of our mercies, the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and of us in him; and the perſon by whom they are to be given, is Chriſt, which is juſt and proper, ſince all mercies come from, and thro' him; nor is there any other way of bringing and offering the ſacrifices of praiſe and thankſgiving to God; nor are they, nor can they be acceptable to God by, and thro' any other, but by him alone.

Ver. 18. Wives ſubmit yourſelves unto your own huſbands, &c.] The Apoſtle proceeds from thoſe duties which related to them, as church-members one towards another, for their mutual good and edification, and the glory of God, to ſuch as concerned them in their own houſes and families, as in a natural relation to each other; as huſbands and wives, parents and children, maſters and ſervants; ſhewing hereby, that the Goſpel does not at all break in upon, but eſtabliſhes the duties of common and civil life. Concerning the duty of wives to their huſbands, here exhorted to, ſee the note on Eph. v. 22. The reaſon urging to a regard to it, is, as it is fit in the Lord; that is, Chriſt, as the Syriac verſion reads it. Subjection of wives to their own huſbands is fit and proper in its own nature, by reaſon of the original creation of man, and of the woman from him: man was made firſt, and then the woman; and the woman was made out of the man, out of one of his ribs; and ſo, tho' not to be trampled under his feet, but to be by his ſide, and an help-meet to him, yet not to be head, or to rule over him. Moreover, the woman was made for the man, and not the man for the woman; add to this, that the woman was in the tranſgreſſion, and the means of the fall of man, which gave a freſh reaſon for, and made the obligation to ſubjection to him the ſtronger: and it is alſo a decent and becoming thing for wives to be ſubject to their huſbands; for as it is giving honour to them, it is a real ornament to themſelves, and is one of thoſe good works which women profeſſing godlineſs, ſhould adorn themſelves with; and makes more comely and beautiful than broidered hair, gold, pearls, or coſtly array, yea, than their natural favour and beauty: it is what is fitting in the Lord; it is what he requires, not only what the law of God requires, 1 Cor. xiv. 34. and which was enjoined originally, Gen. iii. 16. and was charged as a duty under the legal diſpenſation; but is what is commanded by Chriſt under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, and is to be obſerved by all thoſe that are in him, that profeſs to be new creatures, converted perſons, that ſo the word of God be not blaſphemed, and the enemy have no occaſion to reproach, Tit. ii. 5. 1 Tim. v. 14. though this phraſe may alſo be conſidered as a reſtriction and limitation of this ſubjection; that tho' it reaches to all things, yet only to ſuch as are agreeable to the will of the Lord, and not contrary to the Goſpel of Chriſt; for in theſe they are not to be ſubject to them, but to Chriſt the Lord; but in all other things they are, even as the church is ſubject to Chriſt: and when this is the caſe, ſuch ſubjection is regarded by Chriſt as if it was done to himſelf; and indeed, his honour and glory ſhould be the governing view in it; ſee Eph. v. 22.

Ver. 19. Huſbands love your wives, &c.] See the note on Eph. v. 25. and be not bitter againſt them; turning love into hatred of their perſons; ruling with rigour, and in a tyrannical manner; behaving towards them in a moroſe, churliſh, and ill-natured way; giving them either bitter words, or blows, and denying them their affection, care, proviſion, protection, and aſſiſtance, but uſing them as ſervants, or worſe. All which is barbarous, brutiſh, and unchriſtian, and utterly unbecoming the Goſpel.

Ver. 20. Children obey your parents, &c.] Both father and mother; ſee the note on Eph. vi. 1. in all things; not in things ſinful, which are contrary to the law of God, and Goſpel of Chriſt; in things repugnant to the duties of religion, the ordinances of the Goſpel, and the doctrines of Chriſt, parents are to be neglected and diſobeyed. God is to be regarded, and not men; but in all things good and lawful, and in all things that are of an indifferent nature, which may, or may not be done, in theſe things the will of earthly parents is to be attended to; of which there is a conſiderable inſtance in the Rechabites, Jer. xxxv. 6—10. and even they are to be obeyed in things that are hard and difficult to be complied with, and which are diſagreeable to fleſh and blood, as the caſes of Iſaac and Jephtha's daughter ſhew. For this is well-pleaſing unto the Lord; and is a reaſon ſufficient to engage to the performance of the duty; for whatever is grateful and well-pleaſing to God, ought to be done with pleaſure by us, from a principle of love to him, by faith in him, and with a view to his glory; and then ſuch an action is acceptable in his ſight thro' Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. The Alexandrian copy reads, in the Lord; and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion.

Ver. 21. Fathers, provoke not your children to anger, &c.] See the note on Eph. vi. 4. leſt they be diſcouraged; or diſheartened and diſpirited; their ſpirits be broke thro' grief and trouble, and they become indolent, ſluggiſh, and unfit for buſineſs; or deſpairing of having any ſhare in the affections of their parents, diſregard their commands, inſtructions, and corrections, and grow obdurate, ſtubborn, and rebellious.

Ver. 22. Servants, obey in all things your maſters, &c.] That is, in all things relating to the body, and bodily ſervice; not to the conſcience, and religious worſhip; in things worldly, and not ſpiritual; in all things that are within a maſter's power, and it is lawful for him to command; and in all things that are fitting and proper that a ſervant ſhould do; and even in ſuch things as may be difficult, troubleſome, and diſagreeable to the fleſh unto them; ſee Luke xvii. 7, 8, 9. who thoſe ſervants are that are to obey, and who their maſters, ſaid to be according to the fleſh, to whom they are to be ſubject, ſee the note on Eph. vi. 5. not with eye-ſervice, as men-pleaſers, but in ſingleneſs of heart; ſee the note on Eph. vi. 5, 6. fearing God; who ſees and knows all things, what ſervants do when their maſters are abſent from them, and to whom they are accountable; and a ſervant that fears God will make conſcience of diſcharging his ſervice faithfully, will not miſpend his maſter's time, nor embezzle his goods, or waſte his ſubſtance; but from a principle of reverential affection for God, and fear of him, with a concern for his name, and a view to his glory, will with all diligence, uprightneſs, faithfulneſs, and ſincerity, do his duty, ſeek his maſter's good and intereſt, and chearfully obey all his lawful commands. The Alexandrian copy reads, fearing the Lord; and ſo the Syriac verſion, in the fear of the Lord.

Ver. 23. And whatſoever ye do, &c.] Some have thought that theſe words, and the two following verſes, regard the Coloſſians in general, and the performance of any, and all good works by them; but by their connexion with the preceding verſe, and with the beginning of the next chapter, they appear to concern ſervants only, and what they do under that character, and in the diſcharge of their duty: do it heartily; not by mere force and neceſſity, grudgingly, and with murmurings, but from the heart, and with good-will, having a true, real, and hearty affection for their maſters, having their good and intereſt at heart, and a delight in their ſervice; like the Hebrew ſervant, that loved his maſter, as alſo his wife and children, and therefore would not depart from him, Exod. xxi. 5. as to the Lord, and not unto men; ſee the note on Eph. vi. 7.

Ver. 24. Knowing that of the Lord ye ſhall receive the reward of the inheritance, &c.] This is ſaid for the encouragement of chriſtian ſervants, who, tho' they may receive little or nothing from their earthly and carnal maſters; yet they ſhall be uſed and treated as children by the Lord, and by whom they will be poſſeſſed of an eternal inheritance, after their work and labour is over: by the reward of the inheritance is meant the heavenly glory, called a reward, becauſe the Apoſtle is ſpeaking to ſervants, and therefore uſes language agreeable to them; and who, tho' they may have no reward in this world, yet as there is a God that judgeth in the earth, there is verily one for them in the world to come: and tho' it is not given for working, yet it is given to thoſe that do good, and continue in well-doing; whoſe works follow, tho' they do not go before them; and is enjoyed after their work is over, as the ſervant receives his wages at evening, and when he has done his work; tho' this will not be received as a reward of debt, but of grace: it cannot be of merit, as is clear from the nature of good works themſelves, which are all due to God, prior to the performance of them; and when done in the beſt manner, are no more than a man's duty, and are done not in his own ſtrength, but by the grace of God; and in many things, yea, in every thing, he comes ſhort of performing what is incumbent on him; and beſides, there's no manner of proportion between the beſt ſervices of the ſaints, and eternal glory: to which may be added, that eternal life is the free gift of their heavenly father to them, and is here called an inheritance, which never becomes the property of ſervants in a way of merit, but is the portion of children, from their father's good pleaſure. Wherefore the heavenly glory is ſuch a reward as that it is an inheritance; or, as the Syriac verſion renders it, in an inheritance: it lies in an inheritance, an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, that fades not away, reſerved in the heavens; and which is not got by induſtry, or obtained by the works of the law, nor bought with a price, but is a free bequeſt of God as a father to his children; for an inheritance is peculiar to children, and this to the children of God, as theſe believing ſervants were; and which comes to them by and thro' the death of the teſtator; and it may be called an inheritance, becauſe the heavenly glory is ſubſtantial, 'tis ſubſtance, a better and a more enduring ſubſtance than any inheritance in this world; and is a very plentiful poſſeſſion and eſtate, it conſiſts of all things, yea God himſelf is the portion of his people, and they that are his children, are heirs of God; there's not only a glory, but riches of glory, a plenty, a fulneſs of it in this inheritance: the way in which they come by it, is receiving it from Chriſt; of the Lord ye ſhall receive it. It is in a way of receiving, and ſo by gift, as a man can receive nothing but what is given him; and as all grace is in a way of receiving, and therefore boaſting in it is excluded, ſo glory is enjoyed in the ſame way, and from the ſame hands, even from Chriſt, the righteous judge, that will give it. 'Tis in him they obtain this inheritance, and are in him choſen and predeſtinated unto it; 'tis by his reſurrection from the dead, and in conſequence of it, that they thro' the power of his Spirit and grace are begotten unto it; 'tis his grace that makes them meet for it, and he has it in his hands for them; he is a feoffee in truſt on their behalf, and is able to give it to them; and will at the laſt day introduce them into the full poſſeſſion of it. Now theſe chriſtian ſervants knowing all this, having a lively hope of this inheritance, a full perſuaſion, and a firm faith of right unto it, and meetneſs for it, and having the Spirit of God as an earneſt and pledge of it; the conſideration of it muſt greatly tend to make them quiet and eaſy in their preſent ſervitude, and to encourage them to the diſcharge of their duty with diligence, faithfulneſs, and chearfulneſs; ſince they might aſſure themſelves of the inheritance hereafter, how ſmall ſoever their reward was now: for ye ſerve the Lord Chriſt; who is a good maſter, and faithful to all his engagements and promiſes, all whoſe ſervants are reſpected by him, and honoured by his Father, and ſhall be for ever where he is.

Ver. 25. But he that doth wrong, &c.] Which may be underſtood both of ſervants that do wrong to their maſters thro' ſloth and idleneſs, neglecting their buſineſs, embezzling their maſters goods, and defrauding them of their ſubſtance; and of maſters that injure their ſervants by with-holding from them proper food and raiment, by cheating them of their wages, either giving them none at all, or too little, or detaining them too long, and by giving them bad language, and hard blows, and ſuch like ſevere uſage: ſhall receive for the wrong which he hath done; either in this world, or in the other; God will avenge all ſuch injuries, ſooner or later; ſo that theſe words may be conſidered, either as ſaid with a view to deter ſervants from evil practices, or to comfort them under the male-treatment they may meet with from cruel maſters: and there is no reſpect of perſons. The Vulgate Latin, and Arabic verſions add, with God, which undoubtedly is the ſenſe; he regards not the rich more than the poor; he makes no difference between bond and free, the ſervant and the maſter; he'll not take the part of the one, becauſe he is a maſter, nor neglect the other, becauſe he is a ſervant, but will do that which is juſt and right with regard to them both; ſee the note on Eph. vi. 9.

CHAP. IV.

THIS chapter begins with an exhortation to maſters to behave towards their ſervants in a juſt and equitable manner, from the conſideration of their having a maſter in heaven, which ſhould have concluded the preceding one; and in it the Apoſtle gives ſome general exhortations, and ſome particular inſtructions about reading this, and another Epiſtle, and ſtirring up their miniſter to his duty; and great part of it is taken up in expreſſing his love to the Coloſſians, and in the ſalutations of others, and of himſelf. The general exhortations are to prayer, with watchfulneſs and thankfulneſs, not only for themſelves, but eſpecially for the miniſters of the Goſpel, ver. 2, 3, 4. and next to a wiſe behaviour towards them that were of the world, ver. 5. and alſo to a prudent converſation, particularly in language, with every one, ver. 6. And then the Apoſtle proceeds to declare his great affection for them, and care of them, which he ſhewed by ſending two proper perſons to them from him, partly to make known his affairs to them, and partly to know the ſtate and condition they were in, and comfort them, ver. 7, 8, 9. and next follow the ſalutations of various perſons to them, who are mentioned by name, and whoſe characters are given, ver. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. And then he orders them to read this Epiſtle in the church of Laodicea, and alſo that which came from that place, ver. 16. and to admoniſh Archippus to take heed to, and fulfil his miniſtry, ſince it was what he had received in the Lord, ver. 17. And then cloſes the Epiſtle with his own ſalutation and benediction, entreating a remembrance of him and his bonds, ver. 18.

Ver. 1. Maſters give unto your ſervants, &c.] This verſe properly belongs to the preceding chapter, with which it ſhould have been concluded. It is indeed ſtrange, that thoſe who made the diviſion of chapters and verſes ſhould ſeparate this from the former chapter, to which it ſo manifeſtly belongs, and begin a new one with it, when it has no connexion with what follows; for the Apoſtle having obſerved the duty of ſervants to their maſters, proceeds to direct maſters to the diſcharge of their duty to their ſervants, by giving them that which is juſt and equal; proper food and raiment, which is ſufficient and fitting for them; the wages due unto them by law or contract; uſing them with gentleneſs and humanity, taking care of them when under affliction, and in ſickneſs; encouraging the diligent and laborious by an addition to their ſalaries; correcting the diſobedient within juſt bounds, not with too much rigour and ſeverity; and carrying it with an even hand to all, not preferring or indulging one before another, without any reaſon: knowing that ye alſo have a maſter in heaven; ſee the note on Eph. vi. 9.

Ver. 2. Continue in prayer, &c.] This is not ſaid particularly to maſters, as in the foregoing verſe, but to all the members of the church in general; for the Apoſtle having taken notice of ſome ſpecial duties relating to perſons in different ſtations of life, returns to ſuch as were common to them all; as this of prayer to God is, for ſuch prayer is intended; for tho' the object is not expreſſed here, he is in the following verſe, and the mediator Chriſt is ſuppoſed, and alſo the holy Spirit, whoſe aſſiſtance is neceſſary to it. The things exhorted to, and required in prayer, are, firſt, as in this clauſe, continuance in it, which does not mean that men ſhould be always formally praying to God; nor can it be thought that ſaints are always in praying frames of ſoul, tho' ſuch are always deſirable; but it intends frequency and conſtancy in prayer, in oppoſition to an entire reſtraint and omiſſion of it, and to a performance of it but now and then, or very rarely; for tho' chriſtians are not, as the Jews were, bound to certain ſtated hours of prayer, ſo many times in a day, yet a day ſhould not paſs without prayer to God; for their daily caſes call for it; their lives, their health, their daily bread, and all their temporal enjoyments, which depend on his daily goodneſs, providence, and power; their ſpiritual affairs, the renewing of the inward man day by day, freſh ſupplies of grace for new ſervice; their daily trials and afflictions, their continued enemies, ſin, ſatan, and the world, all fully ſhew the neceſſity of daily prayer: beſides, God does not always immediately anſwer the prayers of his people, he will be ſought unto time after time, even for a bleſſing he intends to give; and therefore the ſaints ſhould not be diſcouraged, but continue in prayer till they receive the mercy, and their importunity is a means of enjoying it, as in the caſe of the poor widow; and which is an encouraging reaſon why men ſhould pray always, and not faint. Add to this, that conſtant prayer is a means of keeping up a ſpiritual acquaintance, intercourſe, and familiarity with God, and of the ſoul alive in the vigorous exerciſe of the graces of the Spirit, and of preſerving the ſaints from temptations and ſin; for, generally ſpeaking, reſtraining prayer before God, and caſting off his fear, go together. The next things requiſite in prayer are watchfulneſs and thankfulneſs: and watch in the ſame with thankſgiving. There is not only a watchfulneſs unto it, previous to a man's entrance on it, as in Eph. vi. 18. 1 Pet. iv. 7. but a watchfulneſs in it, which is oppoſed both to ſleepineſs of body, and to coldneſs and indifference of mind, to all careleſs airs and negligent manner of performing it; and deſigns an intenſeneſs of mind, an application of thought, and fervency of devotion, and affection in it. It lies in a concern, that the heart be lift up with the hands to God; in a care, that what is aſked is according to the will of God, and that the whole be performed in ſincerity, faith, and fear. This is what the Jews call, עיון תפלה, the attention of prayer [f], and כוונת הלב, the intention of the heart; and which, they ſay [g], is the root of prayer, the main and principal thing in it; and that every prayer which is not with intention, is no prayer [h]; and which, they obſerve, lies in this, that a man turns his heart from all (other) thoughts, and ſeems to himſelf as if he ſtood before the divine majeſty. To this thankſgiving muſt be added; ſee Phil. iv. 6. for this is well-pleaſing to God; and the contrary, an ungrateful ſpirit is highly reſented by him. Beſides, a believer has always mercies to bleſs God for, as well as favours to aſk at his hands; nor is he ever in ſuch a ſituation, either in temporals or ſpirituals, but he has ſomething to bleſs God for. Moreover, how ſhould it be expected that a perſon ſhould ſucceed in a preſent requeſt, who is not thankful for a former kindneſs?

Ver. 3. Withal, praying alſo for us, &c.] The perſons to be prayed for are next directed to; and theſe are not only themſelves, tho' their concern is very near and great, but others alſo, all the ſaints and people of God, yea, all men, and in particular the miniſters of the Goſpel. The Apoſtle deſires they would pray for him, and his fellow-miniſters, and which he ſays not in diſſimulation, under a guiſe of humility, but in true humility and lowlineſs of mind; being ſenſible of the greatneſs of the miniſterial work, which this ſhews, and of his own imperfection and weakneſs, and of what advantage the prayers, even of the meaneſt in the church, might be unto him: and this ſhows, that it is the duty of churches, and of particular believers, to pray for their miniſters, and among the reſt, as follows, that God would open to us a door of utterance; or of the word; ſo the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions; meaning, either the word of the Goſpel, that the door of that might be opened, that it might have a free courſe, and be glorified; for tho' he was bound, that was not; nor does he deſire that the door of the priſon might be opened, but the door of the word, that there might be an opportunity of preaching it; in which ſenſe this phraſe is uſed, 1 Cor. xvi. 9. 2 Cor. ii. 12. that whereas he could not go abroad to preach it, the hearts of men might be inclined to come to him, and hear it from his mouth; and that the door of their hearts might be opened, that they might attend unto it; that it might have an entrance into them, and a place in them: or elſe the door of his own ſpeech and words is intended, and the ſenſe be, that God would not only ſet before him an open door for the preaching of the Goſpel, and make it effectual for the converſion of many ſouls; but that, as he would furniſh him with all abilities, and every gift for that ſervice, ſo that with enlargement of heart, and liberty of mind, he would give him elocution, a mouth and wiſdom to ſpeak, utterance and freedom of ſpeech; that the door of the Goſpel being opened, or an opportunity given to preach it, and the door of mens hearts opened to receive it, the door of his lips might be alſo opened to ſhew forth the praiſe of the grace of God. The Alexandrian copy adds, with boldneſs, or boldly, as in Eph. vi. 19. to ſpeak the myſtery of Chriſt; the Goſpel, of which Chriſt is the author, preacher, ſum, and ſubſtance; the whole of which is a myſtery; the wiſdom of God in a myſtery; all the doctrines of it are myſteries; and particularly thoſe, and which are here more eſpecially deſigned, which regard the perſon, offices, and grace of Chriſt, as the myſtery of his divine and eternal Sonſhip, of his incarnation, of the union of the two natures, divine and human, in his perſon, of redemption by his blood, juſtification by his righteouſneſs, and ſatiſfaction by his ſacrifice, things dear to the Apoſtle, and which his ſoul was full of, and he wanted to ſpeak out; and therefore deſires prayer to be made for him, that a door might be opened, and way made for his ſpeaking of theſe things with freedom: for which, ſays he, I am alſo in bonds; this he adds, partly to ſhew how dear the Goſpel was to him, that he was willing to ſuffer, and did ſuffer chearfully for the ſake of it; and what an honour he eſteemed it to lie in chains for it, of which, nor of that, was he in the leaſt aſhamed; and partly to ſtir them up the more to prayer for him, for his liberty in every reſpect.

Ver. 4. That I may make it manifeſt, &c.] It being a myſtery, a ſecret, which was hid in God from everlaſting, and during the legal diſpenſation, was wrapped up in types, and ſhadows, and ſacrifices, and is ſtill hidden unto the natural man. Wherefore the Apoſtle was deſirous of making it manifeſt in a miniſterial way; for God only, by his Spirit, makes it manifeſt in a ſpiritual, experimental, and ſaving way. As, ſays he, I ought to ſpeak. The Arabic verſion adds, concerning it, the Goſpel, the myſtery of Chriſt. The Apoſtle's meaning is, that he might deliver it with that clearneſs and evidence, and uſe that plainneſs of ſpeech which became the Goſpel, and him as a miniſter of it, and not ambiguous expreſſions, equivocal phraſes, words of double meanings, on purpoſe to hide things from men, but by manifeſtation of the truth, to commend himſelf to every man's conſcience in the ſight of God. As alſo to ſpeak it faithfully, declaring the whole counſel of God, keeping back nothing that might be profitable to the churches; and with all conſtancy and certainty, with all boldneſs and intrepidity of ſoul, and freedom of mind, not ſeeking to pleaſe men, aiming at vain-glory, and popular applauſe, or being afraid of their faces, menaces, and reproaches.

Ver. 5. Walk in wiſdom, &c.] Or wiſely, circumſpectly, not as fools, but as wiſe men; ſee the note on Eph. v. 15. Towards them that are without; ſo the Jews uſed to call the Gentiles, all that were out of their own land, that were not of their nation or religion, who were aliens from them, and ſtrangers to their privileges; and ſometimes the unbelieving Jews bear the ſame character, Mark iv. 11. Here it may deſign ſuch who were not members of this church; ſo the diſtinction of thoſe that are without, and ſuch as are within, is uſed by the Apoſtle in 1 Cor. v. 12. A church is an houſe or family, and ſuch as belong to it are called the houſhold of faith, and thoſe that do not, are they that are without; it is as a city, and thoſe that are of it are fellow-citizens with the ſaints, but others are ſtrangers and foreigners; it is a garden encloſed, they that are planted in it are thoſe that are within, and ſuch as lie in the wide open field of the world are thoſe that are without: but inaſmuch as there are ſome who are not members of churches, and yet have the grace of God, this phraſe may chiefly regard all unregenerate men, prophane ſinners, ſuch as have not faith in Chriſt, nor hope in God, who are entirely deſtitute of the grace of God. Now it becomes ſaints to walk wiſely towards them; all communication with them is not cut off, or correſpondence and converſation with them forbidden; the ſaints indeed are not to have their converſation among them as in times paſt; they are to have no fellowſhip with them in immoral actions, and ſuperſtitious practices; but they may be concerned with them in things civil, with reſpect to trade and commerce, and the common buſineſs of life; on theſe accounts they may keep company with them; otherwiſe, as the Apoſtle elſewhere ſays, they muſt needs go out of the world. But then it is incumbent upon them to behave wiſely towards them, with the ſimplicity of the dove to join the wiſdom of the ſerpent; they ſhould walk inoffenſively towards them, and do nothing to provoke them, to injure and perſecute them, but take all prudent methods to gain their affections, eſcape their reſentment and wrath, and obtain their liberty of worſhipping God without diſturbance; they ſhould give to all their due, tribute, cuſtom, fear, and honour, to whom they are due, and owe no man any thing but love; they ſhould ſubmit to every ordinance of men, and be ſubject to the higher powers, not only to eſcape wrath, but for conſcience ſake, and ſhould give to Cæſar the things that are Cæſar's; they ſhould pray for kings, and all in authority, for the proſperity of the nation, city, and place where they are, for their carnal relations and neighbours, and even their very enemies, and do them all the good, both for ſoul and body, that lies in their power, and as they have opportunity; and by ſo doing, they'll heap up coals of fire on their heads. Such a prudent walk, and wiſe conduct, is neceſſary on account of the Goſpel, that the public miniſtration of it may be continued, that it may ſpread and get ground, and that it may not be reproached and blaſphemed; and on the account of them that are without, that they may not have any ſtumbling-blocks laid in their way, and they be hardened in their impiety and irreligion, and be more ſet againſt the truths of the Goſpel; and alſo on account of believers themſelves, who ought ſo to converſe with the men of the world, that they are not partakers with them in their ſins, and have their manners corrupted by them, or the vital heat of religion damped, and they become dead, liſeleſs, luke-warm, and indifferent to divine things, which is often the caſe thro' an indiſcreet and imprudent walk with ſuch men: the Apoſtle adds, redeeming the time; as an inſtance of prudent walking towards them that are without; ſee the note on Eph. v. 16.

Ver. 6. Let your ſpeech be alway with grace, &c.] In grace, or concerning grace; let grace be the ſubject-matter of ſpeech and converſation. When ſaints meet together they ſhould converſe with each other about the work of grace upon their ſouls, how it was begun, and how it has been carried on, and in what caſe it now is; they ſhould talk of the great things and wonders of grace, which God has done for them, which would be both comfortable and edifying to them, and make for the glory of the grace of God; and alſo, they ſhould confer together about the doctrines of grace, and ſo inſtruct, eſtabliſh, and build up one another in them; and at leaſt their converſation ſhould always turn on things graceful and acceptable, ſuch as may miniſter grace unto the hearer, and be uſeful and edifying; wherefore all obſcene words, unchaſte expreſſions, filthineſs, fooliſh talking, and jeſting, ought not to be uſed. Or this may regard the manner of the ſpeech, and language of the ſaints; it ſhould be in the exercife of grace; it ſhould be in truth, faithfulneſs, and ſincerity, without lying, diſſimulation, and flattery; it ſhould be in conſiſtence with the grace of love, therefore evil ſhould not be ſpoken one of another; nor ſhould there be whiſperings, backbitings, or any thing ſaid that is injurious to the character, credit, and reputation of another; for this is contrary to love, and ſo not with grace: and whatever is ſaid ſhould be ſpoken in the fear of God; the reaſon why ſo many evil things proceed out of the mouths of men, is, becauſe the fear of God is not before their eyes. Moreover, the ſpeech of the ſaints ought to be in a graceful way, with a chearful and pleaſant countenance, in an affable and courteous manner, and not after a moroſe, churliſh, and ill-natured faſhion: and this ſhould be alway the caſe; not that they ſhould be always talking, for there's a time to keep ſilence, as well as a time to ſpeak; but the ſenſe is, that when they do ſpeak, it ſhould be both graceful things, and in a graceful manner; ſo that there is never any room and place for vain diſcourſe, unprofitable talk, and idle words, which muſt all be accounted for in the day of judgment. Seaſoned with ſalt. The Syriac verſion adds, איך, as, and reads it, as if it was ſeaſoned with ſalt: grace being that to ſpeech, as ſalt is to meat; as ſalt makes meat ſavoury and agreeable to the palate, ſo grace, prudence, and holineſs, which may be meant by ſalt, ſee Mark ix. 50. make diſcourſe ſavoury, pleaſant, and acceptable to a ſpiritual man, who ſavours the things that be of God, as all ſuch things are that relate to the grace of God, the work or doctrines of it; and as ſalt preſerves fleſh from putrefaction and corruption, ſo when grace goes along with ſpeech, it makes it pure and incorrupt, ſound ſpeech which cannot be condemned: and the Apoſtle's view is, in this exhortation, that nothing unſavoury and corrupt proceed out of the mouths of believers; ſee Eph. iv. 29. that ye may know how ye ought to anſwer every man. The Syriac and Arabic verſions render it, and know ye how, &c. and make it to be a freſh exhortation to the ſaints to be concerned for ſuch a ſhare of ſpiritual knowledge, that they may be able to give a proper and pertinent anſwer, with meekneſs and fear, to ſuch as ſhall aſk a reaſon of the hope that is in them; and to make ſuitable returns to perſons according to their age, ſex, capacities, and circumſtances; for every one is not to be anſwered alike, nor the ſame man under different circumſtances; a fool is ſometimes to be anſwered according to his folly, and ſometimes not; and this ſeems to be a better reading than ours, which makes this to be the end of gracious, ſavoury, and incorrupt ſpeech; whereas knowledge is not acquired by ſpeaking, but ought to go before it; tho' indeed a perſon that uſes himſelf to ſpeaking with prudence, purity, and grace, is at all times ready to give an agreeable anſwer, in a graceful and acceptable manner, to every one.

Ver. 7. All my ſtate ſhall Tychicus declare unto you, &c.] This Tychicus was an Aſian by birth; ſee Acts xx. 4. His name ſignifies fortunate, and is the ſame with Fortunatus in Latin, which name is mentioned in 1 Cor. xvi. 17. whether he is the ſame perſon may be enquired. It is ſaid that this Tychicus was one of the ſeventy diſciples, and was afterwards biſhop of Chalcedon. However, he was employed by the Apoſtle as a meſſenger to Coloſſe, as he alſo was to Epheſus, ſee Eph. vi. 21. 2 Tim. iv. 12. to inform the members of the church of his ſtate and condition, how it was with him; as that he was in priſon at Rome, for the ſake of the Goſpel, which he continued to abide by, and held faſt the profeſſion of, not being in the leaſt moved and intimidated by what he ſuffered, being ſupported by the preſence of Chriſt, and the diſcoveries of his love; and therefore, though his outward ſtate was very mean and uncomfortable, yet the inward ſtate of his ſoul was right and good; the inward man was renewed day by day. He might alſo ſend word by him what his thoughts were about his deliverance, or his diſſolution, and what expectation he had of either of theſe: and that they might give the greater credit to what Tychicus ſhould relate from him, he gives him the following character, who is a beloved brother, and a faithful miniſter: the ſame character is given of him in Eph. vi. 21. ſee the note there: to which is here added, and fellow-ſervant in the Lord; he was a brother in Chriſt, being a partaker of the ſame grace, and in the ſame ſpiritual relation; and beloved of God, and Chriſt, of all the churches and ſaints that knew him, and eſpecially by the Apoſtle; and was alſo a miniſter of the Goſpel, a preacher of Jeſus Chriſt, and a faithful one to Chriſt, to his Goſpel, and the ſouls of men; than which a greater character can't well be given: and tho' the Apoſtle was endued with ſuch ſuperior gifts, grace, and uſefulneſs; yet he calls this miniſtring brother a fellow-ſervant in the Lord; he having a commiſſion to preach from the ſame Lord, and having the ſame Goſpel entruſted with him, and being engaged in the ſame good work, and having the ſame ends in view, the glory of Chriſt, and the good of ſouls; tho' he had not equal abilities and qualifications, and was not in the ſame high poſt and office as an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 8. Whom I have ſent unto you for the ſame purpoſe, &c.] That is, to relate to them his affairs both temporal and ſpiritual; and alſo, that he might know your eſtate. The Arabic verſion renders it, that I may know your eſtate; by him when he returned again; as whether they continued ſtedfaſt in the Goſpel, and obſerved the order, ordinances, and diſcipline of it; how it proſpered, and was ſucceeded among them, to their comfort and edification, and to the converſion of others; and what reception the falſe teachers had among them; and what love, concord, and harmony were among themſelves; or what were their afflictions and diſtreſſes from their enemies. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, that ye may know the hiſtory of me; which agrees with a manuſcript mentioned by Grotius, which reads, that ye may know the things concerning us, as does the Alexandrian copy; and with Eph. vi. 22. where 'tis added, as here, and comfort your hearts; who might be greatly caſt down upon hearing of the ſufferings of the Apoſtle, and alſo with thoſe they themſelves endured both from within and from without, from ſin, ſatan, and the world; ſee the note on Eph. vi. 22.

Ver. 9. With Oneſimus, &c.] Who had been Philemon's ſervant, ran away from him, and was met with and converted by the Apoſtle Paul, of whom he ſays many things in his epiſtle to his maſter. According to the Apoſtolic Conſtitutions, he was afterwards biſhop of Berrhœa; and ſome ſay he ſuffered martyrdom under Domitian; a ſervant of this name is mentioned by Suetonius [i]. Ignatius [k] ſpeaks of one Oneſimus as biſhop of Epheſus, but not the ſame with this, a faithful and beloved brother, who is one of you; either one of their miniſters, as Epaphras was, ver. 12. or one of their city, who was originally a native of that place; and which the Apoſtle mentions, the more to recommend him; though this is the leaſt part of his commendation: he calls him a brother, being both a converted man, and in the miniſtry; and being faithful in his work to Chriſt, and greatly beloved by the ſaints; and particularly highly in the eſteem and affections of the Apoſtle: they ſhall make known unto you all things which are done here; at Rome, either to him in priſon, or in the church; and being two of them, were a proper number to bear a teſtimony, and which ought to be received.

Ver. 10. Ariſtarchus my fellow-priſoner ſaluteth you, &c.] This man was a man of Macedonia, and a Theſſalonian, Acts xix. 29. and xx. 4. which hinders not but that he might be of the circumciſion, or a Jew, as is ſuggeſted in the following verſe; for he might be born at Theſſalonica, and yet be of Jewiſh parents; nor is his Greek name any objection to it, for the Jews themſelves ſay, that the greateſt part of the Iſraelites that were out of the land, their names are as the names of ſtrangers [l]: he was a conſtant companion of the Apoſtle, and one of his fellow-labourers, as in Philem. ver. 24. and now a priſoner with him at Rome; and who having ſome knowledge of the members of the church at Coloſſe, takes this opportunity of ſending his chriſtian ſalutation to them: and Marcus ſiſters ſon to Barnabas; the ſame with John Mark, whoſe mother's name was Mary, ſaid here to be ſiſter to Barnabas, Acts xii. 12, 24. concerning whom there was a difference between Paul and Barnabas, Acts xv. 37, 38, 39. and is the ſame Mark that wrote the Goſpel, and was converted by the Apoſtle Peter, 1 Pet. v. 13. and who is ſaid to have received his Goſpel from him; he is alſo mentioned 2 Tim. iv. 11. Philem. ver. 24. The Arabic verſion calls him here, the brother's ſon of Barnabas; and the Syriac verſion, בר דדה, his uncle's ſon; however, Barnabas being ſo great a man as he was, and ſo well known, it added ſome credit to Mark, that he was a relation of his: touching whom ye received commandments; not concerning Barnabas but Mark, concerning whom they had had letters of commendation, either from Barnabas or from Paul, to this purpoſe: if he come unto you, receive him; for this was either the ſubſtance of thoſe letters, or what the Apoſtle now adds of his own, for the further confirmation of them; and that they might more readily and honourably receive him, when he ſhould come unto them.

Ver. 11. And Jeſus which is called Juſtus, &c.] The former of theſe names is the ſame with Joſhua, and was very frequent with the Jews, and the latter a ſirname that was ſometimes given to men remarkable for holineſs and righteouſneſs: ſo Joſeph called Barſabas, is ſurnamed Juſtus, Acts i. 23. and James the brother of our Lord, was called by the Jews, James the Juſt [m]: whether this man was not the ſame with Juſtus of Corinth, whoſe houſe joined to the ſynagogue, and into which Paul entered, Acts xviii. 7. is not certain, but is likely: who are of the circumciſion; were Jews, were circumciſed perſons, though not now ſticklers for circumciſion, and the reſt of the ceremonies, as appears by what follows: this is to be underſtood of all the above perſons, that ſent their ſalutations to this church; though ſome confine it to Marcus, Barnabas's ſiſter's ſon, and to Jeſus, called Juſtus: theſe only are my fellow-workers unto the kingdom of God; who aſſiſted him in preaching the Goſpel of the kingdom of God, and in promoting the honour and intereſt of Chriſt. Theſe were the only perſons of the Jewiſh nation that were then at Rome under that character; from whence it appears that Peter was not there at that time: the Apoſtle adds, which have been a comfort unto me; under his afflictions and ſufferings, by viſiting him, conferring with him, praying for him, communicating to him, and labouring in the Goſpel in his room and ſtead.

Ver. 12. Epaphras who is one of you, &c.] A native of Coloſſe, and one of their faithful miniſters; ſee ch. i. 7. A ſervant of Chriſt; not merely in the ſame ſenſe as every believer is, but as he was a preacher of the Goſpel, in which he faithfully ſerved his Lord and maſter, Chriſt: ſaluteth you; ſends his chriſtian reſpects to you, for whom he bore a ſincere love and hearty affection, as appears by what follows: always labouring fervently for you in prayers; in all his prayers, which were many and frequent, he never forgot his dear flock at Coloſſe of which he was paſtor, but ſtrove with God for them, even to an agony, as the word ſignifies; he wreſtled with the Lord as Jacob did, nor as he, would he let him go without a bleſſing for this church; he was inceſſant, importunate, and fervent in prayer for them: and what he prayed in particular for them was, that ye may ſtand perfect; in Chriſt Jeſus their head, and in his ſpotleſs righteouſneſs; ſee ch. i. 28. and ii. 10. and continue believing in him, and looking to him for righteouſneſs and ſtrength, in whom all the fulneſs, the perfection of grace dwells; and where the ſaints only are, and can continue to be perfect: and compleat in all the will of God; or be filled in it, have a perfect knowledge of the revealed will of God, both as to doctrine and practice, and be enabled to act according to it.

Ver. 13. For I bear him record, &c.] The Apoſtle was an eye and ear-witneſs of his fervent prayers, his labour of love, and zealous affection for theſe ſaints and others; and therefore as he judged he ought, he bears a teſtimony for him, that he hath a great zeal for you; for their ſpiritual welfare, that the Goſpel might continue with them, and they in that, againſt falſe teachers, and their attempts to ſubvert them; that they might grow in the grace of the Goſpel, and walk worthy of it, and be at peace among themſelves: and them that are in Laodicea, and them in Hierapolis; cities in Phrygia, which lay near to Coloſſe, the one being ſituated by the river Lycus, and the other by the Mæander; here were many believers, for whom Epaphras had a like zeal and affection as for the Coloſſians, and to whom very likely he had been uſeful, either in converſion or edification, or both. The Apoſtle takes no notice to the Coloſſians of Epaphras being his fellow-priſoner, as he does in his Epiſtle to Philemon, ver. 23. it may be for this reaſon, leſt they ſhould be overmuch diſtreſſed and caſt down with it.

Ver. 14. Luke the beloved phyſician, &c.] Luke the Evangeliſt, though ſome doubt it, is here intended, who was a conſtant companion of the Apoſtle in his troubles, and went with him to Rome, as the Acts of the Apoſtles wrote by him ſhew, and as from 2 Tim. iv. 11. it appears; ſo Jerom[n] calls the Evangeliſt Luke, the phyſician of Antioch, for from thence he was; and being converted by the Apoſtle Paul, as is very probable, though ſome make him to be one of the ſeventy diſciples, he became of a phyſician of bodies, a phyſician of ſouls: ſome ſay[o] he was a ſcholar of Galen the famous phyſician, and others that he was his ſiſter's ſon; who having heard of Chriſt's miracles, ſet out with his maſter Galen for Judea, to know the truth of them, of which they doubted; Galen died by the way, Luke came to Chriſt, and being taught by him, became one of the ſeventy diſciples. The Apoſtle calls him beloved, not on account of his profeſſion, in which he might be uſeful to many, but as he was a brother in Chriſt, a miniſter of the Goſpel, and a fellow-labourer of his. This is the ſame perſon with Lucas, mentioned along with Demas, and others, as here, in Philem. ver. 24. The name perhaps is Roman, but was however well known among the Jews; for they ſay[p], the "witneſſes that ſign a divorce, and "their names are as the names of ſtrangers, what "is to be done with it? there's none comes into "our hands (is received) but, לוקום, Lukus and "Lus, and we allow it to be right:" upon which the Gloſs ſays, becauſe theſe were famous names: and Demas greet you; the ſame who through the love of the preſent world, forſook the Apoſtle, 2 Tim. iv. 10. which he did either after the writing of this epiſtle, or if before it, he was now returned again to him: his name ſeems to be the ſame with the Roman Dama, unleſs it ſhould be a contraction of Demetrius, or rather of Demarchos; though the Jews make frequent mention of R. דימי, Dimi, or Demi, in their writings[q], which perhaps is the ſame name with this.

Ver. 15. Salute the brethren which are in Laodicea, &c.] Where there was a church mentioned in the following verſe, of which ſee the note on Rev. ii. 10. And Nymphas; which ſome unſkilful in the Greek language, have took for a woman; whereas it is the name of a man, as the following words ſhew; and is a contraction of Nymphios, or Nymphidios, or Nymphodoros: and the church which is in his houſe. This man ſeems to have been an inhabitant of Laodicea, and that the church there met at his houſe to worſhip God, to pray unto him, ſing his praiſe, hear his word, and attend on all ordinances; or his own family was brought up ſo ſtrictly to the obſervance of theſe things, that they looked like a little church of themſelves.

Ver. 16. And when this epiſtle is read amongſt you, &c.] Which the Apoſtle was now writing, and ſent unto them; and which was to be read publickly, before the whole church; being ſent not to any particular perſon, or perſons, but to the whole body, and for their general good and inſtruction: cauſe that it be read alſo in the church of the Laodiceans; his will was, that after it had been read to the church at Coloſſe, it ſhould be ſent, or at leaſt a copy of it, to the church of the Laodiceans, in order to be read there: his reaſon might be, not only becauſe this church was near them, but becauſe it was in much the ſame ſituation, being infeſted with the ſame ſort of falſe teachers; and therefore what was ſaid to the one, was pertinent to the other: and that ye likewiſe read the epiſtle from Laodicea; which was not an epiſtle of the Apoſtle to the Laodiceans, as ſome have thought, but one that was written from thence, as the Syriac verſion renders it. Marcion the heretick, called the epiſtle to the Epheſians, the epiſtle to the Laodiceans, but without any reaſon; and others have forged an epiſtle which bears this name, and appears to be a collection out of others, and chiefly from the epiſtle to the Philippians; and which being ſhort, and may gratify the curious who can't otherwiſe come at it, I ſhall tranſcribe it, and is as follows. "Paul an Apoſtle, not of men, neither "by man, but by Jeſus Chriſt; to the brethren "which are of Laodicea, grace be unto you, and "peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jeſus "Chriſt. I give thanks to Chriſt in every prayer "of mine, that ye continue and perſevere in good "works, expecting the promiſe in the day of "judgment: neither let the vain ſpeeches of ſome "that pretend to truth diſturb you, ſo as to turn "you from the truth of the Goſpel which is "preached by me; and now the Lord cauſe that "thoſe who belong to me, may be ſerviceable for "the furtherance of the truth of the Goſpel, and "doing kind actions, which are of ſalvation unto "eternal life: and now my bonds are manifeſt which "I ſuffer in Chriſt, in which I am glad and rejoice; "and this is to my perpetual ſalvation which is "done by your prayers, the Holy Ghoſt ſupplying, whether by life or by death; for me to live "is life in Chriſt, and to die is joy; and he will "do his own mercy in you, that ye may have the "ſame love, and be unanimous: therefore moſt

“beloved, as ye have heard of the preſence of the Lord, ſo think ye, and do in fear, and you ſhall have life for ever; for it is God that worketh in you; and whatſoever ye do, do without ſin; and what is beſt, moſt beloved, rejoice in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and take heed of all filth in all gain; let your petitions be openly with God, be ye ſtedfaſt in the ſenſe of Chriſt: and whatſoever things are ſound and true, and chaſte and juſt, and lovely, do; and what ye have heard and received retain in the heart, and peace ſhall be with you. Salute all the brethren with an holy kiſs; all the ſaints ſalute you; the grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with your ſpirit. Amen. Cauſe this to be read to the Coloſſians, and that which is of the Coloſſians to you.” Every one on reading it will eaſily ſee that it is a ſpurious piece, a collection out of other epiſtles, and very ill put together: however, the Apoſtle here does not ſpeak of any epiſtle written to the church of Laodicea, but of one that was written from thence; which ſome think was written by himſelf, and that he means his firſt epiſtle to Timothy, which is ſaid to be written from Laodicea; and the rather, becauſe in that the qualifications of the miniſters of the Goſpel are given; and alſo ſuitable inſtructions for the diſcharge of their work, and ſo very proper to be read in the preſence of Archippus; who from the following verſe, ſeems to have been remiſs and negligent, and needed ſtirring up to the performance of his office: but from ch. ii. 1. it appears, that the Apoſtle had not been at Laodicea when he wrote this, and had not ſo much as ſeen any of the faces of the brethren there in the fleſh; it therefore ſeems rather to be an epiſtle which was ſent from Laodicea to him, or to the Coloſſians; which having ſomething in it very inſtructive and uſeful, the Apoſtle deſires it might be publickly read.

Ver. 17. And ſay to Archippus, &c.] A name common among the Grecians. This perſon the Apoſtle calls his fellow-ſoldier, in Philem. ver. 2. and who was now the miniſter of the Goſpel at Coloſſe, his fellow-miniſter, or co-paſtor Epaphras, being at Rome, and a priſoner there; though by ſome he is ſaid to be the firſt biſhop of the Laodiceans, but it ſeems moſt likely that he now reſided at Coloſſe, and was their miniſter: who being negligent in his office, they are called upon to ſay unto him, take heed to the miniſtry which thou haſt received in the Lord, that thou fulfil it. The miniſtry he had, was not that of the office of a deacon, as ſome have thought, but of a preacher of the word; and this he had received gifts for, and was called unto it, and inſtalled in it; and that in, and by the Lord himſelf, and to whom he was accountable for it: and therefore it was incumbent on him to fulfil it; by conſtantly preaching the word, and faithfully adminiſtring the ordinances; by defending truth, detecting error, reproving vice, viſiting the ſick, and comforting the feeble minded; taking heed in all things to himſelf and doctrine, that he feed the whole flock of God with wholeſome food; and as a wiſe and faithful ſteward, give to every one their portion of meat in due ſeaſon: hence it appears, that when miniſters are negligent in the diſcharge of their duty, the church has a power to admoniſh and exhort them to a diligent performance of it.

Ver. 18. The ſalutation by the hand of me Paul, &c.] After his Amanuenſis had finiſhed the epiſtle, he added his uſual ſalutation to it with his own hand, to prevent all counterfeits and impoſitions; and that the churches to whom he wrote, might be ſure of the genuineneſs of his epiſtles; but before he added it to it, he either wrote with his own hand, or ordered to be written the following words, remember my bonds; this he ſays, partly that they might be animated to abide by the Goſpel, for which, as he had told them before, ver. 3. that he was in bonds; and partly to encourage them by his example, patiently to endure what afflictions and perſecutions ſoever they ſhould meet with, for the ſake of it; as alſo that they might be moved hereby, to remember him in their prayers, that if it was the will of God, he might be releaſed, and be yet further uſeful in preaching the Goſpel; or however, that he might be ſupported in his bonds, and chearfully bear them, and remain ſtedfaſt in his faith in Chriſt unto the end: and then follows the ſalutation, grace be with you, Amen; which is common to all his epiſtles, and well ſuits them; in which he ſo much diſplays the grace of God, as it is expreſſed in the Goſpel; and which his heart was full of, and earneſtly deſired might be more largely manifeſted to, and beſtowed upon the ſaints. This epiſtle is ſaid to be written from Rome to the Coloſſians, by Tychicus and Oneſimus; and though the ſubſcriptions of the epiſtles are not always to be depended on, yet this ſeems to be right; that it was inſcribed to the Coloſſians, there is no doubt; and that it was written from Rome is clear enough, ſince by ſeveral expreſſions it is plain, that he was now a priſoner and in bonds; and that it was ſent by Tychicus and Oneſimus is more than probable, from ver. 7, 8, 9.

AN
EXPOSITION, &c.

The Firſt Epiſtle of PAUL the Apoſtle to the THESSALONIANS.

THESSALONICA was a very large populous and flouriſhing city, it was liberæ conditionis, as Pliny ſays[a], a free city, and the metropolis of Macedonia; it was formerly called Halis[b], and had the name of Theſſalonica given it by Philip king of Macedon, on account of his conqueſt of Theſſalia, which this name ſignifies; and ſome ſay he gave this name to a daughter of his on that occaſion, who was afterwards the wife of Caſſander; who others ſay, called this place by his wife's name[c], which before was Therme: its name with the Italians is Salonichi, and is now in the hands of the Turks, as all Greece is: here the Apoſtle Paul came after he had been at Philippi, and ſtayed about three weeks, and preached every ſabbath-day, and his miniſtry was bleſſed to the converſion of ſome Jews, a multitude of devout Greeks, and many of the chief women of the place, which laid the foundation of a Goſpel-church; to which the Apoſtle wrote this epiſtle, and is the firſt of all the epiſtles he wrote: the occaſion of it was this; the unbelieving Jews vexed to ſee the Apoſtle's ſucceſs, raiſed a mob of the baſer ſort of people, and aſſaulted the houſe of Jaſon where the Apoſtle and his companions were; but Paul and Silas were ſent away by night to Berea, which the rabble underſtanding followed them thither; when Paul was ſent as if he was going to the ſea, but was conducted by the brethren to Athens, who gave orders that Silas and Timothy ſhould come to him with all ſpeed, as they did; and Timothy was ſent back to Theſſalonica to eſtabliſh and comfort the young converts there; and returning with good news of their faith, and charity, to the Apoſtle at Corinth, he ſent them from thence this epiſtle, and not from Athens, as ſome have thought: the deſign of which is to encourage them under their afflictions and ſufferings; to exhort them to ſtand faſt in the Lord, to abide by his truths and ordinances, and to live an holy life and converſation; and to regard the ſeveral duties of religion, towards God and one another, and thoſe that were ſet over them; and in it he inſtructs them concerning the reſurrection of the dead, and the coming of Chriſt, articles of very great importance and concern: the writing of this epiſtle is placed by Dr. Lightfoot, in the 51ſt year of Chriſt, and in the 11th of Claudius Cæſar.

CHAP. I.

THIS chapter contains the inſcription of the epiſtle; the Apoſtle's ſalutation of the perſons it is wrote unto; his thankſgiving for bleſſings received by them; an account of the manner in which the Goſpel came to them, how they behaved when it was preached to them, and of the ſucceſs of it in their converſion. The inſcription which expreſſes the names of the perſons concerned in the epiſtle, and deſcribes thoſe to whom it is written, and alſo the ſalutation, which is the ſame as in other epiſtles, are in ver. 1. and then follows a thankſgiving to God, made in prayer to him for the ſpecial graces of the Spirit beſtowed on them, as faith, hope, and love, and the lively exerciſe of them in which they were; the ſource and ſpring of which was the electing love of God, ver. 2, 3, 4. and the evidence of their election of God to the Apoſtle, was the manner in which the Goſpel came to them; not merely in the external miniſtry of it, but in the internal efficacy of it, thro' the power of the Holy Ghoſt, ver. 5. and the effects of it upon them; it found an hearty reception among them, in much affliction, and with joy of the Holy Ghoſt; ſo that they not only profeſſed it, and became the followers of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, but were examples unto others, ver. 6, 7. for the fame of the Goſpel being preached unto them, and of their faith, were ſpread every where, ſo that the Apoſtle had no need to ſay any thing about it, ver. 8. the manner of their entrance among them, and the iſſue of it, their converſion, were ſo manifeſt to all; which is deſcribed by what they were turned from, idols; and by what they were turned to, the living God; and by the ends of it, which were to ſerve God, and wait for Jeſus Chriſt; the arguments engaging to which are, his relation to God as his Son, his being raiſed from the dead by him; his being in heaven, exalted at his right hand there, from whence he is expected; and his having by his ſufferings and death, delivered his people from wrath to come, ver. 9, 10.

Ver. 1. Paul, and Sylvanus, and Timotheus, &c.] Theſe are the perſons concerned in this epiſtle, and who ſend their greetings and ſalutations to this church; Paul was the inſpired writer of it, and who is called by his bare name, without any additional epithet to it, as elſewhere in his other epiſtles; where he is either ſtiled the ſervant, or Apoſtle, or priſoner of Chriſt, but here only Paul: the reaſon for it is variouſly conjectured; either becauſe he was well known by this church, having been lately with them; or leſt theſe young converts ſhould be offended and ſtumble at any pompous title, which they might imagine carried an appearance of arrogance and pride; or becauſe there were as yet no falſe Apoſtles among them, who had inſinuated any thing to the diſadvantage of Paul, as in other places, which obliged him to aſſert his character and magnify his office; or rather becauſe this was the firſt epiſtle he wrote, and he being conſcious to himſelf of his own meanneſs, and that he was the leaſt of the Apoſtles, and unworthy to be called one, choſe not to uſe the title. Sylvanus is the ſame with Silas, who was with the Apoſtle at Theſſalonica and at Corinth, when he wrote this epiſtle; he was originally a member of the church at Jeruſalem, and was one of the chief of the brethren there, and a prophet; ſee Acts xvii. 4. and xviii. 5. and xv. 22, 23. Timotheus was alſo with the Apoſtle at the ſame place, and was ſent back by him from Athens to know their ſtate, and returned to Corinth to him with Silas; he ſtands laſt as being the younger, and perhaps was the Apoſtle's Amanuenſis, and therefore in modeſty writes his name laſt: the reaſon of their being mentioned, was becauſe having been with the Apoſtle at this place they were well known by the church, who would be glad to hear of their welfare; as alſo to ſhew their continued harmony and conſent in the doctrines of the Goſpel; they ſtand in the ſame order in 2 Cor. i. 19. unto the church of the Theſſalonians; which conſiſted of ſeveral of the inhabitants of Theſſalonica, both Jews and Gentiles; ſee the note on Acts xvii. 4. who were called under the miniſtry of the word by the grace of God, out of darkneſs into marvellous light, and were ſeparated from the reſt of the world, and incorporated into a Goſpel-church-ſtate. This was a particular congregated church of Chriſt. Some have thought it was not as yet organized, or had proper officers in it; ſince no mention is made of paſtors and deacons, but the contrary is evident from chap. v. 12, 13. where they are exhorted to know, own and acknowledge them that laboured among them, and were over them in the Lord, and eſteem them highly for their work ſake. This church is ſaid to be in God the Father; were intereſted in his love and free favour, as appears by their election of God, ver. 4. and they were in the faith of God the Father, as the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and in the profeſſion of it, and ſo were diſtinguiſhed from an aſſembly of heathens that were in the faith of idols, and not of the one true and living God, and eſpecially as the Father of Chriſt; they were in fellowſhip with God the Father, and they were drawn by the efficacy of his grace to himſelf and to his Son, and were gathered together and embodied in a church-ſtate under his direction and influence; he was the author of them as a church, and they were plants of Chriſt's heavenly Father's planting not to be plucked up; and they were as the Arabic verſion renders it, addicted to God the Father; they were devoted to his ſervice; they had his word among them, which they had received not as the word of men, but as the word of God; and his ordinances were duly and faithfully adminiſtered among them, and attended on by them: and in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; they were choſen in him before the foundation of the world; they were in him as their head and repreſentative; they were in him as members of his body, and as branches in the vine; they were openly in him by effectual vocation and converſion, were in the faith of him, and in the obſervance of his commands, and in communion with him; and ſo were diſtinguiſhed from a Jewiſh ſynagogue or congregation: all this being true, at leaſt of the far greater part of them is ſaid of them all, in a judgment of charity, they being under a profeſſion of the chriſtian religion: grace be unto you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. This is the Apoſtle's uſual ſalutation and wiſh in all his epiſtles to the churches; ſee the note on Rom. i. 7. the words from God our Father and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt are left out in the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions; and the Arabic verſion omits the laſt clauſe, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and the Ethiopic verſion only reads, peace be unto you and his grace.

Ver. 2. We give thanks to God always for you all, &c.] For all the members of this church, Jew or Gentile, rich or poor, greater or leſſer believers, officers or private chriſtians; for their being a church, for the gifts beſtowed on them, for the graces hereafter mentioned that were wrought in them and exerciſed by them; the glory of all which is given to God, and thanks for the ſame, which ſhews them to be gifts of his, and not in the leaſt owing to any merits of men: the Apoſtle aſcribes nothing to their free will, previous diſpoſitions and qualifications, diligence and induſtry; nor does he attribute any thing to himſelf and to his companions, who were only miniſters by whom theſe believed; but he refers all to God, to his grace and goodneſs: and he returned thanks to him for it, and that always; whenever he thought of it, made mention of it, or was at the throne of grace as follows, making mention of you in our prayers; to God, daily, both in private and in public, at which times thankſgivings to God were made on their account; for thankſgiving is a part of prayer, and requeſts are always to be made known unto God with thankſgiving. The Ethiopic verſion renders this clauſe in the ſingular number, and I am mindful of you always in my prayer; and leaves out the word all in the former clauſe.

Ver. 3. Remembering without ceaſing, &c.] The phraſe without ceaſing, is by the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions, joined to the laſt clauſe of the preceeding verſe; and the remembrance the Apoſtle ſpeaks of is either a diſtinct thing from the mention made of them in prayer, and ſuggeſts that they bore them on their minds at other times alſo; or it is the ſame with it; or rather a reaſon of their mentioning of them then, becauſe they remembered them, and the following things of theirs: as your work of faith; by which is meant not the principle of faith, for as ſuch that is God's work, the produce of his grace, and the effect of his almighty power; but the operative virtue and exerciſe of it under the influence of the grace of God: the Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions render it, the work of your faith; and ſo ſome copies, and the Syriac verſion, the works of your faith. The Targumiſt in Hab. i. 12. repreſents God as holy בעובדי הימנותא, in works of faith: faith is a working grace, it has a deal of work to do, it has its hands always full, and is employed about many things; it is the grace by which a ſoul goes to God, as its covenant God, lays hold on him as ſuch, pleads his promiſes with him, aſks favours of him, and is very importunate, and will have no denial; and by which it goes to Chriſt as at firſt converſion, afterwards for freſh ſupplies of grace, out of that fulneſs of grace that is in him; it receives him and all from him, and thro' him pardon, righteouſneſs, adoption of children, and an eternal inheritance; and it is that grace which carries back all the glory to God and Chriſt, and to free grace; it glorifies God, exalts Chriſt, humbles the creature, and magnifies the grace of God, it has much work to do this way; and it works by love, by acts of love to God, to Chriſt, and to the ſaints; and it puts the ſoul upon a chearful obedience to every ordinance and command, and hence obedience is ſtiled the obedience of faith; and indeed all good works that are properly ſo, are done in faith, and faith without works is dead; it is greatly engaged againſt the world and the devil; it is that grace by which ſatan is oppoſed and overcome, and by which the believer gets the victory over the world; ſo that he is not diſcouraged by its frowns, and caſt down by the trials and afflictions he meets with in it, nor drawn aſide by its ſnares and allurements; ſomething of this kind the Apoſtle had obſerved and remembered in theſe believers: he adds, and labour of love; love is a laborious grace when in lively exerciſe; love to God and Chriſt will conſtrain a believer to engage in, and go thro' great hardſhips, difficulties, toil, and labour for their ſakes; and love to the ſaints will exert itſelf, by ſerving them in things temporal and ſpiritual, miniſtring chearfully and largely to their outward wants, for which reaſon the ſame epithet is given to love in Heb. vi. 10. as here; regarding and aſſiſting them in their ſpiritual concerns; praying for them and with them; building them up in their moſt holy faith; communicating their experiences, and ſpeaking comfortable words unto them; reproving them for ſin in love, and with tenderneſs; reſtoring them when fallen in a ſpirit of meekneſs; and ſtirring them up to love and good works: love has much toil and labour, not only in performing the ſeveral duties of religion, both towards God and man; but in bearing all things, the burdens of fellow-chriſtians, the infirmities of weak believers, forbearing them in love, forgiving their offences, and covering their ſins: and patience of hope in our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, or of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Theſe perſons had a good hope thro' grace given unto them, and which was founded in Chriſt Jeſus, in his perſon, blood, and righteouſneſs, and ſo was as an anchor ſure and ſtedfaſt; and it had him for its object, it was an hope of intereſt in him, of being for ever with him, of his ſecond coming and glorious appearance, and of eternal life and happineſs thro' him; and this was attended with patience, with a patient bearing of reproaches, afflictions, and perſecutions for the ſake of Chriſt, and a patient waiting for his coming, his kingdom and glory; and this as well as the others were remembered by the Apoſtle, and his fellow-miniſters, with great pleaſure: and that in the ſight of God and our Father, or before God and our Father; which may be read in connection either with the above graces, which were exerciſed, not only before men, but before God, and in his ſight, who ſees not as man ſeeth, and who cannnot be deceived and impoſed upon; and ſo ſhews that theſe graces were true and genuine, faith was unfeigned, love was without diſſimulation, and hope without hypocriſy: or with the word remembering, as it is in the Syriac verſion, which reads, remembering before God and our Father; that is, as often as we appear before God, and lift up our hands and our hearts unto him in prayer, we bear you upon our minds before God; and particularly remember your operative faith, laborious love, and patient hope of Chriſt.

Ver. 4. Knowing, brethren beloved, your election of God.] Which intends not an election to an office, for this epiſtle is written not to the officers of the church only, but to the whole church; nor to the Goſpel, the outward means of grace, ſince this was common to them with others, and might be known without the evidence after given; nor does it deſign effectual vocation ſometimes ſo called, for this is expreſſed in the following verſe as a fruit, effect and evidence of the election here ſpoken of, which is no other than the eternal choice of them to everlaſting life and happineſs: this is of God, an act of God the Father, made in Chriſt Jeſus before the world began, and which ſprings from his ſovereign will, and is the effect of his pure love and free favour; and therefore theſe perſons who are the objects of it, are ſaid to be beloved of God; for ſo the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read the words, and which agree with 2 Theſſ. ii. 13. for this choice does not ariſe from the merits of men, or any conditions in them, or from the foreſight of their faith, holineſs, and good works, but from the free grace and good pleaſure of God; and is the ſource and ſpring of all grace, and the bleſſings of it, and even of good works; and is a ſure immutable and irreverſible act of God, being founded on his own will, and not on the works of men: the knowledge they had of this was not what the Theſſalonians themſelves had, tho' they might have, and doubtleſs had the knowledge of this grace, and which may be concluded with certainty from effectual vocation; and is a priviledge which many particular believers may, and do arrive unto the knowledge of, without any extraordinary revelation made unto them: but here it intends the knowledge which the Apoſtle and his companions had of the election of the members of this church; not by inſpiration of the Spirit of God, but by the manner of the Goſpel's coming unto them, and the effects it had upon them, as expreſſed in the following verſes; and from their faith, hope, and love mentioned in the preceding verſe; and which was the ground and foundation of their thankſgiving for them; ſee 2 Theſſ. ii. 13.

Ver. 5. For our Goſpel came not unto you, &c.] The Apoſtle calls the Goſpel our Goſpel, not becauſe he and his fellow-miniſters were the authors of it; for in this reſpect it is ſolely of God, being the produce of his wiſdom and grace, and by the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt, hence he calls it the Goſpel of God in chap. ii. 2, 8, 9. nor becauſe they were the ſubject of it, for they preached not themſelves, but a crucified Chriſt and him only, tho' it was a ſtumbling-block to ſome, and fooliſhneſs to others; but becauſe it was committed to their truſt, and they were the preachers of it; and agreed in the miniſtration of it; and it is oppoſed to, and is diſtinct from that which was preached by the falſe teachers; and here intends not barely the Goſpel itſelf, but chiefly their preaching of it: and this came unto them being ſent of God, for whereever the Goſpel comes, it comes with a miſſion and commiſſion from God; and being brought unto them by the Apoſtles, who were bringers and publiſhers of the good tidings of good things, it came unthought of, unſought and unaſked for by them; and that not only externally, which to have is a great bleſſing, but internally, εις υμας, into you; it came not barely into their ears vocally, and into their heads notionally; but into their hearts, and worked effectually there; it was mixed with faith, and was profitable; it became the engrafted word, and dwelt richly in them: for it came to them not in word only; it did come in word, it could not come without words, there is no interpreting of ſcripture, no preaching of the Goſpel, nor hearing of it without words, without articulate ſounds; but not only with theſe, nor with wiſdom of words, with enticing words of man's wiſdom, with words which man's wiſdom teacheth; as alſo not in the mere notion and letter of the Goſpel, which when it comes in that manner is a dead letter, and the ſavour of death unto death: but in power; not merely preached in a powerful way, or attended with miraculous operations, tho' doubtleſs both were true; for the Apoſtle was a powerful preacher, and his miniſtry was confirmed by ſigns and wonders and mighty deeds; but from neither of theſe could he conclude the election of theſe people: but the preaching of the Goſpel was accompanied with the powerful efficacy of the grace of God, working by it upon them; ſo that it became the power of God unto ſalvation to them; it came to them in the demonſtration of the Spirit of God, and of power, quickening them who were dead in treſpaſſes and ſin, enlightening their dark underſtandings, unſtopping their deaf ears, ſoftening their hard hearts, and delivering them from the ſlavery of ſin and ſatan; from whence it clearly appeared that they were the choſen of God, and precious: and in the Holy Ghoſt; the Goſpel was not only preached under the influence, and by the aſſiſtance of the holy Spirit, and attended with his extraordinary gifts for the confirmation of it, which it might be, and be no proof of the election of theſe perſons to eternal life; but it came by the power of the holy Spirit to their ſouls, working and implanting his graces in them, as faith, hope, and love, and every other; and he himſelf was received along with it, as a Spirit of illumination and conviction, of regeneration, converſion and ſanctification, and of faith and adoption; all which gave full evidence of their election: and in much aſſurance; not on the preacher's ſide, as if the Goſpel was preached by him with great aſſurance, boldneſs, and confidence; or with great ſtrength of evidence, giving clear and full proof of what was delivered ſufficient to aſcertain it, and perſuade any one to the belief of it; or with much fulneſs, as ſome render the words, that is of the Goſpel of Chriſt, and of the gifts of the Spirit, and to a multitude of perſons; all which might be, and yet be no proof of the choice of theſe perſons in Chriſt to eternal ſalvation; but the Goſpel preached to them was bleſſed to produce in them much aſſurance, or a large aſſurance, if not a full one, of the grace of faith in Chriſt, and of hope of eternal life by him, and of underſtanding of the doctrines of the Goſpel, and of intereſt in the bleſſings of grace held forth in them; and this being a fruit, was an evidence of electing grace: as ye know what manner of men we were among you for your ſake. The Apoſtle appeals to themſelves for the truth of what he had ſaid; who muſt have obſerved, and could not but remember, with what meanneſs they appeared, with what fear and trembling, with what plainneſs and ſimplicity, without the enticing words of man's wiſdom; what a contemptible figure they made, how they wrought with their own hands, and endured reproach and perſecution for their ſakes, that they might obtain ſalvation by Chriſt with eternal glory; and had nothing to recommend them to them, to win upon them, and engage their attention, and ſtrike their affection; or perſuade them to receive their perſons, and believe their doctrines; wherefore the effects their miniſtry had upon them were not owing to the charms of words, the force of language, and power of oratory; or to any external thing in them, or done by them; but muſt be aſcribed to the Spirit of God, and to the power and efficacy of his grace.

Ver. 6. And ye became followers of us, and of the Lord, &c.] So far followers of them as they were of Chriſt, in embracing the Goſpel, ſubmitting to the ordinaces of it, profeſſing the name of Chriſt, and ſuffering for his ſake; the Alexandrian copy reads, of God, and others, of Chriſt: having received the word; the Goſpel, the word of truth, peace, and righteouſneſs, and of ſalvation by Chriſt; which they received not as the word of man, but of God; and that in much affliction; referring to the uproar made by the baſer ſort of people, inſtigated by the unbelieving Jews, and the trouble they gave to Jaſon and other brethren, mentioned in Acts xvii. 1, 5—9. and this is a conſiderable commendation of them, that at a time when others were offended and fell off from hearing the word, and a profeſſion of the Goſpel they ſhould receive it, and that with much joy of the Holy Ghoſt; not with a carnal joy, or with a mere flaſh of natural affection, as in the ſtony ground hearers, and in the Jews, who rejoiced for a while in John's miniſtry, and in Herod who ſometimes heard him gladly; but with a ſpiritual joy of the Holy Ghoſt's producing in them, applying the word with power to them, giving them a ſpiritual guſt of it, and pleaſure in it, raiſing in their ſouls a joy upon the moſt ſolid foundation.

Ver. 7. So that ye were enſamples to all that believe, &c.] They were not only followers of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, whom they took for examples of faith, holineſs, courage, meekneſs, and patience; but they were patterns of good works, and of ſuffering afflictions to other believers, even to all that knew them, or heard of them, particularly, in Macedonia; as at Philippi and other places: tho' the Goſpel was firſt preached there, and they had received it, and a Goſpel-churchſtate was formed there; yet theſe were more forward in the exerciſe of grace and diſcharge of duty, and were even enſamples to them to copy after; ſo the firſt are ſometimes laſt, and the laſt firſt: and Achaia; another part of Greece, the metropolis of which was Corinth, where there alſo was a very conſiderable church; but theſe ſaints at Theſſalonica ſet them an example in many things, and particularly in acts of beneficence and liberality, being one of the churches of Macedonia ſpoken of in 2 Cor. viii. 1.

Ver. 8. For from you ſounded out the word of the Lord, &c.] By which is meant the Goſpel, and is ſo called becauſe it is from the Lord, as the author of it; and it is of the Lord, as the ſubject of it; and it is by the Lord, as the miniſter or diſpenſer of it; and it is owing to the efficacy of his grace, that it is uſeful and ſucceſsful, and ought to be attended to, received, and obeyed, not as the word of man, but as the word of the Lord. This is ſaid to have ſounded out, alluding to the blowing of a trumpet, to which the Goſpel is ſometimes compared, as to the ſilver trumpet under the law, for the gathering of the people of Iſrael; or to the trumpet blown in the years of Jubilee, which proclaimed liberty, releaſe of debts, and reſtoration of inheritances, as the Goſpel in a ſpiritual ſenſe does; or to the trumpet uſed in war to prepare for the battle, and therefore ſhould not give an uncertain ſound; or as uſed muſically, the Goſpel being a joyful ſound; and this ſounding of it may denote the clear publication and open declaration, and large ſpread of it far and near: tho' when it is ſaid to ſound forth from the Theſſalonians, it is not to be underſtood as if the Goſpel firſt began to be preached among them, and from thence went to other places; it was preached at Philippi before it came to them, and at many other places before it was there; the word of the Lord according to the prophecy of Iſ. ii. 2. came from Jeruſalem; Chriſt and his Apoſtles firſt preached there, and from thence their words and ſound went to the ends of the earth; but not ſo much the preaching of the Goſpel, as the fame and report of its being preached in this place is here meant: and ſo the Latin tranſlation of the Syriac verſion renders it, for from you went the report of the word of our Lord; the fame of its being preached and received at Theſſalonica, in the manner it was, ſpread itſelf, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but alſo in every place; not only at Philippi, Beræa, Athens, and Corinth, and other cities and towns in thoſe countries, but alſo in other parts of the world; and what greatly contributed to it, were the uproar that was made at Theſſalonica, and continued at Beræa upon the firſt preaching of the Goſpel in thoſe parts by the unbelieving Jews; as alſo the large numbers both of Greeks and Jews, and of devout women of conſiderable families that were converted: to which may be added, that Theſſalonica was the metropolis of Macedonia, and a city of great trade, and much frequented from all parts both by ſea and land; and by this means it came to paſs, that not only the fame of the preaching of the word among them went abroad every where; but as the Apoſtle adds, your faith to God-ward is ſpread abroad; meaning the grace of faith beſtowed on them, by which they received the Goſpel in the love of it, aſſented to it, and profeſſed it, and which has God for its object, and is very valuable, ſince ſuch publick notice is taken of it; and which ſhews that it was not kept to themſelves, and lay hid in their own breaſts; but they declared it both by words and by deeds, by making a profeſſion of it, and by walking agreeable to it: ſo that we had no need to ſpeak any thing; the Syriac verſion adds, concerning you; concerning the preaching of the Goſpel among them, their faith in it and profeſſion of it, all being ſo well known in the ſeveral places where they came; for it ſeems it was uſual with the Apoſtles when they came to any place, to ſpeak of their ſucceſs in others, and of the faith, and hope, and joy of other chriſtians, for the encouragement of, and as enſamples to thoſe to whom they miniſter; but with relation to the Theſſalonians this was unneceſſary.

Ver. 9. For they themſelves ſhew of us, &c.] Either the above reports of the preaching of the Goſpel to the Theſſalonians, and of their faith in God; or rather the perſons to whom theſe reports were brought, openly and publickly, and largely declared concerning the Apoſtles, what manner of entering in we had unto you; under what difficulties they laboured, what contention they had with the unbelieving Jews, what reproaches were caſt upon them, and what perſecutions they endured when they firſt entred their city and ſynagogue, and preached the Goſpel to them; and in what manner they did preach it, with what boldneſs, ſincerity, uprightneſs and affection, and without flattery, covetouſneſs, and vain glory; and with what power it came to them, and what ſucceſs attended it, and how readily, chearfully, and reverently both they and that were received by them: and how ye turned to God from idols; immediately and at once, upon the preaching of the Goſpel to them, being firſt turned by the powerful and efficacious grace of God; for the firſt work of converſion is God's work; then they themſelves under the influence of the ſame grace, turned to the one God, from their internal idols, their ſins and luſts, and from their external idols, their many falſe and fictitious deities: for the Theſſalonians before the Goſpel came among them were idolaters; here the Dii Cabiri, the great and chief gods of the Gentiles were worſhipped; as Jupiter and Bacchus, Ceres and Proſerpina, Pluto and Mercury, Caſtor and Pollux, and Eſculapius; theſe the Macedonians, and particularly the Theſſalonians, worſhipped with great devotion and reverence[d]: but now they turned from them and forſook them, to ſerve the living and true God; who is called the living God, becauſe he has life in and of himſelf, and is the fountain of life to others; from whom all living creatures have their life, and are ſupported in it by him; and in oppoſition to the above idols, which were inanimate things made of wood or metal, and were images of men that had been dead long ago: and the true God, becauſe he is truth itſelf and cannot lye, who faithfully performs all his promiſes, and is to be worſhipped in ſpirit and in truth; and in oppoſition to the nominal and fictitious deities of the Gentiles, which were only in name, not in truth and reality, or by nature Gods: now tho' theſe Theſſalonians had before done ſervice to theſe idols, they now turned from them to ſerve the one living and true God; not only externally, by embracing and profeſſing his Goſpel, ſubmitting to his ordinances, and walking according to the rules preſcribed by him; but alſo internally, in the exerciſe of faith, hope, love, and every other grace.

Ver. 10. And to wait for his Son from heaven, &c.] The Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is the natural, eſſential, and eternal Son of God; and whoever is truly converted, is not only turned to God the Father, and believes in him; but alſo believes in, receives, embraces, and profeſſes his Son Jeſus Chriſt; who became incarnate, and in the human nature he aſſumed, obeyed, ſuffered, and died and roſe again, and aſcended into heaven, where he now is, and will be till the time of the reſtitution of all things; when he will deſcend from thence, and come and judge the world in righteouſneſs; and from thence the ſaints expect him, and look and wait by faith for eternal glory and happineſs by him, and with him at his appearance and kingdom; ſo that many articles of faith are contained in this expreſſion, which theſe Theſſalonians were acquainted with, believed, and acted upon: and Chriſt the Son of God is further deſcribed as that perſon whom he raiſed from the dead; that is, whom God the Father raiſed from the dead, and whereby he was declared to be the Son of God; and which ſuppoſes his dying for the ſins of his people, as it expreſſes his riſing again for their juſtification; things which the faith of theſe believers was led unto, and in which light they viewed him: even Jeſus which delivered us from wrath to come; which is revealed from heaven againſt ſin, and comes upon the children of diſobedience; which all men are deſerving of, even God's elect themſelves, but ſhall not partake of, becauſe they are not appointed to it, but to ſalvation; and becauſe they are juſtified by the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and ſo are ſaved from it; not from all fears about it, and apprehenſions of it, which they are filled with, eſpecially under firſt awakenings, and ſometimes afterwards when under afflictive providences; but they are delivered from the thing itſelf, by which is meant vindictive puniſhment, even from all puniſhment in this life, for there is no wrath mixed with any of their mercies or their chaſtiſements; and from all puniſhment in the world to come, which will fall heavy on others; and that becauſe Chriſt has bore their ſins, and the wrath of God and curſe of the law, due unto them in their room and ſtead.

CHAP. II.

THE Apoſtle in this chapter gives a further account of his miniſtry among the Theſſalonians, of the nature, manner, and ſucceſs of it, and of his regard to them, and conduct and converſation when with them; and commends their readineſs in receiving the Goſpel, and excuſes his preſent abſence from them. He appeals to them themſelves for the truth of it, that his entrance to them, or preaching among them, was not in vain and without ſucceſs, ver. 1. that it was with all boldneſs and intrepidity of mind, notwithſtanding what he had ſuffered before for it, ver. 2. and with all integrity and faithfulneſs to the truſt repoſed in him by the Lord, without deceit and guile, or ſeeking to pleaſe men, but God the ſearcher of hearts, who had committed this truſt unto him, ver. 3, 4. and that neither then, nor at any other time, he had uſed flattery, or ſhewed covetouſneſs; which he calls God to witneſs, ver. 5. nor of them or others ſought glory and honour, even that which was due unto him by virtue of his office, ver. 6. but had ſhewed all gentleneſs, humanity, and affection; which he illuſtrates by the ſimile of a nurſe cheriſhing her children, ver. 7. and by the willingneſs he ſhewed not only to preach the Goſpel to them, but to lay down his life for them, had it been neceſſary; ſo great was his affection for them, ver. 8. and as a proof of this he puts them in mind of his labours, both in preaching the word, and in working with his own hands; becauſe he would not be burdenſome and chargeable to them, ver. 9. and as for his converſation among them, he appeals both to God and them, how holy, juſt, and unblemiſhed it was, ver. 10. and reminds them of his tenderneſs, diligence, and faithfulneſs, in exhorting, comforting, and charging them, particularly to walk worthy of God; ſince he had called them to his kingdom and glory, ver. 11, 12. and then he expreſſes his thankfulneſs to God for their reception of the word of the Goſpel; not as an human invention, but as of God, which wrought effectually in them, ver. 13. the evidence of which were partly their imitation of the churches of Chriſt in Judea, in doctrine and practice; and partly their ſuffering the ſame things they did of the Jews, ver. 14. who are deſcribed by their ill uſage of and cruelty to Chriſt, their own prophets, and his Apoſtles, by their not pleaſing God, and by their contradiction to men; an inſtance of which is given in prohibiting the Apoſtles to preach to the Gentiles, whoſe end in ſo doing with reſpect to the Gentiles, was that they might not be ſaved; but God's end in ſuffering them ſo to do, was with reſpect to them that they might fill up their iniquity, and ſo entire wrath and ruine come upon them, as had been foretold, ver. 15, 16. and then the Apoſtle concludes the chapter, by expreſſing his affectionate concern in parting with them, which was not in heart but in body; by declaring his earneſt deſire and endeavour to ſee them again; and by obſerving to them the reaſon he had not and could not come unto them, becauſe ſatan hindered him, ver. 17, 18. the cauſe of his being ſo deſirous to ſee them, was their being his hope, joy, glory, and crown of rejoicing, both now and hereafter, ver. 19, 20.

Ver. 1. For yourſelves, brethren, know our entrance in unto you, &c.] The Apoſtle having obſerved in chap. i. 9. that thoſe perſons to whom the report of the Goſpel being preached at Theſſalonica, and the ſucceſs of it there was made, ſhewed every where both what manner of entrance he and his fellow-miniſters had in that place, and the converſion of many ſouls there; he enlarges upon the latter, and here re-aſſumes the former, and appeals to the Theſſalonians themſelves, who muſt know full well, and better than others, what an entrance it was; and which is to be underſtood not merely of a corporal entrance into their city and ſynagogue, but of their coming among them, by the preaching of the Goſpel, as the miniſters of the word and ambaſſadors of Chriſt: that it was not in vain; it was not a vain ſhew, with outward pomp and ſplendor, as the public entrances of ambaſſadors into cities uſually are; but with great meanneſs, poverty, reproach, and perſecution, having been lately beaten and ill uſed at Philippi; nor was it with great ſwelling words of vanity, with the enticing words of man's wiſdom, to tickle the ear, pleaſe the fancy, and work upon the paſſions of natural men, in which manner the falſe teachers came: but the Apoſtle came not with deceit and guile, with flattering words or a cloak of covetouſneſs, or with a view to vain glory and worldly advantage; nor was the meſſage they came with from the king of kings, a vain light, empty and trifling one; but ſolid and ſubſtantial, and of the greateſt importance; the doctrine they taught was not comparable to chaff and wind; it was not corrupt philoſophy and vain deceit, the traditions and commandments of men, but ſound doctrine, the wholeſome words of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: nor was it fruitleſs and without effect; the word did not return void and empty; but was powerful and efficacious to the converſion of many ſouls. Chriſt was with them both to aſſiſt them in their miniſtry, and to bleſs it to the ſalvation of men; nor was their coming to Theſſalonica, an human ſcheme, a raſh enterprize, engaged in on their own heads, on a ſlight and empty foundation; but upon good and ſolid grounds, by divine direction and counſel; ſee Acts xvi. 9, 10.

Ver. 2. But even after that we had ſuffered before, &c.] Before they came to Theſſalonica, which they would not have done, had their miniſtry been a light and empty one in itſelf, and unprofitable to others; and eſpecially had this been the caſe, they would never have raſhly engaged in it again, and expoſed themſelves to freſh ſufferings and dangers, as they did: and were ſhamefully entreated, as ye know, at Philippi; being beaten with many ſtripes, and put into priſon, and their feet made faſt in the ſtocks, at the inſtigation of the maſters of the damſel that had a ſpirit of divination, by whom they got much gain, and which Paul diſpoſſeſſed; ſee Acts xvi. 16—24. we were bold in our God to ſpeak unto you the Goſpel of God with much contention; and which ſtill made it more manifeſtly appear, that the errand they came upon was a matter of importance, and that they did not proceed on a ſlight foundation: what they ſpoke was the Goſpel, ſalvation by Chriſt, and not by the works of the law; the pure Goſpel, and not a mixed one, free from the mixture of all human doctrines and inventions of men, without any adulteration and inconſiſtence; the whole of the Goſpel, and not a part of it only; they declared the whole counſel of God, and kept back nothing that might be profitable: and this is ſtiled, the Goſpel of God, to diſtinguiſh it from the Goſpel of men, or that which the falſe teachers taught, and which was called the Goſpel, tho' it was not ſo; and to expreſs the excellency of it, from the author of it, who is God, it being the produce of his wiſdom and grace; and from the matter of it, it containing the good will of God to men, ſetting forth the grace of God in election, redemption, juſtification, pardon, adoption, regeneration, and glorification, and expreſſing things relating to the kingdom of God, a meetneſs for it, and a right unto it; and it being ſo called ſhews it to be ſomething divine, a meſſage ſent from God to ſinful men; and gives a reaſon why the Apoſtles were ſo bold to ſpeak it, becauſe it was not of men, but God. The Syriac verſion renders it the Goſpel of Chriſt; ſee Rom. i. 16. and it being ſo, they were bold to ſpeak it; or they ſpoke it both with liberty of mind, the Spirit of God being with them, and with freedom of ſpeech, a door of utterance being opened for them; as alſo with great courage and intrepidity, notwithſtanding what they had ſuffered before, and the ill treatment they had met with at Philippi; and tho' they knew that the Goſpel they ſpoke was contrary to the Jews, was a ſtumbling-block to them, and they had an inveterate prejudice againſt it; and was fooliſhneſs to the Greeks, and was derided by them, and they were ſure to meet with reproach and perſecution on account of it; yet they boldly and faithfully preached it, fearing not the face of men, nor their revilings: tho' it was with much contention; referring to the tumult raiſed by the baſer ſort, who inſtigated by others aſſaulted Jaſon and the brethren, where the Apoſtles were, Acts xvii. 5, 6. or to the diſputes which they had with the unbelieving Jews, who contradicted and blaſphemed what they ſaid; or to the diviſion the Goſpel made, as thro' the corruption of nature it makes wherever it comes, between the neareſt relations and friends, ſome being for it, and others againſt it; or this may be expreſſive of the zeal with which the Apoſtles preached, who earneſtly contended for it, as perſons in a combat or agony; they fought the good fight of faith valiantly, they endured hardneſs as good ſoldiers of Chriſt, and gave not way to the enemy, no not for an hour: and all this was in our God; or by the confidence of our God, as the Syriac verſion renders it; truſting in him and relying upon him, being aſſiſted by his grace, and ſtrengthened by his power, and receiving much encouragement from a view of him as a covenant God; faith in God as a covenant God, will make a man bold in his cauſe; ſee Dan. iii. 17.

Ver. 3. For our exhortation, &c.] Or conſolation; for the miniſtry of the Goſpel which is here meant, conſiſts of doctrines full of comfort to diſtreſſed minds, ſuch as free juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, full pardon by his blood, and compleat ſatisfaction by his ſacrifice; as well as of exhortations to the exerciſe of grace and diſcharge of duty: and this was not of deceit; or error, was not fallacious, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; it conſiſted of nothing but truth, it was the word of truth, and the truth as it is in Jeſus; nor did it proceed from any intention to deceive and impoſe on perſons; it was no impoſture: nor of uncleanneſs; it did not ſpring from any impure affection for any ſin, for popular applauſe, or worldly intereſt; nor did the miniſters of it connive at uncleanneſs in others, or practiſe it themſelves, as did the falſe teachers; but bore their teſtimony againſt it, both by word and example, and taught no doctrine that encouraged to it; but on the contrary, the doctrine which is according to godlineſs, and which teaches men to deny ungodlineſs and worldly luſts: nor in guile; as there was no deceitful deſign in the miniſtry of the word, nor any thing impure and immoral in the matter of it; ſo there was no artifice uſed in the diſpenſing of it; it was plain and ſimple without any colour and guile, without the hidden things of diſhoneſty, without craftineſs and handling the word deceitfully; and this is a reaſon why the Apoſtles preached it with ſo much freedom and boldneſs, becauſe there was nothing falſe, impure, or artful in it.

Ver. 4. But as we were allowed of God, &c.] Or approved of God; not that there were any previous fitneſs and worthineſs in them to be miniſters of the word; but ſuch was the good will and pleaſure of God, that he from all eternity choſe and appointed them to this work; and in his own time by his grace called them to it, and by his gifts qualified them for it, who otherwiſe were unworthy of it, and inſufficient for it: to be put in truſt with the Goſpel; which is of great worth and value, a rich treaſure, and of the laſt importance; which to be truſted with is a very great honour; and the diſcharge of ſuch a truſt requires great faithfulneſs, and which the Apoſtles had: even ſo we ſpeak; the Goſpel as delivered to them both as to matter and manner; neither taking from it nor adding to it, nor mixing it with any thing of their own, nor diſguiſing it with any artifice: not as pleaſing men; to gain favour and affection, eſteem, applauſe, and honour from them; to eſcape reproach and perſecution, and obtain worldly advantages by dropping, concealing, or blending of truths to make them more agreeable to the taſte of natural men: but God which trieth our hearts; ſtudying to approve themſelves to God, whoſe Goſpel was committed to them, from whom they received gifts to preach it, and to whom they were accountable for all; and who being the ſearcher of the hearts, and the trier of the reins of the children of men, knows the intentions, and deſigns of men and the ſprings of all actions; and ſees thro' all artifices, and from whom nothing can be hidden, and who will in his own time bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs; under a ſenſe of which faithful miniſters act, as of ſincerity, and as in the ſight of an omniſcient God.

Ver. 5. For neither at any time uſed we flattering words, &c.] To introduce them into the affections, and gain the eſteem and good will of men; they did not in their miniſtry deliver ſuch things as flattered men with a good opinion of themſelves: they did not preach up the purity of human nature, but on the contrary the doctrine of original ſin, the imputation of Adam's tranſgreſſion to his poſterity, and the corruption of all human nature; they aſſerted the univerſal pollution of it, of all men, and of all the powers and faculties of their ſouls, that they are all under the power and dominion of ſin, are involved in the guilt of it, and are all guilty before God, and liable to everlaſting wrath and puniſhment; and that unleſs they repented of their ſins and belived in Chriſt, they would periſh eternally; thus they dealt roundly and freely with mens conſciences, and plainly, openly, and faithfully told them their caſe as it was: nor did they cry up the power of man's free will, which would have been grateful to Jews and Gentiles; but they declared the reverſe, they aſſerted the weakneſs and impotency of man, to any thing that is ſpiritually good; and repreſented him as a weak and ſtrengthleſs creature, and unable to do any thing, even to think a good thought of himſelf; and aſcribed all that a man is, or has, or does, that is good, to the grace and power of God, who works in him both to will and to do: nor did they plead for the ſufficiency of man's righteouſneſs to juſtify him before God, a doctrine very pleaſing to human nature; but on the contrary, they gave out that there was none righteous, no not one of the ſons of Adam in and of themſelves, or by virtue of any righteouſneſs of their own; ſo far from it that they were full of all unrighteouſneſs, and were not capable of working out a righteouſneſs, or of attaining to the righteouſneſs of the law; that what they did pretend to was not a juſtifying righteouſneſs, and would give no right and title to eternal glory; and that the righteouſneſs of Chriſt was the only righteouſneſs, by which a man could be juſtified from all things, and in which he could be found ſafe. They did not blend and mix their doctrine to ſuit with the taſtes of different men, but with all ſincerity and plainneſs preached the truth, as it is in Jeſus; they did not connive at the ſins of men, cry peace, peace, when there was none, or ſow pillows under their arm-holes, or promiſe them life, tho' they ſhould not return from their wicked way; but they with great freedom inveighed againſt the ſins of men, and exhorted them to repentance and reformation, as well as to faith in Chriſt for pardon and righteouſneſs; nor did they wink at the ſins of profeſſors, or of one another, the Apoſtle Paul withſtood Peter to the face becauſe he was to be blamed; and when they praiſed men for their gifts and graces, and the exerciſe of them, they took care to aſcribe them to the grace of God, and give him the glory, and prevent men from boaſting in themſelves; in ſhort, they acted the reverſe of the falſe teachers, who had mens perſons in admiration becauſe of advantage, and by good words and fair ſpeeches deceived the hearts of the ſimple; but ſo did not the Apoſtles of Chriſt, no never, not at any time; when they firſt came to Theſſalonica during their ſtay there, either in publick or in private: and tho' this was true of any other time and place, yet here muſt be confined to this, ſince the Apoſtle appeals to this church for the truth of what he ſaid, as ye know; for flattering words may be diſcerned; a flatterer is known by his words; tho' in general ſuch is the weakneſs of human nature, that men love to be flattered, tho' they know they are: nor a cloak of covetouſneſs; or an occaſion of it, they did not take the opportunity or advantage by the miniſtry of the word, to indulge a covetous diſpoſition, or to amaſs wealth and riches to themſelves; or an excuſe for covetouſneſs, which covetous men are never at a loſs to make, always pretending one thing or another to hide and cover their evil; but the Apoſtles made no excuſes, nor uſed any cloak, nor needed any to cover their covetouſneſs, becauſe they had not the thing; they did not pretend one thing and mean another, they did not as the falſe Apoſtles did, pretend to ſerve Chriſt, preach his Goſpel, ſeek the glory of God and the good of ſouls, and mean themſelves, and deſign their own worldly advantage; they did not make theſe a pretence for covetouſneſs, they ſincerely ſerved Chriſt, faithfully preached his Goſpel, truly ſought the glory of God, and were heartily concerned for the good of ſouls without any mercenary and ſelfiſh views; for the truth of which they could appeal to the heart-ſearching and rein-trying God, as the Apoſtle here does, ſaying, God is witneſs; which is properly an oath, a ſolemn appeal to God; for ſince covetouſneſs is an internal and ſecret ſin, and may be ſo coloured and diſguiſed as not eaſily to be diſcerned, as flattering words may, the Apoſtle therefore calls God to witneſs the truth of what he had ſaid.

Ver. 6. Nor of men ſought we glory, &c.] Honour, eſteem, and popular applauſe; for tho' there is an honour that is due to the faithful miniſters of the word, who are highly to be eſteemed for their works ſake, and as miniſters of Chriſt, and ſtewards of the myſteries of God; and eſpecially there was an honour and glory that belonged to the Apoſtles of Chriſt as ſuch, who were ſet in the higheſt office and place in the church; yet they did not ſeek after it as the Phariſees and falſe teachers did, who received honour one of another, and ſought not that which comes from God only: but ſo did not the Apoſtles; they took no ſteps this way to procure glory and eſteem among men, but all the reverſe; they preached doctrines which were not of men, nor according to men, nor agreeable to them; and theſe they delivered in a diſagreeable way, not with enticing words of mens wiſdom, they did not ſeek to pleaſe men, but ſpoke and did every thing that rendered them mean and deſpicable in their eyes; ſo that they looked upon them as the filth of the world, and the off-ſcouring of all things: nor was this any diſappointment to them, for to gain the favour of men was not their end and view; they did not ſeek for glory neither of the men of the world, neither of you; the church at Theſſalonica, and the inhabitants of that place: nor yet of others; of other men, and churches elſewhere: when we might have been burdenſome, as the Apoſtles of Chriſt; or have uſed authority which was given them, tho' not for deſtruction, but for edification; put on a magiſterial air, and made uſe of the apoſtolic rod; appeared with ſome ſeverity and rigour, and ſo have commanded awe, reſpect, and reverence: or have been in honour; inſiſted upon being treated in an honourable way, as the Apoſtles of Chriſt, his ambaſſadors, who were ſent and came in his name, and repreſented his perſon; and therefore to be received as he himſelf; tho' the phraſe may rather have regard to an honourable maintenance, as in 2 Cor. xi. 9. which as the Apoſtles of Chriſt they might have required as their due, but they choſe rather to relinquiſh their right, and labour with their own hands, that they might not be chargeable: and ſo glory in the former clauſe may mean the ſame, even great and glorious things for themſelves, a maintenance anſwerable to their high character and office, which they did not ſeek; but were content with a poor pittance, and ſuch as they could get with their own hand-labour; in which ſenſe the phraſe, double honour, ſeems to be uſed in 1 Tim. v. 17. as appears by the reaſon given in the next verſe.

Ver. 7. But we were gentle among you, &c.] Meek and humble, mild and moderate; not uſing ſeverity, or carring it in a haughty and imperious manner; aſſuming power and dominion, lording it over God's heritage, and commanding perſons to do homage and honour to them, and forcing themſelves upon them, and obliging them to maintain them. The Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions, inſtead of gentle, read, little children; as the word ſignifies by adding a letter to it, and expreſſes much the ſame as the other, that they were harmleſs and modeſt, and diſintereſted; and ſought not themſelves neither honour nor wealth, but the real good of others, and were kind and tender, and affectionate to them: even as a nurſe cheriſheth her children; or the children of her own ſelf; her own children, and ſo deſigns a nurſing mother, one whoſe the children are, has bore them as well as nurſes them, and therefore has the moſt tender concern for them; ſhe lays them in her boſom, and hugs them in her arms, and ſo warms and cheriſhes them; gives them the breaſt, bears with their frowardneſs, condeſcends to do the meaneſt things for them; and that without any ſelf-intereſt, from a pure parental affection for them: and ſuch were the Apoſtles to theſe Theſſalonians; they were their ſpiritual parents, of whom they travailed in birth, till Chriſt was formed in them; they uſed them with the greateſt fondneſs and tenderneſs; they fed them with the ſincere milk of the word; they bore patiently all the ſlighting and ill treatment they met with; and condeſcended to men of low eſtates, and did them all the good offices they could, without any ſelfiſh views or ſiniſter ends: a like ſimile is uſed by the Jews[*], who ſay, "he "that riſes in the night to ſtudy in the law, the "law makes known to him his offences; and not "in a way of judgment, but כאמא, as a mother "makes known to her ſon with gentle words:" but the miniſtration of the Goſpel is much more gentle.

Ver. 8. So being affectionately deſirous of you, &c.] Not of theirs but them; not of glory from them, nor a maintenance by them, but of their ſpiritual and eternal welfare; were as fond of them as a nurſing mother is of her children, who when abſent from them but ever ſo little a while, longs to ſee them; ſee ver. 17. and chap. iii. 1, 5, 6, 7, 8. we were willing; took the utmoſt pleaſure, delight and complacency: to have imparted unto you, not the Goſpel of God only; the ſincere milk of the word, which they did freely, fully, and for their ſpiritual good and profit, without any regard to any advantage of their own: but alſo our own ſouls, or lives; which is the higheſt expreſſion and ſtrongeſt proof of love that can be given; and reſpect is ſtill had to the ſimilitude of the nurſing mother, who may be ſaid to impart her blood, for ſuch is her milk diverſified, for the nouriſhment of her children: and ſuch was the great concern of the Apoſtles for the intereſt of Chriſt, the ſpread of the Goſpel, and the good of ſouls, that their lives were not dear unto them, ſo that theſe ends might be anſwered: becauſe ye were dear unto us; both becauſe they were loved by God, redeemed by Chriſt, regenerated by the Spirit of Chriſt, and had the image of Chriſt enſtamped upon them; and alſo becauſe that they were their ſpiritual children; and as children are dear to their parents, ſo were theſe to them, even to ſuch a degree, as that were there a neceſſity for it, they could freely have laid down their lives for them.

Ver. 9. For ye remember brethren our labour and travel, &c.] The great pains they took, even to wearineſs. The Vulgate Latin verſion renders the laſt word, wearineſs; and the Arabic verſion, anxiety; and the Ethiopic verſion, affliction; it is to be underſtood both of corporal and ſpiritual labour, working with their hands and preaching the Goſpel; this could not but be remembered by them, ſince it was not a year ago they were with them: for labouring night and day; at our handicraft, or at the work of our hands, as the Syriac verſion renders it; which they continually attended to, even night and day when they were not preaching the Goſpel, or diſputing with the Jews, or praying and converſing with thoſe that believed, or refreſhing themſelves with food and reſt. The Apoſtle's buſineſs was making of tents, ſee the note on Acts xviii. 3. becauſe we would not be chargeable to any of you; neither to the whole body, nor to any ſingle perſon; which ſhews that they did not ſeek their own eaſe and worldly intereſt; and proves what is before aſſerted, that they did not uſe a cloak of covetouſneſs, but choſe to forego, and not inſiſt on what they had a right to, leſt the Goſpel ſhould be hindred or reproached: we preached unto you the Goſpel of God; freely and with great application and diligence; for this is the other part of their labour and travel; for the miniſtry of the word is a work, and a laborious one, when cloſely attended to; a preparation for it by prayer, reading, meditation, and much ſtudy are weariſome and fatiguing; and to preach the word in ſeaſon and out of ſeaſon, with all long-ſuffering and doctrine is very laborious; to which no man is ſufficient of himſelf, and is a work which requires great faithfulneſs, application and induſtry; and is oftentimes made the more heavy thro' the malice and oppoſition of enemies, and the weakneſs of friends.

Ver. 10. Ye are witneſſes and God alſo, &c.] Not ſo much to what goes before as to what follows after, relating to their holy walk and converſation among them, the more open part of which they were witneſs of; and for the more ſecret part God is appealed to, who is acquainted with the ſprings of actions, as well as with actions themſelves: how holily, and juſtly, and unblameably we behaved ourſelves among you that believe. The Syriac verſion joins the laſt clauſe of the preceding verſe with this, and reads the whole thus, ye are witneſſes and God alſo how purely and juſtly we preached unto you the Goſpel of God, and how unblameable we were among all that believed; referring the former part to the purity and integrity in which they preached the Goſpel, and the latter to their unblemiſhed conduct among the ſaints; but the whole of it refers to their converſation which was holy, externally holy, ariſing from internal principles of holineſs in their hearts, and free from that impurity and filthineſs with which the falſe teachers were polluted; and confirms what is before ſaid, that their exhortation was not of uncleanneſs: and it was likewiſe juſt, juſt, they were righteous in the ſight of God thro' the juſtifying righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and in conſequence of this lived righteouſly before men, and were injurious to no man's perſon nor property: and their converſation was alſo unblameable; not that they were without ſin, and ſo without blame in themſelves, or without the commiſſion of ſin by them, or that they paſſed without cenſure in the world, for they went through honour and diſhonour, through good report and bad report, and had all manner of evil ſpoken of them falſly for Chriſt's name's ſake; but by the grace of God, they had their converſation among them that believed ſo, that there was nothing material to be alledged againſt them, or any juſt cauſe of blame to be laid either on their perſons or their miniſtry; and which is mentioned for imitation.

Ver. 11. As you know, &c.] This is added to the end of the laſt verſe in the Arabic verſion, and which begins this verſe thus, as one of you, and as a father comforting his ſons, ſo we, &c. but for what is ſaid in the former verſe, an appeal is made both to God and to the Theſſalonians, ſo that there is no need of adding ſuch a clauſe there: it properly ſtands here in connexion with what follows, how we exhorted; to flee from wrath to come, and to Chriſt for refuge; to look to, and believe in him as the only ſaviour of loſt ſinners; to perform the duties of religion, and to continue in the faith; to cleave to Chriſt, and walk on in him as they had received him, and to abide by the truths and ordinances of the Goſpel they had embraced: and comforted; under a ſenſe of ſin, with the ſoul comforting doctrines of free juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, of full pardon by his blood, and of a plenary ſatisfaction and atonement by his ſacrifice; and under all their afflictions and perſecutions for the ſake of Chriſt, with exceeding great and precious promiſes, of the preſence, grace, and ſtrength of Chriſt here, and glory hereafter: and charged every one of you; not only publickly, but privately, going from houſe to houſe; not in an auſtere and domineering way, but with the greateſt tenderneſs, and yet faithfulneſs: even as a father doth his children; not only in an authoritative, but in an affectionate way, and alſo with ſolid wiſdom and judgment: for in ſuch a relation in a ſpiritual ſenſe, did the Apoſtle and his fellow-miniſters ſtand in to them; ſee 1 Cor. iv. 15. and the ſubſtance of the charge is as follows:

Ver. 12. That ye would walk worthy of God, &c.] In imitation of him; not of his perfections, which are inimitable, but of his works; and theſe not of his power and wiſdom, but thoſe of kindneſs and beneficence, and of righteouſneſs and holineſs; and in conformity to his revealed will, which is good, perfect, and acceptable; and agreeably to his Goſpel, that that may be adorned, and not blaſphemed; and particularly, in a manner worthy of the vocation wherewith ſaints are called by him: ſince it follows, who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory; which inſtance of the grace of God carries in it many arguments, and lays many obligations on the perſons intereſted in it, to walk in their lives and converſations worthy of God: which may be taken from the nature of this call, which is not a mere external one by the outward miniſtry of the word, but an internal and effectual one, by the powerful and efficacious grace of God; it is a call of perſons out of darkneſs into light, and therefore it becomes them to walk as children of the light, and honeſtly, as in the day-time; and from a ſtate of bondage to ſin and ſatan, unto liberty, and therefore ought not to walk after the dictates of corrupt nature, nor the ſuggeſtions of ſatan, but after the Spirit of God, who is a Spirit of liberty; and from fellowſhip with the world, and the men of it, to communion with Chriſt, and therefore ſhould not walk as other Gentiles do, nor run with them into the ſame exceſs of riot; in ſhort, ſuch are called with an holy calling, and to holineſs, and have in their effectual vocation principles of holineſs implanted in them, and therefore ſhould be holy in all manner of converſation: moreover, arguments may be taken from the conſideration of him that calls, God, who is a holy being, and therefore as he that hath called them is holy, ſo ſhould they be likewiſe; he is the God of all grace that has called them, and he has called them by his grace, and to ſpecial bleſſings of grace, and that according to his ſovereign will and pleaſure; and has called them the moſt unworthy, baſe, mean, and deſpicable, and not others, which greatly enhances the obligation to walk worthy of him: to which add, that he that calls is God that dwells on high in heaven, and changes not, and ſuch is his call; hence it is ſtiled the high calling of God, and the heavenly calling, and ſaid to be without repentance; and therefore the ſaints ſhould live and walk as pilgrims and ſtrangers here, and be ſtedfaſt and immoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord: likewiſe the conſideration of what they are called to, ſhould engage them to a becoming walk, being called to his kingdom; to the kingdom of grace, which lies in righteouſneſs and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghoſt, and which cannot be moved, and where they are kings and prieſts unto God; and unto a Goſpel church-ſtate, and to all the privileges and immunities of it; and unto the kingdom of heaven, prepared by God for them from the foundation of the world, their Father's free gift to them, of which they are born heirs apparent in regeneration, and have both a meetneſs for it, and a right unto it; and therefore ought to behave ſuitable to this high honour and dignity which belong unto them: and this latter ſenſe is the rather to be choſe, ſince it follows, and glory; or to his glory, as the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read; to the glory of God, to the beholding of the glory of God through Chriſt, and the glory of Chriſt himſelf; and to a participation of that glory which God has provided, and is in the hands of Chriſt for them, where it is hid, who when he ſhall appear, they'll appear with him in glory; which will be both upon their ſouls and bodies; and this will be an eternal glory, a glory that fades not away, and not like the glory of this world, which is tranſient, and ſoon paſſes away, but this will abide for ever; and therefore ſince the ſaints are called to the obtaining of this, it is a reaſon why their converſation ſhould be in heaven now, and as becomes God and his Goſpel.

Ver. 13. For this cauſe alſo thank we God without ceaſing, &c.] As for their election of God, ch. i. 4. ſo for their effectual vocation by his grace, to his kingdom and glory, juſt now mentioned; as well as for their reception of the word of God as ſuch, hereafter expreſſed; ſince their having it and receiving it, and the effectual operation of it in them, were owing to the goodneſs and grace of God, and therefore required a conſtant ſenſe of the favour, and thankfulneſs without ceaſing, for it. The Apoſtle having at large conſidered the manner of his and his fellow-miniſters entrance among them without guile, flattery, covetouſneſs, or any ſiniſter view, and with all ſimplicity, integrity, labour, diligence, affection, and tenderneſs, returns to obſerve the reception their miniſtry met with, and the influence and effect it had upon them: becauſe when ye received the word of God which ye heard of us; or the word of hearing of God, as the Vulgate Latin verſion from the Greek text literally renders it; that is, the Goſpel which was preached by the Apoſtles, and was heard and received by theſe Theſſalonians: and it is called the word of God, becauſe God is the author of it; it comes from him, and is miniſtred by his authority, and is a part of that written word which is given by his inſpiration; and becauſe his grace in chuſing, redeeming, juſtifying, pardoning, adopting, regenerating, and giving eternal life to men, and the declaration of his will concerning ſaving them by his Son Jeſus Chriſt, are the ſubject-matter of it; and becauſe he owns and bleſſes it, for the converſion and comfort of his people: and it may be called the word of hearing of God, becauſe coming from him, and containing his will, and preached by his order, and ſucceeded by his power, hearing comes by it; it is divinely breathed by him; he ſpeaks in it by his miniſters, and he is heard of in it by his people; as he was by theſe believers, who heard his word both externally and internally; and received it into their underſtandings, ſo as to know it ſpiritually and experimentally; into their minds, not merely notionally, and ſo as to aſſent to the truth of it, and give credit to it, but ſo as to believe in Chriſt revealed in it; and into their affections, in the love of it, and with joy in the Holy Ghoſt; they received it gladly, and with meekneſs and readineſs, ſo that it became the engrafted word, and brought forth fruit in them: the manner in which they received it follows, ye received it not as the word of men; which is often fallacious and deceitful, at leaſt dubious and uncertain, and not to be depended on; nor did they receive it as the words of wiſe men are received, and becauſe it was cloathed with the wiſdom, eloquence, and oratory of men, for it was deſtitute of theſe; nor upon the credit and authority of men, no, not of the Apoſtles themſelves: but as it is in truth the word of God; it appearing to be agreeable to the perfections of his nature, and to the ſcriptures of truth, and it bearing his impreſs and divine authority, they received it with much aſſurance and certainty, as infallible truth; and which was inviolably to be adhered to, without any alteration, without adding to it or taking from it; and to be had and retained in the greateſt eſteem and reverence, and never to be departed from: and that they received it in this manner, appears from its operation in them, which effectually worketh alſo in you that believe; the Vulgate Latin verſion reads, who worketh; referring it to God, as indeed it may be referred to him, as well as to his word; but the ſenſe is much the ſame, for God works by and with his word, and his word only effectually works when it comes in power; or is the power of God unto ſalvation to them that believe, and when it does come with a divine commiſſion and power, it effectually works to the quickning of dead ſinners, the enlightning of dark minds, the unſtopping of deaf ears, the ſoftning of hard hearts, producing faith which works by love, encouraging hope, delivering from the bondage of ſin, ſatan, and the law, and comforting and eſtabliſhing the hearts of the ſaints under all afflictions, trials, and perſecutions.

Ver. 14. For ye brethren became followers of the churches of God, &c.] As of the Lord and of the Apoſtle, ch. i. 6. ſo of the churches of God that were before them, who were gathered out of the world by the grace of God; and who were united in the fear of God, and aſſembled together for his worſhip, to bear a teſtimony to his truth and ordinances, and for the glory of his name: theſe they followed in the faith and order of the Goſpel, and became like them, as the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions render the word; or equal to them, were upon an equal foot with them, as the Arabic; that is, in ſuffering reproach and perſecution for the Goſpel, as the latter part of the verſe ſhews; and their bearing theſe with patience, courage, and conſtancy, were a proof that the word of God had a place, and wrought effectually in them; otherwiſe they would never have endured ſuch things as they did, and as other churches did: which in Judea are in Chriſt Jeſus; for beſides the church at Jeruſalem, there were many churches in Judea and Galilee; ſee Acts ix. 31. Gal. i. 22. which ſhows that the primitive churches were not national, but congregational: and theſe were in Chriſt Jeſus; in the faith of Jeſus Chriſt, as the Arabic verſion renders it; which diſtinguiſhes them from the ſynagogues, or congregations of the Jews, which did not believe in Chriſt; ſee the note on ch. i. 1. For ye alſo have ſuffered like things of your own countrymen; the inhabitants of Theſſalonica, the baſer ſort of them, who were ſtirred up by the unbelieving Jews of that place, to make an uproar in the city, and aſſault the houſe of Jaſon, in order to ſeize upon the Apoſtles; ſee Acts xvii. 6. Even as they have of the Jews; in like manner as the churches of Judea ſuffered by the Jews their countrymen; ſee Acts viii. 1, 3. Heb. x. 32, 33, 34.

Ver. 15. Who both killed the Lord Jeſus, &c.] For though Pilate condemned him to death, and the Roman ſoldiers executed the ſentence, yet it was through the malice and envy of the Jews that he was delivered to him, who brought charges againſt him, and inſiſted upon the crucifixion of him; and who are therefore ſaid to have taken him with wicked hands, and crucified and ſlain him; and to have killed the prince of life, and to have been the betrayers and murderers of him; and therefore it is no wonder that ſuch perſons ſhould perſecute the followers of Chriſt, whether in Judea or elſewhere: and their own prophets; whom God ſent unto them; theſe they not only mocked and miſuſed, and perſecuted, but many of them they put to death, as Iſaiah and others; and though this was done by their fathers, yet the preſent generation were the children of them that killed the prophets; and ſhewed themſelves to be of the ſame principles, and by their practices approved of what they had done: hence our Lord addreſſes the city of Jeruſalem thus, O Jeruſalem, Jeruſalem, that killeſt the prophets, Matt. xxiii. 31, 34, 37. The Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions, leave out the phraſe their own, and ſo does the Alexandrian copy; but it ſtands in the Syriac and Arabic verſions, and is rightly retained, it having an emphaſis in it; theſe prophets being of their own nation, born among them, and raiſed up in the midſt of them, and ſent unto them particularly, and yet were ſo uſed; and therefore it need not ſeem ſtrange that they ſhould treat in an ill manner perſons of a lower character, that did not agree with them; the conſideration of which ſerves to ſupport under reproach and perſecution; ſee Matt. v. 12. And have perſecuted us; the Apoſtles of Chriſt; have drove us out of our own country, and purſued us from place to place, and cauſed us to flee from one city to another: and they pleaſe not God; though they reckoned themſelves his choſen people, the favourites of heaven, and whom God

God delighted in; but neither their perſons nor their actions were pleaſing to him, their carnal minds being enmity to him, to his law and to his Goſpel; and they in the fleſh, or in an unregenerate eſtate, and without faith in Chriſt, without which it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, and their actions ſuch as before deſcribed: and are contrary to all men; not only chriſtians, but heathens; to all the Gentiles, who are called all men, the nations of the world, the world, and the whole world; they were contrary to theſe, both in their religious and civil principles, and had an averſion to them, of which the following is a full inſtance.

Ver. 16. Forbidding us to ſpeak to the Gentiles, that they might be ſaved, &c.] Speaking or preaching the Goſpel, is the ordinary means of ſaving ſouls, or of acquainting them with the way of ſalvation, the neceſſity of it, and of the application of it to them, and with this end and view it is preached: now though the Jews diſbelieved the Goſpel, and deſpiſed the miniſtry of it, and diſavowed any ſuch uſe and end of it, yet ſuch was their envy at the Gentiles, and their hatred of them, that could they have believed it to be the means of ſalvation, they would have forbidden the preaching of it to them, as they now did; and it is certain, that even the believing Jews through ignorance, did at firſt diſapprove of the miniſtry of the word to the Gentiles; ſee Acts xi. 1, 2, 3. ſuch was the averſion of that nation to all others, and which perfectly agrees with their general ſentiments, which forbid the explanation of the law to the Gentiles; and therefore it need not be wondered at, that they ſhould do all that in them lay, to hinder the entrance and ſpread of the Goſpel among them, of which take the following proof[f]: "whoever has not the holy name ſealed and bound in his fleſh (i. e. is not circumciſed) אסיר לאודעא ליה מלה דאוריתא, it is forbidden to make known to him a word of the law, and much leſs to ſtudy in it——and whoever is not circumciſed, and they give to him, את זעיר דאוריתא, the leaſt thing in the law, 'tis as if he deſtroyed the world, and dealt falſly with the name of God——Hillell and Shammai did not make known to Onkelos a word of the law, until he was circumciſed——and the traditions are, that even though a man is circumciſed, yet if he does not do the commands of the law, lo, he is as a Gentile in all things, and it is forbidden to teach him the words of the law:" nay, it is a rule with the Jews[g], that "if a Gentile ſtudies in the law, he is guilty of death:" and thus were they left in providence, to judicial blindneſs and hardneſs of heart, to fill up their ſins alway; the meaſure of their own and their fathers iniquities; ſee Matt. xxiii. 32. a phraſe expreſſive of the abounding of their ſins, and of their being under a divine appointment, and of their being limited and reſtrained by a divine power, and over-ruled by infinite wiſdom, to anſwer ſome ends and purpoſes of God's glory: for the wrath is come upon them to the uttermoſt; which is to be underſtood, not of their wrath and fury being come to its higheſt degree and pitch againſt the followers of Chriſt, but of the wrath of God, as the Vulgate Latin verſion and Beza's ancient copy expreſs it; and deſigns not ſo much eternal puniſhment, as the Ethiopic verſion renders the phraſe, or everlaſting wrath and damnation on the reprobate part of that people, as temporal ruin and deſtruction, which was now near at hand, and hung over their heads; and therefore is ſaid to be come to them, and which in a little time fell upon their nation and city, and temple, even to the uttermoſt, to the laſt degree; and was, as the Arabic verſion renders it, wrath conſuming; or the conſummation, and that determined poured upon the deſolate, ſpoken of in Dan. ix. 27. and which as it is come upon them, will remain unto the end, as the phraſe may alſo be rendered; unto the end of the world, till the fulneſs of the Gentiles is brought in, and then God's elect among the Jews ſhall obtain mercy, and be called, and ſo all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved, Rom. xi. 25, 26.

Ver. 17. But we brethren, being taken from you, &c.] Here more properly ſhould begin the third chapter, in which the Apoſtle having before obſerved the manner of his entrance among theſe people, the nature of his miniſtry, the reception the word of God met with among them, and the powerful effect it had upon them, inſomuch that they patiently and chearfully bore perſecution for the ſake of it; he excuſes his not having been with them again as yet, which he knew was proper and neceſſary, as he was their Apoſtle and ſpiritual father; and expreſſes an affectionate concern at his parting with them in the manner he did, which was not his own choice and voluntary act, but was obliged to it, being hurried away at once, at an unawares in the night, by reaſon of the uproar made in the city by the baſer ſort of people, inſtigated by the unbelieving Jews; ſo that he and his fellow-miniſters had not the opportunity of taking their leave of them, as they would have done: hence he ſays, we being taken from you; they were as it were paſſive in it; they were forced away on a ſudden, they did not go of themſelves; the word uſed is very uncommon and emphatical, and may be literally rendered, we being orphanized from you; which repreſents this parting to be like the ſeparation made by death, between parents and children; when either parents are deprived of their children, or children of their parents, and are left orphans or fatherleſs; and juſt in ſuch a deſtitute and deſolate condition were the Apoſtle and his companions in, in their account; nor need it to be wondered at, when they are before compared to a nurſing mother and a tender father, as they were to theſe their ſpiritual children: and he further obſerves, that this removal from them, was for a ſhort time, or for the time of an hour; which may either denote the ſuddenneſs of it, being as it were at an hour's warning, having no more notice of it than for the ſpace of an hour; or it may expreſs the great affection he and his fellow-miniſters had for them, inſomuch that they could not bear an abſence from them, though but for an hour; or it may be ſaid by way of comfort, that this parting was but for a ſhort time, and that in a little while they might hope to ſee them again; and if not in this life, yet in the future ſtate, when they ſhould meet and never part more, and which would be but in a ſhort time at longeſt: moreover, this ſeparation was only in preſence; in perſon, in face, in ſight, in body, it was but a corporal one: not in heart; the Apoſtle's heart was with them, as much as if preſent; they were always in his mind, and remembered by him at the throne; he had as it were the images of them continually before him, as parents have of their children when at a diſtance from them; his heart was after them, and his affections moved ſtrongly towards them: and the effect this diſtance had on him, and thoſe that were with him was this, that they endeavoured the more abundantly, he obſerves, to ſee your face with great deſire; it made them but the more deſirous of ſeeing them face to face again, and put them upon attempting with more abundant earneſtneſs and diligence, to come and ſee them.

[g] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 59. 1. Maimon. Hilchot Melachim, c. 10. §. 9.

Ver. 18. Wherefore we would have come unto you, &c.] They not only had a will, and purpoſed in themſelves, and entered into ſome reſolutions to come unto them, but endeavoured to put them into execution: even I Paul; as well as Silas and Timotheus; the latter of which had been with them, and the others had as good a will, and eſpecially Paul: and that once and again; or once and twice; ſo the Jews uſed [h] to ſpeak, פעם ראשונה ושנייה, one time and a ſecond; that is, ſeveral times: but ſatan hindered us. The Syriac and Ethiopic verſions read, hindred me; by moving the mob which roſe at Theſſalonica, to go to Beræa, and diſturb the Apoſtle there; which obliged him, contrary to his will, to go to Athens inſtead of returning to Theſſalonica, as he intended; and when at Athens, from whence alſo he might purpoſe to return thither, he was hindered, by the diſputes the Jews and the Stoicks, and Epicurean philoſophers had with him; and, after that, might be prevented by the lying in wait of the Jews for him, of which he might be informed; or by diſturbances raiſed in the church, or churches, where he was, by the falſe teachers; which required his ſtay with them, to oppoſe and refute error and hereſy, and to make up differences that aroſe among true chriſtians, fomented by ſatan and his emiſſaries; ſee Rom. i. 13. Satan does all he can to hinder the preaching of the Goſpel, the hearing of the word, the profeſſion of religion, and the ſaints coming together, and having ſpiritual converſation with each other; being as his name ſatan ſignifies, an enemy to Chriſt and his intereſt, and to the ſouls of men: indeed he can do nothing but by divine permiſſion, nor can he hinder the will of God, and the execution of that, though he often hinders the will of man, or man from doing his will; he hindered the Apoſtle from doing what he willed and purpoſed, but he did not hinder the will of God, which was that Paul ſhould be employed in other work elſewhere.

Ver. 19. For what is our hope, or joy, &c.] The Apoſtle here gives a reaſon why they were ſo concerned at parting with the Theſſalonians, and were ſo deſirous of ſeeing them again, and attempted it ſo often, becauſe they were their hope; not the foundation of it, which was Chriſt; nor the thing hoped for, which was eternal life; nor the ground of their hope, which was the blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice of Chriſt; but they were perſons whom they hoped well of, and of whom their hope was ſtedfaſt; as of their election of God, of their redemption by Chriſt, of their effectual calling, of their perſeverance in faith and holineſs, notwithſtanding all reproach and perſecution; and of meeting the Lord, and being together with him for ever: and they were alſo their joy; their converſion was matter of joy to them, becauſe of the glory of God, Father, Son, and Spirit, diſplayed therein; becauſe of the abundant grace beſtowed on theſe perſons; and becauſe that hereby the kingdom of ſatan was weakened, and the kingdom of Chriſt enlarged, and his churches increaſed and beautified; and their own miniſtry was bleſſed and confirmed, and their hearts and hands ſtrengthened, and they encouraged to go on in it: and they continued to be their joy, inaſmuch as they ſtood faſt in the Lord, walked on in the truth, and had their converſations as became the Goſpel of Chriſt; and they were perſuaded would be their joy hereafter, at the ſecond coming of Chriſt; when they ſhould give up their account of them with joy, and not with grief: and 'tis added, or crown of rejoicing; or of glorying, or boaſting; not that they gloried in them, for they gloried not in men, but in the Lord, in his righteouſneſs, riches, wiſdom, ſtrength, and grace, in the perſon, blood, and croſs of Chriſt; but they gloried of them, as trophies of divine grace, as a prey taken out of the hand of the mighty, and as lawful captives delivered from the power of ſatan, and of darkneſs, and tranſlated into the kingdom of Chriſt. The Alexandrian copy reads, as we render it, crown of rejoicing; which is but a ſtronger phraſe, to expreſs the joy they had in their converſion and perſeverance, in alluſion to crowns wore at times of rejoicing, as at marriage-feaſts, and the like: hence we read [i] of the crowns of the bridegrooms, and of the brides, which were forbidden the uſe of in the war of Veſpaſian; the latter were made of gold, in the form of the city of Jeruſalem, and from thence called golden cities [k]; and the former, ſome ſay, were made of ſalt and ſulphur, to put them in mind of the deſtruction of the Sodomites, for their unnatural luſts [l]; others of a ſalt-ſtone as clear as chryſtal, or of the ſtone Bdellium, painted in the colour of ſulphur [m]; and ſome were made of myrtles and roſes, but in the war of Veſpaſian only thoſe made of reeds were uſed [n]: theſe crowns at weddings, ſeem to be the beautiful crowns in Ezek. xxiii. 42. where the Septuagint uſe the ſame phraſe as here, ϛεφανον καυχησεως, a crown of rejoicing, or glorying: the Hebrew phraſe, עטרת תפארת, may be rendered a crown of glory, as the phraſe here is by the Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions; but does not mean the crown of glory, life, righteouſneſs, and immortality, the Apoſtle expected at the hands of Chriſt another day; nor that his being an inſtrument of the converſion of theſe perſons, was the ground of ſuch an expectation, or was what entitled him to ſuch a crown; ſince he knew that converſion work was owing to the powerful grace of God, and the crown of eternal life was his free gift; but that it would be an honour to him, and give him abundant joy and pleaſure at the coming of Chriſt, to be encircled with ſuch a number of ſouls he had been uſeful to, and who were his ſpiritual children; juſt as children's children are the crown of old men, Prov. xvii. 6. all this is put by way of queſtion, which ſtrongly affirms, are not even ye; or ye alſo, as well as others, as the Corinthians and Philippians; ſee 2 Cor. i. 7. Phil. i. 6, 7. and iv. 1. In the preſence of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt at his coming? to judge the quick and dead, when both they and theſe ſhould meet him, and ſtand before him with confidence, being cloathed with his righteouſneſs, and clad with robes of immortality and glory.

Ver. 20. For ye are our glory and joy.] Or our joy, as the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read; this is a repetition, and a confirmation of what is before ſaid; and ſignifies that theſe ſaints were then, the glory of the Apoſtles, being the ſeals of their miniſtry; and whom they gloried of and rejoiced in, and hoped and believed they would be ſuch, as would be their joy and crown in time to come, and for ever.

CHAP. III.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle expreſſes his great love to the Theſſalonians, by ſending Timothy to them, to eſtabliſh and comfort them; and declares his ſatisfaction with the tidings he brought of them, and concludes the chapter with fervent prayers for them: ſuch was his affection for them, that he choſe rather to be left alone at Athens, and ſend Timothy to them, though ſo very dear and uſeful to him, as his characters ſhew, to the end that they might be eſtabliſhed and comforted, ver. 1, 2. and not be ſhaken with the afflictions the Apoſtles met with, ſeeing theſe were no other than what God had appointed them to; and beſides, they had been apprized of them beforehand by the Apoſtle, ver. 3, 4. but however, leſt ſatan ſhould get an advantage of them, the Apoſtle could not be eaſy without ſending to know how things ſtood with them, ver. 5. next he proceeds to give an account of the ſucceſs of this miſſion, and the ſatisfaction it gave him and his fellow-miniſters, to hear of their faith and charity, their remembrance of them, and deſire to ſee them, ver. 6. which comforted them under their afflictions, made them lively and chearful, filled them with joy and thankfulneſs, and put them upon praying to God to ſee their face, and perfect what was lacking in their faith, ver. 7, 8, 9, 10. and then follow the petitions themſelves, which are made both to God the Father, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that their way might be directed to them, that they might increaſe and abound in love to one another, and to all men, as they did to them, and that God would eſtabliſh them in holineſs in his ſight, at the coming of Chriſt, ver. 11, 12, 13.

Ver. 1. Wherefore when we could no longer forbear, &c.] Or bear, as the word properly ſignifies; or bear that, as the Ethiopic verſion reads; that is, that deſire, as the Arabic verſion renders it; that ardent and longing deſire of ſeeing them again, expreſſed in the latter part of the preceding chapter; which was as fire in their bones, and was retained with great pain and uneaſineſs; but now they could hold it no longer, and like Jeremy, ch. xx. 9. were weary with forbearing, and could not ſtay; or it was like a burden, which they ſtood up under as long as they could, even Paul, Silas, and Timotheus, but now it became inſupportable: we thought it good to be left at Athens alone; that is, Paul and Silas, or Paul only, ſpeaking of himſelf in the plural number; for he ſeems to have been alone at Athens, at leaſt at laſt; he conſidering every thing, thought it moſt fit and adviſeable when at Athens, where he waited for Silas and Timotheus, having ordered them to come thither to him from Berea, Acts xvii. 14, 15. either to ſend orders to Berea for Timothy to go from thence to Theſſalonica, to know the ſtate of affairs there, and Silas elſewhere; or if they came to him to Athens, of which Luke gives no account, he immediately diſpatched Timothy to Theſſalonica, and Silas to ſome other part of Macedonia, for from thence they came to him at Corinth, Acts xviii. 5. ſuch was his deſire of knowing how things were at Theſſalonica, that he choſe rather to be left alone at Athens, diſputing with the unbelieving Jews, and heathen philoſophers of the Epicurean and Stoic ſects, ſuſtaining all their ſcoffs and jeers alone; and was content to be without his uſeful companions, Silas and Timothy, who might have been aſſiſting to him at Athens, in hope of hearing of his dear friends at Theſſalonica.

Ver. 2. And ſent Timotheus our brother, &c.] In a ſpiritual relation, having the ſame heavenly Father, and belonging to the ſame Jeruſalem, which is free, and the mother of us all; of the ſame houſhold and family, and in the ſame relation to Chriſt, the firſt-born among many brethren; or their brother in the miniſtry, who was employed in the ſame buſineſs, and did the ſame work they did; or he is ſo called, on account of that ſtrict and intimate friendſhip which ſubſiſted between them, by virtue of which they ſtuck as cloſe as brethren, or cloſer to one another than brethren uſually do: and miniſter of God; of his making, and not man's; of his calling and ſending, and of his bleſſing and ſucceeding; and who was a miniſter of the things of God, of the myſteries of God, of the truths of his Goſpel; and who miniſtred according to the ability God gave him, and was faithful to him: and our fellow-labourer in the Goſpel of Chriſt; he was a labourer, and not a loiterer in the Lord's vineyard; one that laboured in the word and doctrine, that ſtudied to ſhew himſelf a workman, that gave himſelf wholly to meditation, reading, exhortation, and doctrine, and preached the word in ſeaſon and out of ſeaſon; and was a fellow-labourer with him, who laboured more abundantly than any of the Apoſtles; and not in the law, but in the Goſpel, even in the Goſpel of Chriſt, of which he is the ſum and ſubſtance, author and preacher. The Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions leave out theſe words, and ſo do Beza's ancient copy and the Alexandrian manuſcript, and our fellow-labourer; reading the latter part of the clauſe in connexion with the former thus, a miniſter of God in the Goſpel of Chriſt, as the former of theſe verſions, in the doctrine of Chriſt, as the latter. Theſe characters are given of Timothy, partly to ſhow what honour was done the Theſſalonians, in ſending ſuch a meſſenger to them; and partly that they might receive him with the greater reſpect, and treat him according to his character, office, and dignity; and chiefly to obſerve to them the Apoſtle's great affection for them, in parting with ſo dear and uſeful a miniſter for their good and advantage, as follows: to eſtabliſh you; which though the work of God, it is uſually done by the miniſtry of the word; and then is the end of the Goſpel miniſtration anſwered to the churches, when they are eſtabliſhed by it; for notwithſtanding the ſaints are in a ſtable condition, as in the arms of love, and in the hands of Chriſt, and in the covenant of grace, and upon the rock of ages, and in a ſtate of regeneration, juſtification, and adoption, from whence they can never fall totally and finally; yet they are often very unſtable in their hearts and frames, in the exerciſe of grace, and diſcharge of duty, and in their adherence to the cauſe and intereſt, Goſpel and ordinances of Chriſt, through the prevalence of corruption, the temptations of ſatan, and the reproaches and perſecutions of men: and theſe Theſſalonians were young converts, and juſt planted together as a church; and at their firſt ſetting out, ſuſtained a conſiderable ſhock of afflictions, which made the Apoſtle concerned for their eſtabliſhment in the faith which they had received: and to comfort you concerning your faith. This is another end of the Goſpel miniſtry, to comfort afflicted minds, and diſtreſſed conſciences; it is the will of God that his people ſhould be ſpoke comfortably to; the doctrines of the Goſpel are calculated for that purpoſe, and the miniſters of it ſhould be Barnabaſes, ſons of conſolation. Theſe ſaints might be in ſome doubt about the grace of faith, whether it was right or no, or about the doctrine of faith they had received; and therefore Timothy is ſent to comfort them under their afflictions, which might have created theſe doubts, and to remove them, by ſhewing them that their faith was like precious faith with the Apoſtles; and that the doctrine of faith they embraced was the faith once delivered to the ſaints, and was the true faith of Chriſt: the words will bear to be rendered, to exhort you concerning your faith, as the Vulgate Latin verſion renders them; that is, to exhort you to continue in the faith, to ſtand faſt in it, in the exerciſe of the grace of faith, and in the doctrine of faith, and in the profeſſion of both. The Syriac verſion renders it, to aſk, or enquire of you concerning your faith, being willing to know how it ſtood, ſince they left them, as in ver. 5.

Ver. 3. That no man ſhould be moved by theſe afflictions, &c.] Which the Apoſtle endured for the ſake of preaching the Goſpel among them, and which he feared might be a means of troubling their minds, of ſhaking their faith, and moving them from the hope of the Goſpel; for tho' none of theſe things moved him, who was an old ſoldier of Chriſt, and uſed to hardneſs, and an Apoſtle of Chriſt; yet theſe were young converts, and not uſed to ſuch things, and therefore might be ſtaggered at them, and be offended, as ſtony-ground hearers are; and tho' the Apoſtle hoped better things of them, yet was concerned for them, that no one among them might be unhinged by them, or ſuccumb under them: for yourſelves know that we are appointed thereunto; by the immutable decree of God: afflictions, as to their nature, meaſure, and duration, are appointed for the people of God, and they are appointed for them; this is the caſe of all that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus, and eſpecially of Goſpel-miniſters; of which theſe ſaints had been apprized by the Apoſtle, and therefore was nothing new, unheard-of, and unexpected, or to be looked upon as a ſtrange thing; and ſeeing this was the appointment of heaven, and the will of God, they ſhould be patiently endured, and quietly ſubmitted to.

Ver. 4. For verily when we were with you, &c.] In preſence, in perſon, as they then were in heart and affection; when they were firſt among them, and preached the Goſpel to them: we told you before; before it came to paſs; that we ſhould ſuffer tribulation; which they might ſay by virtue of Chriſt's prediction to all his diſciples, that they ſhould have tribulation in the world; and upon its being the common caſe of God's people, and the uſual way thro' which they enter the kingdom; and the Apoſtle Paul might foretel this, upon the diſcovery that was made to him how many things he ſhould ſuffer for the ſake of Chriſt, and which therefore he always, and in every place expected; and he might have a particular revelation of the diſturbance and oppoſition he was to meet with at Theſſalonica: even as it came to paſs, and ye know; referring to the tumult and uproar in Acts xvii. 5—10. and which ſhould be conſidered ſo far from being a diſcouragement, that it was a great confirmation of the truth of their miſſion and miniſtry; nor could it be ſo ſurprizing to them, as it might have been, had they had no previous notice of it.

Ver. 5. For this cauſe, when I could no longer forbear, &c.] Or bear the above vehement deſire of ſeeing them, or of hearing from them. Here the Apoſtle ſpeaks in the ſingular number, and ſeems to intimate, as if what was ſaid before of the like kind, is to be underſtood ſingly of him; for theſe words are a repetition and ſummary of the foregoing, with ſome diverſity: I ſent to know your faith; how it ſtood, whether it was ſtaggering thro' theſe afflictions, or firm; whether it was weak or ſtrong, what was wanting in it; and whether it grew and increaſed. The Arabic verſion adds, and charity; for of this, as well as of faith, Timothy brought an account, as appears from the following verſe. Leſt by ſome means the tempter; ſatan, ſo called from his common and conſtant employ in tempting men to ſin; ſee Matt. iv. 3. have tempted you; with ſucceſs, and got an advantage over them, improving theſe afflictions to ſuch a purpoſe as to move them from the hope of the Goſpel, and relinquiſh the profeſſion of it; for otherwiſe there was no queſtion to be made but he had tempted them, or ſolicited them to it; for none of the ſaints are free from his temptations; the Apoſtle himſelf was not, nor indeed our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: but the Apoſtle's fears were, leſt he ſhould ſo have tempted them as to have gained upon them, and have perſuaded them to have turned their backs upon the Goſpel, and not expoſe their name and credit, and hazard the loſs of worldly ſubſtance, and even life itſelf, for the ſake of it. And our labour be in vain; in preaching the Goſpel among them; not with reſpect to God, to whom the word never returns void and empty; nor with regard to the Apoſtles, whoſe judgment was with the Lord, and their work with their God, who will of his own grace reward them; but with reſpect to the Theſſalonians, to whom, ſhould ſatan gain his point, it would be of no uſe and ſervice, for which the concern was. The Ethiopic verſion reads, and your labour be in vain; in receiving the Apoſtles, embracing and profeſſing the Goſpel, and ſuffering for it; ſee Gal. iii. 4. but the common reading is beſt, and agrees with what the Apoſtle elſewhere ſays, Gal. iv. 11. Phil. ii. 16.

Ver. 6. But now when Timotheus came from you unto us, &c.] At Corinth, as appears from Acts xviii. 5. which ſhows that this Epiſtle was not written from Athens, as the ſubſcription to it aſſerts, but from Corinth; for as ſoon as ever Timothy came from Theſſalonica, to the Apoſtle at Corinth, and made the report to him, he immediately ſent them this Epiſtle which is here ſuggeſted: but now, &c. juſt now; lately, as the Syriac verſion renders it, a very little while ago, Timothy was juſt come: and brought us good tidings of your faith and charity; of their faith, the grace of faith, that it was of the right kind; as far as could be judged, it was the faith of God's elect, like precious faith with theirs; an unfeigned one, ſtrong and lively, operative and growing: or of the doctrine of faith as received and embraced by them; as that they were greatly led, and had much light into it, and had, for the time, made conſiderable proficiency in it; that they held it faſt, and ſtood faſt in it, and contended for it, notwithſtanding all the afflictions, reproaches, and perſecutions which they either ſaw in the Apoſtles, or endured themſelves for the ſake of it; and likewiſe of the profeſſion of both the grace and doctrine of faith, which they held faſt, and without wavering, and that in a pure conſcience, which was good news indeed. Timothy alſo brought an account of their charity, or love, which faith works by; theſe two graces, are always found together; they are wrought in the ſoul by one, and the ſame hand, and at the ſame time; where the one is, the other is; and as the one flouriſhes and increaſes, ſo does the other. And by this grace is meant love to God, to Chriſt, to his truths, ordinances, ways, and worſhip, and to one another, and even to all men; and which was without diſſimulation, in ſincerity, in deed, and in truth, and was conſtant and fervent: and this was not the whole of the report, for it follows, and that ye have a good remembrance of us always; they bore in memory the perſons of the Apoſtles; and when they made mention of their names, it was with the greateſt reſpect and reverence; nor were they forgetful hearers of the word, but remembred with great affection and pleaſure the truths, the doctrines, and exhortations they delivered to them, ſo as to put them in practice, and longed for another viſit from them, to have their memories refreſhed by them: deſiring greatly to ſee us, as we alſo to ſee you; they had an equal deſire to ſee their ſpiritual fathers, as they had to ſee their ſpiritual children. Now ſuch a report as this concerning their ſteady faith in Chriſt, their fervent love to one another, and their affectionate regard to the miniſters of the word, was a ſort of a Goſpel, as the word uſed ſignifies; or it was good news and glad tidings to the Apoſtle, and thoſe that were with him.

Ver. 7. Therefore, brethren, we were comforted over you, &c.] Or in you, as the Vulgate Latin verſion; or from you, as the Arabic; or by you, as the Syriac; or for you, as the Ethiopic; that is, on account of them, either by what they had heard was in them, or had heard from them. This gave abundant conſolation in all our affliction and diſtreſs; which they met with at Corinth, where the Apoſtle laboured with his own hands, and miniſtred to his own, and the neceſſities of others, and was greatly oppoſed, reproached, and perſecuted; ſee Acts xviii. 3, 6, 9, 10, 12. but the news of the good eſtate and condition the Theſſalonians were in, was a great relief and comfort to him, particularly their faith: by your faith; by the report of it, that it grew exceedingly, and that they walked in the truth; ſee 3 John iii. 4. The Alexandrian copy reads, in all your diſtreſs and affliction, and by your faith.

Ver. 8. For now we live, &c.] Before they were as dead men, lifeleſs, diſconſolate, diſpirited, carrying about with them the dying of the Lord Jeſus, and death working in them, and they, as it were, under the ſentence of that, being killed all the day long for Chriſt's ſake; but now, upon this news, in the midſt of all their ſore trials and troubles, their ſpirits revived, and they became alive and chearful; ſee Pſ. xxii. 26. Iſ. lv. 3. it was like life from the dead unto them: if ye ſtand faſt in the Lord; or our Lord, as the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions read; that is, in the faith of the Lord, as the Arabic verſion renders it: they were in the Lord ſecretly by electing grace, and openly by regenerating grace, and they abode in him; and by perſevering grace, they were rooted and built up in Chriſt, and eſtabliſhed in the faith of him, of his perſon, office, and grace; they were ſteady in the exerciſe of grace upon him, and ſtood faſt in the liberty wherewith he had made them free, and continued ſtedfaſtly in the doctrines and ordinances of the Goſpel; for the if here is not expreſſive of doubting, but of reaſoning, ſeeing ye ſtand faſt in the Lord; of which they were aſſured by Timothy; and this gave them freſh ſpirit and life amidſt the deaths in which they often were.

Ver. 9. For what thanks can we render to God again for you, &c.] They had given thanks to God for them before, for their faith, love, and patience; ſee ch. i. 2, 3. and now having received a further account of them, they looked upon themſelves bound to give freſh thanks to God for them, for the increaſe of their faith and love, and for their perſeverance, as they did; ſee 2 Ep. i. 3. and ii. 13. ſince theſe are gifts of God's grace; but they knew not where to begin, what to render, and when to end: the phraſe is much like that in Pſ. cxvi. 12. what ſhall I render unto the Lord, &c. for all the joy wherewith we joy for your ſakes before our God; the joy they had was all joy, perfect and compleat in its kind; ſee Jam. i. 2. and it was not for themſelves, on their own account, becauſe of any worldly intereſt or advantage they had therein, but for the ſake of theſe Theſſalonians, whoſe ſpiritual welfare they rejoiced at: nor was their joy of a carnal nature, but ſpiritual; it was a joy in the Holy Ghoſt, and which was hearty and ſincere; it was before God; our God, their covenant God and Father; it was in his ſight and preſence, who ſees and knows all things, all actions, and the principles of them. Tho' this laſt clauſe, before our God, is, in the Syriac verſion, placed at the beginning of the next verſe, according to which, it refers, not to thanks or joy before God, but to prayer before him.

Ver. 10. Night and day praying exceedingly, &c.] This good news not only comforted their hearts, and revived their ſpirits, and filled them with joy and thankfulneſs, but alſo ſent them to the throne of grace to pray without ceaſing, continually night and day, and as often as they went thither, and that with great fervency and earneſtneſs, in a multitude of petitions; or, as the Arabic verſion renders it, with prayers exceeding a multitude; with innumerable requeſts: that we might ſee your face; once more, and converſe face to face: and might perfect that which is lacking in your faith? in the grace of faith; for tho' they remembred their work of faith with pleaſure, and had had good tidings of it very lately, and were thankful that it grew exceedingly as it did, yet they knew it was not perfect, there was unbelief attending them: and tho' it is God's work to increaſe faith, as well as to produce it, yet, as the miniſtry of the word is the means of the firſt planting of it, ſo it alſo is of the increaſe of it. This may likewiſe be underſtood of the doctrine of faith, which tho' they had received in the love of it, and had made conſiderable progreſs in their knowledge of it; yet they knew but in part, and needed to be taught the way of God, and truths of the Goſpel more perfectly; and the miniſtry of the word is for the perfecting of the ſaints in the knowledge of the Son of God, and of other truths; wherefore the Apoſtle deſired greatly to ſee them, that he might be an inſtrument of inſtructing them more perfectly in the knowledge of divine things; and in this, and in the following Epiſtle, he does particularly inſtruct them about the riſe and fall of antichriſt, the coming of Chriſt, and the reſurrection of the dead, articles of faith in which they ſeemed to have been deficient: but now, tho' theſe ſaints had deficiencies in their faith, yet they were not what the Jews call [*] מחוסרי אמנה, ſuch as are deficient in faith, or want faith entirely, a phraſe ſomewhat like this, which is here uſed.

Ver. 11. Now God himſelf, and our father, &c.] The Oriental verſions leave out the copulative and, and read, God himſelf, our Father; the firſt perſon in the Trinity, who is God himſelf, truly and properly ſo; and who is a God that hears prayer; and who is omnipotent and able to do more than the ſaints can aſk or think; and is omniſcient, and knows their perſons, and caſes, and what is proper for them, and how, and when to help and ſupply them; and he is alſo the God of all grace, the author and giver of it, and who is able to make it abound, and increaſe it, and ſo a very proper object of prayer: and who is likewiſe the Father of Chriſt, and of all the ſaints, not only by creation, in which ſenſe he is the father of all men, but by adopting grace; and which is mentioned to encourage freedom and boldneſs in prayer, which children may uſe with a father, and to raiſe an expectation of ſucceeding and receiving an anſwer; for if earthly parents hear their children, and give good things to them, how much more will not our heavenly Father give his holy Spirit, and all other good gifts, unto his children? And this ſhows that the Apoſtle prayed to God in the manner Chriſt directed, Matt. vi. 9. and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; who is equally the object of prayer with God, his Father and ours; who is ſometimes diſtinctly prayed unto, as in Acts vii. 59. and often in conjunction with his Father, as in all thoſe places in the Epiſtles, where grace and peace are wiſhed for from them both; ſee Rom. i. 7. and ſometimes he is ſet before the Father, as in 2 Theſſ. ii. 16. to ſhew the entire equality between them, and that he is equally addreſſed as he, being truly and properly God, who knows all things, and is the almighty, and whoſe grace is ſufficient for us, and therefore rightly applied unto, as here: the petition put up to them both is, that they would direct our way unto you: a journey is not to be taken without the will of God, without ſeeking to know it, without ſubmiſſion to it, and dependance on it; nor is there any proſperous one, but by it; ſee Jam. iv. 13, 14, 15. Rom. i. 10. Men may deviſe their own ways, but God directs their goings; eſpecially a good man's ſteps are ordered by the Lord, and particularly miniſters; who, as they are often directed to ſubjects and matter, in a very providential way, ſo to places, and are ordered both where and when to go; ſee Acts xvi. 6, 7, 9, 10. The Apoſtle was aware, that there were obſtacles in his way of coming to Theſſalonica, for he had attempted it once and again, but ſatan, and his emiſſaries, hindered; and therefore he deſires that God and Chriſt would remove them out of the way, and make his way ſtraight and plain, as the word ſignifies, that he might once more ſee their faces.

[*] Maimon. Hilch. Mechira, c. 7. §. 8, 9.

Ver. 12. And the Lord make you to increaſe, &c.] That is, the Lord the Spirit; ſo that the object of prayer, addreſſed by the Apoſtle, is Father, Son, and Spirit, as in Rev. i. 4, 5. The Alexandrian copy reads God. The Spirit is God, equally with the Father and the Son, and ſo a fit object of prayer with them, which otherwiſe he would not be. The requeſt is, that he would cauſe theſe ſaints to increaſe in number, as the firſt churches greatly did; and in the gifts of the Spirit, which he divides to men ſeverally as he will; and in his graces, as in faith, in hope, in holineſs, in humility, in knowledge, in ſpiritual joy and ſtrength, an increaſe in all which is from him: and abound in love one towards another; for tho' they were taught of God to love one another, and did do ſo, and the Apoſtle had had good tidings of their love; yet it was not perfect, there was room for a further exerciſe of it, by ſerving each other by it, in things ſpiritual and temporal; and he had his requeſt, for it did abound in every one of them towards each other, 2 Ep. i. 3. and towards all men; the men of the world, who were without, were not members of the church, nor profeſſors of the chriſtian religion, but enemies to that, and to Chriſt, and to them; and yet they were to love them as men, and pray for them, and do them all the good that lay in their power: even as we do towards you; for the love of the Apoſtle, and thoſe with him, abounded more and more towards theſe ſaints, and was ſo far from being weakened, that it was increaſed by their abſence from them; and they were more abundantly deſirous of ſeeing them, and were even quite impatient until they ſent to them, and heard of them.

Ver. 13. To the end he may ſtabliſh your hearts, &c.] Which are very unſtable and inconſtant in their frames, and in the exerciſe of grace, and have need to be eſtabliſhed in the love of God, againſt the fears of men, the frowns of the world, the temptations of ſatan, and in, and with the doctrines of grace; ſee the note on ver. 2. unblameable in holineſs before God, even our father. There is no holineſs in men naturally; what is in them without the grace of God is only a ſhew; true holineſs is from the Spirit of God; and this is a ſtable thing in itſelf, and can never be removed or taken away; but the acts of it, thro' the prevalence of corruption, the force of ſatan's temptations, and the ſnares of the world, are fickle and inconſtant; and the ſaints need to be eſtabliſhed in the diſcharge of duty, as well as in the exerciſe of grace: and whereas the Apoſtle prays, that they might be unblameable in holineſs, the Alexandrian copy reads, in righteouſneſs, ſo one of Stephens's; it muſt be obſerved, that no man is perfectly holy in this life; no man is without ſin in himſelf, or lives without the commiſſion of it; holineſs in the beſt is imperfect; no man, as yet, is in himſelf ſanctified wholly; there's no unblameable holineſs but in Chriſt; and in him the ſaints are without ſpot and blemiſh, who is their ſanctification and their righteouſneſs; but in themſelves they are full of ſpots and ſtains; yet thro' the grace of God their hearts may be ſo eſtabliſhed with principles of holineſs, and they may be ſo aſſiſted in the acts of it daily, as to give no juſt cauſe of blame to men, and ſo to behave as to approve themſelves before God, who ſees the heart, and knows from what principles all actions flow: and this the Apoſtle deſires may be at the coming of our Lord Jeſus; or unto the coming of him, as in ch. v. 23. Either at death, when he comes into his garden, and gathers his lilies, and takes his to himſelf to be for ever with him; or at the day of judgment, when he comes to judge the quick and dead; and which coming of his is certain, and will be quickly and ſuddenly, and with great glory and power: and, as it is here added, with all his ſaints; meaning either his holy angels, or rather the ſouls of his people, whom he'll bring with him, and will raiſe their dead bodies, and reunite them to their ſouls, when they ſhall be for ever with him; and then ſhall they be unblameable in holineſs, both in ſoul and body, and ſhall be preſented by him, firſt to himſelf, and then to his Father, faultleſs, and without ſpot, or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing. The Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions add, Amen; and ſo does Beza's ancient copy, and the Alexandrian manuſcript.

CHAP. IV.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle proceeds to exhort in general to the performance of good works, particularly to purity of life, to brotherly love, to quietneſs, diligence, and induſtry in the ſeveral callings of life, and not to mourn in an exceſſive and immoderate manner, for deceaſed friends; which leads him to ſay ſome things concerning the ſecond coming of Chriſt, and the reſurrection of the dead. The general exhortation to holineſs is in ver. 1, 2, 3. which is preſſed in a way of intreaty for the ſake of Chriſt; and the duties urged to were the commandments of Chriſt, and which the Apoſtles had given them, and they had received, and were well acquainted with; and beſides, a walk according to theſe commands, was well-pleaſing to God, and ſanctification in general was his will: and in particular the Apoſtle exhorts to abſtain from fornication, and all uncleanneſs; ſince it is a diſhonouring the body of man; acting the part of the ignorant Gentiles that know not God; a defrauding another man, as is uncleanneſs with another man's wife; the vengeance of God will light on ſuch; it is contrary to that vocation with which the ſaints are called, that being to holineſs, and not uncleanneſs; and to deſpiſe this exhortation, is caſting contempt, not upon man, but God himſelf, ver. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. Brotherly love is the next thing exhorted to, which ſeemed needleſs to write about, ſince, in regeneration, theſe ſaints were taught to exerciſe it, and had exerciſed it towards all the brethren throughout Macedonia, tho' it was neceſſary to exhort them to abound more and more in it, ver. 9, 10. and to ſtudy peace and quietneſs, and be induſtrious in their buſineſs, that ſo they might live an honeſt life among their carnal neighbours, and not be in want of any thing from them, ver. 11, 12. and whereas ſome of them had loſt ſome of their dear friends and relations by death, and were ready to exceed due bounds in their ſorrow for them, he dehorts from ſuch immoderate ſorrow, as being like that of thoſe that had no hope of a reſurrection from the dead; whereas, ſeeing it was an article of their faith, that Chriſt was riſen from the dead, they might aſſure themſelves that thoſe that ſleep in him ſhall be brought along with him when he ſhall appear a ſecond time, ver. 13, 14. which will not be prevented by thoſe that are alive when Chriſt comes; for as they will be changed, the dead in Chriſt will be raiſed at his coming; which coming of his will be in perſon, from heaven, with a ſhout, the voice of the arch-angel, and trump of God; and then both ſhall be caught up together to meet him in the air, and be for ever with him; and therefore they had no need to ſorrow as others, ſince they ſhould meet again, and never part more, and with which words they ſhould comfort one another under their preſent loſs, ver. 15, 16, 17, 18.

Ver. 1. Furthermore then we beſeech you, brethren, &c.] Or requeſt of you in the moſt kind and tender manner, from real and hearty love and affection for you, and with a view to your good, and the glory of God: and exhort you; or beſeech and intreat you. The Apoſtle does not lay his commands upon them as he might have done, and ſometimes does, but endeavours to work upon them by way of intreaty, and which he doubtleſs thought the moſt effectual method to win upon them, and gain them; for ſome minds are more eaſily wrought upon by entreaty than by authority: and this he does in the moſt moving and powerful manner, even by the Lord Jeſus; or in the Lord Jeſus; in his name and ſtead, as perſonating him, and as tho' he did beſeech and intreat them by him, and his fellow-miniſters; or for his ſake, intimating, that if they had any regard to him, any value for his name, if that had any weight with them, or they had any concern for his honour and intereſt, then he begs their attention to the following exhortation; or by the Lord Jeſus, by all that is in him, or done for them by him; in whom they were choſen, by whom they were redeemed, in whom they were made new creatures, to whoſe image they were to be conformed, whoſe followers they profeſſed to be, whoſe Goſpel they embraced, and by whoſe name they were called. That as ye have received of us how ye ought to walk, and to pleaſe God. The walk of believers is two-fold, either internal or external. Their internal walk is by faith, which is the going out of the ſoul by faith to Chriſt for every ſupply of grace. Their external walk is not as it was before converſion, according to the courſe of this world, or as other Gentiles walk, but in a holy, religious life and converſation; and this requires ſpiritual life, ſtrength, and direction from Chriſt; for neither dead men, nor, if alive, yet weak, can walk; nor is it in a ſpiritual man, that walketh to direct his ſteps; and ſuch a walk alſo denotes continuance in well-doing, and a progreſſion or going on in it, and ſuppoſes ways to walk in. Chriſt, he is the chief and principal way, and there are other paths which regard him, or relate and lead unto him; as the way of truth, the path of ordinances, and of religious worſhip, both public and private, and the ways of righteouſneſs, holineſs, and good works: the manner in which ſaints are to walk, is as Chriſt himſelf walked, after the Spirit, and not after the fleſh, according to the rule of the word, which is the ſtandard of faith and practice, with prudence, wiſdom, circumſpection, and worthy of God, and of that vocation wherein they are called: and of ſuch a walk there is a neceſſity; it ought, it muſt be both on the account of God, it being his will, and for his glory, and the contrary would ſhew great ingratitude to him; and on the account of the ſaints themſelves, to adorn them, and their profeſſion, and preſerve them from ſhame and diſgrace, to ſhew their faith, and demonſtrate their calling and election to others; and likewiſe on account of others, partly for the winning of ſome, by recommending in this way the Goſpel to them, and partly for the bringing of others to ſhame and ſilence, who falſly accuſe their good converſation. Now when the Apoſtle, and thoſe that were with him were at Theſſalonica, they gave theſe ſaints directions and inſtructions about their walk and converſation, to order it in ſuch a manner as might pleaſe God; which is not to be underſtood of rendering their perſons acceptable to God hereby, for the ſaints acceptance with God is only in Chriſt the beloved; nor of their gaining the love and favour of God by ſuch means, for the love of God is from everlaſting, and is free, and ſovereign, and does not ariſe from, or depend upon the holineſs and obedience of men; or of making peace with God by ſuch a walk, for peace is only made by the blood of Chriſt; but of doing thoſe things, and in ſuch a way God approves of: unregenerate men cannot pleaſe God, nor any thing they do, becauſe they are deſtitute of the Spirit of God, and are without Chriſt, and his grace, and have not faith in him, without which it is impoſſible to pleaſe God; but what a believer does in faith, from a principle of love, in the name and ſtrength of Chriſt, and to the glory of God, is approved of by God, and is acceptable to him thro' Chriſt, and for his ſake; and there are many things of this kind, as prayer, praiſe, acts of beneficence to the poor, and indeed every good work and holy action: and inaſmuch as they had been thus taught and inſtructed how to behave and conduct in their outward walk and converſation, they are entreated and exhorted to go on and abound in the work of the Lord, ſo ye would abound more and more; that is, be more and more in the exerciſe of every grace, and in the diſcharge of every duty, making advances in holineſs of life, and perfecting it in the fear of God. Beza's ancient copy, and another manuſcript, as alſo the Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, add between the preceding, and this laſt clauſe, as ye alſo walk; and ſo the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions ſeem to have read; commending them for their preſent and paſt walk and converſation, in order to perſuade and encourage them to go forward.

Ver. 2. For ye know what commandments we gave you, &c.] When among them; ſuch as thoſe of faith and love, the ordinances of the Goſpel, baptiſm, and the Lord's ſupper, and all ſuch as relate to the worſhip and ſervice of God, to the diſcipline of Chriſt's houſe, to their behaviour one towards another, and their conduct in the world: and which were delivered to them, not as from themſelves, and by their own authority, but by the Lord Jeſus; in his name, and by his authority, and as ordered by him; for their commiſſion ran to teach men all things, whatſoever Chriſt commanded: now ſince they knew what theſe commandments were, and whoſe they were, and the obligation they lay under to regard them, the Apoſtle makes uſe of it as a reaſon or argument to engage them to obedience to them; for he that knows his Lord's will, and does it not, ſhall be beaten with many ſtripes, Luke xii. 47.

Ver. 3. For this is the will of God, even your ſanctification, &c.] Which is another reaſon to enforce the above exhortation. Sanctification is internal or external. Internal ſanctification is the work of the Spirit of God, and is a principle of ſpiritual life in the ſoul, a divine and ſpiritual light in the underſtanding, a flexion of the will to the will of God, and a ſettlement of the affections on divine things, and is an implantation of every grace in the heart. External ſanctification ariſes from this, and lies in holineſs of life and converſation; and is what is chiefly deſigned, as appears both by what goes before, and follows after: and this is the will of God; the will of his purpoſe and decree; for in the ſame decree that he wills the ſalvation of any by Jeſus Chriſt, he alſo wills their ſanctification in heart and life, and here and hereafter: and this is his approving will, or what is well-pleaſing in his ſight, being agreeable to his nature, and divine perfections, particularly his holineſs, in which he is glorious; and it is his will of command, and what he requires in his law, which is holy, juſt, and good, and perfectly agrees with the ſound doctrine of the Goſpel, and the revelation of his will in both. That ye ſhould abſtain from fornication; which is particularly mentioned, abſtinence from it being a branch of external holineſs; and becauſe that this ſin was common among the Gentiles, and not eſteemed a ſin by them; as alſo to obſerve to theſe chriſtians, that as ſimple fornication was not to be allowed of, much leſs other acts of uncleanneſs, as adultery, inceſt, ſodomy, and the like, which were iniquities that greatly prevailed among the heathens. The Syriac verſion renders it, from all fornication; on this ſubject the Apoſtle enlarges in ſome following verſes.

Ver. 4. That every one of you ſhould know how to poſſeſs his veſſel, &c.] By which may be meant, either a man's wife, or his body, and it is not very eaſy to determine which, for the Jews call both by this name. Sometimes they call [p] a woman, גולם, which the Gloſs ſays is a veſſel unfiniſhed. It is reported [q], that when R. Eleazar died, Rabbenu Hakkadoſh would have married his widow, and ſhe would not, becauſe ſhe was, כלי של קדושה, a veſſel of holineſs, greater than he. Moreover, it is ſaid [r], that "he that forces (a young woman) muſt "drink, בעציצו, in his own veſſel——how drink in "his own veſſel? tho' ſhe be lame, tho' ſhe be "blind, and tho' ſhe is ſtricken with ulcers." The commentators [s] on the paſſage add, "in the veſſel "which he has choſen; that is to ſay, whether he "will or no, he muſt marry her;" ſee Prov. v. 15. And again, they ſometimes call a man's wife his tent: hence that ſaying [t], "אין אהלו אלא אשתו, "there's no tent but his wife, as it is ſaid, Deut. v. "30. go, ſay to them, get you into your tents again." And certain it is, that the woman is called the weaker veſſel in 1 Pet. iii. 7. between which paſſage, and this, there ſeems to be ſome agreement. The ſame metaphor of a veſſel is made uſe of in both; and as there, honour is to be given to the weaker veſſel, ſo here, a man's veſſel is to be poſſeſſed in honour; and as there, huſbands are to dwell with their wives according to knowledge, ſo here, knowledge is required to a man's poſſeſſing his veſſel aright. Now for a man to poſſeſs his veſſel in this ſenſe, is to enjoy his wife, and to uſe that power he has over her in a becoming manner; ſee 1 Cor. vii. 4. and which is here directed to in ſanctification and honour; that is, in a chaſte and honourable way; for marriage is honourable when the bed is kept undefiled; and which may be defiled, not only by taking another into it, and which is not poſſeſſing the wife in ſanctification and honour, it is the reverſe, for it is a breaking thro' the rules of chaſtity and honour; but it may even be defiled with a man's own wife, by uſing her in an unnatural way, or by any unlawful copulation with her; for ſo to do is to uſe her in an unholy, unchaſte, wicked, and diſhonourable manner; whereas poſſeſſing of her according to the order and courſe of nature, is by the Jews, in agreement with the Apoſtle, called [u], מקדש עצמו, a man's ſanctifying himſelf, and is chaſte, and honourable. And it may be obſerved, that the Jews uſe the ſame phraſe concerning conjugal embraces, as the Apoſtle does here. One of their canons runs thus [w]: "though "a man's wife is free for him at all times, it is "fit and proper for a diſciple of a wiſe man to uſe "himſelf, בקדושה, in, or to ſanctification." When theſe things are obſerved, this ſenſe of the words will not appear ſo deſpicable as it is thought by ſome. The body is indeed called a veſſel; ſee 2 Cor. iv. 7. becauſe in it the ſoul is contained, and the ſoul makes uſe of it, and its members, as inſtruments, for the performance of various actions; and, with Jewiſh writers, we read of, כלי גופו, the veſſel of his body[x]; ſo then, for a man to poſſeſs his veſſel in ſanctification and honour, is to keep under his body, and bring it into ſubjection, and preſerve it in purity and chaſtity; as the eyes from unchaſte looks, the tongue from unchaſte words, and the other members from unchaſte actions; and to uſe it in an honourable way, not in fornication, adultery, and ſodomy; for by fornication a man ſins againſt his own body; and by adultery he gets a wound, and a diſhonour, and a reproach that will not be wiped away; and by ſodomy, and ſuch like unnatural luſts, men diſhonour their own bodies between themſelves: particularly by his veſſel, as Gataker thinks, may be meant the membrum virile, or the genital parts, which, by an Euphemiſm, may be ſo called; ſee 1 Sam. xxi. 5.

Ver. 5. Not in the luſt of concupiſcence, &c.] Or paſſion of luſt; for the mere gratifying and indulging of that; for, for a man ſo to poſſeſs his veſſel, is to cheriſh the ſin of concupiſcence, the firſt motions of ſin in the heart, by which a man is drawn away, and inticed; to blow up the flame of luſt, and to make proviſion for the fleſh to fulfil the luſts thereof: even as the Gentiles which know not God; for tho' they knew him, or might know him with a natural knowledge, by the light and works of nature, yet they knew him not ſavingly and ſpiritually, as he is revealed in the word, of which they were deſtitute; or as the God of all grace, and the God and Father of Chriſt, or as he is in Chriſt: and tho' by the light of nature they might know there was a God, yet they knew not who that God was; nor did they act up to that light and knowledge they had; they did not glorify him as God, by aſcribing to him what was his due; nor were they thankful for the mercies they received from him; nor did they fear, love, worſhip, and ſerve him; nor did they like to retain him in their knowledge, and therefore were given up to judicial blindneſs and hardneſs, to a reprobate mind, and to vile affections, and ſo did things very inconvenient, unnatural, and diſhonourable. Wherefore, for a man to uſe either his wife or his body in any unchaſte and diſhonourable manner, for the gratifying of his luſts, is to act an heatheniſh part; a like argument, diſſuading from things unlawful, is uſed in Matt. vi. 32. and xx. 25, 26. Gal. iv. 8, 9.

Ver. 6. That no man go beyond, and defraud his brother in any matter, &c.] Or in this matter, as the Syriac verſion. This is commonly underſtood of tranſgreſſing the bounds of juſtice and equity between men and men; and of cheating and defrauding in trade and buſineſs, by increaſing or leſſening the value and prices of goods by the buyer and ſeller, by not keeping to the bargain, contract, covenant, or ſample, by falſe weights and meaſures, and by taking the advantage of the weakneſs and ignorance of men; all which is aggravated by dealing thus with a brother; ſee 1 Cor. vi. 8. and this hint is thought the rather neceſſary, ſince Theſſalonica was a place of great trade and buſineſs. But the matter, or buſineſs referr'd to, is not trade, but the ſubject of chaſtity or uncleanneſs the Apoſtle is ſpeaking of, both before and after; and the phraſes uſed either deſign the act of adultery, a coveting a brother's wife, and lying with her, and ſo a defrauding and wronging of him by defiling his bed; or rather ſodomitical practices, an unnatural luſt and deſire in men after men, and copulation with them; for υπερβαινειν, rendered, go beyond, anſwers to בא על, to go upon, or lie with, ſo often uſed in Jewiſh writings for lying with women, men, and beaſts in an unlawful way. Thus, for inſtance[y], "theſe are to be burned, הבא על אשה, he that "lies with a woman, and her daughter, &c." And again[z], "theſe are to be beaten, הבא על, he that "lies with his ſiſter, or his father's ſiſter, &c." And the word πλεονεκτειν, tranſlated defraud, ſignifies a greedy, inſatiable, and unnatural luſt and deſire after a man, a brother, or the committing of ſodomitical practices with greedineſs; ſee Eph. iv. 19. which abominable iniquities are diſſuaded from by the following reaſons, becauſe that the Lord is the avenger of all ſuch; or with reſpect to all theſe things, as the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions render it; or for all theſe things, as the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions; as fornication, adultery, laſciviouſneſs, and all ſorts of abominable uncleanneſs. The perſon that commits theſe things the Lord avenges, either in this life, by the hand of the civil magiſtrate, who is the miniſter of God, a revenger to execute wrath on him that does evil; or by a violent death, as in the caſe of Zimri and Cozbi, and twenty-four thouſand more at the ſame time; or by ſome awful judgment from heaven, as in the caſe of Sodom and Gomorrha; or in the world to come; for the law of God is made and lies againſt ſuch perſons; theſe living and dying in ſuch ſins God will judge, to whom vengeance belongs; theſe ſhall not inherit the kingdom of God, but have their part and portion in the lake which burns with fire and brimſtone. As we have alſo forewarned you and teſtified; not by a former Epiſtle, as if this was the ſecond to them, and what follows the firſt, as Grotius thought; but they did this when they were in perſon with them, knowing that theſe abominable vices greatly prevailed in their city; therefore they bore their teſtimony againſt them, and expoſed the evil of them, and warned them of the danger by them, ſo that they could not now plead ignorance. The Ethiopic verſion reads in the firſt perſon ſingular, as I have before ſaid unto you, and teſtified to you.

Ver. 7. For God hath not called us, &c.] The Syriac verſion reads you. This is another reaſon to enforce the above exhortations, and to caution them againſt the above unclean practices, taken from the end of effectual vocation by the efficacious grace of God, which is not unto uncleanneſs of any ſort, as before ſpecified. This they had lived in before their calling, and were now called from it into communion with Chriſt, who loves righteouſneſs, and hates iniquity; and by the Goſpel, which teaches to deny ungodlineſs, and worldly luſts, and to forſake all impurity, both of fleſh and ſpirit: but this call is unto holineſs of life and converſation in general, and to chaſtity in thought, look, word, and actions in particular; for God that calls is holy, and therefore thoſe who are called ought to be ſo; the calling with which they are called is an holy calling, principles of grace and holineſs are wrought in their ſouls, when they are called; and the end of their vocation is to live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly; and then, and then only do they walk worthy of that vocation wherewith they are called, and of God who has, by his grace, called them to his kingdom and glory.

Ver. 8. He therefore that deſpiſeth, &c.] The Vulgate Latin adds, theſe things; theſe exhortations now delivered, the commandments given by the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and the will of God above declared: he that rejects theſe things with contempt, takes no notice of them, and acts not according to them, deſpiſeth not man; not men only, the Apoſtles of Chriſt, and miniſters of the Goſpel; for by deſpiſing theſe exhortations, they themſelves were deſpiſed, tho' not alone: but God; Father, Son, and Spirit; God the Father, whoſe will was their ſanctification, even to abſtain from fornication, and every act of uncleanneſs, which, if not attended to, was a deſpiſing of him; and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom, and for whoſe ſake they were intreated and exhorted, and in whoſe name, and by whoſe authority the Apoſtle gave them theſe commandments; wherefore to ſlight them, was to ſlight Jeſus Chriſt himſelf; and, by the way, this is a proof of the true and proper deity of Chriſt. Moreover, ſuch deſpiſers alſo, in ſome ſenſe, do deſpight unto the Spirit of grace, by whom the Apoſtles ſpake, or who ſpoke in them theſe things, as follows, who hath alſo given unto us his holy Spirit; as he did to the prophets of the Old Teſtament, and therefore what they ſaid was equally by divine inſpiration of God; and hence deſpiſing them, was deſpiſing the Spirit of God that ſpake by them. The Syriac and Arabic verſions read, who hath given unto you his holy Spirit; and ſo all Stephens's copies; which furniſhes out a freſh reaſon or argument, diſſuading from uncleanneſs, ſince God had given them his Spirit to convince them of ſin, of righteouſneſs, and of judgment, ſo that they were not ignorant of the things warned againſt; and he had given them his Spirit as an holy Spirit, as a Spirit of ſanctification, to begin and carry on that work in them, to which uncleanneſs was very oppoſite; and he had given his Spirit unto, or into them, to dwell in them, as in his temple, and therefore ſhould be careful not to defile it; and to cauſe them to walk in his ſtatutes, and to aſſiſt them to keep his judgments, and do them, and as an earneſt of their inheritance, and a ſealer of them up unto the day of redemption; wherefore it became them not to grieve him by an impure life; and they were laid under obligations to live in the Spirit, and to walk after him, and not after the fleſh.

Ver. 9. But as touching brotherly love, &c.] Another branch of ſanctification; which is diſtinct from love to God and Chriſt, tho' it always accompanies it, and from love to all mankind; and is what is peculiar to brethren in a ſpiritual relation, and ought to be univerſal, fervent, and ſincere, and as Chriſt has loved them: concerning which the following things are ſaid, ye need not that I write unto you. The Vulgate Latin verſion reads, we have no need to write unto you; and ſo ſome copies. It ſeems that it was needful to write unto them about other things, as to refreſh their memories with the inſtructions they had given them, when with them, how they ſhould walk and pleaſe God; and to put them in mind of the commandments given them by Chriſt, and that their ſanctification was the will of God; and particularly it was neceſſary to write unto them about chaſtity, and purity of life, whether in or out of the conjugal ſtate; but as for brotherly love, there was no immediate, abſolute neceſſity to write about that, either about the nature of it, or to deſcribe the objects of it, or point out inſtances of it, or to exhort to it in a preſſing manner: the reaſon is, for ye yourſelves are taught of God to love one another; not merely by the light of nature, which teaches men to be kind, courteous, affable, and beneficent; nor by the law of Moſes, which obliges men to love their neighbours as themſelves; nor only doctrinally by the miniſtry of the Goſpel, which frequently inculcates the exerciſe of this grace as a matter of great importance and conſequence; nor only by the new commandment, and example of Chriſt; but by the Spirit of God internally in regeneration, who, according to the tenour of the new covenant, writes this law of love, and of Chriſt, upon the heart; and this being written upon the hearts of the Theſſalonians, by the finger of the Spirit of God, whereby they were clearly directed, and powerfully taught to exerciſe this grace, and diſcharge this duty, and under the influence of the ſame Spirit did exerciſe it; it was unneceſſary for the Apoſtle to write about it, and preſs them to it.

Ver. 10. And indeed ye do it towards all the brethren, &c.] Whether high or low, rich or poor, bond or free, greater or leſſer believers, and whether related in the bonds of nature or not; they exerciſed this grace of love without reſpect of perſons to all, and not only to all the brethren in the particular community at Theſſalonica, but which are in all Macedonia; throughout the whole country, particularly at Philippi and Berea, and other places: but we beſeech you brethren. The Alexandrian copy reads, beloved brethren; and the Syriac verſion, I beſeech you my brethren: that ye increaſe more and more; in ſhewing love to the brethren; which may be done both by adminiſtring to them in things temporal, by aſſiſting them in diſtreſs, by ſympathizing with them, and by giving them counſel and advice; and in things ſpiritual, by bearing their burdens, forbearing with them, and forgiving them; by admoniſhing them in love, by ſtirring them up to love and good works, by praying with them and for them, and by inſtructing and building them up in their moſt holy faith: and this increaſe, and abounding in the exerciſe of this grace, may reſpect not only the more frequent and fervent uſe of it, but alſo the larger extent of it to other objects; as not only to all the brethren in their own church, and to all that were in Macedonia, to which it did extend, but likewiſe to all the brethren in other parts of the world, and which are more diſtant and remote; and even to the poor ſaints at Jeruſalem in particular; and accordingly we find that their love did abound unto them; ſee Rom. xv. 25, 26, 27. 2 Cor. viii. 1, 2. this ſhows, that though brotherly love was much practiſed by theſe ſaints, yet it was not perfect; nor is any grace perfect as to degrees; nor is any ſaint perfect in the diſcharge of duty in this life.

Ver. 11. And that ye ſtudy to be quiet, &c.] To live peaceably in their own families, and to give no diſturbance to other families, by tale-bearing, whiſpering, and backbiting; to behave with quietneſs in the neighbourhood, town, or city, they dwell in, and to ſeek the peace thereof; and to lead a quiet and peaceable life, in all godlineſs and honeſty, in the commonwealth, and under the government to which they belong; and not to create and incourage factions, diviſions, animoſities, and contentions, in their own church, or in any of the churches of Chriſt; and it becomes ſaints to make this their ſtudy, to be very ſolicitous for it, to ſtrive for it, and purſue after it: the word uſed, ſignifies to be ambitious of it, as what is a man's glory and honour, to emulate and ſtrive to outdo each other, as who ſhall have the honour of being the quieteſt perſon, and the moſt peaceable member in the community: and to do your own buſineſs; or private buſineſs, or what is proper and peculiar to a man's ſelf; to abide every man in his own calling wherein he is called, and attend the buſineſs of it, and not thruſt himſelf into other families, and officiouſly take upon him, under a pretence of zeal, affection, and friendſhip, to inſpect, direct, or manage the buſineſs of others: in ſhort, he ſhould not meddle with other people's buſineſs, but mind his own: and this is what the Jews call, דרך ארץ, the way of the earth, or the buſineſs of life: "there are four things, they ſay[*], in which a man ſhould employ himſelf continually, with all his might, and theſe are they, the law and good works, and prayer, and the buſineſs of life;" upon which the Gloſs has this note by way of explanation, "if a man is an artificer (let him attend) to his art; if a merchant to his merchandize, and if he is a ſoldier to war;" and which may ſerve to illuſtrate the Apoſtle's ſenſe: and to work with your own hands; the reaſon of this is, becauſe there were ſome among them, who would not work at all; ſee 2 Theſſ. iii. 11. and by this inſtruction it appears, that the members of this church in common, were ſuch as were brought up to handicraft trades and buſineſſes, and were poor and mean; and this was the general caſe of the primitive churches: it pleaſed God to chuſe and call the poor of this world, to whom the Goſpel was preached, and they received it; few of the rulers among the Jews believed in Chriſt, and not many mighty, rich, or noble among the Gentiles were called; ſome there were, and in this church there were ſome of the chief women of the city, Acts xvii. 4. and though theſe and others of the better ſort, as well as miniſters of the Goſpel among them, who laboured in the word and doctrine, were not obliged by this to perform manual work and labour, yet were not exempted from all concern in the exhortation; it being proper and neceſſary, that all ſorts of perſons be employed in one ſort of buſineſs or another, and to uſe diligence and application in it; the Apoſtle's view being chiefly to inveigh againſt ſloth and idleneſs, and to exhort to labour and induſtry, as the moſt effectual method to preſerve peace and quietneſs, and to keep perſons from being troubleſome and hurtful, in families, churches, and commonwealths: the reaſons enforcing this follow in this and the next verſe, as we commanded you; and the command of an Apoſtle carries weight and authority with it, and ought to be obeyed; yea, they not only ſtrictly enjoined a diligent application to buſineſs, but ſet them an example themſelves; ſee 1 Theſſ. ii. 9. 2 Theſſ. iii. 7, 8.

Ver. 12. That ye may walk honeſtly, &c.] Decently, in good credit and reputation, providing things honeſt in the ſight of all men, for themſelves and families, and honeſtly paying every man his own; on which account it became them to mind their own buſineſs, and work at their trades; otherwiſe their walk and converſation would be ſcandalous, and not honeſt and honourable: toward them that are without; the men of the world, who were without the church; ſee 1 Cor. v. 12. profane ſinners, unconverted Gentiles, that were without Chriſt and hope, and God in the world, and were aliens and ſtrangers; and yet care ſhould be taken that no occaſion be given to ſuch, to reproach the name of God, the ways of Chriſt, and the doctrines of the Goſpel: and that ye may have lack of nothing; but have wherewith to ſupply the neceſſaries of life, and give to them alſo that ſtand in need, which is more bleſſed and honourable than to receive; or might not need any ſuch inſtruction and exhortation, or any reproof for ſloth and idleneſs; or not ſtand in need of any man, as the Syriac verſion renders it; of the help and aſſiſtance of any, of any of thoſe that are without, which would be diſhonourable; or of them that are within, of the church, which might be burdenſome. The Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, that ye may not deſire any thing of any one; as the ſlothful man covets greedily all the day long what is another's, and this deſire kills him, Prov. xxi. 25, 26. he covets an evil covetouſneſs, and craves in a ſcandalous way the bread of others; when it would be more honourable for him to work with quietneſs, and eat his own bread got by honeſt labour, and not be beholden to another.

Ver. 13. But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, &c.] As they ſeem to have been, about the ſtate of the pious dead, the rule and meaſure of mourning for them, the doctrine of the reſurrection of the dead, the ſecond coming of Chriſt, and the future happineſs of the ſaints; wherefore the Apoſtle judged it neceſſary, to write to them upon theſe ſubjects: the Alexandrian copy and others, the Complutenſian edition, the Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read, we would not have you to be ignorant, &c. concerning them which are aſleep; that is, dead: it was in common uſe among the Eaſtern nations, when they ſpoke of their dead, to ſay they were aſleep. This way of ſpeaking is uſed frequently, both in the Old and the New Teſtament; ſee 1 Kings ii. 10. and xi. 43. Dan. xii. 2. John xi. 11. 1 Cor. xv. 20. and very often with the Targumiſts; ſo the Targum on Eccl. iii. 4. a time to weep, paraphraſes it, "a time to weep, על שכיבא, over them that are aſleep:" and in ch. iv. 2. "I praiſed, ית שכיבא, thoſe that are aſleep," the dead: the reaſon of this way of ſpeaking was, becauſe there is a likeneſs between ſleep and death; in both there's no exerciſe of the ſenſes, and perſons are at reſt, and both riſe again; and they are common to all men, and proper and peculiar to the body only. The Apoſtle deſigns ſuch perſons among the Theſſalonians, who either died a natural death, or were removed by violence, through the rage and fury of their perſecutors, for whom their ſurviving friends were preſſed with over-much ſorrow, which is here cautioned againſt: that ye ſorrow not, even as others that have no hope; the Apoſtle's view is not to encourage and eſtabliſh a ſtoical apathy, a ſtupid indolence, and a brutal inſenſibility, which are contrary to the make of human nature, to the practice of the ſaints, and even of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and our Apoſtle himſelf; but to forbid exceſſive and immoderate ſorrow, and all the extravagant forms of it the Gentiles ran into; who having no notion of the doctrine of the reſurrection of the dead, had no hope of ever ſeeing their friends more, but looked upon them as entirely loſt, as no longer in being, and never more to be met with, ſeen, and enjoyed; this drove them to extravagant actions, furious tranſports, and downright madneſs; as to throw off their cloaths, pluck off their hair, tear their fleſh, cut themſelves, and make baldneſs between their eyes for the dead; ſee Deut. xiv. 1. practices forbidden the Jews, and which very ill become chriſtians, that believe the doctrine of the reſurrection of the dead: the words are to be underſtood not of other chriſtians, who have no hope of the eternal welfare of their deceaſed friends; not but that the ſorrow of thoſe who have a good hope of the future well being of their dear relatives, muſt and ought to be greatly different from that of others, who have no hope at all: it is obſerved by the Jews [b] on thoſe words in Gen. xxiii. 2. and Abraham came to mourn for Sarah, &c. that "it is not ſaid to weep for Sarah, but to mourn for her; for for ſuch a woman as this, it is not fit to weep, after her ſoul is joined in the bundle of life, but to mourn for her, and do her great honour at her funeral; tho' becauſe it is not poſſible that a man ſhould not weep for his dead, it is ſaid at the end, and to weep for her:" but here the words are to be underſtood of the other Gentiles that were in a ſtate of nature and unregeneracy, who had no knowledge of the reſurrection of the dead, or any hope of a future ſtate, and of enjoying their friends again in it: they are called οι λοιποι, the reſt; and the Syriac verſion renders it, other men.

[*] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 32. 2.

Ver. 14. For if we believe that Jeſus died, and roſe again, &c.] As every chriſtian does, for both the death and reſurrection of Chriſt, are fundamental articles of faith; nothing is more certain or more comfortable, and more firmly to be believed, than that Chriſt died for the ſins of his people, and roſe again for their juſtification; on theſe depend the preſent peace, joy, and comfort of the ſaints, and their everlaſting ſalvation and happineſs: and no leſs certain and comfortable, and as ſurely to be believed, is what follows, even ſo them alſo which ſleep in Jeſus will God bring with him. The ſaints that are dead, are not only repreſented as aſleep, as before, but as aſleep in Jeſus; to diſtinguiſh them from the other dead, the wicked; for the phraſe of ſleeping in death, is promiſcuouſly uſed of good and bad, though moſt commonly applied to good men: and ſo ſay the Jews [c], "we uſe to ſpeak of juſt men, not as dead, but as ſleeping; ſaying, afterwards ſuch an one fell aſleep, ſignifying that the death of the righteous, is nothing elſe than a ſleep. To repreſent death as a ſleep, makes it very eaſy and familiar; but it is more ſo, when it is conſidered as ſleeping in Jeſus, in the arms of Jeſus; and ſuch as are aſleep in him muſt needs be at reſt, and in ſafety: ſome join the phraſe in, or by Jeſus, with the word bring, and read the paſſage thus, them that are aſleep, by Jeſus will God bring with him; intimating, that God will raiſe up the dead bodies of the ſaints by Chriſt, as God-man and mediator; and through him will bring them to eternal glory, and ſave them by him, as he has determined; others render the words, them which ſleep through, or by Jeſus, or die for his ſake, and ſo reſtrain them to the martyrs; who they ſuppoſe only will have part in the firſt reſurrection, and whom God will bring with Jeſus at his ſecond coming; but the coming of Chriſt will be with all his ſaints; ſee ch. iii. 13. wherefore they are beſt rendered, them that ſleep in Jeſus; that is, in the faith of Jeſus, as the Arabic verſion renders it: not in the lively exerciſe of faith on Chriſt, for this is not the caſe of all the ſaints at death; ſome of them are in the dark, and go from hence under a cloud, and yet go ſafe, and may be ſaid to die, or ſleep in Jeſus, and will be brought with him; but who have the principle, and hold the doctrine of faith, are, and live and die true believers; who die intereſted in Chriſt, in union with him, being choſen and bleſſed, and preſerved in him from everlaſting, and effectually called by his grace in time, and brought to believe in him; theſe both their ſouls and bodies, are united to Chriſt, and are his care and charge; and which union remains in death, and by virtue of it the bodies of the ſaints will be raiſed at the laſt day: ſo that there may be the ſtrongeſt aſſurance, that ſuch will God bring with him; either God the Father will bring them with his Son, or Jehovah the Son will bring them with himſelf; he'll raiſe them from the dead, and unite them to their ſouls, or ſpirits, he will bring with him; the conſideration of which, may ſerve greatly to mitigate and abate ſorrow for deceaſed friends.

Ver. 15. For this we ſay unto you by the word of the Lord, &c.] The Apoſtle having ſomething new and extraordinary to deliver, concerning the coming of Chriſt, the firſt reſurrection, or the reſurrection of the ſaints, the change of the living ſaints, and the rapture both of the raiſed and living in the clouds to meet Chriſt in the air, expreſſes himſelf in this manner; either in alluſion to the prophets of old, to whom the word of the Lord is ſaid to come, and who uſually introduced their prophecies with a thus ſaith the Lord; or in diſtinction from his own private ſenſe, ſentiment, and opinion of things; ſignifying, that what he was about to ſay, was not a fancy and conjecture of his own, the fruit and produce of his own brain, but what he could aſſert upon a ſure foundation, upon the beſt and greateſt authority, even the word of the Lord; and has reſpect either to ſome particular word of Chriſt, as ſome think, ſuch as Matt. xxiv. 30, 31. John v. 28, 29. or rather to a particular and peculiar revelation, and ſpecial inſtruction in theſe things, he had immediately from Chriſt; and it may be when he was caught up into the third heaven himſelf, and had an experience in himſelf of ſomewhat of that which both the living and raiſed ſaints ſhall feel, when they are caught up together in the clouds; ſince the change of the living ſaints at the time of the reſurrection of the dead, is a myſtery which ſeems to have been firſt made known unto, and diſcovered by the Apoſtle Paul; ſee 1 Cor. xv. 51, 52. That we which are alive, and remain unto the coming of the Lord; not that the Apoſtle thought that he and the ſaints then in the fleſh, ſhould live and continue till the ſecond coming of Chriſt; for he did not imagine that the coming of Chriſt was ſo near, as is manifeſt from 2 Theſſ. ii. 1, 2, 3. though the Theſſalonians might take him in this ſenſe, which he there corrects; but he ſpeaks of himſelf and others in the firſt perſon plural, by way of inſtance and example, for illuſtration ſake; that ſuppoſing he and others ſhould be then in being, the following would be the caſe: and moreover, he might uſe ſuch a way of ſpeaking with great propriety of other ſaints, and even of thoſe unborn, and that will be on the ſpot when Chriſt ſhall come a ſecond time; ſince all the ſaints make up one body, one family, one church and general aſſembly; ſo that the Apoſtle might truly and juſtly ſay, we which are alive; that is, as many of our body, of our family, of our church or ſociety, that ſhall be living at the coming of Chriſt; and he might chuſe the rather to ſpeak in this form, perſon, and tenſe, to awaken the care, circumſpection, diligence, and watchfulneſs of the ſaints, ſince it could not be known how ſoon the Lord would come: however, from hence it appears, that there will be ſaints alive at Chriſt's ſecond coming; he'll have a ſeed to ſerve him till he comes again; he always had in the worſt of times, and will have, and that even in the laſt days, in the days of the Son of man, which are ſaid to be like thoſe of Noah and of Lot; and theſe are ſaid to remain, or to be left; theſe will be a remnant, the reſidue and remainder of the election of grace, and will be ſuch as have eſcaped the fury of antichriſt and his followers, or of the perſecutors of the ſaints: now theſe ſhall not prevent them that are aſleep; that is, that are dead, ſo the Ethiopic verſion; the reaſon why the dead are ſo called, ſee in the note on the preceding verſes: the ſenſe is, either they ſhall not come up to them that are aſleep, or dead, as the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions render the words; they ſhall not come into the ſtate of the dead, they ſhall undergo a change equivalent to death, but not death itſelf; ſee 1 Cor. xv. 51, 52. or rather they ſhall not go before them; they ſhall not get the ſtart of them, and be in the arms of Jeſus, and enjoy his preſence when he comes, before the dead in Chriſt, which might be thought, but this will not be the caſe; for the dead ſaints will riſe before the living ones are changed, and both will be caught up together to meet the Lord, as is ſaid in the following verſes; ſo that the one ſhall not prevent or go before the other, or come at, or into the enjoyment of Chriſt firſt, but both together.

Ver. 16. For the Lord himſelf ſhall deſcend from heaven, &c.] Not by proxy, or by repreſentatives; not by the miniſtry of angels, as on mount Sinai; nor by the miniſters of the word, as under the Goſpel diſpenſation; nor by his Spirit, and the diſcovery of his love and grace, in which ſenſe he deſcends in a ſpiritual manner, and viſits his people; but in perſon, in his human nature, in ſoul and body; in like manner as he went up to heaven, will he deſcend from thence, ſo as to be viſible, to be ſeen and heard of all: he'll come down from the third heaven, whither he was carried up, into which he was received, and where he is retained until the time of the reſtitution of all things, and from whence the ſaints expect him: and this deſcent will be with a ſhout; the word here uſed is obſerved by many, to ſignify ſuch a noiſe or ſhout, as is made either by mariners, when they pull and row together, and ſhout to direct and encourage one another; or to an army with the general at the head of it, when about to undertake ſome conſiderable action, to enter on a battle, and make the onſet; Chriſt will now appear as the king of kings, and Lord of Lords, as the judge of the whole earth, attended with the hoſt, or armies of heaven, and the ſhout of a king will be among them: perhaps the ſame is intended, as by the voice of a great multitude, as the voice of many waters, and of mighty thundrings upon the coming of Chriſt, the deſtruction of antichriſt, and the marriage of the Lamb, in Rev. xix. 1, 6, 7, 14, 15. The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions render it, in, or with command; and the Arabic verſion, with his own government, or authority; that is, he ſhall deſcend, either by the command of his Father, as man and mediator, having authority from him as the Son of man, to execute judgment; or with his commanding power and authority over the mighty angels, that ſhall deſcend with him: it follows, with the voice of the archangel; ſo Michael is called, in Jude, ver. 9. with which compare Rev. xii. 7. and who perhaps is no other than Chriſt himſelf, who is the head of all principality and power; and the ſenſe be, that Chriſt ſhall deſcend from heaven with a voice, or ſhall then utter ſuch a voice, as will ſhew him to be the archangel; or as the Syriac verſion renders it, the head, or prince of angels; and which whether it will be an articulate voice, ſuch as was expreſſed at the grave of Lazarus; or a violent clap of thunder; which is the voice of God; or the exertion of the power of Chriſt, is not certain: 'tis added, and with the trump of God; call'd the laſt trump, 1 Cor. xv. 52. becauſe none will be blown after it, and may be the ſame with the ſeventh trumpet, Rev. xi. 15. and here the trump of God, becauſe blown by his order; or by Chriſt himſelf, who is God, and ſo be the ſame with the voice of the archangel; and theſe figurative expreſſions are uſed, to ſet forth the grandeur and magnificence in which Chriſt will come; not in that low, mean, and humble form in which he firſt came, but with great glory, and marks of honour and reſpect; with angels ſhouting, trumpets blowing, and ſaints rejoicing. This is ſaid in alluſion to the trumpet, which was heard on mount Sinai at the giving of the law, and of which the Jews ſay [d], that it, מאחא מיתיא, quickned the dead; for they have a notion, that when the Iſraelites firſt heard the voice of the Lord, they died; but upon hearing it the ſecond time, they returned to life [e]; and they ſuppoſe alſo in the time to come, at the reſurrection of the dead, a trumpet will be blown, which will quicken the dead [f], and at the day of judgment [g]; and this is reckoned by them, as one of the ſigns of the Meſſiah's coming [h]; “ Michael ſhall ſhout with a great ſhout, and the “ graves of the dead ſhall be opened at Jeruſalem, “ and the holy bleſſed God will reſtore the dead to “ life, and Meſſiah the Son of David ſhall come, “ &c.” And the dead in Chriſt ſhall riſe firſt; the ſame with thoſe that are aſleep in Jeſus, ver. 14. not only the martyrs that died for the ſake of Chriſt, and his Goſpel; nor merely thoſe who die in the lively exerciſe of faith in Chriſt; but all that die intereſted in him, and in union with him: and theſe ſhall riſe, in conſequence of their being his; being given to him, made his care and charge, and engaged for by him, and in virtue of their union to him; and ſhall riſe to an entire conformity to his glorious body, and in order to enjoy eternal life and glory with him: and theſe will riſe firſt, before the wicked, which is the firſt reſurrection, Rev. xx. 5, 6. even a thouſand years before them; the righteous will riſe in the morning of the reſurrection, and ſo will have the dominion in the morning, Pſ. xlix. 14. even at the beginning of the thouſand years, as ſoon as Chriſt will come; but the wicked will not riſe till the evening of that day, or till the cloſe of the thouſand years: and this agrees with the notions of the Jews, who thought that ſome will riſe before others; ſee 2 Eſdras ii. 23. Having mentioned thoſe words in Pſal. cxvi. 9. I will walk before the Lord in the land of the living, 'tis aſked [i], “ is there no land of the living but Tyre and its “ neighbours, and Ceſarea and its neighbours, “ where is cheapneſs and fulneſs? ſays R. Simeon “ ben Lekiſh, in the name of Bar Kaphra, the land “ in which the dead live, תחילה, firſt, in the days “ of the Meſſiah:” and on the ſame place elſewhere [k] they obſerve, that “ our Rabbins ſay two “ things, or give two reaſons, why the fathers “ loved to be buried in the land of Iſrael, becauſe “ the dead in the land of Iſrael, חיים תחילה, live, “ or riſe firſt, in the days of the Meſſiah, and “ ſhall enjoy the years of the Meſſiah:” and in another place [l] they take notice of what is written in Iſa. xxvi. 19. and the earth ſhall caſt out the dead; ſays R. Jochanan, "the dead which are in the "land (i. e. of Iſrael) they ſhall live firſt; as it is "ſaid, thy dead men ſhall live, together with my "dead body ſhall they ariſe; theſe are they that are "without the land; awake and ſing ye that "dwell in the duſt, theſe are they that die in the "wilderneſs:" and again [m], "as it is ſaid, Iſa. "xl. 26. that bringeth out their hoſt by numbers, "come ſee, it is ſaid, all that die in the land of "Iſrael, יקומין בקדמיתא, ſhall riſe firſt, becauſe "the holy bleſſed God ſhall awake them, and "raiſe them, according to Iſa. xxvi. 19." Once more they ſay [n], "they that ſtudy in the law as "they ought, theſe are they that ſhall riſe firſt "to everlaſting life, as it is ſaid Dan. xii. 2. and "many of them that ſleep in the duſt of the earth "ſhall awake, ſome to everlaſting life, &c. and theſe "are for everlaſting life, becauſe they ſtudy in "everlaſting life, which is the law:" to which may be added the following paſſage [o], "they that "are worthy to be buried in the land of Iſrael, "ſhall be raiſed firſt——and they ſhall be raiſed "and quickned before the reſt of the children of "the world, who draw the waters of the law; and "they draw, becauſe they ſtudy to draw out of "the waters of the law; and they are ſtrengthned "by the tree of life, and they ſhall go out firſt, "becauſe the tree of life is the cauſe why they "ſhall riſe firſt:" they ſometimes endeavour to fix the time, how long they will riſe before the reſt [p]; "many of thoſe that ſleep, &c. theſe are "the righteous that ſhall go before others in life, "and how many years ſhall they go before them? "R. Judah ſays, two hundred and ten years; R. "Iſaac ſays, two hundred and fourteen; according "to others, the righteous ſhall go (or be raiſed) a "year before the reſt of men; ſays R. Nachman, it "will be according to the computation (of time) that "the carkaſs has been in the duſt; R. Joſe replies, if "ſo, there will be many reſurrections." Theſe inſtances may ſuffice to ſhow, that the Jews had a notion of ſome perſons riſing before others, to which the Apoſtle may have ſome reference; though his ſenſe is not only this, but alſo that the dead in Chriſt, ſhall riſe before the living ſaints are changed, and taken up to be with Chriſt, and ſo ſhall not go before to him; which illuſtrates and proves what he had before aſſerted.

Ver. 17. Then we which are alive and remain, &c.] See the note on ver. 15. ſhall be caught up; ſuddenly, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, and with force and power; by the power of Chriſt, and by the miniſtry and means of the holy angels; and to which rapture will contribute, the agility which the bodies both of the raiſed and changed ſaints will have: and this rapture of the living ſaints, will be together with them; with the dead in Chriſt, that will then be raiſed; ſo that the one will not prevent the other, or the one be ſooner with Chriſt than the other; but the one being raiſed and the other changed, they'll be joined in one company and general aſſembly, and be rapt up together: in the clouds; the ſame clouds perhaps in which Chriſt will come, will be let down to take them up; theſe will be the chariots, in which they'll be carried up to him; and thus, as at our Lord's aſcenſion a cloud received him, and in it he was carried up out of the ſight of men, ſo at this time will all the ſaints ride up in the clouds of heaven: to meet the Lord in the air; whither he'll deſcend, and will then clear the regions of the air, of ſatan, and his poſſe of devils, which now rove about there, watching all opportunities, and taking all advantages to do miſchief on earth; theſe ſhall then fall like lightening from heaven, and be bound and ſhut up in the bottomleſs pit, till the thouſand years are ended: here Chriſt will ſtop, and will be viſible to all, and as eaſily diſcerned by all, good and bad, as the body of the ſun at noon-day: as yet he will not deſcend on earth, becauſe not fit to receive him; but when that and its works are burnt up, and it is purged and purified by fire, and become a new earth, he'll deſcend upon it, and dwell with his ſaints in it: and this ſuggeſts another reaſon why he'll ſtay in the air, and his ſaints ſhall meet him there, and whom he'll take up with him into the third heaven, till the general conflagration and burning of the world is over, and to preſerve them from it; and then ſhall all the elect of God deſcend from heaven as a bride adorned for her huſband, and he with them, and the tabernacle of God ſhall be with men; ſee Rev. xxi. 1, 2, 3. The reſurrection by the Mahometans is called, לקא אללה [q], a meeting of God, or a going to meet God: and ſo ſhall we ever be with the Lord; now the ſaints are with him at times, and have communion with him, but not always; but then they ſhall be ever with him, wherever he is; firſt in the air, where they ſhall meet him; then in the third heaven, where they ſhall go up with him; then on earth, where they ſhall deſcend and reign with him a thouſand years; and then in the ultimate glory to all eternity: and this will be the iſſue and accompliſhment of the counſel and covenant of grace, of the ſufferings and death of Chriſt, and of his preparations and prayers.

Ver. 18. Wherefore comfort one another with theſe words.] Or doctrines; as that the ſaints when they die, don't ceaſe to be, but are aſleep, and aſleep in Jeſus; that their ſouls are with him, and their bodies ſleep in his arms, and are his care; that theſe will be as ſoon with Chriſt, as the ſaints that will be alive when he comes; that the coming of Chriſt will be with great power and glory; that the righteous will riſe firſt in the morning of the reſurrection, and before the living ſaints are changed, and are with Chriſt; that they will both be taken up together to meet him; and that they ſhall all be with him, and that for ever, and never part more; than which, nothing can yield more true and ſolid comfort, under all the trials and troubles of this life, under all diſeaſes and diſtempers of body, under all afflictions and perſecutions for Chriſt's ſake, under the loſs of near and dear relations, and in a view of death and eternity: ſome copies read, with theſe words of the Spirit; and ſo the Arabic verſion, with theſe ſpiritual words; for ſuch they are, being the word of God, as in ver. 15.

CHAP. V.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle diſcourſes concerning the ſuddenneſs of Chriſt's coming, and the neceſſity of ſobriety and watchfulneſs, and being on our guard with reſpect unto it, and then proceeds to exhort to ſeveral duties of religion, and cloſes the Epiſtle with prayers for the ſaints, ſalutations of them, advice unto them, and with his uſual benediction. Having ſpoken of the coming of Chriſt in the preceding chapter, the Apoſtle ſignifies he had no need to write of the time and ſeaſon of it; ſince it was a well known thing that it would be ſudden, and at an unawares, like the coming of a thief in the night, and the travail of a woman with child, though certain and inevitable; and would bring ſure deſtruction on wicked men, unthought of by them, ver. 1, 2, 3. but ſuch was the ſtate and condition of the ſaints, being not in the night of nature's darkneſs and unregeneracy, but enlightened by the Spirit of God, that they were not ignorant of theſe things, nor liable to be ſurprized unawares hereby, ver. 4, 5. however, in conſideration of their being in the light, and not in darkneſs, it became them to behave accordingly, and not indulge themſelves in ſleep and ſloth, but be watchful and ſober, and on their guard, having on their ſpiritual armour, ver. 6, 7, 8. and the rather, ſince they were not appointed to wrath they deſerved, but to ſalvation by Chriſt; whoſe end in dying for them was, that they might live together with him, and therefore ſhould exhort and comfort, and edify one another, ver. 9, 10, 11. and then follow various exhortations, ſome, which reſpect their miniſters, their knowledge of them, love to them, and eſteem for them, on account of their dignity, office, work, and uſefulneſs, ver. 12, 13. others, which concern themſelves and one another, as church members, ver. 13, 14. others, which regard alſo them that are without, ver. 14, 15. and others which relate to joy and thankſgiving, to prayer and praiſe; to the gifts of the Spirit, and the miniſtry of the word; and to a trial and examination of what is good, and an abiding by it, and an abſtinence from all evil, and every appearance of it, ver. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22. and the whole is concluded with prayers for them, for their perfect ſanctification, and entire preſervation to the coming of Chriſt; which were put up in faith, grounded upon the faithfulneſs of God who had called them to grace and glory, ver. 23, 24. and with a requeſt to them to pray for him, and other miniſters of the Goſpel, and to ſalute all the brethren, ver. 25, 26. and with a charge to read this letter to them all, ver. 27. and with his uſual benediction, ver. 28.

Ver. 1. But of the times and the ſeaſons, brethren, &c.] Of the coming of Chriſt, his appointed time and his day, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; of the reſurrection of the dead in Chriſt firſt, and of the rapture of all the ſaints in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, things treated of in the preceding chapter: and which might excite a curioſity to know the times and ſeaſons of them; as in what year they would come to paſs; in what ſeaſon of the year, whether winter or ſummer; in what month, and on what day of the month; and whether in the night ſeaſon, or in the day-time; and in what hour, whether at midnight, cock-crowing, morning, or noon-day: to repreſs which the Apoſtle obſerves, ye have no need that I write unto you; to write to them concerning the things themſelves, was neceſſary and uſeful, to ſtir up and encourage their faith, hope, and expectation of them; to allay their grief for departed friends, and to comfort one another under the various trials and exerciſes of life; but to write to them about the time of theſe things, would be trifling and unneceſſary, would be an idle ſpeculation, and an indulging a vain curioſity; and beſides, was impracticable: for of that day and hour knows no man; the times and ſeaſons the Father hath put in his own power; for theſe things are equally true of Chriſt's ſecond coming, as of the kingdom of Chriſt coming with power and glory, and of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, Matt. xxiv. 36. Acts i. 6, 7. The Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions read, ye have no need that we write unto you; the reaſon follows;

Ver. 2. For yourſelves know perfectly, &c.] With great exactneſs and accuracy, with great clearneſs and perſpicuity, as a certain truth, which was made plain and evident to them, and about which there could be no queſtion; and which perfect knowledge they had, either from the words of Chriſt, Matt. xxiv. 42, 43, 44. or from the miniſtration of the Apoſtle and his fellow-labourers, when among them: that the day of the Lord; of the Lord Jeſus, when he will ſhew himſelf to be king of kings, and Lord of Lords, and the judge of the whole earth; and which is ſometimes ſtiled the day of the Son of man, and the day of God, for Chriſt will appear then moſt glorioully, both in his divine and human nature; the day of redemption, that is, of the body from the grave, and from corruption and mortality; and the laſt day, in which will be the reſurrection of the dead, and the day of judgment, in which Chriſt will come to judge the quick and dead: and which ſo cometh as a thief in the night; at an unawares, and the Lord himſelf in that day will ſo come, Rev. iii. 3. and xvi. 15. reſpect is had not to the character of the thief, nor to the end of his coming; but to the manner of it, in the dark, indiſcernibly, ſuddenly, and when not thought of and looked for; and ſuch will be the coming of Chriſt, it will be ſudden and unknown beforehand, and when leaſt thought of and expected: and ſince the Theſſalonians knew this full well, it was needleſs for the Apoſtle to write about the time and ſeaſon of it; which they were ſenſible of, could no more be known and fixed, than the coming of a thief into any one of their houſes.

Ver. 3. For when they ſhall ſay, &c.] Or men ſhall ſay, that is, wicked and ungodly men, perſons in a ſtate of unregeneracy: peace and ſafety; when they ſhall ſing a requiem to themſelves, promiſe themſelves much eaſe and peace for years to come, and imagine their perſons and property to be very ſecure from enemies and oppreſſors, and ſhall flatter themſelves with much and long temporal happineſs: then ſudden deſtruction cometh upon them; as on the men of the old world in the times of Noah, and on the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrha in the days of Lot; for as theſe, will be the days of the Son of man, as at the time of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, ſo at the laſt day; ſee Luke xvii. 26—30. and as was the deſtruction of literal Babylon, ſo of Babylon in a myſtical ſenſe, or antichriſt and his followers: and which will be as travail upon a woman with child; whoſe anguiſh and pains are very ſharp, the cauſe of which is within herſelf, and which come ſuddenly upon her, and are unavoidable; and ſo the metaphor expreſſes the ſharpneſs and ſeverity of the deſtruction of the wicked, thus the calamities on the Jewiſh nation, are expreſſed by a word which ſignifies the ſorrows, pangs, and birth-throws of a woman in travail, Matt. xxiv. 8. and likewiſe that the cauſe of it is from themſelves, their own ſins and tranſgreſſions; and alſo the ſuddenneſs of it, which will come upon them in the midſt of all their mirth, jollity, and ſecurity; and moreover, the inevitableneſs of it, it will certainly come at the full and appointed time, though that is not known: and they ſhall not eſcape; the righteous judgment of God, the wrath of the Lamb, or falling into his hands; to eſcape is impoſſible, rocks, hills, and mountains will not cover and hide them; before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt they muſt ſtand, and into everlaſting puniſhment muſt they go.

Ver. 4. But ye, brethren, are not in darkneſs, &c.] In a ſtate of unregeneracy, which is a ſtate of darkneſs, blindneſs, and ignorance, and which is the condition of all men by nature; they are born in darkneſs, and are brought up in it, and willingly walk in it; they are covered with it, as the earth was covered with darkneſs in its firſt creation; and dwell in it, as the Egyptians did for ſome days, in thick darkneſs, darkneſs which might be felt; their underſtandings are darkened with reſpect to the true knowledge of God, the nature of ſin, the way of ſalvation by Chriſt, the work of the Spirit of God upon the ſoul, and the neceſſity of it, the ſcriptures of truth, and the myſteries of the Goſpel; and which is the caſe of God's elect themſelves, whilſt unregenerate: but now theſe perſons were called out of darkneſs, turned from it, and delivered from the power of it; and therefore knew that the day of the Lord comes as above deſcribed, by the metaphors of a thief in the night, and a woman with child, and needed not to be informed about that matter: or that that day ſhould overtake you as a thief; or ſeize and lay hold upon you as a thief who comes in the dark, and lays hold upon a perſon ſuddenly; but theſe ſaints were not in the dark, but in the light, and ſo could ſee when the day of the Lord came; and would not be ſurprized with it, as a man is ſeized with terror and fright, when laid hold on by a thief; ſince they would be, or at leaſt ſhould be on their watch, and be looking out for, and haſting to the coming of the day of God.

Ver. 5. Ye are all children of light, &c.] Or enlightened perſons, whoſe underſtandings were enlightened by the Spirit of God, to ſee their loſt ſtate by nature, the exceeding ſinfulneſs of ſin, the inſufficiency of their righteouſneſs to juſtify them before God, the fulneſs, ſuitableneſs, and excellency of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, the way of ſalvation by Chriſt, and that it is all of grace from firſt to laſt; to underſtand in ſome meaſure the ſcriptures of truth, and the myſteries of the Goſpel; to have knowledge of ſome things that are yet to be done on earth, as the bringing in of the fulneſs of the Gentiles, the converſion of the Jews, the deſtruction of antichriſt, the ſecond coming of Chriſt, the reſurrection of the dead, the change of living ſaints, and the rapture of both up into the air to meet Chriſt, the burning of the world, and the new heavens and new earth, where Chriſt and his ſaints will dwell; as alſo to have ſome glimpſe of the heavenly glory, of the unſeen joys, and inviſible realities of the other world: and this the Apoſtle ſays of them all, in a judgment of charity, as being under a profeſſion of the grace of God, and in a church ſtate, and nothing appearing againſt them why ſuch a character did not belong to them: and the children of the day; of the Goſpel day, in diſtinction from the night of Jewiſh darkneſs; and of the day of grace which was come upon their ſouls, in oppoſition to the night of ignorance and infidelity which was paſt; and of the everlaſting day of glory, being heirs of, and having a right unto, and a meetneſs for the inheritance of the ſaints in light: we are not of the night, nor of darkneſs; that is, not children of the night, nor children of darkneſs, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions read; and the former changes the perſon and reads, ye are not the children of the night, &c. of the night of the legal diſpenſation, or of Gentile ignorance; or of a ſtate of natural darkneſs, in unregeneracy and unbelief: all which ſtrengthens the reaſon, why there was no need to write unto them concerning the time and ſeaſon of Chriſt's coming, and lays a foundation for the following exhortations.

Ver. 6. Therefore let us not ſleep as do others, &c.] As the reſt of the Gentiles, as unconverted perſons, who are in a ſtate of darkneſs, and are children of the night; let us not act that part they do, or be like them; which profeſſors of religion too much are, when they indulge themſelves in carnal luſts and pleaſures, and are careleſs and thoughtleſs about the coming of the day of the Lord; and get into a ſtupid, drowſy, and ſlumbering frame of ſpirit; when grace lies dormant as if it was not, and they grow backward to, and ſlothful in the diſcharge of duty, and content themſelves with the bare externals of religion; and become lukewarm and indifferent with reſpect to the truths and ordinances of the Goſpel, the cauſe of God, the intereſt of religion, and glory of Chriſt; and are unconcerned about ſins of omiſſion or commiſſion; and are willing to continue in ſuch a poſition, being diſpleaſed at every admonition and exhortation given them to awake; but this is very unbecoming children of the light, and of the day: but let us watch; over ourſelves, our hearts, thoughts, affections, words, and actions; and over others, our fellow-chriſtians, that they give not into bad principles and evil practices; and againſt ſin, and all appearance of it; againſt the temptations of ſatan, the ſnares of the world, and the errors of wicked men, who lie in wait to deceive; and in the word and ordinances, and particularly in prayer, both unto it, in it, and after it; and for the ſecond coming of Chriſt, with faith, affection, and patience; and the rather, becauſe of the uncertainty of the time of it: and be ſober; not only in body, abſtaining from exceſſive eating and drinking, uſing this world, and the good things of it, ſo as not to abuſe them, or ourſelves with them; but alſo in mind, that the heart be not overcharged with the cares of this world; for men may be inebriated with the world, as well as with wine; and the one is as prejudicial to the ſoul, as the other is to the body; for an immoderate care for, and purſuit after the world, choaks the word, makes it unfruitful, and runs perſons into divers ſnares and temptations, and hurtful luſts. The Arabic verſion renders it, let us repent; and the Ethiopic verſion, let us underſtand; as intending the ſobriety of the mind, repentance being an after thought of the mind, a ſerious reflection on paſt actions with ſorrow and concern; and thinking ſoberly, and not more highly than a man ought to think of himſelf, his gifts, his attainments, and abilities, in oppoſition to pride, vanity, and ſelf-conceit, is very becoming; and ſhows a true and well informed underſtanding and judgment, and that a man is really ſober and himſelf.

Ver. 7. For they that ſleep, ſleep in the night, &c.] The night is the uſual ſeaſon for ſleep, and ſleep is only for ſuch who are in darkneſs, and are children of the night; and not proper to be indulged by ſuch who are children of the day, and of the light: and they that be drunken, are drunken in the night; drunkenneſs is a work of darkneſs, and therefore men given to exceſſive drinking, love darkneſs rather than light, and chuſe the night for their purpoſe. To be drunk at noon is ſo ſhameful and ſcandalous, that men who love the ſin, and indulge themſelves in it, take the night-ſeaſon for it; and equally ſhameful it is, that enlightened perſons ſhould be inebriated, either with the cares of this life, or with an over-weaning opinion of themſelves.

Ver. 8. But let us who are of the day, be ſober, &c.] As in body, ſo in mind; let us caſt off the works of darkneſs, and have no fellowſhip with them; ſince the day of grace has paſſed upon us, the darkneſs is gone, and the true light ſhines, let us walk as children of the light, living ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly: putting on the breaſt-plate of faith and love; this is the coat of mail, 1 Sam. xvii. 5, 38. which was made of iron or braſs; and the Ethiopic verſion here calls it, the iron coat. The alluſion ſeems to be to the high-prieſt's breaſt-plate of judgment, in which were put the Thummim and Urim, which ſignify perfections and lights; faith may anſwer to the former, and love to the latter: theſe two graces go together, faith works by love, and love always accompanies faith; as there can be no true faith where there is no love, ſo there is no true love where faith is wanting: faith is a conſiderable part of the chriſtian ſoldier's breaſt-plate, and anſwers the end of a breaſt-plate, it being that grace which preſerves the vitals of religion, and keeps all warm and comfortable within; and ſecures the peace and joy of the ſaints, as it has to do with Chriſt and his righteouſneſs; wherefore this breaſt-plate is called, the breaſt-plate of righteouſneſs, Eph. vi. 14. it fortifies the ſoul, and preſerves it from ſatan's temptations, from his fiery darts entering, and doing the miſchief they would; it defends the heart againſt the errors of the wicked, for a man that believes has a witneſs in himſelf to the truths of the Goſpel, and therefore can't be eaſily moved from them; and ſtrengthens a man againſt the carnal reaſonings of the mind, for faith in the promiſes of God, ſurmounts all the difficulties that reaſon objects to the fulfilling of them; and ſecures from the fears of death, the terrors of the law, and dread of the wrath of God: and love is the other part of the breaſt-plate; love to God and Chriſt, is a means of keeping the believer ſound both in faith and practice; for a ſoul that truly loves God and Chriſt, can't give in to principles that depreciate the grace of God, and derogate from the glory and dignity, of the perſon and office of Chriſt, or the work of the Spirit; and ſuch love the ordinances and commands of Chriſt, and hate every falſe way of worſhip, or invention of men; and love to the ſaints is the bond of perfectneſs, knits them together, preſerves unity and peace, and fortifies againſt the common enemy: and for an helmet, the hope of ſalvation; the helmet is that part of armour which covers the head, and was made of braſs, 1 Sam. xvii. 5, 38. and uſed to be anointed with oil, that it might ſhine the brighter, laſt the longer, and more eaſily repel blows; to which this grace of the Spirit, hope of ſalvation by Chriſt, is fitly compared: for by ſalvation is meant, ſalvation by Chriſt, ſpiritual ſalvation, and that as compleat in heaven; and hope is a grace wrought in the ſoul by the Spirit of God, which has for its foundation Chriſt and his righteouſneſs, and for its object the heavenly glory; it covers the head in the day of battle, and preſerves from being overcome by ſin and ſatan, when one that is deſtitute of it ſays there is no hope, and we will walk every man after the imagination of his own evil heart; it erects the head in time of difficulty, amidſt tribulation and afflictions; it defends it from fears of divine wrath which is revealed from heaven, and ſometimes in appearance ſeems to hang over it; and it preſerves from ſatan's temptations, and being carried away with the error of the wicked, from the hope of the Goſpel: and thus a chriſtian clothed and armed with theſe graces, faith, hope, and love, ſhould be ſo far from indulging himſelf in ſin and ſloth, that he ought always to be ſober and watchful, and prepared to meet the enemy in the gate; and be ready, always waiting for his Lord's coming.

Ver. 9. For God hath not appointed us to wrath, &c.] To deſtruction and ruin, the effect of wrath; though there are ſome that are veſſels of wrath, fitted for deſtruction, of old ordained to condemnation, and who are reſerved for the day of evil; but there are others who are equally children of wrath, as deſerving of the wrath of God in themſelves as others, who are not appointed to it; which is an inſtance of wonderful and diſtinguiſhing grace to them: but to obtain ſalvation by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; ſalvation is alone by Chriſt, he alone has wrought it out; it is in him, and in no other; he was appointed to this work, was called and ſent, and came to do it, and has done it; and God's elect, who were choſen in him, are appointed in the counſel and purpoſe of God, to obtain, poſſeſs, and enjoy this ſalvation; and which, as this appointment, may be known, as it was by theſe Theſſalonians; the Goſpel having come to them, not in word only, but in power, and in the Holy Ghoſt, and in much aſſurance; as it is an encouragement to faith and hope, ſo it excites to ſobriety and watchfulneſs, and the diſcharge of every duty. The doctrine of predeſtination does not lead to deſpair, but encourages the hope of ſalvation; and it is no licentious doctrine, for election to ſalvation by Chriſt, is through ſanctification of the Spirit, and unto holineſs; and good works are the fruits of it, and are what God has foreordained his people ſhould walk in.

Ver. 10. Who died for us, &c.] The elect of God, who are not appointed to wrath, but to ſalvation by Chriſt, on which account he died for them; not merely as a martyr to confirm his doctrine, or only by way of example, but as a ſurety, in the room and ſtead of his people; as a ſacrifice for their ſins, to make atonement for them, and ſave them from them; ſo that his death lays a ſolid foundation for hope of ſalvation by him: that whether we wake or ſleep; which phraſes are to be underſtood, not in the ſame ſenſe in which they are uſed in the context; as if the ſenſe was, whether a man indulges himſelf in ſin, and gives way to ſleep and ſloth, and carnal ſecurity, or whether he is awake and on his watch and guard, he ſhall through the death of Chriſt have eternal life ſecured to him; not but that there is a truth in this, that eternal life and ſalvation by Chriſt, as it does not depend on our watchfulneſs, ſo it ſhall not be hindered by the ſleepy, drowſy frame of ſpirit, the children of God ſometimes fall into: but rather natural ſleep and waking are intended; and the meaning is, that thoſe for whom Chriſt died, are always ſafe, ſleeping or waking, whatever they are about and employed in, and in whatſoever ſituation and condition they are in this world; though it may be beſt of all to interpret the words, of life and death; and they may have a particular regard to the ſtate of the ſaints at Chriſt's ſecond coming, when ſome will be awake, or alive, and others will be aſleep in Chriſt, or dead; and it matters not which they are, whether living or dead; ſee Rom. xiv. 7, 8, 9. for the end of Chriſt's dying for them, and which will be anſwered in one as well as in another is, that we ſhould live together with him; Chriſt died for his people, who were dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, that they might live ſpiritually a life of ſanctification from him, and a life of juſtification on him, and by him; and that they might live a life of communion with him; and that they might live eternally with him, in ſoul and body in heaven, and reign with him there, and partake of his glory; and this all the ſaints will, whether they be found dead or alive at his coming; for the dead will immediately ariſe, thoſe that ſleep in the duſt will awake at once, and they that are alive will be changed, and both will be caught up in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and be for ever with him: now the conſideration of the death of Chriſt, and this end of it, which will certainly be anſwered, ſerves greatly to encourage hope of ſalvation by him, and faith in him, and an earneſt expectation of his ſecond coming.

Ver. 11. Wherefore comfort yourſelves together, &c.] Either with the doctrine of the reſurrection of the dead, the ſecond coming of Chriſt, and the thoughts of being for ever with him, and one another, and ſo may be a repetition of the advice in ch. iv. 18. or with this conſideration, that they were not in a ſtate of darkneſs, ignorance, and infidelity, but were children of the light, and of the day, being called out of darkneſs into marvellous light, and ſhould enjoy the light of life; and with the doctrine of predeſtination, they being appointed not to wrath they were deſerving of, but to be poſſeſſed of ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt, of which they could never fail, ſince the purpoſe of God according to election, always ſtands ſure, not upon the foot of works, but upon his own ſovereign and unchangeable grace; or with the doctrine of Chriſt's ſufferings and death, in their room and ſtead, whereby the law was fulfilled, juſtice ſatisfied, their ſins atoned for, pardon procured, an everlaſting righteouſneſs brought in, and their ſalvation fully accompliſhed, things the Apoſtle had ſpoken of in the context: the words will bear to be rendered, exhort one another; that is, not to ſleep, as do others, or indulge themſelves in ſin and ſloth; but to be ſober, and upon their watch and guard, and in a poſture of defence againſt the enemy; to put on the whole armour of God, and particularly the breaſt-plate of faith and love, and for an helmet the hope of ſalvation: and edify one another; by praying together, converſing with each other about the doctrines of the Goſpel, and the dealings of God with their ſouls; abſtaining from all corrupt communication, which has a tendency to hurt each others principles or practices, or to ſtir up wrath and contention; attending only to thoſe things which are for the uſe of edifying, whereby their ſouls might be more and more built upon Chriſt, and their moſt holy faith; and be a riſing edifice, and grow up unto an holy temple in the Lord, and for an habitation of God through the Spirit: even as alſo ye do; which is ſaid in their commendation, and not through flattery, but to encourage them to go on in this way; and from whence it may be obſerved, that mutual conſolation, exhortation, and edification, are things the ſaints ſhould be ſtirred up to frequently, even though they are regarded by them, and much more then ſhould theſe be preſſed upon them, who are careleſs and negligent of them.

Ver. 12. And we beſeech you brethren, &c.] Not in a natural or civil, but ſpiritual relation; and what follows relating to the miniſters of the word, the Apoſtle addreſſes this church on their behalf, not in an imperious and authoritative manner, but by way of intreaty, with great humility and ſtrong affection: know them that labour among you; who were not non-reſidents, but were upon the ſpot with them; and where indeed ſhould paſtors be, but with their flocks? and huſbandmen and vine-dreſſers, but in their fields and vineyards? and ſtewards, but in the families where they are placed? and parents, but with their children? nor were they loiterers in the vineyard, or ſlothful ſervants, and idle ſhepherds, but labourers; who laboured in the word and doctrine; gave up themſelves to meditation, reading, and prayer; laboured hard in private, to find out the meaning of the word of God; and ſtudied to ſhew themſelves workmen, that need not be aſhamed; and preached the word in ſeaſon and out of ſeaſon; faithfully diſpenſed all ordinances, and diligently performed the duties of their office; and were willing to ſpend and be ſpent, for the glory of Chriſt, and the good of ſouls, and earneſtly contended for the faith of the Goſpel; and all this they did, as among them, ſo for them, for their ſpiritual good and welfare: ſome render the words, in you; they laboured in teaching, inſtructing, and admoniſhing them; they laboured to enlighten their underſtandings, to inform their judgments, to raiſe their affections, and to bring their wills to a reſignation to the will of God; to refreſh their memories with Goſpel truths; to ſtrengthen their faith, encourage their hope, and draw out their love to God and Chriſt, and the brethren: and what the Apoſtle directs them to, as their duty towards theſe perſons, is to know them; that is, not to learn their names, and know their perſons, who they were; for they could not but know them in this ſenſe, ſince they dwelt and laboured among them, and were continually employed in inſtructing them; but that they would make themſelves known to them, and converſe freely and familiarly with them, that ſo they might know the ſtate of their ſouls, and be better able to ſpeak a word in ſeaſon to them; and that they would take notice of them, ſhew reſpect to them, and an affection for them; acknowledge them as their paſtors, and account of them as ſtewards of the myſteries of God, and own them as miniſters of Chriſt; and reckon them as bleſſings to them, and acknowledge the ſame with thankfulneſs; and obey them, and ſubmit unto them in the miniſtry of the word and ordinances, and to their counſel and advice, ſo far as is agreeable to the word of God: the Arabic verſion renders it, that ye may know the dignity of them that labour among you; and ſo conduct and behave towards them accordingly: and are over you in the Lord; are ſet in the higheſt place in the church, and bear the higheſt office there; have the preſidence and government in it, and go before the ſaints, and guide and direct them in matters both of doctrine and practice, being enſamples to the flock; the Syriac verſion renders it, and ſtand before you; miniſtring unto you in holy things, being ſervants to you for Jeſus ſake: and this in the Lord; or by the Lord; for they did not take this honour to themſelves, nor were they appointed by men, but they were made able miniſters of the word by God; received their gifts qualifying them for this work from Chriſt, and were placed as overſeers of the church by the Holy Ghoſt: and it was only in things pertaining to the Lord, that they were over them; not in things civil, which diſtinguiſhes them from civil magiſtrates; nor in things ſecular and worldly, they had nothing to do in their families, to preſide there, or with their worldly concerns, only in the church of Chriſt, and in things pertaining to their ſpiritual welfare; and though they were over them, yet under Chriſt, and in ſubjection to him, as their Lord and king; governing not in an arbitrary and tyrannical way, lording it over God's heritage, uſurping a dominion over the faith of men, coining new doctrines, and making new laws; but according to the word of God, and laws of Chriſt, in the fear of the Lord, and with a view to the glory of God, and in love to ſouls: hence the Arabic verſion renders it, in the love of the Lord; the phraſe in the Lord, is omitted in the Syriac verſion: and admoniſh you; or inſtruct you, put into your minds good and wholeſome things, and put you in mind of the doctrines of the Goſpel, of the duties of religion, of former experiences; and give warning of ſin and danger, and reprove and rebuke with faithfulneſs; and as the caſe requires, either in public or private, and with ſharpneſs or tenderneſs.

Ver. 13. And to eſteem them very highly, &c.] Or as the Ethiopic verſion renders it, honour them abundantly; for ſuch are worthy of double honour, and to be had in reputation; they ſhould be honourably thought of, and be high in the affections of the ſaints; and ſhould eſteem them better than themſelves, or others in the community; and ſhould be ſpoke well of, and their characters vindicated, from the reproach and obloquy of others; and ſhould be ſpoke reſpectfully to, and be honourably done by; ſhould be provided for with an honourable maintenance, which is part of the double honour due to them in 1 Tim. v. 17, 18. and this ſhould be in love; not in fear, nor in hypocriſy and diſſimulation; not in word and in tongue only, but from the heart and real affection: the Syriac verſion renders it, that they be eſteemed by you with more abundant love; with an increaſing love, or with greater love than is ſhewn to the brethren in common, or to private members: and that for their works ſake; for the ſake of the work of the miniſtry, which is a good work as well as honourable; is beneficial to the ſouls of men, and is for the glory of God, being diligently and faithfully performed by them; on which account they are to be valued, and not for an empty title without labour. And be at peace among yourſelves. The Vulgate Latin verſion reads, with them; and ſo the Syriac verſion, connecting the former clauſe with this, for their works ſake have peace with them; that is, with the miniſters of the word; don't diſagree with them upon every trivial occaſion, or make them offenders for a word; keep up a good underſtanding, and cultivate love and friendſhip with them; embrace them with brotherly love, as the Ethiopic verſion renders the words, underſtanding them alſo as relating to miniſters; a difference with them is of bad conſequence, and muſt render their miniſtry greatly uſeleſs and unprofitable to thoſe who differ with them, as well as render them very uncomfortable and unfit for it. The Arabic verſion renders it, in yourſelves; as referring to internal peace in their own ſouls, which they ſhould be concerned for; and which only is attained to, enjoyed, and preſerved, by looking to the blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice of Chriſt: or elſe it may regard peace among themſelves, and with one another as brethren, and as members of the ſame church; which as it is for their credit and reputation without doors, and for their comfort, delight, and pleaſure within, in their church-ſtate and fellowſhip, ſo it tends to make the miniſters of the Goſpel more eaſy and comfortable in their work: thus the words conſidered in this ſenſe, have ſtill a relation to them.

Ver. 14. Now we exhort you, brethren, &c.] This is ſaid either to the miniſters of the word that laboured among them, preſided over them, and admoniſhed them; and the rather, becauſe ſome of theſe things here directed to are preſſed upon the members of the church in ver. 11. and which otherwiſe muſt make a repetition here; or to the members in conjunction with their paſtors: warn them that are unruly; or diſorderly, idle perſons, working not all, buſying themſelves with other mens matters, and living upon the churches ſtock, reprove them for their ſloth, exhort them to work with their own hands, to do their own buſineſs, and with quietneſs eat their own bread; or ſuch who keep not their places in the church, but are like ſoldiers that go out of their rank, deſert their companies, and fly from their colours, or ſtart aſide, rebuke theſe, and exhort them to fill up their places, to abide by the church, and the ordinances of Chriſt; or ſuch who are contentious and quarrelſome, turbulent, headſtrong, and unruly, that cauſe and foment animoſities and diviſions, check them, admoniſh them, lay them under cenſure, for ſuch a cuſtom and practice is not to be allowed of in the churches of Chriſt. Comfort the feeble minded; ſuch as are not able to bear the loſs of near and dear relations; are ready to ſtagger under the croſs, and at the reproaches and perſecutions of the world; and are almoſt over-ſet with the temptations of ſatan; and are born down and diſcouraged with the corruptions of their hearts, ſpeak a comfortable word to them, encourage them with the doctrines of grace, and the promiſes of the Goſpel. Support the weak; who are weak in faith and knowledge, ſtrengthen them, hold them up; or, as the Syriac verſion renders it, take the burden of the weak, and carry it, bear their infirmities, as is directed in Rom. xv. 1. be patient towards all men; towards the unruly, the feeble-minded, and the weak, as well as to other chriſtians, that know more, and behave better, and alſo to the men of this world, as well as to believers; give place to wrath, and leave vengeance to him to whom it belongs; exerciſe long-ſuffering and forbearance with fellow-creatures and fellow-chriſtians.

Ver. 15. See that none render evil for evil unto any man, &c.] Not an ill word for an ill word, railing for railing, nor an ill action for an ill action; no, not to any man whatever, not to an enemy, a perſecutor, a prophane perſon, as well as not to a brother, a believer in Chriſt; and this the ſaints ſhould not only be careful of, and guard againſt in themſelves, but ſhould watch over one another, and ſee to it, that no ſuch practice is found in each other. But ever follow that which is good; honeſtly, morally, pleaſantly, and profitably good; even every good work, which is according to the will of God, is done in faith, from love, and to the glory of God; and particularly acts of beneficence and liberality to the poor; and which are not to be once, or now and then done, but to be followed and purſued after, and that always: both among yourſelves, and to all men; not only to the houſhold of faith, tho' to them eſpecially, and in the firſt place, but to all other men, as opportunity offers, even to our enemies, and them that perſecute us, and deſpitefully uſe us; do good to their bodies, and to their ſouls, as much as in you lies, by feeding and clothing the one, and by praying for, adviſing and inſtructing the other.

Ver. 16. Rejoice evermore.] Not in a carnal, but in a ſpiritual way, with joy in the Holy Ghoſt; and which ariſes from a view of pardon by the blood of Chriſt, of juſtification by his righteouſneſs, and atonement by his ſacrifice; not in themſelves, as the wicked man rejoices in his wickedneſs, and the hypocrite and formaliſt in his profeſſion of religion, and the reputation he gains by it; and the Phariſee and legaliſt in his morality, civility, negative holineſs, and obedience to the rituals of the law; for ſuch rejoice in their boaſtings, and all ſuch rejoicing is evil; but in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, in the greatneſs, fitneſs, fulneſs, and glory of his perſon, in his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, in what he is in himſelf, and is made unto his people, and in what he has done, and is ſtill doing for them, and particularly in the ſalvation he has wrought out; and not in the things of this life, and the attainments of it, either of body, or of mind, or of eſtate, as in ſtrength, wiſdom, or riches; but in things ſpiritual, that our names are written in heaven, and we are redeemed by the blood of Chriſt, and called by his grace, and ſhall be glorified together with him; and not only in proſperity, but in adverſity, ſince all things work together for good, and afflictions ſerve for the exerciſe of grace; and eſpecially, ſince to ſuffer reproach and perſecution for the ſake of Chriſt, and his Goſpel, is a great honour, and the Spirit of God, and of glory, reſts on ſuch, and great will be their reward in heaven: and there is always reaſon, and ever a firm ground and foundation for rejoicing with believers, let their circumſtances or their frames be what they will; ſince God, their covenant God, is unchangeable, and his love to them is from everlaſting to everlaſting invariably the ſame; the covenant of grace, which is ordered in all things, and ſure, is firm and immoveable; and Jeſus, the mediator of it, is the ſame to-day, yeſterday, and for ever.

Ver. 17. Pray without ceaſing.] Not that ſaints ſhould be always on their knees, or ever lifting up their hands, and vocally calling upon God; this is not required of them, and would claſh with, and break in upon other parts of religious worſhip, and the duties of civil life, which are to be attended to, as well as this, and beſides would be impracticable; for however willing a ſpiritual man might be to be engaged in this work always, yet the fleſh is weak, and would not be able to bear it; and it requires food and drink, ſleep and reſt, for its refreſhment and ſupport; for all which there muſt be time allowed, as well as for other actions of animal life, and the buſineſs of a man's calling. But the meaning is, that believers ſhould be daily, and often found in the performance of this duty; for as their wants daily return upon them, and they are called to freſh ſervice, and further trials and exerciſes, they have need of more grace, ſtrength, and aſſiſtance, and therefore ſhould daily pray for it; and beſides certain times both in the cloſet, and in the family, in which they ſhould attend the throne of grace, there is ſuch a thing as mental prayer, praying in the heart, private ejaculations of the ſoul, which may be ſent up to heaven, whilſt a man is engaged in the affairs of life. The Ethiopic verſion renders the words, pray frequently; don't leave off praying, or ceaſe from it thro' the prevalence of ſin, the temptations of ſatan, or thro' diſcouragement, becauſe an anſwer is not immediately had, or through careleſſneſs and negligence, but continue in it, and be often at it; ſee Luke xviii. 1—8. Theſe words are oppoſed to the practice of ſuch, who either pray not at all, or having uſed it, have left it off, or who only pray in a time of trouble and diſtreſs, and bear hard on thoſe who think they ſhould not pray but when under the influences of the Spirit, and when his graces are in a lively exerciſe: the reaſon for this rule of praying with frequency and conſtancy, is, becauſe the ſaints are always needy, they are always in want of mercies of one kind or another, and therefore ſhould continually go to the throne of grace, and there aſk for grace and mercy to help them in time of need.

Ver. 18. In every thing give thanks, &c.] That is, to God the Father, in the name of Chriſt; ſee Eph. v. 20. thanks are to be given to him for all things, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; for all temporal good things; for our beings, the preſervation of them; for food and raiment, and all the mercies of life; for the means of grace, the word and ordinances, and the miniſters of the Goſpel; for ſpiritual bleſſings, for electing, redeeming, regenerating, adopting, pardoning, juſtifying, and perſevering grace; for a meetneſs for heaven, a right unto it, and a good hope of it; and eſpecially for Jeſus Chriſt, for ſuch an huſband, ſuch an head, ſuch a ſurety and ſaviour, and advocate with the Father, as he is; and for life, peace, joy, comfort, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation in him: and thanks ſhould be given to God in every circumſtance of life; in adverſity, as Job did; when not in ſo comfortable and agreeable a frame of ſoul as to be wiſhed for, ſince it might be worſe, and is not black deſpair; even under the temptations of ſatan, ſince they might be greater and heavier, and ſince the grace of God is ſufficient to bear up under them, and deliver out of them, and ſince there is ſuch a ſympathizing high-prieſt and ſaviour; and in afflictions of every kind, ſince they are all for good, temporal, or ſpiritual, or eternal. For this is the will of God; which may refer either to all that is ſaid from ver. 11. to this paſſage, or particularly to this of giving thanks; which is the revealed and declared will of God, is a part of that good, perfect, and acceptable will of his, and what is well-pleaſing in his ſight, and grateful to him; ſee Pſ. lxix. 30, 31. and is in Chriſt Jeſus concerning you; either declared in and by him, who has made known the whole of the will of God, and ſo the Arabic verſion, which he wills of you by Jeſus Chriſt; or which is exemplied in Chriſt, who for, and in all things, gave thanks to God, and had his will reſigned to his in every circumſtance of life; or, which being done, is acceptable to God thro' Chriſt. The Alexandrian copy reads, for this is the will of God towards you in Chriſt Jeſus; that is, with reſpect to you who are in Chriſt ſecretly by election, and openly by effectual vocation; and who, of all men in the world, have reaſon to be thankful for every thing, and in every circumſtance.

Ver. 19. Quench not the Spirit.] By which is meant, not the perſon of the Spirit, but either the graces of the Spirit, which may be compared to light, and fire, and heat, to which the alluſion is in the text; ſuch as faith, which is a light in the ſoul, a ſeeing of the Son, and an evidence of things not ſeen; and love, which gives a vehement flame, which many waters cannot quench; and zeal, which is the boiling up of love, the effervency of it; and ſpiritual knowledge, which is alſo light, and of an increaſing nature, and are all graces of the Spirit: and tho' theſe can't be totally extinguiſhed, and utterly put out and loſt, yet they may be greatly damped; the light of faith may become dim; and the flame of love be abated, and that wax cold; the heat of zeal may paſs into lukewarmneſs, and an indifference of ſpirit; and the light of knowledge ſeem to decline inſtead of increaſing; and all thro' indulging ſome ſin or ſins, by keeping ill company, and by neglecting the ordinances of God, prayer, preaching, and other inſtitutions of the Goſpel; wherefore ſuch an exhortation is neceſſary to quicken ſaints, and ſtir them up to the uſe of thoſe means, whereby thoſe graces are cheriſhed and preſerved in their lively exerciſe; though rather the gifts of the Spirit are intended. The extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, beſtowed on the Apoſtles at the day of Pentecoſt, are repreſented under the ſymbol of fire, to which perhaps the Apoſtle may here have reſpect; and the more ordinary gifts of the Spirit are ſuch as are to be ſtirred up, as coals of fire are ſtirred up, in order that they may burn, and ſhine the brighter, and give both light and heat, 2 Tim. i. 6. and which may be ſaid to be quenched, when they are neglected, and lie by as uſeleſs; when they are wrapp'd up in a napkin, or hid in the earth; or when men are reſtrained from the uſe of them; or when the uſe of them is not attended to, or brought into contempt, and the exerciſe of them rendered uſeleſs and unprofitable, as much as in them lies. And even private perſons may quench the Spirit of God, his gifts of light and knowledge, when they hold the truth in unrighteouſneſs, impriſon it, and conceal it, and don't publickly profeſs it as they ought.

Ver. 20. Deſpiſe not propheſyings.] Or prophecies; the prophecies of the Old Teſtament concerning the firſt coming of Chriſt, concerning his perſon, office, and work, his obedience, ſufferings, and death, his reſurrection from the dead, aſcenſion and ſeſſion at God's right hand; for tho' all theſe are fulfilled, yet they have ſtill their uſefulneſs; for by comparing theſe with facts, the perfections of God, his omniſcience, truth, faithfulneſs, wiſdom, &c. are demonſtrated, the authority of the ſcriptures eſtabliſhed, the truths of the Goſpel illuſtrated and confirmed, and faith ſtrengthened; and beſides, there are many prophecies which regard things to be done, and yet to be done under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, and therefore ſhould not be ſet at nought, but highly valued and eſteemed: alſo the predictions of Chriſt concerning his own ſufferings, and death, and reſurrection from the dead, and what would befal his diſciples afterwards, with many things relating to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, his ſecond coming, and the end of the world, theſe ſhould be had in great eſteem; nor ſhould what the Apoſtles foretold concerning the riſe of antichriſt, the man of ſin, and the apoſtacy of the latter days, and the whole book of the Revelations, which is no other than a prophecy of the ſtate of the church, from the times of the Apoſtles to the end of the world, be treated with neglect and contempt, but ſhould be ſeriouſly conſidered, and diligently ſearched and enquired into. Yea, the prophecies of private men, ſuch as Agabus, and others, in the Apoſtle's time, and in later ages, are not to be ſlighted; tho' inſtances of this kind are rare in our times, and things of this nature ſhould not be precipitantly, and without care, given into: but rather propheſyings here intend the explanation of ſcripture, and the preaching of the word, and particularly by perſons who had not the gift of tongues, and therefore men were apt to deſpiſe them; ſee 1 Cor. xiii. 2. and xiv. 1, 3, 4, 5, 24, 31. Juſt as in our days, if perſons have not had a liberal education, and do not underſtand Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, tho' they have miniſterial gifts, and are capable of explaining the word to edification and comfort, yet are ſet at nought and rejected, which ſhould not be.

Ver. 21. Prove all things, &c.] That are ſaid by the prophets, all the doctrines which they deliver; hear them, tho' they have not the gift of tongues, and all deſirable advantages; don't reject them on that account, and refuſe to hear them, for ſo, many uſeful men may be laid aſide, and the Spirit of God in them be quenched; try their gifts, and attend to their doctrines, yet don't implicitly believe every thing they ſay, but examine them according to the word of God, the teſt and ſtandard of truth; ſearch the ſcriptures, whether the things they ſay are true or no. Not openly erroneous perſons, and known hereticks, are to be heard and attended on, but the miniſters of the word, or ſuch who are ſaid to have a gift of propheſying; theſe ſhould make uſe of it, and the church ſhould try and judge their gift, and accordingly encourage or diſcourage; and alſo their doctrines, and if falſe reject them, and if true receive them. Hold faſt that which is good; honeſt, pleaſant, profitable, and agreeable to ſound doctrine, to the analogy of faith, and the ſcriptures of truth, and is uſeful and edifying, inſtructive both as to principle and practice; ſuch ſhould be held faſt, that no man take it away; and be retained, tho' a majority may be againſt it, for the multitude is not always on the ſide of truth; and though it may be rejected by men of learning and wealth, as Chriſt and his doctrines were rejected by the Scribes and Phariſees, and rulers of the people; and tho' it may be reproached as a novel, upſtart notion, or a licentious one, ſince theſe were charges againſt the doctrine of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles; and tho' it may be attended with affliction and perſecution, yet none of theſe things ſhould move from it, or cauſe to let it go.

Ver. 22. Abſtain from all appearance of evil.] Of doctrinal evil. Not only open error and hereſy are to be avoided, but what has any ſhew of it, or looks like it, or carries in it a ſuſpicion of it, or may be an occaſion thereof, or lead unto it; wherefore all new words and phraſes of this kind ſhould be ſhunned, and the form of ſound words held faſt: and ſo of all practical evil, not only from ſin itſelf, and all ſorts of ſin, leſſer or greater, as the [w] Jews have a ſaying, "take care of a light as of a heavy "commandment," that is, take care of committing a leſſer, as a greater ſin, and from the firſt motions of ſin; but from every occaſion of it, and what leads unto it, and has the appearance of it, or may be ſuſpected of others to be ſin, and ſo give offence, and be a matter of ſcandal. The Jews have a ſaying very agreeable to this [x], "remove "thyſelf afar off (or abſtain) from filthineſs, and "from every thing, הדומה לו, that is like unto it."

[w] Pirke Abot, c. 2. §. 1.

[x] Apud Druſium in loc.

Ver. 23. And the very God of peace, &c.] Or the God of peace himſelf. The Apoſtle follows his exhortations with prayer to God, knowing the weakneſs and impotency of the ſaints to receive them, and act according to them, and his own inſufficiency to impreſs their minds with them; and that unleſs the Lord opened their ears to diſcipline, and ſealed inſtruction to them, they would be uſeleſs and in vain: wherefore he applies to the throne of grace, and addreſſes God as the God of peace; ſo called, becauſe of the concern he has in peace and reconciliation made by the blood of Chriſt, and becauſe he is the giver of peace of conſcience, and the author of peace, concord, and unity among the ſaints, and of all happineſs and proſperity, both in this world, and in that which is to come; ſee the note on Rom. xv. 33. And the Apoſtle might chuſe to addreſs God under this character, partly to encourage boldneſs, freedom, and intrepidity at the throne of grace, and partly to raiſe hope, expectation, and faith of having his requeſts anſwered, ſince God is not an angry God, nor is fury in him, but the God of peace: and the petitions he puts up for the Theſſalonians are as follow; and firſt, that God would ſanctify you wholly; or all of you, as the Arabic verſion; or all of you perfectly, as the Syriac verſion. Theſe perſons were ſanctified by the Spirit of God, but not perfectly; the Goſpel was come to them in power, and had wrought effectually in them, and they were turned from idols to ſerve the living God, and had true faith, hope, and love implanted in them, and which they were enabled to exerciſe in a very comfortable and commendable manner; but yet this work of grace and ſanctification begun in them was far from being perfect, nor is it in the beſt of ſaints. There is ſomething lacking in the faith of the greateſt believer, love often waxes cold; and hope is not lively at all times, and knowledge is but in part; ſin dwells in all; the ſaints are poor and needy, their wants continually return upon them, and they need daily ſupplies; the moſt holy and knowing among them diſclaim perfection in themſelves, though deſirous of it. Their ſanctification in Chriſt is perfect, but not in themſelves; there is indeed a perfection of parts in internal ſanctification, every grace is implanted, there is not one wanting; the new creature, or new man, has all its parts, tho' theſe are not come to their full growth; there is not a perfection of degrees, and this is what the Apoſtle prays for; for ſanctification is a progreſſive, gradual work, it is like ſeed caſt into the earth, which ſprings up, firſt the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear, and is as light, which ſhines more and more to the perfect day. Sanctified perſons are firſt as new-born babes, and then they grow up to be young men, and at laſt become fathers in Chriſt; and this work being begun, is carried on, and will be performed, fulfilled, and made perfect: and it is God's work to do it; he begins, and he carries it on, and he will finiſh it; and therefore the Apoſtle prays to him to do it; this is his firſt petition: the ſecond follows, and I pray God your whole ſpirit, ſoul and body, be preſerved blameleſs unto the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. A like diviſion of man is made by the Jews: ſays one of their writers [y], "a man cannot know God, unleſs he "knows, נפשו ונשמתו וגופו, his ſoul, his breath, "or his ſpirit, and his body." Says [z] R. Iſaac, "worthy are the righteous in this world, and in "the world to come, for lo, they are all holy; "their body is holy, their ſoul is holy, their ſpirit, "and their breath is holy." See the note on Heb. iv. 12. Some by ſpirit underſtand the graces and gifts of the Spirit in a regenerate man; and by the ſoul, the ſoul as regenerated, and as it is the ſeat and ſubject of theſe graces; and by the body, the habitation of the ſoul, which is influenced by the grace that is in it; and this is a ſenſe not to be deſpiſed. Others by the ſpirit underſtand the rational and immortal ſoul of man, often called a ſpirit, as in Eccl. xii. 7. and by the ſoul, the animal and ſenſitive ſoul, which man has in common with brutes; ſee Eccl. iii. 21. and by the body, the outward frame of fleſh and blood, and bones; but rather ſpirit and ſoul deſign the ſame immaterial, immortal, and rational ſoul of man, conſidered in its different powers and faculties. The ſpirit may intend the underſtanding, Job xxxii. 8. which is the principal, leading, and governing faculty of the ſoul; and which being enlightened by the Spirit of God, a man knows himſelf, Chriſt Jeſus, and the things of the Spirit, the truths of the Goſpel, and receives and values them. The ſoul may include the will and affections, which are influenced by the underſtanding; and in a regenerate man the will is brought to a reſignation to the will of God, and the affections are ſet upon divine things, and the body is the inſtrument of performing religious and ſpiritual exerciſes: and theſe, the Apoſtle prays may be preſerved blameleſs; not that he thought they could be kept from ſinning entirely in thought, word, or deed; but that they might be preſerved in purity and chaſtity from the groſs enormities of life, and be kept from a total and final falling away, the work of grace be at laſt compleated on the ſoul and ſpirit, and the body be raiſed in incorruption, and glory; and both at the coming of Chriſt be preſented faultleſs, and without blame, without ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing, firſt to himſelf, and then to his Father.

Ver. 24. Faithful is he that calleth you, &c.] Into the fellowſhip of his Son, and to his kingdom and glory, and who continues to do ſo, not only externally by his word, but internally by his ſpirit and grace. Who alſo will do it. Two things the Apoſtle mentions, as the ground of confidence, that the above petitions would be heard and anſwered; that is, that God would wholly ſanctify them, and preſerve the whole of them blameleſs to the coming of Chriſt; and they are the faithfulneſs of God, and the effectual calling of his ſaints. God is faithful to his word, his covenant and promiſes; he has promiſed to ſanctify and cleanſe his people from all their ſins, and to preſerve them ſafe to his kingdom and glory; agreeably the Arabic verſion renders this laſt clauſe, and will execute his promiſe: and effectual vocation, is a ſure pledge of glorification; whom God calls he juſtifies and glorifies; as ſure as he gives grace, he will give glory; and whom he calls to his eternal glory, he will make perfect, ſtabliſh, ſtrengthen, and ſettle. The Complutenſian edition reads, who alſo will make your hope firm; that is, with reſpect to the above things.

Ver. 25. Brethren, pray for us.] Which is added with great beauty and propriety, after the Apoſtle had ſo earneſtly and affectionately prayed for them; and this is directed, not to the paſtors of the church only, but to all the members of it, whom the Apoſtle ſtiles brethren in a ſpiritual relation, as he often does; and of whom he requeſts, that they would pray for him, and the reſt of his fellow-miniſters and labourers in the word, that God would more and more qualify and fit them for their work, aſſiſt in private ſtudies and meditations, give them freedom of thought, liberty of expreſſion, and a door of utterance, and follow their miniſtrations with a divine bleſſing and ſucceſs, and deliver them out of the hands of unreaſonable men; ſee the note on Heb. xiii. 18.

[z] Zohar in Lev. fol. 29. 2.

Ver. 26. Greet all the brethren with an holy kiſs.] In oppoſition to an unchaſte and hypocritical one. His meaning is, that they would ſalute the members of the church in his name, and give his chriſtian love and affections to them. And his view is, to recommend to them brotherly love to each other, and to ſtir them up to the mutual exerciſe of it more and more.

Ver. 27. I charge you by the Lord, &c.] Or I adjure by the Lord; by the Lord Jeſus: it is in the form of an oath, and a very ſolemn one; and ſhows that oaths may be uſed on certain and ſolemn occaſions: that this Epiſtle be read unto all the holy brethren; to all the members of the church, who are called holy, becauſe they were ſanctified or ſet a-part by God the Father in election; and were ſanctified by the blood of Chriſt, or their ſins were expiated, or atoned for by the ſacrifice of Chriſt in redemption; and were ſanctified or made holy by the Spirit of God in regeneration; and were enabled by the grace of God to live holy lives and converſations. Now this Epiſtle being directed only to ſome of the principal members of the church, it may be to one or more of their elders; leſt he or they ſhould be tempted on any account to conceal it, the Apoſtle in a very ſolemn manner adjures, that it be read publickly to the whole church whom it concerned, that all might hear, and learn, and receive ſome advantage from it; from whence we may learn, as is obſerved by many interpreters, that the ſacred ſcriptures, neither one part nor another, nor the whole of them, are to be kept from private chriſtians, but may be read, and heard, and uſed by all.

Ver. 28. The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with you, Amen.] This is the Apoſtle's uſual ſalutation in all his Epiſtles, and the token of the genuineneſs of them, 2 Theſſ. iii. 17, 18. ſee the notes on Rom. xvi. 20. 1 Cor. xv. 23. and 2 Cor. xiii. 14.

The ſubſcription to this Epiſtle is not genuine, which runs thus, The firſt Epiſtle unto the Theſſalonians was written from Athens; whereas it appears from ch. iii. 1, 6. compared with Acts xviii. 1, 5. that it was written from Corinth, and not from Athens; nor are theſe laſt words, from Athens, in Beza's Claromontane copy; though they ſtand in the Syriac and Arabic verſions of the London Polyglot bible, which add, and ſent by Timothy, and in the Alexandrian copy, and Complutenſian edition.

AN EXPOSITION, &c.

The Second Epiſtle of PAUL the Apoſtle to the THESSALONIANS.

THIS ſecond Epiſtle was written, not from Athens, as the ſubſcription teſtifies, nor from Rome, as Athanaſius[a] ſuppoſes; but from Corinth, from whence was ſent the former, and where the Apoſtle and Timothy, and Sylvanus met; and which was ſent about half a year after the other. The deſign of which is to comfort and ſupport the Theſſalonians under the afflictions and perſecutions they endured for the ſake of the Goſpel; and to rectify a miſtake they had gone into, and which might be occaſioned by what the Apoſtle had ſaid in his former Epiſtle, concerning the ſecond coming of Chriſt, as though it was juſt at hand; which might lead them to neglect their worldly buſineſs, and duties of civil life, and give the enemies of the Goſpel an advantage againſt the whole of it as falſe, ſhould not this prove true; as alſo to exhort this church to take notice of diſorderly perſons, ſuch as were idle and buſy bodies, and withdraw from them, and remove them from their communion, as being not only burdenſome to them, but a reproach to their profeſſion.

CHAP. I.

THIS chapter, beſides the inſcription and ſalutation, contains a thankſgiving for the flouriſhing condition in which the graces of the Spirit were in theſe ſaints, and conſolation for them under their ſuffering circumſtances. The inſcription and ſalutation are in ver. 1, 2. and are as uſual: the thankſgiving is in ver. 3. for the growth of their faith, the abounding of their love, and their conſtant patience under perſecutions and afflictions, inſomuch that the Apoſtle alſo gloried of them for theſe things among other churches, ver. 4. and as an encouragement to them to continue patient under ſufferings, he obſerves that this was a token of the righteous judgment of God, and that they were reckoned worthy of his kingdom for which they ſuffered, ver. 5. and of which righteous judgment they might be aſſured, from the nature of God himſelf, whoſe juſtice required a retribution of vengeance to their perſecutors, and reſt to them with the Apoſtles, ver. 6, 7. the time of which reſt and eaſe is pointed at, as that it will be at the coming of Chriſt; which is deſcribed by the place from whence he comes, heaven; by his retinue, his mighty angels; by the manner in which he ſhall come, in flaming fire; and by the vengeance he will execute: the objects of which are alſo deſcribed, by their ignorance of God, and by their diſobedience to the Goſpel of Chriſt; and by the nature of the puniſhment inflicted on them, which will lie in an expulſion from the preſence, power, and glory of God, and in an everlaſting deſtruction of ſoul and body, ver. 7, 8, 9. but as for them, the perſecuted ſaints, and which is mentioned for their comfort, Chriſt ſhall at this day be glorified and admired in them, and by them, ver. 10. wherefore the Apoſtle prays for the perſeverance of them, that the good work of faith might be performed in them, and they enjoy the glory they were called unto; and that Chriſt might be glorified in them, and they in him; not according to their works, but according to the grace of God through him, ver. 11, 12.

Ver. 1. Paul, and Sylvanus, and Timotheus, &c.] See the note on 1 Theſſ. i. 1.

Ver. 2. Grace be unto you, and peace, &c.] See the note on Rom. i. 7.

Ver. 3. We are bound to thank God, &c.] Since all bleſſings temporal and ſpiritual, come from him: and that always; ſeeing he is ever giving out freſh favours, or continuing former ones; and becauſe thoſe, eſpecially which are of a ſpiritual nature, always abide, ſuch as faith and love; which the Apoſtle particularly takes notice of, the members of this church had, and were increaſing in them: for it is not for himſelf, but for them he gives thanks, for you brethren; who were ſo, not in a natural or civil relation, but in a ſpiritual one, being the children of God, and brethren of Chriſt; and to do this for them, he looked upon himſelf with others under an obligation: as it is meet; juſt, proper, and fitting; it not only becomes the perſons who have received mercies from God to be thankful for them; but it is very right for others to join with them in it, and eſpecially the miniſters of the Goſpel, who are bound, and whom it becomes: 'tis agreeable to their office and profeſſion to give God the praiſe and glory of all the grace, and the increaſe of it, which thoſe, who attend their labours, are favoured with, ſince this is not of them, but of God; and it was for an increaſe of grace the Apoſtle here gives thanks, as he judged he was obliged to do, and it was fit he ſhould. Becauſe that your faith groweth exceedingly. Their faith was not a faith of miracles, nor a mere hiſtorical faith, or a counterfeit and temporary one, but the faith of God's elect; which is the evidence of things not ſeen, of an unſeen Chriſt, and the glories of another world; that grace by which a man goes out of himſelf to Chriſt for righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation; by which he is juſtified, and by which he lives on Chriſt, and walks on in him as he has received him. This was theirs; it was not of themſelves, the produce of nature, or the fruit of their natural power and free-will; but it was the gift of God, and of his operation; a fruit of the Spirit of God, and of which Chriſt was the author and finiſher; and was only theirs, as being given unto them, implanted in them, and exerciſed by them under the influence of the Spirit of God, and for their uſe, comfort, and advantage. This was at firſt, but like a grain of muſtard-ſeed very ſmall, but gradually increaſed, and grew exceedingly; and from ſeeing of Chriſt, and looking at him, and which at firſt might be very dim and obſcure, it proceeded to going or coming to him; and which might be in a very feeble manner, and was not without being drawn and led, and great encouragements, many invitations, and large aſſurances; and from thence to a laying hold upon him, tho' it may be but in a trembling way, and not without being called to ſtretch forth the hand of faith, and be no more faithleſs, but believing; and from thence to a leaning and relying on him, truſting in him with all, and for all; and from thence to claiming an intereſt in him, ſaying, my Lord, and my God, which is the full aſſurance of faith; and when it is come to this, it is grown exceedingly, which might be the caſe of theſe Theſſalonians; which the Apoſtle knew by the aboundings of their love, for faith works by love; and by their patience, firmneſs, and reſolution in ſuffering for Chriſt; all which are in proportion to faith, and the growth of it; and for this he gives thanks to God, for faith is a precious thing; and as that itſelf, ſo the increaſe of it is from God, and therefore to him the praiſe belongs: and the charity of every one of you towards each other aboundeth; as their faith in Chriſt, ſo their love to one another was increaſing, and ſhowed itſelf in ſerving one another both in temporals and ſpirituals; and this was not the caſe of a few only, or of the greater part, but of every one of them; which made their communion with one another very comfortable and delightful. For what is more pleaſant than for brethren to dwell together in unity?

[a] Synopſis Sacr. Script. Tom. II. p. 129.

Ver. 4. So that we ourſelves glory in you, &c.] Or of you; for tho' they were the ſubject, concerning which, yet not the object in which they gloried; the Apoſtle elſewhere adviſes not to glory in men, but only in the Lord; nor was this his practice contrary to his advice, for he did not boaſt of theſe perſons with reſpect to their carnal things; he did not glory in their fleſh, nor in their riches, nor wiſdom, nor ſtrength, nor any external gift; he gloried indeed of their graces, and of the exerciſe and increaſe of them; but of theſe not as of themſelves, or as owing to him, and his fellow-miniſters, but as inſtances of the grace of God, and for which he gives thanks to him: and beſides, he did not glory of theſe in the preſence of God, in whoſe preſence none ſhould glory, but in the churches of God; the other churches in Macedonia and Achaia, as Philippi, Beræa, Corinth, &c. he gave thanks to God for them, and gloried of them before men, or among the ſaints, to the glory of the grace of God in them, and in order to ſtir up other churches to an emulation and imitation of them. And the particulars he gloried of them for, were as follow, for your patience and faith in all your perſecutions and tribulations that ye endure; many and ſore were the reproaches, the afflictions, and perſecutions that befel them for the ſake of Chriſt, and their profeſſion of him, and his Goſpel; and which is more or leſs the caſe of every one that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus: and theſe they endured, they bore and ſtood up under, they were not ſhocked, and ſtaggered, and moved from the hope of the Goſpel by them; which ſhows that the truth of grace was in them; for where there is not the root of the matter, when tribulation and affliction ariſe becauſe of the profeſſion of the word, ſuch are offended, ſtumbled, and quickly gone; but theſe ſaints endured their afflictions, and with great patience, without murmuring and repining, and with great conſtancy, firmneſs, and reſolution of mind. They ſtood faſt in the grace and doctrine of faith, and in the profeſſion of both, which they held without wavering, and none of the things they met with could move them from it. The Apoſtle had mentioned their faith before, and he takes notice of it again, becauſe their patience, conſtancy, and perſeverance in ſufferings aroſe from it; for the trying of faith works patience, Jam. i. 3. The Ethiopic verſion leaves out the word faith, but very wrongly.

Ver. 5. Which is a manifeſt token of the righteous judgment of God, &c.] That is, according as ſome think, that God ſhould glorify thoſe that are perſecuted, and puniſh their perſecutors: this ſenſe indeed may ſeem to agree with what follows; but the Apoſtle is ſpeaking not of ſomething future, but of ſomething preſent; not of what God will do hereafter, but of the preſent ſufferings of the ſaints. According to others the ſenſe is, that God's ſuffering affliction and perſecution to befal his own people, as a chaſtiſement of them, that they may not be condemned with the world, is an evidence of his ſtrict juſtice, that he will not ſuffer ſin in any to go unobſerved by him; and is a manifeſt token how ſeverely and righteouſly he will puniſh the wicked hereafter, ſee 1 Pet. iv. 17, 18. But rather the meaning of the words is this, that whereas good men are afflicted and perſecuted in this life, they have now their evil things, and bad men proſper and flouriſh, and have their good things, ſo that juſtice does not ſeem to take place; which ſeeming inequality in providence has been ſometimes the hardening of wicked men, and the ſtaggering of the righteous, which ſhould not be; this is now a manifeſt token, and a clear caſe, that there will be a righteous judgment, in which things will be ſet aright, and juſtice will take place; for God is neither unrighteous nor careleſs, or negligent; and this is obſerved to ſupport the ſaints under their ſufferings, and to animate them to bear them patiently: that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which ye alſo ſuffer; either of the Goſpel, which is ſometimes ſo called, and for which they ſuffered, and ſo judged themſelves worthy of it; as thoſe that put it away from them, and care not to ſuffer the leaſt reproach for it, ſhew themſelves to be unworthy of it, and of eternal life alſo: or of a Goſpel church-ſtate, and a name, and a place in it, for which the people of God likewiſe ſuffer; and thoſe who ſhun reproach and ſufferings for it, are not worthy to have a place, or their names there: or rather of the heavenly glory; for the hope of which ſaints ſuffer much here, whereby their graces are tried, and ſo they are counted worthy, not by way of merit of it, but meetneſs for it; many tribulations are the way, or at leaſt lie in the way to this kingdom. In the ſchool of afflictions the ſaints are trained up for it; and tho' theſe are not worthy to be compared with their future happineſs, yet they work for them an eternal weight of glory; by the means of theſe the graces of the Spirit of God are exerciſed and increaſed, their hearts are weaned from the world; and coming up out of great tribulations, they waſh their garments, and make them white in the blood of the lamb, and are made meet to be partakers of the inheritance with the ſaints in light.

Ver. 6. Seeing it is a righteous thing with God, &c.] That which is righteous in itſelf, is righteous in the ſight of God, but it is not always ſo with men; men may think it a righteous thing that they ſhould be rewarded for perſecuting the followers of Chriſt, ſuppoſing they hereby do God good ſervice; but on the contrary with God, and in his ſight and account, 'tis a righteous thing, or a point of juſtice, to recompenſe tribulation to them that trouble you: perſecution is an affliction, or a trouble to the ſaints; perſecutors trouble them in their minds and bodies, in their perſons and property; they trouble their minds by caſting reflections and reproaches upon them, by ſevere revilings, and cruel mockings, which all are not alike able to bear; and they trouble and afflict their bodies by impriſonment and bonds, by ſcourging and beating, and various cruel and torturing deaths; and they diſturb them in the poſſeſſion of their eſtates, by ſpoiling their goods, and confiſcating them to their own uſe; and it is but according to lex talionis, the law of retaliation, to render tribulation to ſuch troublers of God's Iſrael; and to them it is recompenſed, either in this world, or in the world to come: ſometimes in this world perſecutors are manifeſt inſtances of God's judgments and wrath upon them, as Herod, who ſtretched out his hands to vex certain of the church, killed James the brother of John, and impriſoned Peter, and was ſmitten by the angel of the Lord, and was eaten of worms; and the Jews, who were now the only and the implacable perſecutors of the ſaints, in a ſhort time had the wrath of God come upon them to the uttermoſt, even upon their nation, city, and temple, upon their perſons and property. And if not in this life, 'tis a certain thing that hereafter ſuch ſhall have indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguiſh; they ſhall be caſt into outward darkneſs, into the lake of fire; and the hotteſt place in hell will be their portion, even devouring flames, and everlaſting burnings; and are what is deſigned by tribulations here.

Ver. 7. And to you who are troubled, reſt with us, &c.] This is another branch of the juſtice of God, in rendering to them who are afflicted and perſecuted for righteouſneſs ſake, reſt; a relaxation or reſt from perſecutions, for a while at leaſt; as the churches of Judea, Galilee, and Samaria had, from that perſecution raiſed at the death of Stephen, Acts ix. 31. and as the chriſtians had at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; which tho' it was a day of vengeance to the unbelieving Jews, were times of refreſhing to the ſaints, who were now delivered from their perſecutors: or rather this deſigns a reſt which remains for the ſaints after death in the grave, and at the coming of the Lord, and to all eternity; when they ſhall reſt from all their toil and labour, and be freed from ſin, and all diſquietude by it, and from the temptations of ſatan, and likewiſe from the perſecutions of men; ſee Job iii. 17. And this will be enjoyed in company with the Apoſtles, and other believers; and as it is ſome alleviation to the ſufferings and afflictions of ſaints now, that the ſame are accompliſhed in others, ſo it will enhance the heavenly glory, reſt, and felicity, that they will be partners and ſharers in it with the Apoſtles of Chriſt Jeſus, and have the ſame crown of glory they have; and indeed their company and converſation will be a part of their happineſs. When the Lord Jeſus ſhall be revealed from heaven; then will the juſtice of God take place in both the above branches and inſtances of it, rendering tribulation to perſecutors, and reſt to the perſecuted. Chriſt, ever ſince a cloud received him out of the ſight of the Apoſtles up to heaven, has been, as it were, hid, and has not been ſeen with corporeal eyes by men on earth ever ſince, but by a very few, as Stephen, and the Apoſtle Paul; he has only been ſeen by an eye of faith; at his ſecond coming there will be a revelation of him, and every eye ſhall ſee him: and this revelation of him will be from heaven; thither he was received at his aſcenſion, and there he now is; and here he is received, and will be retained until the end of all things; and from hence the ſaints expect him, and from hence will he deſcend in perſon, and then he'll be revealed, and appear to the view of every one: and that with his mighty angels; which will add to the glory, majeſty, and ſolemnity of that appearance: theſe are called his angels, becauſe he is the creator of them, and the object of their worſhip and adoration, and he is the Lord and head of them, and they are miniſtring ſpirits to him and his; and mighty angels, becauſe they excel all other creatures in ſtrength; a remarkable inſtance of the might and ſtrength of angels is in 2 Kings xix. 35. The words from the original text may be rendered, with the angels of his power; as they are by the Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions; for they will be the miniſters of the power of Chriſt in gathering the elect from the four winds, and all nations, before Chriſt; and in taking out of his kingdom all that offend, and do iniquity; and in ſevering the righteous from the wicked; and in caſting the latter into the furnace of fire. The Syriac verſion reads the words, with the power of his angels.

Ver. 8. In flaming fire, &c.] Which may either refer to Chriſt, who will be revealed from heaven in ſuch a manner; and whoſe coming will be as the lightning, not only ſudden, but glorious, illuſtrious, and viſible; he will be ſeen and eaſily diſcerned; there will be ſuch a light and flaming fire about him, which as it will ſerve to make him viſible, will greatly add to the majeſty of his appearance, and ſtrike terror to his enemies, and burn them up round about; ſee Dan. vii. 7, 9, 10. Pſ. xcvii. 3, 4. or elſe it may refer to the angels, who ſhall deſcend in fiery forms, which is agreeable to their nature, Pſ. civ. 4. and ſo they appeared in the forms of horſes of fire, and chariots of fire, when Elijah was carried up to heaven. And it is a tradition of the Jews [z], that the angel Gabriel deſcended, בשלהובא דאשא, in a flame of fire to burn Moſes, as he was in the inn, when upon his journey from Midian to Egypt: or this clauſe may be read in conſtruction with the following, as it is in the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions, in flaming fire taking vengeance; and ſo expreſſes the manner in which vengeance will be taken on the wicked by Chriſt, the judge of all, to whom it belongs: and the puniſhment of ungodly men is often ſignified by fire, and flames of fire, by the fire of hell, and a lake which burns with fire and brimſtone, by a furnace of fire, everlaſting fire, and fire that cannot be quenched, to ſet forth the endleſs torture, and inconceivable miſery of the damned; and it may be, ſome regard is had to the general conflagration, which will be at the coming of Chriſt, when the heavens, being on fire, ſhall be diſſolved, the elements ſhall melt with fervent heat, and the earth, and all that is in it, ſhall be burnt up, when the bodies of the wicked, then living, will be conſumed in flames of fire, and their ſouls feel the wrath of the Almighty. The perſons who will then be puniſhed, and on whom vengeance will be taken, are deſcribed as follows, on them that know not God; which is a periphraſis, or common character of the Gentiles, 1 Ep. iv. 5. who know not the one, true, and living God; or know him not ſo as to glorify him as God, and be thankful to him for the mercies they receive from him, and ſtill leſs know him in Chriſt Jeſus; which ignorance of theirs is not without ſin, nor will it excuſe from puniſhment; for tho' vengeance will not be taken on them, becauſe they have not a ſpiritual, ſaving knowledge of God, in the mediator Jeſus Chriſt, who never was revealed to them; yet foraſmuch as they had the light and law of nature, by which the being of God, and the inviſible perfections of his nature might be ſeen and underſtood, and much of his will, with reſpect to moral good and evil, be known, againſt both which they have rebelled, and having ſinned, will periſh without law: tho' it may alſo include all ſuch perſons, who having been favoured with an external revelation, have profeſſed to know God, and yet in works have denied him: and that obey not the Goſpel of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; of which Chriſt is the author, was the preacher, and is the ſum and ſubſtance; which is good news and glad tidings of the grace of God, of peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation by Chriſt; which may be ſaid to be obeyed, when it is received and embraced by faith, with and from the heart, and confeſſion is made of it with the mouth, and the ordinances of it are ſubmitted to; and which is called the obedience of faith, becauſe faith without obedience is not right, and obedience without faith is of no avail: but all that hear the Goſpel do not obey it; there are ſome that diſbelieve and reject the doctrines and ordinances of it, and others that do profeſs it, and do not yield a cordial and chearful obedience to it; both may be reckoned among the diſobeyers of it: and tho' the unbelieving Jews may be chiefly deſigned here, yet deiſts of every age and place, where the Goſpel-revelation has come, and carnal profeſſors, and prophane deſpiſers every where, may be included; whoſe condemnation will be aggravated by the external light which has ſhone around them, and they have hated; the ſevereſt puniſhment will be inflicted on them; it will be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon, Sodom and Gomorrha, than for ſuch perſons; ſee 1 Pet. iv. 17.

Ver. 9. Who ſhall be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction, &c.] With deſtruction both of ſoul and body, though not with the annihilation of either; their gnawing worm of conſcience will never die, and the fire of divine wrath will never be quenched; the ſmoke of their torment will aſcend for ever. Sin being committed againſt an infinite and eternal being, will be infinite in its duration; nor will it ceaſe to be in the perſons puniſhed, who will not be in the leaſt reformed or purged from ſin by puniſhment; which will make the continuance of it juſt and neceſſary. And theſe will be driven from the preſence of the Lord; as the former clauſe may expreſs the puniſhment of ſenſe the wicked will feel in their own breaſts, this may intend the puniſhment of loſs; or what they will be deprived of, the preſence of the Lord, in which the happineſs of angels, and of glorified ſaints lies; and may alſo ſignify how ſudden and terrible their deſtruction will be. As ſoon as the Lord appears, they'll periſh at his preſence like wax before the fire; and ſo awful will be his appearance, they'll flee from it with the utmoſt terror, and call to the rocks and mountains to hide them from the face of the Lord, and to ſkreen them from his wrath: and from the glory of his power; or his glorious power, in which he ſhall come, and which will be exerted, and ſhewn in raiſing the dead, and gathering all nations before him, in paſſing ſentence on them, and in executing it. For he has power, as to ſave, ſo to deſtroy, as to glorify the bodies and ſouls of his ſaints, ſo to deſtroy the wicked, both body and ſoul, in hell; and the glory of his power will be ſeen in the one, as well as in the other. And now it will be, that tribulation will be rendered to the troublers of the Lord's people.

Ver. 10. When he ſhall come to be glorified in his ſaints, &c.] Or by them who are ſet apart for holineſs and happineſs by God the Father; whoſe ſins are expiated by the blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt; to whom he is made ſanctification; and who are ſanctified by the Spirit and grace of God; and in whom Chriſt has a peculiar intereſt, thro' his Father's gift, his own purchaſe, and the power of his grace: and when he comes a ſecond time he'll be glorified in theſe perſons; he'll appear glorious to them; he'll come in his own glory both as God and man; and in his Father's glory, authority, and majeſty, conferred on him as the judge of the whole earth; and with the glory of his angels, who will accompany him. And he will alſo beſtow a glory on them; their ſouls will be endowed with perfect knowledge and holineſs; and their bodies will be made like to his glorious body; and both will ſhine like the ſun in the kingdom of their Father; and this glory on the members of Chriſt will redound to the glory of him their head. And as he will then, in the moſt full and clear manner, diſplay the glory of his perſon and perfections, of his wiſdom, power, faithfulneſs, and goodneſs, ſet off the glory of his offices, and the adminiſtration of them, and open the riches both of his grace and glory to them; ſo they will in return aſcribe honour, praiſe, and glory to him, and give him the glory of their ſalvation to all eternity: and to be admired in all them that believe; who are the ſame with the ſaints; theſe are convertible terms; for no man can be a ſaint, unleſs he is a believer in Chriſt, let him make what pretenſions to holineſs he will; and no man can be a true believer in Chriſt, unleſs he is a ſaint; for true faith works by love, and in a way of holineſs; and in thoſe, or by thoſe that are ſanctified by faith in him, will he be admired when he appears a ſecond time. He is admired by them now; he is with them the chiefeſt among ten thouſands, and altogether lovely: they wonder at the glory and beauty of his perſon, and the fulneſs of his grace; and are amazed that ſuch as they are, ſhould be admitted to communion with him; and how much more will they wonder, when they ſhall ſee him as he is? and he'll be admired by others on the account of them, when they ſhall ſee thoſe that they have deſpiſed, and perſecuted, and accounted as the filth of the world, and the offſcouring of all things, received into the arms of Jeſus with all the expreſſions of tenderneſs and love; placed at his right hand, and ſet down with him on his throne, clothed with white robes, and crowns on their head, and palms in their hands: and he himſelf will be admired with them, when they ſhall ſee him whom they took to be a mere man, and who was a man of ſorrows, and acquainted with griefs, and was loaded with reproach and ignominy, and at laſt ſuffered a ſhameful death, coming in the clouds of heaven in power and great glory as the judge of quick and dead; thus will he be admired by them, in them, and with them. (Becauſe our teſtimony among you was believed) in that day; the phraſe, in that day, belongs to all that goes before, as that Chriſt ſhall take vengeance on wicked men, and they ſhall be puniſhed by him, and he ſhall be glorified and admired in and by his people in that day, when he ſhall be revealed from heaven, and come to judge both quick and dead. Though ſome verſions read it in conſtruction with the clauſe immediately preceding, becauſe our teſtimony among you was believed in that day; or concerning that day; that is, you gave credit to the teſtimony we bore, when among you, concerning this illuſtrious day of the Lord; or our teſtimony, the miniſtry of the word by us, in which we bore a teſtimony to the perſon and grace of Chriſt, to his firſt, and to his ſecond coming, was received and embraced by you with a view to this day, and to the enjoyment of the glory of it. The Arabic verſion renders it, for our teſtimony will be true in that day; that is, it will appear to be ſo, every thing we have ſaid will be accompliſhed then. The Syriac verſion is very remote, that our teſtimony concerning you may be believed in that day: but it is beſt to read this clauſe in a parentheſis, as in our verſion; which is an application of what is ſaid to the Theſſalonians, who might conclude, that ſince they had embraced the teſtimony of the Lord Jeſus, born unto him by his Apoſtles, they would be found among the number of the ſaints and believers, in whom Chriſt would be glorified and admired; the conſideration of which might animate and encourage them to endure afflictions and perſecutions with patience, and to hold out to the end, and at laſt enjoy the heavenly glory, for which the Apoſtle next prays.

[z] Zohar in Gen. fol. 63. 2.

Ver. 11. Wherefore alſo we pray always for you, &c.] Not only obſerve the above things to your comfort, to ſupport you under ſufferings, but we add our prayers, and not only now, but always, that you may be among them in whom Chriſt will be glorified and admired; in order to which we moſt ſincerely pray, that our God would count you worthy of this calling. The Syriac verſion reads, your calling, as in 1 Cor. i. 26. The Vulgate Latin reads, his own calling, meaning their effectual calling. This is indeed of God, and not of man; and is owing, not to any previous worthineſs in man, as appears from the inſtances of Matthew the publican, Zaccheus, the Apoſtle Paul, the Corinthians, and others, but entirely to the free grace of God, who counts them worthy, not for any worthineſs there is in them; but vouchſafes, as the word may be rendered, this bleſſing of grace, their effectual vocation, of his own good-will and pleaſure: but this cannot be meant here, becauſe theſe perſons were partakers of that grace, God had called them to his kingdom and glory; unleſs the ſenſe of the petition is, that God would cauſe them to walk worthy of the vocation with which they were called, which becoming walk is owing to the grace of God: or elſe the meaning may be, that God would grant unto them perſeverance in the grace, by and to which they were called, that ſo they might enjoy eternal glory; which tho' certain, ſhould be prayed for by ſaints, both for themſelves and others: the words may be rendered, that our God would count you worthy of the call; of the call of Chriſt when he ſhall be revealed from heaven, and come a ſecond time; for then will he firſt call the ſaints out of their graves, as he did Lazarus, and they ſhall hear his all-powerful voice, and come forth to the reſurrection of life, the firſt and better reſurrection, which thoſe that have part in will be ſecure from the ſecond death; this the Apoſtle was deſirous of attaining to himſelf, and prays that God would vouchſafe it to others; of this Job ſpeaks in ch. xiv. 15. And next Chriſt will call the righteous, when raiſed and ſet at his right hand, to inherit the kingdom and glory prepared by his Father for them; and happy are thoſe who by the grace of God will be counted worthy of this call! or rather by calling here is meant, the ultimate glory itſelf, which the ſaints are called unto; this God gives a right unto in the juſtifying righteouſneſs of his Son, and makes meet for by his own grace; and the thing itſelf is a free-grace gift of his thro' Jeſus Chriſt. In this ſenſe calling ſeems to be uſed in Eph. iv. 4. and to this agrees the Ethiopic verſion here, that God may impart unto you that to which he hath called you; and that is eternal glory, which tho' certainly and inſeparably connected with effectual vocation, may, and ſhould be prayed for: and fulfil all the good pleaſure of his goodneſs; not providential, but ſpecial goodneſs; not the good pleaſure of his ſtrict juſtice in the condemning of the wicked, denying his grace to them, and hiding from them the myſteries of the kingdom of heaven, which is a part of his good pleaſure, even of the good pleaſure of his righteouſneſs; but this is the good pleaſure of his grace and kindneſs in Chriſt Jeſus, and intends the whole of his gracious deſigns towards his people: and to expreſs the free, rich, ſovereign grace of God in them, the Apoſtle uſes a variety of words, calling them his pleaſure, his good pleaſure; and, as if this was not enough, the good pleaſure of his goodneſs; and deſires that all of it might be fulfilled; it conſiſting of many things, ſome of which were fulfilled, and others remained to be fulfilled. It conſiſts of the choice of perſons in Chriſt, and the predeſtination of them to the adoption of children, which is according to the good pleaſure of the will of God; the redemption of them by Chriſt, in which are diſplayed the exceeding riches of his grace; the free juſtification of them by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; the full pardon of all their ſins, and their adoption into the houſhold of God, and their regeneration, of rich grace, and abundant mercy; all theſe inſtances of the good pleaſure of divine goodneſs were fulfilled in theſe perſons; what remained were the carrying on and finiſhing the work of grace upon their ſouls, and their enjoyment of the heavenly glory: and for the former in order to the latter, the Apoſtle prays in the next clauſe, and the work of faith with power; faith is not only an operative grace, ſee the note on 1 Ep. i. 3. and is attended with good works; but it is a work itſelf, not of man's, for he cannot produce it in himſelf, nor exerciſe it of himſelf; but it is the work of God, of his operation which he works in his people; it has not only God for its object, and therefore the Arabic verſion reads, the work of faith on him; but it has God for its author: and this now, tho' it had growed exceedingly in theſe believers, was not as yet fulfilled or perfect; ſomething was ſtill lacking in it; wherefore the Apoſtle prays that he who was the author would be the finiſher of it: and this will be done with power; not of man's, for this work is neither begun, nor carried on, nor will it be finiſhed by the might and power of men; but the ſame hands which laid the foundation of it, raiſe it up, carry it on, and give the finiſhing ſtroke to it: it is done by the power of God, and ſo the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions read, by his own power; which is greatly diſplayed in the production of faith at firſt; for a poor ſenſible ſinner in a view of all his ſins, and the juſt deſerts of them to venture his ſoul on Chriſt alone for ſalvation; for a man to go out of himſelf and renounce his own righteouſneſs, and truſt to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt for his juſtification before God, and acceptance with him, is owing to the exceeding greatneſs of God's power to them that believe; and the ſame power is ſeen in enabling faith to do the things it does; ſee Heb. xi. and in encouraging, ſupporting, and maintaining it under the moſt difficult circumſtances, as in the caſe of Abraham; and to make it ſtand faſt under the ſevereſt perſecutions, and at the hour of death, and in the view of an awful eternity, when it receives its full completion.

Ver. 12. That the name of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt may be glorified in you, &c.] This is the end of the Apoſtle's prayer, and which is anſwered by the fulfilment of the things prayed for; as the name of Chriſt and his Goſpel are diſhonoured, by the unbelief, cowardice, and the unworthy walk of profeſſors; ſo they are glorified in and by the ſaints, by their faith, patience, and good works in this world; which not only themſelves adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour, but cauſe others to glorify him likewiſe; and Chriſt will be glorified in them hereafter, by the glory which will be conferred upon them, and which will reflect glory upon him; when all the gracious deſigns of God are accompliſhed on them, and the work of faith is finiſhed in them; for ſhould not theſe be compleated, Chriſt would loſe the glory of redemption and ſalvation, which by means of theſe will be given by the ſaints to him to all eternity: and ye in him; that is, that ye may be glorified; the ſaints are now glorified in him as their head and repreſentative, being raiſed together and made to ſit together in heavenly places in him; and when the work of grace is finiſhed upon their ſouls, they will be glorified together with him and by him; and in the reſurrection morn ſhall appear in glory with him both in ſoul and body, and ſhall be made like him, and everlaſtingly enjoy him and ſee him as he is; the Alexandrian copy reads, and us in him: and all this will be as it is wiſhed for, according to the grace of our God, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; according to the grace and free favour of God in election, and of Jeſus Chriſt in redemption, and of the bleſſed Spirit in ſanctification; for election, redemption, vocation, juſtification, pardon, adoption, and the whole of ſalvation from firſt to laſt are of grace and not of works; and according to this, all theſe things muſt be prayed for the application of, and muſt be expected only on ſuch a foot; and to this muſt all be aſcribed, the glory of which is the ultimate end of God, in all he has done, does, or will do for his people.

CHAP. II.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle guards againſt a notion, as if the ſecond coming of Chriſt was at hand; declares, that previous to it, there muſt be a great apoſtacy, and a revelation of anti-chriſt; comforts the ſaints againſt fears of being included in this defection; exhorts them to ſtand faſt in the faith, and cloſes this chapter with petitions for them. He intreats them in a moſt tender and ſolemn manner, not to imagine that the day of Chriſt was at hand, and that they would not be diſturbed and moved at it; and points unto the ſeveral ways and cautions againſt them, they might be impoſed upon and deceived by men with reſpect to it, ver. 1, 2. and aſſigns his reaſons why it could not be yet, becauſe before this time there was to be a general apoſtacy, and antichriſt muſt appear; whom from his character, he calls the man of ſin, and from his end, the ſon of perdition; and deſcribes him as an oppoſer of God, an exalter of himſelf above all that is called God, as ſitting in the temple of God and declaring himſelf to be God, ver. 3, 4. of which things he had told them before, ver. 5. nor were they ignorant of what at preſent hindered the revelation of the man of ſin, who was then in being, and was working and growing up apace; only there was ſomething (the Roman empire) which hindred, and would continue to do ſo, until the fixed time of his revelation was up, ver. 6, 7. when he ſhould be manifeſt; tho' he ſhould not always continue, being to be conſumed and deſtroyed by the breath of Chriſt's mouth, and the ſplendor of his coming, ver. 8. and the appearance of antichriſt in the world, being a matter of conſiderable importance, it is deſcribed by being after the working of ſatan, and as attended with lying and falſe miracles, and with all deceitful and unrighteous doctrines and practices; which reprobate men would be left to give into, as a puniſhment of their not receiving cordially the truth of the Goſpel; upon which account God would give them to ſuch judicial blindneſs, as to give credit to a lye, which would bring on their final damnation, they not believing the truth, but taking pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs, ver. 9, 10, 11, 12. but leſt this account of things ſhould be diſcouraging to the ſaints at Theſſalonica, the Apoſtle ſtiles them brethren; aſſerts them to be the beloved of the Lord; gives an inſtance of it, for which he gives thanks, namely, their election of God; the date of which was from everlaſting; the means ſanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth; the end ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt; and the evidence of which was their effectual vocation by the Goſpel, to the obtaining of the glory of Chriſt, ver. 13, 14. and then he exhorts them to ſtand faſt in the doctrines that had been taught them, either in an epiſtolary way, or by the miniſtry of the word, ver. 15. and concludes the chapter with petitions for them made to God the Father, and to Chriſt who had loved and comforted them, and given them good hope of everlaſting things; that they might be comforted more and more, and be eſtabliſhed in every good doctrine and practice, ver. 16, 17.

Ver. 1. Now we beſeech you, brethren, &c.] The Apoſtle having finiſhed his firſt deſign in this epiſtle, which was to encourage the ſaints to patience under ſufferings, proceeds to another view he had in writing it, and that is to ſet the doctrine of Chriſt's coming, as to the time of it, in its proper light; and this is occaſioned by what he had ſaid concerning it in the former epiſtle, which was either miſunderſtood or miſrepreſented; and as he addreſſes the ſaints with a very affectionate appellation as his brethren, ſo by way of intreaty beſeeching, and yet in a very ſolemn manner: by the coming of our Lord Jeſus; which is to be underſtood not of the coming of Chriſt in the fleſh, to procure the ſalvation of his people; nor of his coming in his kingdom and power to take vengeance on the Jewiſh nation, for their rejection of him as the Meſſiah; but of his coming to judge the quick and dead, than which nothing is more ſure and certain, being affirmed by angels and men, by prophets and Apoſtles, and by Chriſt himſelf, or more deſirable by the ſaints; wherefore the Apoſtle intreats them by it, that whereas they believed it, expected it, and wiſhed for it, they would regard what he was about to ſay: ſo that the words tho' an intreaty, are in the form of an adjuration; unleſs they ſhould be rendered as in the Ethiopic verſion, as they may, concerning the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and ſo expreſs the ſubject matter of the diſcourſe now entring upon, with what follows: and by our gathering together unto him; which regards not the great gatherings of the people to Chriſt the true Shiloh upon his firſt coming, and the preaching of the Goſpel to both Jews and Gentiles, when there were not only great flockings to hear it, but multitudes were converted by it; nor the greater gatherings there will be in the latter day, at the time of the converſion of the Jews, and when the fulneſs of the Gentiles ſhall be brought in; nor the converſion of particular perſons, who are gathered in to Chriſt and received by him one by one; nor the aſſembling of the ſaints together for publick worſhip, in which ſenſe the word is uſed in Heb. x. 25. but the gathering together of all the ſaints at the laſt day, at the ſecond coming of Chriſt; for he will come with ten thouſand of his ſaints, yea, with all his ſaints, when their dead bodies ſhall be raiſed and re-united to their ſouls, and they with the living ſaints will be caught up into the air, to meet the Lord there and be ever with him; when they will make up, compleat and perfect, the general aſſembly and church of the firſt-born, whoſe names are written in heaven: this will be the gathering together of all the elect of God; and ſo the Arabic verſion reads, the gathering of us all; and which as it is certain, is greatly to be deſired; it will be a happy meeting and a glorious ſight; by this the Apoſtle intreats and adjures them to regard what follows,

Ver. 2. That ye be not ſoon ſhaken in mind, &c.] Or from your mind or ſenſe, as the Vulgate Latin verſion; or from the ſolidity of ſenſe, as the Arabic verſion; that is, from what they had received in their minds, and was their ſenſe and judgment, and which they had embraced as articles of faith; that they would not be like a wave of the ſea toſſed to and fro with every wind of doctrine; or be moved from the hope of the Goſpel, from any fundamental article of it, and from that which reſpects the ſecond coming of Chriſt particularly; and eſpecially, that they would not be quickly and eaſily moved from it; ſee Gal. i. 6. or be troubled; thrown into conſternation and ſurprize, for tho' the coming of Chriſt will not be terrible to ſaints, as it will be to ſinners; yet there is ſomething in it that is awful and ſolemn, and fills with concern; and to be told of it as at that inſtant might be ſurprizing and ſhocking: the ſeveral ways in which their minds might be troubled and diſtreſſed with ſuch an account, are enumerated by the Apoſtle that they might guard againſt them, and not be impoſed upon by them: neither by ſpirit; by a prophetic ſpirit, by pretenſions to a revelation from the Spirit, fixing the preciſe time of Chriſt's coming, which ſhould not be heeded or attended to; ſince his coming will be as a thief in the night: nor by word; by reaſon and a ſhew of it, by arguments drawn from it, which may carry in them a ſhew of probability; by enticing words of man's wiſdom; by arithmetical or aſtronomical calculations; or by pretenſions to a word, a tradition of Chriſt or his Apoſtles, as if they had received it viva voce, by word of mouth from any of them: nor by letter, as from us; by forging a letter and counterfeiting their hands, for ſuch practices began to be uſed very early; ſpurious epiſtles of the Apoſtle Paul were carried about, which obliged him to take a method whereby his genuine letters might be known; ſee chap. iii. 17, 18. or he may have reſpect in this clauſe to his former epiſtle, wherein he had ſaid ſome things concerning the coming of Chriſt, which had been either wrongly repreſented, or not underſtood; and as if his ſenſe was, that it would be whilſt he and others then living were alive and on the ſpot: wherefore he would not have them, neither give heed to any enthuſiaſtic ſpirits, nor to any plauſible reaſonings of men, or unwritten traditions; nor to any letters in his name, or in the name of any of the Apoſtles; nor even to his former letter to them, as tho' it contained any ſuch thing in it, as that the day of Chriſt is at hand; or is at this inſtant juſt now coming on; as if it would be within that year, in ſome certain month, and on ſome certain day in it; which notion the Apoſtle would have them by no means give into, for theſe reaſons, becauſe ſhould Chriſt not come, as there was no reaſon to believe he would in ſo ſhort a time, they would be tempted to diſbelieve his coming at all, at leaſt, be very indifferent about it; and ſince if it did not prove true, they might be led to conclude there was nothing true in the chriſtian doctrine and religion; and beſides, ſuch a notion of the ſpeedy coming of Chriſt, would tend to indulge the idle and diſorderly perſons among them in their ſloth and negligence: and now for theſe, and for the weighty reaſons he gives in the next verſe, he diſſuades them from imbibing ſuch a tenet; for tho' the coming of Chriſt is ſometimes ſaid to be drawing nigh, and to be quickly, yet ſo it might be, and not at that inſtant; beſides, ſuch expreſſions are uſed with reſpect to God, with whom a thouſand years are as one day, and one day as a thouſand years; and becauſe the Goſpel-times or times of the Meſſiah, are the laſt days, there will be no other diſpenſation of things until the ſecond coming of Chriſt; and chiefly they are uſed to keep up the faith, and awaken the hope and expectation of the ſaints with reſpect to it. The Alexandrian copy and ſome others, read, the day of the Lord; and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion; and accordingly the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions, the day of our Lord.

Ver. 3. Let no man deceive you by any means, &c.] By any of the above means; by pretending to a revelation from the ſpirit; or to have had it from the mouth of any one of the Apoſtles; or to have a letter as from them, declaring the day of Chriſt to be inſtant; or by any other means whatever; don't be impoſed upon by them for the following reaſons, for there were things to be done before the coming of Chriſt, which were not then done, and which required time: for that day ſhall not come, except there come a falling away firſt; either in a political ſenſe, of the nations from the Roman empire, which was divided into the eaſtern and weſtern empire; for which, way was made by tranſlating the ſeat of empire from Rome to Byzantium or Conſtantinople; the former of theſe empires was ſeized by Mahomet, and ſtill poſſeſſed by the Turks; and the latter was over-run by the Goths, Huns, and Vandals, and torn to pieces; Italy particularly was ravaged by them, and Rome itſelf was ſacked and taken: or rather in a religious ſenſe, of the falling of men from the faith of the Goſpel, from the purity of Goſpel-doctrines, diſcipline, worſhip, and ordinances; and this not of ſome Jews who profeſſed faith in Chriſt, and departed from it, or of ſome chriſtians who went off to the Gnoſticks; but is to be underſtood of a more general defection in the times of the papacy; when not only the eaſtern churches were perverted and corrupted by Mahomet, and drawn off to his religion, but the weſtern churches were moſt ſadly depraved by the man of ſin, by bringing in errors of all ſorts in doctrine, making innovations in every ordinance, and appointing new ones, and introducing both judaiſm and paganiſm into the churches; which general defection continued until the times of the reformation, and is what the Apoſtle has reſpect to in 1 Tim. iv. 1, 2, 3. where he manifeſtly points out ſome of the popiſh tenets, as forbidding marriage to prieſts, and ordering abſtinence from meats on certain days, and at certain times of the year: this was one thing that was to precede the coming of Chriſt, another follows, which ſhould take place at the ſame time; and that man of ſin be revealed; who was now hid, tho' ſecretly working; by whom is meant not any particular perſon or individual; not the devil, for tho' he is the wicked one, a damned ſpirit, an oppoſer, an adverſary of God and Chriſt, and his people, and who has affected deity, and ſought to be worſhipped, and even by Chriſt himſelf; yet the man of ſin is here diſtinguiſhed from ſatan, ver. 9. nor is any particular emperor of Rome intended, as Caius Caligula, or Nero, for tho' theſe were monſters of iniquity, and ſet up themſelves as Gods, yet they ſat not in the temple of God; nor is Simon Magus deſigned, who was a very wicked man, a ſorcerer, and who gave out himſelf to be ſome great one, and was called the great power of God, before his profeſſion of faith in Chriſt; and afterwards affirmed that he was God, the father in Samaria, the ſon in Judea, and the ſpirit in the reſt of the nations of the world; and becauſe of his ſigns and lying wonders, had a ſtatue erected by the Roman emperor with this inſcription, to Simon the holy God; but then this wicked man was now already revealed: nor is this to be underſtood of a certain Jew, that is to be begotten by the devil on a virgin of the tribe of Dan, and who is to reign three years and a half, and then to be deſtroyed by Chriſt, which is a fable of the Papiſts; but a ſucceſſion of men is here meant, as a king is uſed ſometimes for an order and ſucceſſion of kings, Deut. xvii. 18. and an high-prieſt, for that whole order from Aaron's time to the diſſolution of it, Heb. ix. 7. ſo here it intends the whole hierarchy of Rome, monks, friars, prieſts, biſhops, archbiſhops, cardinals, and eſpecially popes, who may well be called the man of ſin, becauſe notoriouſly ſinful; not only ſinners, but ſin itſelf, a ſink of ſin, monſters of iniquity, ſpiritual wickedneſſes in high places: it is not eaſy to reckon up their impieties, their adulteries, inceſt, ſodomy, rapine, murder, avarice, ſimony, perjury, lying, necromancy, familiarity with the devil, idolatry, witchcraft, and what not; and not only have they been guilty of the moſt notorious crimes themſelves, but have been the patrons and encouragers of others in ſin; by diſpenſing with the laws of God and man, by making ſins to be venial, by granting indulgences and pardon for the worſt of crimes, by licenſing brothel-houſes, and countenancing all manner of wickedneſs; and therefore it is no wonder to hear of the following epithet, the ſon of perdition; ſince theſe are not only the Apollyon, the king of the bottomleſs pit, the deſtroyer, the cauſe of the perdition of thouſands of ſouls, for the ſouls of men are their wares; but becauſe they are by the righteous judgment of God appointed and conſigned to everlaſting deſtruction; the devil, the beaſt, and the falſe prophet will have their portion together in the lake that burns with fire, Rev. xx. 10. the ſame character as here is given of Judas the betrayer of Chriſt, John xvii. 12.

Ver. 4. Who oppoſeth, &c.] Or is an oppoſer, an adverſary of Chriſt, the antichriſt; who oppoſes him in his kingly office, ſtiling himſelf the head and ſpouſe of the church, aſſuming to himſelf all power in heaven and in earth, taking upon him to diſpenſe with the laws of Chriſt, and to make new ones; who oppoſes him in his prieſtly office, by pretending to offer him up again in the ſacrifice of the maſs, and by making angels and ſaints departed, interceſſors and advocates; and alſo in his prophetic office, by teaching for doctrines the commandments of men, and ſetting up unwritten traditions before the word of God, requiring the worſhipping of images, angels and ſaints, when Chriſt requires that the Lord God only ſhould be worſhipped and ſerved; and by introducing the doctrine of works and of merit inſtead of grace, and with a multitude of other things, in which he moſt manifeſtly appears to be diametrically oppoſite and contrary to Chriſt: and exalteth himſelf above all that is called God, or that is worſhipped. The Syriac verſion renders the laſt clauſe, ודחלא, and religion; and the Greek word does ſignify religion, worſhip, or devotion, as it is tranſlated in Acts xvii. 23. but here the act of worſhip is put for the object, and is rightly rendred, or that which is worſhipped; as it is in the Vulgate Latin verſion, and in the Arabic verſion, or that which is to be worſhipped; and it was uſual with the Jews to call God the object of worſhip, by the name of worſhip itſelf, and by which they uſed to ſwear: it is ſaid [c] of R. Benjamin the juſt, that he was appointed over the alms cheſt; one time a woman came to him and said, Rabbi, relieve me, he replied to her העבודה, by the worſhip; (that is by God who is worſhipped) there is nothing in the alms cheſt: and elſewhere [d] it is ſaid by one, concerning two that were fatherleſs, for whom the collectors of alms gathered, העבודה, by the worſhip, they go before my daughter: and a little after, העבודה, by the worſhip, theſe things are holy to thee; where the Gloſs ſays, it is an oath: and ſo here the word is to be underſtood of deity itſelf; and the meaning is, that antichriſt would exalt himſelf above all the Gods of the Gentiles, who are only nominally, and not by nature Gods; to theſe were aſcribed, ſome one thing, to ſome another; one had the government of heaven, another of hell, another of the ſeas, and another of the winds, &c. but this haughty creature antichriſt, aſſumes to himſelf all power, both in heaven, earth, and hell. Angels are ſometimes called Gods, Pſal. viii. 4. becauſe they are ſent of God, and ſometimes repreſent him; the popes of Rome have exalted themſelves above theſe; pope Clement the VIth proclaimed a Jubilee, and promiſed forgiveneſs of ſins to all that ſhould come to Rome; and in his bull for it ſays, that "if any that was confeſſed ſhould die by the way, "he ſhould be free from all his ſins; and we do "command the angels, that they take ſuch a ſoul "out of purgatory entirely abſolved, and intro"duce it into the glory of paradiſe:" and in a manuſcript in the library at Helmſted, are theſe words, "we command the angels that they carry "ſuch a ſoul into Abraham's boſom, as ſoon as it "has left the body:" kings and civil magiſtrates are called Gods, Pſal. lxxxii. 5. and this monſter of iniquity and firſt-born of ſatan, the popes of Rome have exalted themſelves above theſe; they have not only took upon them to excommunicate emperors and kings, but to depoſe them and take away their crowns from them, and give their kingdoms to others, and abſolve their ſubjects from allegiance and fidelity to them; an emperor has held a pope's ſtirrup whilſt he alighted from his horſe, and was ſeverely reprimanded for holding the left inſtead of the right ſtirrup; and the ſame emperor held another pope's ſtirrup whilſt he got on his horſe, and who ſet his foot upon his neck when he abſolved him, being before excommunicated by him, uſing theſe words in Pſal. xci. 13. thou ſhalt tread upon the lion, &c. An emperor and an empreſs waited at a pope's gates three days barefoot; another emperor and empreſs were crowned by the pope with his feet; he took the crown with his feet, and they bowing down put it upon their heads, and then kicked it off; and one of our own kings reſigned his crown and the enſigns of his royalty to the pope's legate, who kept them five days; and when he offered a ſum of money to the legate as an earneſt of his ſubjection, to ſhew his maſter's grandeur, he ſpurned at it; a king was thrown under a pope's table to lick the bones like a dog, whilſt he was eating; ſo truly has this paſſage had its accompliſhment in that impious and inſolent ſett of men. Rome is by the Jewiſh [e] writers called Magdiel, which ſignifies magnifying itſelf; the reaſon is becauſe, שיתגדל, becauſe it magnifies itſelf above all theſe [f]; that is, above all kingdoms and ſtates: but what is worſe and moſt dreadfully blaſphemous, follows, ſo that he as God ſitteth in the temple of God; not in the temple of Jeruſalem, which was to be deſtroyed and never to be rebuilt more, and was deſtroyed before this man of ſin was revealed; but in the church of God, ſo called, 1 Cor. iii. 16. 2 Cor. vi. 16. the Ethiopic verſion renders it, in the houſe of God; for antichriſt roſe up out of, and in the midſt of the church; and it was a true church in which he firſt appeared, and over which he uſurped power and authority; tho' it has been ſo corrupted by him, as now to be only nominally ſo; here he ſits and has homage done him by his creatures, as if he was a God, and is not only ſtiled Chriſt's vicar, but a God on earth, and our Lord God the pope; ſo in the triumphal arch at the entry of pope Sixtus the fourth, theſe lines were put, oraculo vocis, mundi moderaris habenas, & meritò in terris crederis eſſe Deus; the ſenſe is, that he governed the world by his word, and was deſervedly believed to be God on earth; and their canon law [g] ſays, "it is clearly enough ſhewn "that the pope cannot be looſed or bound by any "ſecular power; ſince it is evident that he is called "God by that pious prince Conſtantine, and it is "manifeſt that God cannot be judged by men:" and pope John the XXIId is expreſsly called [h], our Lord God the pope: the Ethiopic verſion reads, he ſhall ſay to all I am the Lord God; ſee Ezek. xxviii. 2. the Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, and the Vulgate Latin verſion leave out the phraſe, as God, but the Syriac retains it: however, the ſame blaſphemy is expreſſed in the next clauſe, ſhewing himſelf that he is God; by uſurping a power over the conſciences and ſouls of men; by diſpenſing with the laws of God and man; by aſſuming to himſelf all power in heaven and in earth; by taking upon him to open and ſhut the gates of heaven at pleaſure; and by pardoning ſin, which none but God can do; this is the mouth ſpeaking blaſphemies, Rev. xiii. 5, 6.

Ver. 5. Remember ye not, that when I was yet with you, &c.] At Theſſalonica, for the Apoſtle had been there in perſon, and had preached there with great boldneſs and ſucceſs; he had declared the whole counſel of God, and the Goſpel came in power and worked effectually in them, and yet there was too great a forgetfulneſs of it; with which the Apoſtle tacitly charges them, and rebukes them gently for it; and as a faithful monitor, ſtirs up their pure minds by way of remembrance, and reminds them of former truths delivered to them: I told you theſe things; or words, as the Arabic verſion; concerning the coming of Chriſt, as that it would not be yet, that there muſt be a defection from the faith, and antichriſt muſt be revealed; which ſhows that theſe were things of moment and importance, and were uſeful and profitable to be inſiſted on; and therefore the Apoſtle had told them of them, and ſpoke freely and largely about them, at his firſt preaching among them, and were what he inculcated every where; and alſo that his doctrine was all of a piece at one time as another; it was not yea and nay, or contradictory; what he now ſaid was no other than what he had ſaid before; and therefore it was the more inexcuſable in them, to be ſhaken or troubled by any means with another doctrine.

Ver. 6. And now ye know what withholdeth, &c.] Or hinders the revelation of the man of ſin, or antichriſt; by which is meant not the Apoſtle Paul, tho' he by his miniſtry was a very great hindrance of the growth of error, and the ſpread of evil practices in the churches, and ſo of the more open appearance of the man of ſin in his fore-runners; and after his departure from Epheſus, and impriſonment at Rome, and ſuffering death, there was a great falling off in the churches, and among profeſſors of religion, which made way for the manifeſtation of antichriſt in due time: nor the preaching of the Goſpel, in its power and purity, in the ſeveral parts of the world; tho' ſo long as this obtained, got ground, and gained ſucceſs, the man of ſin could not ſhew his head; and therefore it muſt, as it did, decline, and was gradually taken away that he might appear: nor the Spirit of God, as the Spirit of truth and holineſs, tho' as long as he continued in his gifts and operations of grace in the churches, they were preſerved from antichriſtian doctrine and worſhip; but when he removed from them, this enemy and adverſary of Chriſt and his Goſpel came in like a flood: nor the general defection in ver. 3. tho' that was to be previous to the revelation of antichriſt, and was to be what would uſher him in; nor could he appear until the wickedneſs of men was come to a pitch, that they would be ready to receive him, and pay homage and worſhip to him: nor is the decree of God meant, tho' till the time came fixed by God for his appearance, the decree muſt be a bar in his way; ſince as there is a time for every purpoſe, nothing can come to paſs till that time comes: but by that which withheld, let or hindred the open appearance of antichriſt, were the Roman empire and emperors; theſe ſtood in his way, and whilſt this empire laſted, and the emperors wore the imperial crown, and ſat on the throne, and held the government in their hands, the popes could not come at the height of their ambition, dignity and authority, nor ſhine in their glory; nor could the whore of Babylon take her ſeat, and ſit upon the ſeven hills of Rome until the Roman emperor was taken out of the way: this therefore hindered, that he might be revealed in his time. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, until his time appointed came; wherefore till the time that God had fixed for the appearance of this monſter of iniquity, this ſon of perdition, the Roman empire muſt continue, and Roman emperors muſt keep their place and dignity to prevent his appearance ſooner: the reaſon why the Apoſtle expreſſes this not in plain words, but in an obſcure manner, and with ſo much caution was, that he might not offend Roman emperors, and provoke them to a ſevere perſecution of them as ſeditious perſons, that ſought the deſtruction of the empire: the word here uſed, which is rendered withholdeth, or letteth, as in the next verſe, ſignifies a ruler or governour, and anſwers to the Hebrew word עצר, to keep back, or reſtrain; and which is uſed of kings, who by their laws and government reſtrain and withhold people from doing what they would; ſee 1 Sam. ix. 17. 2 Chron. xiv. 11. to which the Apoſtle, who well underſtood the Hebrew language, doubtleſs had reference; ſo יורש עצר, is rendered, a magiſtrate, in Judges xviii. 7.

Ver. 7. For the myſtery of iniquity doth already work, &c.] Or the myſtery of that wicked one, as the Syriac; meaning either antichriſt himſelf, and the ſpirit of antichriſt, which were already in the world, 1 John ii. 18. and iv. 2. myſtery being one of the names of antichriſt, Rev. xvii. 5. and antiently this word was engraven on the mitres of the popes of Rome: or the evil doctrines and practices of antichriſt may be intended; for as the doctrine of the Goſpel is called a myſtery, and the myſtery of godlineſs; ſo the doctrines and practices of antichriſt may be called the myſtery of iniquity, eſpecially as they were now ſecretly ſpread, imbibed and practiſed: the foundations of it were now laying in the church by falſe teachers; for errors and hereſies of every ſort, reſpecting the perſon and offices of Chriſt, and in oppoſition to them were now broached; idolatry and holding communion with idolaters now obtained; worſhipping of angels was uſed by ſome; and ſuperſtition and will-worſhip, worſhip after the commandments of men were practiſed; days and months and years, diſtinguiſhed by Jews and Pagans, and difference of meats were obſerved; celibacy and virginity began to be admired and commended; dominion and magiſtracy were deſpiſed, and church-authority contemned, and many, as Diotrephes, loved to have the pre-eminence; and the doctrine of juſtification by the works of the law was induſtriouſly ſpread, and zealouſly preached and received; all which laid the foundation, and are the life and ſoul of popery: only he who now letteth, will let, until he be taken out of the way; that is, the Roman empire and Roman emperors, and which were by degrees entirely removed, and ſo made way for the revelation of this wicked one: and which was done partly by Conſtantine the emperor receiving the chriſtian faith, whereby the Roman empire as pagan ceaſed; and by increaſing the riches of the church, and feeding the pride, ambition, and covetouſneſs of the biſhops, eſpecially the biſhop of Rome; and next by removing the ſeat of the empire from Rome to Byzantium, which he called Conſtantinople: here the Greek emperors continued in ſucceſſion, and neither they themſelves, nor even their exarchs, reſided at Rome, but at Ravenna; ſo that way was made for antichriſt to come to his ſeat, and there was nothing to rival and eclipſe the grandeur, power, and glory of the Roman popes: and that which let was alſo taken out of the way, by the diviſion of the empire, by Theodoſius, giving to his elder ſon Arcadius, the eaſtern, and to the younger, Honorius, the weſtern parts of it: the eaſtern empire was in proceſs of time ſeized upon and poſſeſſed by Mahomet, and the Saracens; and the weſtern empire was over-run by the Goths, Vandals, and Huns, and became extinct about the year 476, in Auguſtulus the laſt of the Roman emperors, who was obliged to abdicate the government by Odoacer king of the Heruli; when the kingdom of the Lombards took place in Italy, and afterwards that was tranſlated to Charles the great, king of the French; ſo that there was nothing more of the Roman empire remaining than the bare name, as at this day; and by this means the popes of Rome got to the height of their power and glory, which is meant by the revelation of the man of ſin.

Ver. 8. And then ſhall that wicked be revealed, &c.] That lawleſs one, who ſets himſelf above the laws of God and man, and diſpenſes with them at pleaſure, who judges all men, but is judged by no man; as he was in his eccleſiaſtical power, when Phocas, who murdered the emperor Mauritius, granted to Boniface the third to be called univerſal biſhop; and in his civil power in ſucceeding popes, who took upon them the power over kings and emperors, to crown, depoſe, and excommunicate at pleaſure: whom the Lord ſhall conſume with the Spirit of his mouth; that is, the Lord Jeſus, as the Alexandrian copy, and Vulgate Latin verſion read; and the Syriac verſion, our Lord Jeſus; who is Lord of lords, and God over all; and ſo able to do what he is here ſaid he ſhall do: and which he will do with the Spirit of his mouth; meaning either the holy Spirit, the third perſon which proceeds from him, as in Pſal. xxxiii. 6. and ſo the Ethiopic verſion, whom the Spirit of our Lord Jeſus ſhall caſt out; Chriſt will by his Spirit blow a blaſt upon antichriſt and his kingdom, which he ſhall never recover again, but ever after conſume and waſte away: or elſe by his Spirit is meant his Goſpel; the ſcriptures in general are the breath of God, being divinely inſpired by him, and are the ſword of the Spirit, the two-edged ſword of law and Goſpel, which proceeds out of Chriſt's mouth; the Goſpel contains the words of Chriſt, which are ſpirit and life; theſe come out of his mouth, and are ſharper than any two-edged ſword; and as hereby ſinners are cut to the heart, hewn and ſlain, convicted and converted, ſo by this likewiſe antichriſt will be conſumed, and is conſuming; for this phraſe denotes the beginning of his deſtruction, which took place at the time of the reformation by the preaching of the Goſpel by Luther and others; by which this man of ſin received his deadly wound, and has been in a conſumption ever ſince, and is ſenſibly waſting in his power and glory every day, and will e'er long come to utter deſtruction: and ſhall deſtroy with the brightneſs of his coming; either in a ſpiritual way, when he ſhall come in his ſpiritual kingdom and glory, by the light of his Goſpel and the illuminations of his Spirit; when at eventide it ſhall be light; when he the ſun of righteouſneſs ſhall ariſe; when latter day, light, and glory ſhall appear, and latter day darkneſs, the groſs darkneſs of popery, paganiſm, and judaiſm which cover the people ſhall be removed, and antichriſt in every form ſhall diſappear: or in a perſonal manner, when he ſhall come to judge the quick and dead, which will be in flaming fire and great glory; and then will antichriſt and his followers, the beaſt and thoſe that have worſhipped him, be caſt with the devil and the falſe prophet into the lake which burns with fire and brimſtone; and this will be the laſt and utter end of him. In this paſſage there is a manifeſt reference to Iſ. xi. 4. with the breath of his mouth ſhall he ſlay the wicked; which the Targumiſt paraphraſes, "with the word "of his lips he ſhall ſlay ארמילוס רשיעא, Armillus "the wicked;" and which the Jews ſay will be done by the Meſſiah at his coming; "for ſo [i] ſay "they, that phraſe in Deut. xxii. 8. if a man fall "from thence, has reſpect to Armillus the wicked, "who at the coming of our Meſſiah will be ſlain, "as it is ſaid in Iſ. xi. 4." This Armillus the Jews ſay [k], is the head of all idolatry, the tenth king who ſhall reign at Rome, the city of ſatan; that he ſhall riſe up after Gog and Magog, and ſhall go up to Jeruſalem and ſlay Meſſiah ben Joſeph, and ſhall himſelf be ſlain by Meſſiah the ſon of David; yea, they ſay expreſly [l], it is the ſame whom the Gentiles call antichriſt: it is the ſame with Romulus the firſt king of the Romans, and deſigns a Roman, the Roman antichriſt; and it may be obſerved that the Targumiſt interprets the breath of his mouth, by his word; and ſo ſays another of their writers [m], "the meaning is by the word of his lips, for the word "goes out of the mouth with the vapour and "breath:" ſuch an expreſſion as this is ſaid [n] to be uſed by Moſes, when he was bid by God to anſwer the angels who objected to his having the law given him; "I am afraid, ſays he, they will ſlay "(or burn me) בהבל שבפיהם, with the breath of "their mouth:" much more may this be feared from the breath of Chriſt's mouth.

Ver. 9. Even him whoſe coming is after the working of ſatan, &c.] That is, as a deceiver, a liar, and a murderer; for ſuch was the working of ſatan with our firſt parents; he ſeduced Eve, not only by ſubtlety, but by lying; he abode not in the truth, is the father of lyes, and a murderer from the beginning: and ſuch is the working of antichriſt his firſt-born; he comes in a deceitful way, under a profeſſion of Chriſt, and a pretenſion of faith in him, and love to him; but ſpeaks lies in hypocriſy, for ſuch are his doctrines and tenets; and is not only a murderer of the bodies of the ſaints, but of the ſouls of men; which are the wares the whore of Babylon deals in: with all power; not omnipotence, for that is peculiar to God, and is not in ſatan nor in antichriſt, tho' the latter aſſumes to himſelf all power in heaven and in earth, and claims a juriſdiction both temporal and ſpiritual over men; but rather this means great power, or all kind of power of doing miracles, as follows: and ſigns, and lying wonders; that is, ſuch ſigns and miracles as are not real, but feigned, only in appearance, not in truth, like thoſe that were done by the magicians of Egypt; and theſe were done to countenance lyes, and to induce perſons to believe them; and how many miracles and lying wonders the church of Rome pretends to, every body knows.

Ver. 10. And with all deceivableneſs of unrighteouſneſs, &c.] Not that he deceives or goes about to deceive, or thinks to deceive by open unrighteouſneſs; but by unrighteouſneſs, under a pretence of righteouſneſs and holineſs; as with the doctrines of juſtification and ſalvation by a man's own righteouſneſs, with the doctrines of merit and of works of ſupererogation, which are taking to men, and by which they are deceived, and are no other than unrighteouſneſs with God, and betray ignorance of his righteouſneſs, and a non-ſubmiſſion to it; as alſo with practices which carry a ſhew of holineſs, religion and devotion, when they are no other than acts of impiety, ſuperſtition, and will-worſhip; as their litanies and prayers, their worſhip of images, angels, and ſaints departed, their frequent faſts and feſtivals, their pilgrimages, penance, and various acts of mortification and the like; but then theſe deceptions only have place, in them that periſh; whom the God of this world has blinded, from whom the Goſpel is hid, and to whom it is fooliſhneſs: all men indeed are in a loſt periſhing condition, thro' original and actual ſin; but all ſhall not periſh, there are ſome that God will not have periſh, whom Chriſt is given for that they ſhould not periſh, and whom he has redeemed by his blood, and to whom he gives eternal life; but there are others that are veſſels of wrath afore ordained to condemnation, reprobate men left to themſelves, and given up to their hearts luſts; and theſe and only theſe are finally and totally deceived, by the ſigns and lying wonders, and falſe appearances of antichriſt; ſee Matt. xxiv. 24. becauſe they received not the love of the truth that they might be ſaved; by the truth is meant either Chriſt the truth of types, the ſum of promiſes, in whom the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge are, and by whom grace and truth came; or the Goſpel often called truth, and the word of truth, it coming from the God of truth, has for its ſubject Chriſt the truth, is dictated and directed into by the Spirit of truth, and contains nothing but truth: and by the love of it is meant, either the lovelineſs of it, for truth is an amiable, lovely thing, in its nature and uſe; or an affection for it, which there is where true faith in it is, for faith works by love: there may be a flaſhy affection for the truths of the Goſpel, where there is no true faith in Chriſt, or the root of the matter is not, as in the ſtony ground hearers; and there may be an hiſtorical faith in the doctrines of the Goſpel, where the power of them is denied, and there is no true hearty love for them; and in theſe perſons there is neither faith nor love; the truths of the Goſpel are neither believed by them, nor are they affected with them, that ſo they might be ſaved; for where there is true faith in the Goſpel of Chriſt, and in Chriſt the ſubſtance of it, there is ſalvation; the reaſon therefore of theſe mens periſhing is not the decree of God, nor even want of the means of grace, the revelation of the Goſpel, but their rejection and contempt of it.

Ver. 11. And for this cauſe God ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſion, &c.] Or efficacy of error, which God may be ſaid to ſend; and the Alexandrian copy reads, does ſend; becauſe it is not a bare permiſſion, but a voluntary one; or it is his will that error ſhould be that truth may be tried, and be illuſtrated by its contrary, and ſhine the more thro' the force of oppoſition to it; and that thoſe which are on the ſide of it, might be made manifeſt, as well as that the rejecters of the Goſpel might be puniſhed; for the efficacy of error is not to be conſidered as a ſin, of which God cannot be the author, but as a puniſhment for ſin, and to which men are given up, and fall under the power of, becauſe they receive not the love of the truth, which is the reaſon here given: and this comes to paſs partly thro' God's denying his grace, or withholding that light and knowledge, by which error may be diſcovered and detected; and by taking from men the knowledge and conſcience of things they had, ſee Rom. i. 28. So that they call evil good, and good evil, and don't appear to have the common ſenſe and reaſon of mankind, at leaſt do not act according to it; and by giving them up to judicial blindneſs and hardneſs of heart, and to the God of this world, to blind their minds; and without this it is not to be accounted for, that the followers of antichriſt ſhould give into ſuch ſenſeleſs notions as thoſe of tranſubſtantiation, works of ſupererogation, &c. or into ſuch ſtupid practices as worſhipping of images, praying to ſaints departed, and paying ſuch a reſpect to the pretended relicks of ſaints, &c. as they do; but a ſpirit of ſlumber is given them, and eyes that they ſhould not ſee, and ears that they ſhould not hear, becauſe of their rejection of the Goſpel: and that they ſhould believe a lye; that the pope is Chriſt's vicar on earth, and has power to forgive ſins; that the bread and wine in the Lord's ſupper are tranſubſtantiated into the very body and blood of Chriſt; with other lying tenets ſpoken in hypocriſy concerning good works, merit, pardon, pennance, &c. with a multitude of lying wonders and falſe miracles, of which their legends are full; and this is the firſt and more near end of ſtrong deluſion or efficacious error being ſent them; the more remote and ultimate one follows.

Ver. 12. That they all might be damned, &c.] Or judged, diſcerned and diſtinguiſhed from true chriſtians and real believers; or rather that they might be condemned and puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction from the preſence of the Lord, and have their portion in the lake which burns with fire and brimſtone; where the devil, the falſe prophet, and the beaſt, whoſe followers they are, will be caſt; and it is but a righteous thing with God to give them up to ſuch deluſion, that they may be damned, ſince they received not the love of the truth that they might be ſaved; and the following character of them juſtifies the divine procedure: who believed not the truth; neither the word of truth, the Goſpel of ſalvation, nor Chriſt, who is truth itſelf; and therefore were righteouſly given up to believe a lye; and whoſe damnation is juſt, according to the declaration of Chriſt, he that believeth not ſhall be damned: but had pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs; in ſin, as all unrighteouſneſs is; in ſinful ways and works, and in unrighteous doctrines; as the doctrines of merit, of works of ſupererogation, and of juſtification by works, being derogatory to the juſtice of God, and to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; and in the unrighteous perſecution and bloodſhed of the ſaints, the martyrs of Jeſus; in which the followers of antichriſt take as much delight and pleaſure, as an intemperate man does in drinking wine or ſtrong drink to exceſs; and therefore the whore of Babylon is ſaid to be drunk with the blood of the ſaints; and it is but juſt ſhe ſhould have blood to drink, or be puniſhed both with temporal and eternal deſtruction.

Ver. 13. But we are bound to give thanks alway to God for you, &c.] Leſt the ſaints ſhould be diſcouraged by the above account of Antichriſt, and his followers, and fear they ſhould be left to the ſame deceptions, and damnation be their portion; the Apoſtle being perſuaded better things of them, gives their character, and repreſents their caſe in a quite different light; and ſignifies, that he and his fellow-miniſters were under obligation to be continually thankful to God for what he had done for them; for as God is the Father of mercies, whether ſpiritual or temporal, thanks are to be given to him; and ſaints are not only to bleſs his name for what they themſelves receive from him, but for what others enjoy alſo, and that continually; becauſe ſpiritual bleſſings, eſpecially ſuch as afterwards inſtanced in, are permanent and durable, yea everlaſting: the characters which ſhow them to be different from the followers of Antichriſt, are, brethren, beloved of the Lord; or of God, as the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions read: they were the brethren of Chriſt, being the dear children of God, born of him, and belonging to his family, and of the Apoſtles, and of one another, being of the houſhold of faith; and they were beloved by God the Father, as the inſtances of their election to ſalvation by him, and their vocation to eternal glory ſhew; and by the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who had wrought out for them the ſalvation they were choſen to; and and by the Lord the Spirit, by whom they were regenerated, called, ſanctified, and brought to the belief of the truth; and ſince they had intereſt in the everlaſting love of the three divine perſons, there was no danger of their falling away and periſhing. The reaſon of the Apoſtle's thankſgiving for the perſons thus deſcribed, is, becauſe God hath from the beginning choſen you to ſalvation; which is to be underſtood, not of an election of them, as a nation, for they were not a nation, only a part of one; nor of them as a church, for they were not ſo from the beginning; nor to the outward means of grace, the miniſtry of the word and ordinances, for the choice is unto ſalvation; nor to any office, for they were not all officers in the church, only ſome; nor does it intend effectual vocation, for that is diſtinguiſhed from it in the following verſe; but an eternal appointment of perſons to grace and glory: and this is an act of God the Father, in Chriſt, from eternity; and which ariſes from his ſovereign good will and pleaſure, and is an inſtance of his free grace and favour, for the glorifying of himſelf; and is irreſpective of the faith, holineſs, and good works of men; all which are the fruits and effects, and not the motives, conditions, or cauſes of electing grace. This act is the leading one to all other bleſſings of grace, as juſtification, adoption, vocation, and glorification, and is certain and immutable in its ſelf, and in its effects. The date of it is from the beginning; not from the beginning of the preaching of the Goſpel to them, and the ſenſe be, that as ſoon as the Goſpel was preached, they believed, and God choſe them; for what was there remarkable in them that this ſhould be peculiarly obſerved of them? The Bereans are ſaid to be more noble than they were: nor from the beginning of their vocation, for predeſtination or election precedes vocation; ſee Rom. viii. 30. nor from the beginning of time, or of the creation of the world, but before the world began, even from eternity; and in ſuch ſenſe the phraſe is uſed in Prov. viii. 23. and that it is the ſenſe of it here, is manifeſt from Eph. i. 4. where this choice is ſaid to be before the foundation of the world. The end to which men, by this act, are choſen, is ſalvation; not temporal, though the elect of God are appointed to many temporal ſalvations and deliverances, and which they enjoy both before and after converſion; yet ſalvation here deſigns the ſalvation of the ſoul, though not excluſive of the body, a ſpiritual and an eternal ſalvation, ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt, as is expreſſed in 1 Theſſ. v. 9. and the ſame decree that appoints men to ſalvation, appoints Chriſt to be the ſaviour of them; and there is ſalvation in and by no other. The means thro' which this choice is made, are thro' ſanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth; by ſanctification is meant, not any thing external, as reformation of life, obedience to the law, or outward ſubmiſſion to Goſpel ordinances; but internal holineſs, which lies in a principle of ſpiritual life in the ſoul, and in a principle of ſpiritual light in the underſtanding; in a flexion of the will to the will of God, and the way of ſalvation by Chriſt; in a ſettlement of the affections on divine and ſpiritual things, and in an implantation of all grace in the heart; and is called the ſanctification of the Spirit, partly from the ſpirit or ſoul of man being the principal ſeat of it, and chiefly from the Spirit of God being the author of it; and this being a means fixed in the decree of election to ſalvation, ſhows, that holineſs is not the cauſe of election, yet is certain by it, and is neceſſary to ſalvation; and that the doctrine of election is no licentious doctrine, ſince it provides for, and ſecures true and real holineſs. Truth deſigns either the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is the truth of types and promiſes, and the ſubſtance of the truth of the Goſpel, in whom it lies, and by whom it comes; or the Goſpel itſelf, which comes from the God of truth, lies in the ſcriptures of truth, is dictated and directed into by the Spirit of truth; the ſum of it is Chriſt the truth, and has nothing in it but truth. The belief or faith of this intends, not an hiſtorical faith, or a mere aſſent to truth; but a cordial embracing of it, a receiving of the love of the truth, a feeling of the power of it unto ſalvation, and a believing in Chriſt, the ſubſtance of it; which is a ſeeing of him ſpiritually, and a going out of the ſoul to him in acts of hope, reliance, truſt, and dependance: and this being alſo a means ſettled in the choice of men to ſalvation, makes it appear, that faith is no cauſe of election, but the effect of it; that it is neceſſary to ſalvation, and therefore appointed as a means; that it is certain to the elect by it, and that they therefore cannot be finally and totally deceived, or be carried away with the error of the wicked, or with the deceiveableneſs of unrighteouſneſs with which Antichriſt works.

Ver. 14. Whereunto he called you by our Goſpel, &c.] Salvation being appointed as the end in the decree of election, and ſanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth, as means; the elect in effectual vocation are called to the participation of each of theſe; firſt to the one, and then to the other; to grace here, and glory hereafter: and the means by which they are called is the Goſpel, which the Apoſtle calls our Goſpel, not becauſe they were the authors, or the ſubject of it; for with regard to theſe it is ſtiled the Goſpel of God, and the Goſpel of Chriſt; but becauſe they were entruſted with it, and faithfully preached it, and in oppoſition to another Goſpel publiſhed by falſe teachers. And by this they were called to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; not his eſſential glory, tho' he will be ſeen and known in the glory of his perſon as he is, ſo far as creatures in a ſtate of perfection will be capable of; nor his mediatorial glory, tho' it will be one part of the ſaints happineſs in heaven to behold this glory of Chriſt; but rather, the glory which ſhall be perſonally put upon the ſaints, both in ſoul and body, in the reſurrection morn, is here intended: and which is called the glory of Chriſt, becauſe it is in his hands for them; and is what he is preparing for them, and for which he gives them both a right and a meetneſs; and which he at laſt will introduce them into; and it will lie greatly in conformity to him, and in the everlaſting viſion and enjoyment of him: and now God's elect are called by the miniſtry of the word to the obtaining of this, not by any merit of theirs, or by any works of righteouſneſs done by them, but to the poſſeſſion of it, as the word uſed properly ſignifies. The Syriac verſion renders it, that ye may be a glory to our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; as the ſaints will be at the laſt day, and to all eternity, when they ſhall be raiſed again, and have the glory of God upon them, and be for ever with the Lord.

Ver. 15. Therefore, brethren, ſtand faſt, &c.] In the doctrine of the Goſpel in general, and in the article of Chriſt's ſecond coming in particular, and not in the leaſt waver about the thing itſelf, nor be ſhaken in mind, and troubled as if it was juſt at hand; and the rather, it became them to be concerned that they ſtood faſt in the truth, and perſevered unto the end, ſince there was to be a falling away, and the myſtery of iniquity was already working, and Antichriſt would ſhortly appear, whoſe coming would be with all deceivableneſs, of unrighteouſneſs; and they had the greater encouragement to continue firm and unmoved, ſeeing they were choſen from eternity unto ſalvation thro' ſanctification and belief of the truth, and were called in time by the Goſpel to the enjoyment of the glory of Chriſt in another world. And hold the traditions which ye have been taught; meaning the truths of the Goſpel, which may be called traditions, becauſe they are delivered from one to another; the Goſpel was firſt delivered by God the Father to Jeſus Chriſt, as mediator, and by him to his Apoſtles, and by them to the churches of Chriſt; whence it is called the form of doctrine delivered to them, and the faith once delivered to the ſaints: and alſo the ordinances of the Goſpel which the Apoſtles received from Chriſt, and as they received them, faithfully delivered them, ſuch as baptiſm and the Lord's ſupper; as well as rules of conduct and behaviour, both in the church, and in the world, even all the commandments of Chriſt, which he ordered his Apoſtles to teach, and which they gave by him; ſee ch. iii. 6. and 1 Ep. iv. 2. And ſo the Syriac verſion here renders it, the commandments; and theſe were ſuch as theſe ſaints had been taught by the Apoſtles, under the direction of Chriſt, and thro' the guidance of his Spirit; and were not the traditions of men, or the rudiments of the world, but what they had received from Chriſt, thro' the hands of the Apoſtles: whether by word, or our epiſtle, that is, by our word; as well as by our epiſtle, and ſo the Arabic verſion reads; theſe doctrines, ordinances, and rules of diſcipline were communicated to them, both by word of mouth, when the Apoſtles were in perſon among them, and by writing afterwards to them; for what the Apoſtles delivered in the miniſtry of the word to the churches, they ſent them in writing, that they might be a ſtanding rule of faith and practice; ſo that this does not in the leaſt countenance the unwritten traditions of the Papiſts: and ſince theſe were what were taught them, viva voce, and they received them from the mouth of the Apoſtles, or by letters from them, or both, it became them to hold and retain them faſt, and not let them go, either with reſpect to doctrine or practice.

Ver. 16. Now our Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, &c.] The Apoſtle having exhorted the ſaints to perſeverance, cloſes this ſecond part of his Epiſtle, relating to the coming of Chriſt, with a prayer for the ſaints, that they might be comforted and eſtabliſhed. The objects addreſſed are Chriſt and the Father. And in each of their characters are reaſons contained, encouraging to believe the petitions will be regarded; for it is our Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf who is prayed unto; who is our Lord, not by creation only, in which ſenſe he is Lord of all, but by redemption, and thro' a marriage relation; and he is our Jeſus, our ſaviour, and redeemer; and our Chriſt, the anointed prophet, prieſt, and king; even he himſelf, who ſtands in theſe relations and offices; and what may not be expected from him? and God, even our Father; not by creation, but by adoption; and as it is in his power, he has a heart to give, and will give good things unto his children: and inaſmuch as Chriſt is equally addreſſed as the object of prayer, as the Father, and is indeed here ſet before him, or firſt mentioned, it may be concluded, that there is an entire equality between them, and that Chriſt is truly and properly God; otherwiſe religious worſhip, of which prayer is a conſiderable branch, would not be given him, nor would he be ſet upon an equal foot with the Father, and much leſs before him. The Arabic verſion reads, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, our Father; and the Ethiopic verſion alſo, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, God our Father; as if the whole of this, or all theſe epithets and characters belong to Chriſt, and he was the only perſon addreſſed; but the common reading is beſt: which hath loved us; this refers both to the Father, and to Chriſt. The Father had loved them with an everlaſting and unchangeable love, as appeared by his chuſing them unto ſalvation by Chriſt, ſecuring them in his hands, and making an everlaſting covenant with him, on their account; by ſending his ſon to be the ſaviour of them; by regenerating, quickening, and calling them by his grace, adopting them into his family, pardoning all their ſins, juſtifying their perſons, and giving them both a meetneſs for, and a right unto eternal glory. And Chriſt, he had loved them with the ſame love; and which he ſhewed by undertaking their cauſe in the council of peace; by eſpouſing their perſons, in the covenant of grace; by aſſuming their nature in the fulneſs of time; by dying in their room and ſtead; and by his continued interceſſion and mediation for them, and by many other inſtances. And ſince they had ſuch a ſhare in the affection, both of the Father, and the Son, it need not to have been doubted but that what was prayed for would be granted: to which is added, and hath given us everlaſting conſolation; all true, ſolid conſolation is from God and Chriſt: God is called the God of all comfort; and if there be any real conſolation, it is in, by, and from Chriſt; and it is the gift of God, an inſtance of his grace and favour, and not a point of merit; the leaſt degree of conſolation is not deſerved, and ought not to be reckoned ſmall: and it is everlaſting; it does not indeed always continue, as to the ſenſible enjoyment of it, in this life, being often interrupted by indwelling ſin, the hidings of God's face, and the temptations of ſatan, yet the ground and foundation of it is everlaſting; ſuch as the everlaſting love of God, the everlaſting covenant of grace, the everlaſting righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and everlaſting ſalvation by him, and he himſelf, who is the conſolation of Iſrael, as well as the bleſſed Spirit, the comforter, who ever abides as the earneſt and pledge of future happineſs. And the preſent ſpiritual joy of the ſaints is what no man can take away from them, and what will eventually iſſue in everlaſting conſolation, without any interruption in the world to come, when ſorrow and ſighing ſhall flee away, and all tears be wiped from their eyes: and good hope thro' grace. The Syriac verſion reads, in his grace; and the Ethiopic verſion, a good hope, and his grace; hope, as well as faith, is the gift of God, a free-grace gift of his: and it may be called a good one, becauſe God is the author of it; and it is built on a good foundation, the perſon, blood, and righteouſneſs of Chriſt; and is of good things to come, and therefore called the bleſſed hope; and is what is ſure and certain, and will never deceive, nor make aſhamed; and ſince conſolation is given here, and hope of happineſs hereafter, it may be concluded, the following requeſts will be regarded.

Ver. 17. Comfort your hearts, &c.] That is, apply the comfort given, and cauſe it to be received, which unbelief is apt to refuſe; and increaſe it, by ſhedding abroad the love of Chriſt, and of the Father; by the diſcoveries of pardoning grace; by the application of Goſpel promiſes; by the word and ordinances, which are breaſts of conſolation; and by indulging with the gracious preſence, and comfortable communion of Father, Son, and Spirit. The Arabic verſion reads, comfort your hearts by his grace, joining the laſt clauſe of the preceding verſe to this. This petition ſtands oppoſed to a being troubled and diſtreſſed about the ſudden coming of Chriſt, as the following one does to a being ſhaken in mind on that account, ver. 2. And ſtabliſh you in every good word and work; that is, in every good word of God, or truth of the Goſpel, which contains good tidings of good things, ſo as not to waver about them, or ſtagger in them, or depart from them; in practice of every duty, ſo as to be ſtedfaſt, and immoveable, and always abounding therein: good words and good works, principles and practices, ſhould go together, and the ſaints ſtand in need of ſtability in both. For though, as to their ſtate and condition, they are eſtabliſhed in the love of God, in the covenant of grace, in the arms of Chriſt, and in him the foundation, ſo as they can never be removed; yet they are often very unſtable, not only in their frames, and in the exerciſe of grace, but in their attachment and adherence to the Goſpel and intereſt of Chriſt, and in the diſcharge of duty.

C H A P. III.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle requeſts of the Theſſalonians, that they would pray for him, and other Goſpel miniſters; and he puts up prayers for them, gives them rules about dealing with diſorderly perſons, and concludes the Epiſtle with his uſual ſalutation. The requeſt to pray for miniſters is in ver. 1. the petitions to be made for them are, that their miniſtry might be ſucceeded, and their perſons preſerved and delivered from evil-minded men, deſtitute of faith in Chriſt, ver. 1, 2. and for the conſolation of the ſaints, obſerves the faithfulneſs of God engaged in their behalf to eſtabliſh them in the faith they had, and to preſerve them from every thing and perſon that is evil, ver. 3. and expreſſes his confidence in them with reſpect to their walk and converſation, ver. 4. and then prays for them, that their hearts might be directed into the love of God, and patience of Chriſt, ver. 5. And next follows an order to withdraw from every diſorderly walker, particularly idle and ſlothful perſons, ver. 6. and from ſuch a lazy, idle life, the Apoſtle diſſuades by his own example, who behaved not diſorderly, nor eat the bread of others, but wrought with his own hands, tho' he had a right to a maintenance without it, but did this to ſet an example to them, ver. 7, 8, 9. He puts them in mind of a precept of his when among them, that ſuch who would not work ſhould not eat, ver. 10. and the order he now gave, and the precept he reminds them of, were not without reaſon; ſeeing there were diſorderly, idle perſons, and buſy-bodies among them, whom the Apoſtle exhorts and beſeeches in the name of Chriſt, to be induſtrious, and eat their own bread, as the fruit of their labours, ver. 11, 12. and as for the other members of the church, he exhorts them to diligence and conſtancy in well-doing, and to mark thoſe that were incorrigible, and have no converſation with them, yet dealing with them, not as enemies, but admoniſhing them as brethren, ver. 13, 14, 15. And cloſes all with prayers, that the Lord would give them peace, and grant his preſence to them, and with his uſual ſalutation, written with his own hand, as a token of this being a genuine Epiſtle of his, and by which every Epiſtle of his might be known, ver. 16, 17, 18.

Ver. 1. Finally, brethren, pray for us, &c.] The Apoſtle now proceeds to the laſt and cloſing part of the Epiſtle, which reſpects church diſcipline, and the removing of diſorderly perſons from their communion; and introduces it with a requeſt to pray for him, and the reſt of his fellow-miniſters, particularly Silvanus and Timotheus, who joined with him in this Epiſtle: he ſignifies that nothing more remained; this was the laſt he had to ſay, that they, the brethren, not the preachers of the word only, but the members of the church, would be ſolicitous for them at the throne of grace; as it becomes all the churches, and the ſeveral members of them to pray for their miniſters: with reſpect to their private ſtudies, that they might be directed to ſuitable ſubjects; that their underſtandings might be opened to underſtand the ſcriptures; that their gifts might be increaſed, and they be more and more fitted for publick ſervice: and with reſpect to their public miniſtrations, that they be brought forth in the fulneſs of the bleſſing of the Goſpel of Chriſt; that they have a door of utterance given them to preach the Goſpel, freely and boldly as it ought to be ſpoken; and that their miniſtry be bleſſed to ſaints and ſinners: and with reſpect to the world, and their conduct in it, that they be kept from the evil of it, and ſo behave, as to give none offence, that the miniſtry be not blamed; and that they be not allured by the flatteries, nor intimidated by the frowns of the world, but endure hardneſs as good ſoldiers of Chriſt: and with reſpect to their perſons and ſtate, that their ſouls may proſper, and that they may have much of the preſence of God, and much ſpiritual joy, peace, comfort, and ſtrength of faith; and that they may enjoy bodily health, and their lives be ſpared for further uſefulneſs. This requeſt is frequently urged by the Apoſtle; which ſhows his ſenſe of the importance of the work of the miniſtry, the inſufficiency of men for it, the neceſſity of freſh ſupplies of grace, and the great uſefulneſs of prayer. The particular petitions he would have put up, follow, that the word of the Lord may have free courſe. By the word of the Lord, or of God, as the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions read, is meant the Goſpel; which is of God, and not of man, comes by the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and is concerning him, his perſon and offices, and concerning peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation by him, as the ſubject-matter of it: and the requeſt is, that this might have free courſe; or might run; be propagated and ſpread far and near: the miniſtry of the word is a courſe or race, and miniſters are runners in it, having their feet ſhod with the preparation of the Goſpel of peace; which is the meſſage they are ſent with, and the errand they run upon; which comes from heaven, and is to be carried into all the world, and ſpread: ſatan and his emiſſaries do all they can to hinder the progreſs of it; God only can remove all obſtructions and impediments; when he works none can lett; all mountains become a plain before Zerubbabel. Wherefore the Apoſtle directs to pray to him for it, with what follows, and be glorified, even as it is with you; the Goſpel is glorified when it is attended upon by large numbers, and is heard with a becoming reverence; when it is received in the love of it, is greatly prized and highly eſteemed; when it is cordially embraced, and chearfully obeyed. It is glorified when ſinners are converted by it, and the lives of the profeſſors of it are agreeable to it; and thus it was glorified in theſe ſeveral inſtances at Theſſalonica; and therefore the Apoſtle puts them upon praying, that it might be ſo elſewhere, as there; even every where, as the Syriac verſion adds.

Ver. 2. And that we may be delivered from unreaſonable and wicked men, &c.] Either from the unbelieving Jews, see Rom. xv. 30, 31. who were the avowed enemies of the Goſpel, and did all they could to hinder the ſpread of it; and who were the implacable and conſtant adverſaries of the Apoſtle; who often lay in wait for him, and oppoſed him, and gave him trouble in all places, ſtirring up the people againſt him: or from the falſe teachers, and thoſe of their party, who are the falſe brethren by whom he often was in perils; who were enemies of the croſs of Chriſt, and great hindrances to the ſpread of the Goſpel; being men of abſurd principles, and of wicked lives and converſations, whereby they perverted the Goſpel of Chriſt, brought a reproach upon it, ſtumbled ſome, and overthrew the faith of others; and from theſe the Apoſtle deſires to be delivered: for all men have not faith; no man has faith of himſelf, it is the gift of God, and the operation of his Spirit; and it is only given to the elect of God, who are ordained unto eternal life, and therefore it is called the faith of God's elect; all mankind have it not, none but Chriſt's ſheep; and the reaſon why others have it not, is, becauſe they are not of his ſheep. This is a truth; but rather the true ſenſe of the words is, that all that are profeſſors of religion, and members of churches, and even all that are preachers of the word, have not faith. They may have an hiſtorical and temporary faith, and the faith of miracles, and even all faith but the true faith; they may profeſs to believe, and yet not believe, as Simon Magus, and his followers ſeem to be intended here; for this is given as a reaſon why the Apoſtle deſired to be delivered from the above men. The Jews ſay [°], that "he that ſtudies not in the law, "לאו ביה מהימנותא, there is no faith in him— "and it is forbidden to come near him, or to trade "with him, or to walk with him, becauſe there is "no faith in him." The Apoſtle ſeems to allude to this cuſtom.

Ver. 3. But the Lord is faithful, &c.] Or God, as the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions read, as do alſo the Alexandrian and Claromontane copies. This is ſaid for the comfort of the ſaints, leſt they ſhould be diſcouraged upon hearing that all profeſſors of faith in Chriſt had it not, who might be ready to take it to themſelves, and fear, that either they had it not, or if they had, that they might loſe it, and fall from it. Wherefore the Apoſtle obſerves to them the comfortable attribute of God's faithfulneſs, which he will not ſuffer to fail. He has promiſed many things, and he is faithful that has promiſed, who alſo will do them, nor will any good thing he has promiſed ever fail. Who ſhall ſtabliſh you; in the doctrines of the Goſpel, ſo as not to be moved away from them, or be finally and totally ſeduced by thoſe unreaſonable and wicked men; and alſo in the grace of faith, which tho' it may be weakened, and there may be a falling from a degree of the ſtedfaſtneſs of it, as to its act and exerciſe, yet it ſhall never finally and totally fail, he who is the author will be the finiſher of it; and likewiſe in the profeſſion both of the doctrine and grace of faith, which true believers ſhall hold faſt unto the end; for God will not ſuffer the righteous to be moved, or to depart from him; he has promiſed them perſeverance, and he is faithful to give it to them. And keep you from evil; from the evil of ſin; not from the being and commiſſion of it entirely, which is not to be expected in this life; but from the dominion of it, at leaſt from its reigning unto death, and from the damning power of it: and alſo from that evil one ſatan; from his ſnares and temptations, ſo as to be entangled and overcome by them; for God is faithful, who will not ſuffer his to be tempted beyond their ſtrength, but will enable them to bear it, and make way for their eſcape, and deliver out of it; and likewiſe from evil men, unreaſonable and wicked men, ſo as not to be drawn aſide by them, by their principles and practices, by their frowns or flatteries.

Ver. 4. And we have confidence in the Lord touching you, &c.] The ground of confidence concerning them was not in themſelves, in their grace, and ſtrength, and wiſdom, and conduct, and good behaviour; but in the Lord, in his grace and ſtrength, and in the power of his might, without whom they could do nothing, but through him ſtrengthening them, could do all things. That ye both do, and will do the things which we command you; referring both to the commandments, which they had already given them by Chriſt, and they had ſhowed, and continued to ſhow a proper regard unto, ſee 1 Ep. iv. 1, 2. and alſo to what would be obſerved to them, as in ver. 6, 12.

Ver. 5. And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, &c.] By which may be meant either the love with which God is loved. This is the ſum and ſubſtance of the firſt and chief commandment in the law, and is what every man in a ſtate of nature is deſtitute of; it is implanted in the heart in regeneration, and is a fruit of the Spirit of God; and where it is, it oftentimes grows cold, and needs to be ſtirred up and re-inflamed, by the Spirit of God, which may be intended, by a directing of the heart into it, that is, to a lively exerciſe of it: or elſe the love with which God loves his people is deſigned, which is free, ſovereign, unchangeable, and from everlaſting to everlaſting; and to have the heart directed into this, is to be led into it directly; or by a ſtrait line, as the word ſignifies, and not in a round-about way, by works and duties, as the cauſes or conditions of it; and to be led further into it, ſo as to wade into theſe waters of the ſanctuary, from the anckles to the knees, and from thence to the loins, and from thence till they become a broad river to ſwim in; or ſo as to comprehend the heighth, and depth, and length, and breadth of this love, and to be rooted and grounded in it, and firmly perſuaded of intereſt in it; and that nothing ſhall ſeparate from it; and ſo as to have the heart ſenſibly affected with it. The phraſe of directing the heart to God, and to ſeek him, is uſed in the Septuagint, in 2 Chron. xix. 3. and xx. 33. And this is not to be done by a believer himſelf, nor by the miniſters of the Goſpel: the Apoſtle could not do it, and therefore he prays the Lord to do it; by whom is meant the Spirit of God, ſince he is diſtinguiſhed from God the Father, into whoſe love the heart is to be directed, and from Chriſt, a patient waiting for whom 'tis alſo deſired the heart may be directed into; and ſince it is his work to ſhed abroad the love of God in the heart, and to lead unto it, and make application of it; and which is a proof of his deity, for none has the direction, management, and government of the heart, but God, Prov. xxi. 1. and in this paſſage of ſcripture appear all the three perſons; for here is the love of the Father, patient waiting for Chriſt, and the Lord the Spirit. For it follows, as another branch of the petition, and into the patient waiting for Chriſt; or patience of Chriſt, as the Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions render it; and may intend either that patience, of which Chriſt was the ſubject; and which appeared in his quiet ſubmiſſion to all that outward meanneſs he did in his ſtate of humiliation; in bearing the inſults and reproaches of men, and the frowardneſs of his own diſciples, in ſuffering himſelf to be tempted by ſatan; and in bearing the ſins of his people, the wrath of God, and ſtrokes of juſtice in the manner he did: and for the ſaints to have their hearts directed into this patience of Chriſt, is of great uſe unto them, to endear Chriſt unto them; to lead them into the greatneſs of his love, and alſo of his perſon; and to make them more patient under the croſs, when they conſider him, and have him for an example. Or elſe it may reſpect the grace of patience, which he is the author of, for all grace comes from him; and he from hence may be called the God of patience, as his word, which is the means of it, is the word of his patience; and it is by his ſtrength that ſaints are ſtrengthened unto all patience, and long-ſuffering: and to be directed into this, or to the exerciſe of it, is of great uſe under afflictions from the hand of God, and under the reproaches and perſecutions of men, and under divine deſertions, and want of an anſwer of prayer, and under the temptations of ſatan, and in an expectation of the heavenly glory. And the heart is never more in the exerciſe of this, than when it is directed into the love of God; ſee Rom. v. 2, 3, 4, 5. Or this may refer to that patience of which Chriſt is the object, and be underſtood, either of a patient bearing the croſs for his ſake; for every believer has a croſs to take up and bear for Chriſt, and which is to be born conſtantly, chearfully, and patiently; and nothing more ſtrongly animates to ſuch a patient bearing of it, than a ſenſe of the love of God; ſo that a being directed into that, leads alſo to this: or as our verſion points out the ſenſe, it may be underſtood of a patient waiting for the ſecond coming of Chriſt. Chriſt will certainly come a ſecond time, tho' when he will come is uncertain; and his coming will be very glorious, in itſelf, and of great advantage to the ſaints: hence it becomes them, not only to believe it, hope for it, love it, and look for it, but to wait patiently for it; which being directed to by the Spirit of God, is of great uſe unto them in the preſent ſtate of things.

Ver. 6. Now we command you, brethren, &c.] The Apoſtle is now come to the main thing itſelf, he has in view in this part of the Epiſtle, which is to encourage a regard to the diſcipline of God's houſe; and to exhort this church, to excommunicate, or remove from communion all diſorderly perſons; and thoſe who are to do this, he points out, and calls upon, and even commands; and theſe are the fraternity, the brethren, the ſociety of believers, all the members of the church; for to them to whom belongs the power of receiving members, to them only belongs the power of excluding offenders: the executive power lies in the hands of the elders or paſtors of churches; they are the perſons by whom the church receives or caſts out members; but the power of judgment, or of determining who ſhall be received into, or who ſhall be removed from communion, lies in the church, and not in the paſtors and elders only; whoever therefore take upon them to receive, or refuſe, or caſt out members of themſelves, and at their own pleaſure, act the part of Diotrephes, 3 John 9, 10. The authority for removing diſorderly perſons from communion, is an apoſtolical command, we command you; who are the Apoſtles of Chriſt, immediately ſent by him, who had their miſſion and commiſſion from him, and which were confirmed by miracles; theſe had a greater power and authority than the ordinary miniſters of the word; they were the ambaſſadors of Chriſt, ſtood in his ſtead, repreſented him, and acted in his name; what they ſaid, he ſpake by them; and it was all one, as if he had ſpoke it himſelf: and that this might appear not to be of them, but of him, 'tis added, in the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; that is, by his power and authority, if they had any regard to that, or to his honour and glory: that ye withdraw yourſelves from every brother that walketh diſorderly; by a brother is meant, not one in a natural or civil ſenſe, who is ſo by blood, or by neighbourhood, by being of the ſame country, or of the ſame human ſpecies, ſince all are of one blood; but one in an eccleſiaſtical ſenſe, a church member, who is called a brother, tho' he may not be really a child of God, one of the brethren of Chriſt, or born of the Spirit; yet being a fellow-citizen with the ſaints, and of the houſhold of God externally, he bears this character; and ſuch an one only is cognizable by a church, who have nothing to do to judge them that are without, only them that are within: and every brother in this ſenſe falls under their notice; every one that is a member, whether male or female, for this word includes both; and as the ſiſters, as well as the brethren, ſtand in the ſame relation, are in the ſame church-ſtate, partake of the ſame ordinances, and enjoy the ſame privileges, they are obliged to regard the ſame rules of the Goſpel, and duties of religion, and in caſe of diſorder, to be withdrawn from: and this alſo regards every brother, of whatſoever ſtate or condition, bond or free, high or low, rich or poor; no partiality is to be uſed, no preference to be given to one above the other; a poor member in a diſorder is not to be bore hard upon, whilſt a rich one is winked and connived at: and it alſo reſpects the brethren, whether private members, or officers of the church; for not only the former, but alſo the latter, when they walk diſorderly, whether in the diſcharge of their office, or in any other part of their conduct, are liable to the notice and cenſure of the church: and which is only to be done when any of them walk diſorderly; not for every diſorder they are guilty of; there's no man lives without ſin; and church members have their infirmities, and will have, as long as they are in the fleſh, or in the body; and they are not to be made offenders for a word, or for a ſingle diſorder, or for the common infirmities of life; nor are the juſt to be ſet aſide for a thing of nought, or a ſmall offence, and that not continued in: it is one thing to be guilty of a diſorder, and another thing to walk diſorderly; which denotes a way, a courſe, a ſeries of diſorder, and proceeding on in it, a going from evil to evil, an increaſing to more ungodlineſs; for walking is a progreſſive action, and diſorderly perſons don't ſtop, but grow worſe and worſe; for they take pleaſure in their diſorders; they chuſe their own ways, and delight in their abominations; the paths of ſin are pleaſant paths to them: and they are diſorderly walkers, who pertinaciouſly and ſtubbornly continue in their diſorders, notwithſtanding the admonitions of private perſons, and of the whole church; and of this ſort there are ſuch that walk diſorderly in the world, in the commiſſion of notorious and ſcandalous ſins, ſuch as uncleanneſs, intemperance, covetouſneſs, &c. and that walk diſorderly in families; milies; as huſbands that are not affectionate to their wives, and provide not for their houſhold; and wives that are not in ſubjection to their huſbands; parents that provoke their children to wrath; and children that are diſobedient to their parents; maſters who give not that which is fit and equal to their ſervants; and ſervants that deſpiſe their maſters becauſe they are brethren, when they ſhould ſerve them the more chearfully, becauſe faithful and beloved: and alſo that walk diſorderly in churches, that fill not up their places, but neglect attendance with the church, on the word and ordinances; and who are contentious and quarrelſome, and will not ſubmit to the ſentiments of thoſe who are ſuperior to them in number and ſenſe; and likewiſe ſuch who entertain bad notions and principles, derogatory to the grace of God, the perſon and offices of Chriſt, and the operations of the Spirit; who walk not in the truth, nor according to the ſtandard of the word of God; and eſpecially ſuch are deſigned here, who are buſy bodies, and idle perſons, who work not at all, but live at the tables, and upon the ſubſtance of others, as appears from ver. 11. Theſe act contrary to the order and decorum of nations, towns and families, and to that which God has fixed among mankind; and to the example of God, and Chriſt as God, who work hitherto and jointly together in providence, and in the government of the world; and to the example which Chriſt, as man, has ſet, and to the example of the Apoſtles, and to their commands: wherefore it follows, and not after the tradition which he received of us; meaning either the Goſpel of Chriſt, which being preached was received, but the walk and converſation of ſome was not agreeable to it; or the ordinances of the Goſpel, and the precepts of religion which the Apoſtles delivered, and were received, and yet due attendance to them was not given; ſee the note on ch. ii. 15. or rather that particular injunction concerning quietneſs, and doing their own buſineſs, and working with their own hands, 1 Theſſ. iv. 11. The Vulgate Latin verſion reads, which they received of us; the ſenſe is the ſame; and the Ethiopic verſion, and not according to the conſtitution we appointed them. Now what is commanded to be done to ſuch diſorderly perſons, by the church, even the whole fraternity, is to withdraw themſelves from them; by which is meant, not only to diſtinguiſh themſelves from them by an orderly and regular converſation, and a ſtrict obſervance of Goſpel-diſcipline, which to do is very right; nor barely to curb and reſtrain the affections towards ſuch perſons, leſt by carrying it as heretofore, in a kind, tender, and affectionate manner, they ſhould take encouragement from hence to continue in their diſorders, as tender parents keep in their affections, and from ſhowing them to their children, when in diſorder, and under their corrections, that they might not ſeem to countenance them in that which is evil, tho' this is alſo very proper; nor alſo merely to contract or ſhut up the hand to ſuch perſons, and refuſe to diſtribute to them, living ſuch an idle life, and in ſuch a diſorderly way, tho' this is what ought to be done; nor does this phraſe only intend a forbidding ſuch perſons their houſes and their tables, not ſuffering them to ſit at the one, nor even to come into the other, not allowing any company and converſation with them, that they may have no opportunity of indulging their lazineſs and tale-bearing, tho' ſo to ſerve them is highly juſt and reaſonable; nor does it deſign only a ſuſpenſion, or a debarring of them from the Lord's table, which ought not to be done to any perſons, whilſt they continue in relation to the church, and members of it; but a removal of them from church communion, or an excommunication of them; which is ſometimes expreſſed by rejecting perſons, caſting them out of the church, and putting them away, and here by withdrawing from them; which are all ſynonymous phraſes, and intend excluſion from the communion of the church. And ſo the Ethiopic verſion here renders it, that ye remove every brother, &c. From this paſſage we learn who they are that are to be excommunicated or removed from the communion of churches; all diſorderly walkers; what the act of excommunication is, it is a withdrawing from them, a ſeparating them from the church, and its communion; and who they are that have the power to do it, the whole fraternity or body of the church; and alſo the authority for it, an apoſtolical command, in the name of Chriſt.

Ver. 7. For yourſelves know how ye ought to follow us, &c.] The Apoſtle goes on to diſſuade from that which denominates perſons diſorderly walkers, and expoſes them to the cenſure of the church, and that partly by the example of the Apoſtles, and partly by their command. He appeals to them, to their knowledge and judgment, it being a thing well known to them, that they ought to walk as they had the Apoſtles for enſamples; for who ſhould they follow but their ſpiritual fathers, ſhepherds, and guides? and eſpecially ſo far as they were followers of Chriſt, as they were, in the caſe referred unto, working with their own hands: for we behaved not ourſelves diſorderly among you; they could appeal to them as witneſſes, and God alſo, how holily, juſtly, and unblameably they walked among them; ſee 1 Ep. ii. 10. and particularly, that they did not live an idle and inactive life among them.

Ver. 8. Neither did we eat any man's bread for nought, &c.] Or freely, at free coſt, without paying for it; he ſignifies, that what they eat, they bought with their own money, and lived on no man, without giving him a valuable conſideration for what they had; tho' if they had not paid in money for their food, they would not have eat it for nought, ſince they laboured among them in preaching the Goſpel to them; and ſuch labourers are worthy of their maintenance, Luke x. 7. tho' the former ſenſe is the Apoſtle's here: but wrought with labour and travel night and day; not only laboriouſly preaching the Goſpel to them, as often as they could have opportunity, but working very hard and inceſſantly with their hands, at the occupations and trades, they had been brought up to; and that of the Apoſtle Paul's was a tent-maker, at which he ſometimes wrought, thereby miniſtring to his own, and the neceſſities of others, Acts xviii. 3. and xx. 34. nor was this inconſiſtent with his learning and liberal education. It was uſual with the Jewiſh doctors to learn a trade, or follow ſome buſineſs and calling of life; ſee the note on Mark vi. 3. The Apoſtle's end in this was, that we might not be chargeable to any of you; or burdenſome to them, they being for the moſt part poor; and the Apoſtles being able partly by their own hand labour, and partly by what they received from Philippi, Phil. iv. 16. to ſupport themſelves, choſe to do it, that they might not lie heavy upon them, and any ways hinder the ſpread of the Goſpel among them, at its firſt coming to them. And ſo Maimonides ſays the ancient Jewiſh doctors behaved, and with a like view: wherefore, ſays he[p], "if a "man is a wiſe man, and an honourable man, and "poor, let him employ himſelf in ſome handicraft "buſineſs, even tho' a mean one, and not diſtreſs "men (or be burdenſome to them); it is better to "ſtrip the ſkins of beaſts that have been torn, than "to ſay to the people, I am a conſiderable wiſe "(or learned) man, I am a prieſt, take care of "me, and maintain me; and ſo the wiſe men have "ordered: and ſome of the greateſt doctors have "been hewers of wood, and carriers of timber, "and drawers of water for the gardens, and have "wrought in iron and coals, and have not required "any thing of the congregation; nor would they "take any thing of them, when they would have "given to them."

Ver. 9. Not becauſe we have not power, &c.] To forbear working, or require a maintenance from the churches to whom we miniſter, ſince Chriſt has ordained, that they that preach the Goſpel ſhould live of the Goſpel; ſee 1 Cor. ix. 4, 5, 6, 14. This the Apoſtle ſays to preſerve their right of claim, when and where they ſhould think fit to make uſe of it; and leſt other miniſters of the word, who could not ſupport themſelves as they did, ſhould be hurt by ſuch an example; and leſt covetous men ſhould make uſe of it to indulge their ſin, and improve it againſt the maintenance of Goſpel-miniſters: wherefore the Apoſtle obſerves to them, that they did not do this, as conſcious that they had no right to demand a ſupply from them, but to make ourſelves an enſample unto you to follow us; for it ſeems there were many idle, lazy perſons among them, who either had no callings or trades, or did not attend to them; wherefore the Apoſtles wrought with their own hands, to ſet an example, who could not for ſhame but work, when they ſaw perſons in ſo high an office, and of ſuch a character, working with labour and travel, night and day, among them.

Ver. 10. For even when we were with you, &c.] At Theſſalonica in perſon, and firſt preached the Goſpel to them, we commanded you, that if any would not work, neither ſhould he eat; the Ethiopic verſion reads in the ſingular number, when I was with you, I commanded you; uſing the above words, which were a ſort of a proverb with the Jews, and is frequently uſed by them, דאי לא אכיל, or לעי לא נגים, that if a man would not work, he ſhould not eat[q]. And again[r], "he that "labours on the evening of the ſabbath (or on "week days) he ſhall eat on the ſabbath-day; "and he who does not labour on the evening of "the ſabbath, from whence ſhall he eat (or what "right and authority has he to eat) on the ſabbath-day?" Not he that could not work thro' weakneſs, bodily diſeaſes, or old age, the neceſſities of ſuch are to be diſtributed to, and they are to be taken care of, and provided with the neceſſaries of life by the officers of the church; but thoſe that can work, and will not, ought to ſtarve, for any aſſiſtance that ſhould be given them by the members of the church, or the officers of it.

Ver. 11. For we hear that there are ſome, &c.] This is the reaſon of the order or command given in ver. 6. for withdrawing from diſorderly perſons. When the Apoſtle was with them, he obſerved that there were idle perſons among them, and therefore gave orders then, that if they would not work, they ſhould not eat; and in his former Epiſtle, having intelligence that there were ſtill ſuch perſons among them, he exhorts them to their duty, and puts the church upon admoniſhing them; and ſtill information is given him, that there were ſome ſuch perſons yet among them; for as the Apoſtle had the care of all the churches upon him, ſo he kept a correſpondence with them, and by one means or another, by ſending meſſengers to them, or by receiving letters from thoſe he correſponded with, he learned the ſtate of them; and his information was generally good, and what might be depended upon; ſee 1 Cor. i. 11. as it was in this caſe relating to ſome perſons: which walk among you diſorderly; and who they were, and which alſo explains ver. 6. are immediately obſerved: working not at all; at their callings, trades, and buſineſſes in which they were brought up, but lived an idle and lazy life: and this was walking diſorderly indeed, even contrary to the order of things before the fall, when man was in a ſtate of innocence; for before ſin entered into the world, Adam was put into the garden of Eden to keep and dreſs it; man was created an active creature, and made for work and buſineſs; and to live without, is contrary to the order of creation, as well to the order of civil ſocieties, and of religious ones, or churches, and even what irrational creatures do not. But are buſy bodies; tho' they work not at all at their own buſineſs, yet are very buſy in other mens matters, and have the affairs of kingdoms, and cities, and towns, and neighbourhoods, and churches, and families, upon their hands; which they thruſt themſelves into, and intermeddle with, tho' they have no buſineſs at all with them: theſe wander from houſe to houſe, and curiouſly enquire into perſonal and family affairs, are tatlers, full of prate and talk, and, like the Athenians, ſpend all their time in telling or hearing new things; and they alſo ſpeak things which they ſhould not; they carry tales from one to another, and privately whiſper things to the diſadvantage of their fellow-creatures and chriſtians, and backbite and ſlander them. Theſe are the peſts of nations and neighbourhoods, the plagues of churches, and the ſcandal of human nature; ſee 1 Tim. v. 13. 1 Pet. iv. 15.

Ver. 12. Now them that are ſuch, &c.] For this was not the caſe and character of them all. Did ſuch practices generally obtain, no community, civil or religious, could ſubſiſt. And the Apoſtle wiſely diſtinguiſhes them from others, that the innocent might not be involved in the charge. We command and exhort by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; uſing both authority and intreaty, taking every way to reclaim them, commanding in the name of Chriſt, and beſeeching for the ſake of Chriſt, that with quietneſs they work; with their own hands, at their proper callings, and ſo ſupport themſelves, provide for their families, and have ſomething to give to them that are in need; by which means they will live peaceable and quiet lives, in godlineſs and honeſty, and not diſturb the peace of neighbourhoods, churches, and families: and eat their own bread; got by their own labour, and bought with their money, and not the bread of others, or that of idleneſs.

Ver. 13. But ye, brethren, &c.] The reſt of the members of the church, who were diligent and induſtrious in their callings, minded their own buſineſs, and did not trouble themſelves with other mens matters, took care of themſelves, and their families, and were beneficent to others: be not weary in well doing; which may be underſtood generally of all well doing, or of doing of every good work; which is well done when done according to the will of God, in faith, and from a principle of love, and in the name and ſtrength of Chriſt, and with a view to the glory of God: or particularly of acts of beneficence to the poor; for tho' the idle and lazy ſhould not be relieved, yet the helpleſs poor ſhould not be neglected. This the Apoſtle obſerves, leſt covetous perſons ſhould make a handle of this, and with-hold their hands from diſtributing to any, under a notion of their being idle and diſorderly; or leſt the ſaints ſhould be tired, and become weary of doing acts of charity thro' the ingratitude, moroſeneſs, and ill manners of poor people; see Gal. vi. 9.

Ver. 14. And if any man obey not our word, &c.] Of command, to work quietly, and eat his own bread, now ſignified by this epiſtle, particularly in ver. 12. note that man; ſome read this clauſe in connexion with the preceding phraſe, by this epiſtle, or by an epiſtle; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion, ſhew or ſignify him by an epiſtle; that is, give us notice of it by an epiſtle, that we may take him under our cognizance, and ſeverely chaſtiſe him, according to the power and authority given us by Chriſt; but that phraſe rather belongs to the preceding words: and the clauſe here reſpects the notice the church ſhould take of ſuch a perſon; not in a private way, or merely by way of admonition and reproof, ſuch as is given before rejection from communion; but by the black mark of excommunication; lay him under cenſure, exclude him your communion, put a brand upon him as a ſcabbed ſheep, and ſeparate him from the flock; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, נתפרש, let him be ſeparated from you; and this ſenſe is confirmed by what follows, and have no company with him; as little as can be in common and civil converſation, leſt he ſhould take encouragement from thence to continue in his ſin, and leſt others ſhould think it is connived at; and much leſs at the Lord's table, or in a ſacred and religious converſation, or in a way of church-fellowſhip and communion: that he may be aſhamed; that he may have his eyes turned in him, as the word ſignifies, and he may be brought to a ſight and ſenſe of his ſin, and be filled with ſhame for it, and loath it, and himſelf on the account of it, and truly repent of it, and forſake it; and this is the end of excommunication, at leaſt one end, and a principal end of it, to recover perſons out of the ſnare of the devil, and return them from the error of their ways: ſo the Jews ſay *, "in matters of heaven (of God or "religion) if a man does not return privately, "מכלימין, they put him to ſhame publickly; and "publiſh his ſin, and reproach him to his face, "and deſpiſe and ſet him at nought until he re-"turns to do well."

Ver. 15. Yet count him not as an enemy, &c.] As an enemy of Chriſt, and the chriſtian religion, as the Jews and pagans were; or as an enemy of all righteouſneſs, as Elymas the ſorcerer was; as one that has an implacable hatred to good men, and a perſecutor of them, and has an utter averſion to them and their principles; nor deal with him in an hoſtile, fierce, furious, and paſſionate manner, as if you were ſeeking his deſtruction, and not his reſtoration. This ſeems to be levelled againſt the Jews, who allowed of hatred to incorrigible perſons: they ſay †, "an hater that is ſpoken of in "the law, is not of the nations of the world, "but of Iſrael; but how ſhall an Iſraelite hate an "Iſraelite? does not the ſcripture ſay, thou ſhalt "not hate thy brother in thine heart? the wiſe men "ſay, when a man ſees him alone, who has com-"mitted a tranſgreſſion, and he admoniſhes him, "and he does not return, lo, it is, מצוה לשנאו, "a commandment to hate him until he repents and "turns from his wickedneſs." But admoniſh, or reprove him as a brother; as one that has been called a brother, and a member of the church, and who, tho' criminal, has no bitterneſs in him againſt the church, or againſt the name of Chriſt, and the doctrines of Chriſt; and therefore ſhould not be treated in a virulent manner, but with a brotherly affection, meekneſs, compaſſion, and tenderneſs; and who indeed is to be reckoned as a brother, whilſt the cenſure is paſſing, and the ſentence of excommunication is executing on him; for till it is finiſhed, he ſtands in ſuch a relation: tho' this alſo may have reſpect, as to the manner of excommunicating perſons, ſo to the conduct of the church to ſuch afterwards; who are not to neglect them, and much leſs to treat them as enemies, in a cruel and incompaſſionate manner; but ſhould enquire, and diligently obſerve, what effect the ordinance of excommunication has upon them, and renew their admonitions and friendly reproofs, if poſſible, to recover them.

Ver. 16. Now the Lord of peace himſelf, &c.] The prince of peace, who is peaceable himſelf, and the author of peace in all his churches, and who requires peace, calls for it, and encourages it: give you peace always by all means; both a conſcience-peace, thro' the blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice of Chriſt, and faith in them, which paſſes all underſtanding, and which, when he gives, none can take away; and a church-peace, being freed from all ſuch diſorderly perſons, and their abetters, the diſturbers of it: and indeed, the way to have true peace and proſperity in churches, is to keep up the diſcipline of God's houſe. The Apoſtle prays for it in faith, upon an obſervance of the rules he had given; he prays for conſtant and perpetual peace, which is greatly to be deſired; and that it might be had by all means, and in every way thro' praying, preaching, adminiſtring the ordinances, laying on cenſures, when neceſſary, and chriſtian converſation. Some copies, and the Vulgate Latin verſion read, in every place; as well as at Theſſalonica. The Lord be with you all; by his preſence, to comfort and refreſh; by his power, to keep and preſerve; by his grace, to aſſiſt; and by his Spirit, to counſel, adviſe, and direct.

Ver. 17. The ſalutation of Paul with mine own hand, &c.] In writing his Epiſtles, the body and ſubſtance of them, he uſed an Amanuenſis, but the ſalutation he wrote with his own hand: which is the token in every Epiſtle; by which they might be known to be true and genuine, and be diſtinguiſhed from counterfeit ones: and the rather he mentions this, that they might be troubled neither by word, nor by ſpirit, nor by epiſtle, as from them, as they had been, ch. ii. 2. for it ſeems that this wicked practice of counterfeiting the Epiſtles of the Apoſtles, or carrying about ſpurious ones, under their name, began ſo early; to prevent which, the Apoſtle took this method, ſo I write, as follows:

AN

EXPOSITION, &c.

The Firſt Epiſtle of PAUL the Apoſtle to TIMOTHY.

TIMOTHY, to whom this Epiſtle is written, was eminent for his early piety and acquaintance with the ſacred ſcriptures; his mother was a Jeweſs, and his father a Greek, which was the reaſon why he was not circumciſed in his infancy. Mention is made in the ſecond Epiſtle to him of his mother Eunice, and grandmother Lois, as believers, and of his knowledge of the ſcriptures from a child: this excellent perſon the Apoſtle meeting with at Lyſtra, and having a good report of him from the brethren there, he choſe him to be his companion in his travels, and to aſſiſt him in the ſpread of the Goſpel; and knowing that it would be very diſagreeable to the Jews to hear the word of God from the lips of an uncircumciſed perſon, he took him and circumciſed him, becoming all things to all, that he might gain ſome. This being done, he went along with him into ſeveral parts, and he made great uſe of him, in preaching the word, planting churches, and writing Epiſtles; he ſent him to various places with meſſages from him, to Corinth, Philippi, and Theſſalonica; and now had left him at Epheſus, where he beſought him to abide for a while; for that he was the biſhop, paſtor, or overſeer of that church is not likely, ſince his reſidence here was not conſtant, and was afterwards called away from hence by the Apoſtle, who deſired his ſtay there, under whom, and by whoſe directions, he acted whilſt there; and ſeeing that this church had elders, biſhops, or overſeers, whom the Holy Ghoſt had ſet over them, whom the Apoſtle called to him at Miletus, and gave them ſome advice and inſtructions. The deſign of Timothy's continuance there was to check growing errors and hereſies, and to take care of, and preſerve the diſcipline of God's houſe; and to charge him with theſe things was the deſign of this Epiſtle; in which he teaches him how to behave himſelf in the church of God, by taking heed to his doctrine and converſation; and gives rules relating to the qualifications of biſhops and deacons, and to the care of widows, and with regard to church cenſures, and the becoming walk and converſation of all ſorts of perſons of every office, age, ſex, rank, and order. This Epiſtle is thought to be written about the year 55.

CHAP. I.

IN this chapter, after the inſcription and ſalutation, the Apoſtle having entreated Timothy to abide at Epheſus, obſerves, that his end was, that he might check the falſe teachers there, whom he deſcribes; and then he gives an account of his Apoſtleſhip, and alſo of his converſion, to the encouragement of ſinners, and to the glory of the grace of God; and cloſes with an exhortation to Timothy to conſtancy and perſeverance in his chriſtian warfare. The inſcription and ſalutation are in ver. 1, 2. and much in the common form; and whereas, when he went into Macedonia, he deſired Timothy to continue at Epheſus, his end was, to reſtrain the falſe teachers from preaching the doctrine they did, which was contrary to the Goſpel, fabulous, uſeleſs, and unedifying, ver. 3, 4. for tho' theſe men ſet up for teachers of the law, they went off, and ſtrayed from its general end, which was love with faith, thro' their ignorance of it, ver. 5, 6, 7. not but that the law itſelf was good, as Goſpel-miniſters full well knew; which is ſaid to prevent an objection againſt them, as laying it aſide as uſeleſs; but the abuſe of it is what is complained of, it being made for ſome perſons, and not for others who are mentioned, between which, and the ſound doctrine of the Goſpel, there is an agreement, ver. 8, 9, 10, 11. which leads on the Apoſtle to obſerve his call to the office of a preacher of it by Chriſt, his qualification for it, and inveſtiture with it, for which he gives thanks, ver. 12. And in order to illuſtrate the grace of God in converting him firſt, and then making him a miniſter of the word, he takes notice of his ſtate and condition before converſion, what a vile ſinner he had been, and of the abundant grace God beſtowed on him in it, ver. 13, 14. And that this caſe of his might not ſeem ſtrange and incredible, he obſerves, that this is the ſum of the Goſpel, that Chriſt came into the world to ſave the chief of ſinners, ſuch an one as he was, ver. 15. And beſides, the end of the Lord in his converſion was, by the pattern of long-ſuffering he ſhewed in him, that others might be encouraged to believe in Chriſt alſo, ver. 16. and then for all this grace beſtowed on him, he aſcribes honour and glory to God, ver. 17. and renews his charge to Timothy to fight manfully againſt the falſe teachers, to which he ſhould be the more induced by the conſideration of the prophecies that went before of him, ver. 18. and to hold faith and good conſcience, which had been dropped by ſome profeſſors; of which inſtances are given in Hymeneus and Philetus, ver. 19, 20.

Ver. 1. Paul an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, &c.] His name was well known to Timothy, and very dear to him; and ſo was his office as an Apoſtle, and which he mentions, not ſo much for Timothy's ſake, but for the ſake of others, that what he delivers in this Epiſtle, might come with its proper weight and authority, and be regarded: of this his office, as well as name, ſee the note on Rom. i. 1. How he came into this office next follows, not of himſelf, nor by men, but by the commandment of God; the appointment and decree of God, by which he was ſeparated to this office, even from eternity, and is the ſame with the counſel or will of God, Eph. i. 1. or it may refer to the order given by the Holy Ghoſt to the church, to ſet apart him and Barnabas to the work of the miniſtry, Acts xiii. 2. tho' this commandment is called the commandment of God our Saviour; by whom is meant God the Father; and this character of him is mentioned, to ſhow that the embaſſy the Apoſtle was ſent on as ſuch, and in which the diſcharge of his office greatly lay, was the affair of ſalvation, to publiſh and declare that to the ſons of men; and alſo to ſhow the concern which God the Father has in that work: he reſolved upon it, and appointed his people to it, and determined upon ſaving them by his Son, whom he pitched upon to be his ſalvation; he drew the ſcheme of it by his infinite wiſdom, and ſent his Son into the world to execute it; and he ſends his miniſters to publiſh the Goſpel of it, and his Spirit to reveal and apply it to the hearts of his choſen ones; and keeps them by his power unto it, and will at laſt put them into the full poſſeſſion of it; ſo that this character well ſuits with him, to whom it is alſo given, Tit. iii. 4. as well as with his Son Jeſus Chriſt, to whom it is more commonly aſcribed, and from whom he is here diſtinguiſhed: for it follows, and Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which is our hope; who is both the author, and the ground and foundation of the grace of hope of ſalvation, and eternal life; not earthly enjoyments, nor any external thing whatever; not birth-privileges, carnal deſcent, religious education, morality and civility, obedience to the law of Moſes, moral or ceremonial; nor a profeſſion of Chriſt, nor a bare ſubjection to his ordinances, but he himſelf: and there is good ground to hope for pardon thro' his blood, which was ſhed for it; and for juſtification by his righteouſneſs, which is freely wrought out, and freely imputed; and for ſalvation by him, ſince it is in him, and in no other, and is compleatly effected by him, and that for the worſt of ſinners, and is wholly of free grace, and which every one that believes in him ſhall enjoy; and ſo for eternal life, which hope is converſant with; and good reaſon there is for it in Chriſt, ſeeing it is in him, and in his gift; what his grace gives a meetneſs for, and his righteouſneſs a title to; and which he is poſſeſſed of in the name of his people, prepares for them, and will introduce them into. The Complutenſian edition reads, of God the Father, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion, of God, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 2. Unto Timothy my own ſon in the faith, &c.] Not in the fleſh, or by natural deſcent, but in a ſpiritual ſenſe, in the faith of Chriſt; for Timothy was not related to the Apoſtle according to the fleſh, as ſome have thought, but the relation was ſpiritual; tho' the Apoſtle was not properly his ſpiritual father, or the inſtrument of his converſion; for Timothy was a converted perſon, and a diſciple of Chriſt, and well reported of by the brethren, when the Apoſtle firſt met with him, Acts xvi. 1, 2. but he calls him his ſon, either becauſe of his age, being a young man; or becauſe of his affection for him, ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion reads, a beloved ſon; or rather, becauſe he was inſtructed more largely by the Apoſtle into the doctrine of faith; and as a ſon, with a father, ſerved with him in the Goſpel of Chriſt. It may be rendered a true or genuine ſon in the faith, in diſtinction from nominal chriſtians, formal profeſſors and hypocrites. Timothy was a real chriſtian, a true believer, and an hearty and upright profeſſor and preacher of the faith of Chriſt, as well as truly regenerated by the Spirit of God. Grace, mercy, and peace from God our Father, and Jeſus Chriſt our Lord; the Arabic verſion reads, and Lord Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. The form of ſalutation is the ſame as in all the Epiſtles of the Apoſtle, only that mercy is here inſerted; and when he wiſhes grace to Timothy, he may mean a freſh diſcovery of the love and free favour of God unto him, and an increaſe of grace in him, and of the gifts of the Spirit upon him; and by mercy he may intend a freſh application of the pardoning mercy of God, thro' Chriſt, and all aſſiſtance and ſucceſs in his work as a miniſter, and all ſuccour and ſupport under every trial and exerciſe, and mercy at the laſt day, or the mercy of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt unto eternal life; and by peace he may deſign peace of conſcience thro' the blood of Chriſt, and all proſperity, temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal. And all this being wiſhed for equally from Chriſt, as from God the Father, is a proof of the proper deity of our Lord.

Ver. 3. As I beſought thee to abide ſtill at Epheſus, &c.] Where it ſeems he now was, being left here by the Apoſtle, and where he was deſired by him to continue: when I went into Macedonia; not when he went his firſt journey there, for Timothy was then along with him, Acts xvi. 3, 12. and ſo he ſeems to be in his journey thro' it, in Acts xx. 3, 4. It may be this may refer to a journey which Luke has given no account of: that thou mighteſt charge ſome, that they teach no other doctrine; than the doctrine of Chriſt and his Apoſtles; than what had been preached by the Apoſtle at Epheſus, and the ſaints there had received; than what was agreeable to the ſcriptures of truth, and was according to godlineſs; for all other doctrines muſt be divers and ſtrange ones: nor would he have them teach in another way, in new words, but hold faſt the form of ſound words; for new words often produce new doctrines: the Apoſtle perhaps by other doctrine chiefly reſpects the doctrine of juſtification by the works of the law. It ſeems as if there were ſome teachers in this place the Apoſtle was ſuſpicious of, or he had heard that they began to innovate in the doctrine of faith; wherefore he deſires Timothy to continue a while, in order to be a check on theſe perſons, and to charge them not to introduce any new doctrine; for it was only ſome, and not all that taught there, he was ſo to charge. Some refer this to hearers, and render the words, that they follow no other doctrine; but it ſeems beſt to underſtand it of teachers; the Syriac and Arabic verſions render the words as we do.

Ver. 4. Neither give heed to fables, &c.] Old wives fables, ch. iv. 7. or Jewiſh fables, Tit. i. 14. the traditions of the elders; any thing that was not true; or if it was, yet idle, vain, trifling, and unprofitable: and endleſs genealogies; not of deities, as the Theogony of the Gentiles, or the ten Sephirot or numbers in the Cabaliſtic tree of the Jews, or the Æones of the Gnoſticks and Valentinians, which are ſaid to proceed from one another, as ſome have thought; but both the public and private genealogies of the Jews, which they kept to ſhew of what tribe they were, or to prove themſelves prieſts and levites and the like; of which there was no end, and which often produced queſtions and debates. By reaſon of their captivities and diſperſions, they were much at a loſs to diſtinguiſh their tribes and families. Some care Ezra took of this matter, when the Jews returned from the Babyloniſh captivity. It is ſaid [a], that עשרה יוחסין, "ten genealogies (or ten ſorts of perſons genealogized) came "out of Babylon; prieſts, levites, Iſraelites, prophane (or unfit for the prieſthood, though they "ſprung from prieſts) proſelytes, freemen (ſervants made free) baſtards, Nethinim or Gibeonites, ſuch whoſe father was not known, and "thoſe that were took up in the ſtreets." Theſe Ezra brought up to Jeruſalem thus diſtinguiſhed, that they might be taken care of by the Sanhedrim, and kept diſtinct; but theſe would often intermix and cauſe diſputes; and ſometimes theſe mixtures were connived at thro' partiality or fear [b]. "Says, "R. Jochanan, by the temple, it is in our hands, "(the Gloſs adds, to diſcover the illegitimate families of the land of Iſrael) but what ſhall I do? "for lo, the great men of this age are hid (or "impure): in which he agreed with R. Iſaac, "who ſaid, the family that is hid, let it be hid. "Abai alſo ſaith, we have learned this by tradition, there was a family of the houſe of Tzeriphah, beyond Jordan, and a Son of Zion, (a famous man, a man of authority) ſet it at a diſtance, (proclaimed it illegitimate) by his authority. And again, there was another, and he "made it near (or pronounced it right) by his "power.——Again, there was another family, and "the wiſe men would not diſcover it." By which we may ſee what management there was in theſe things, and what a foundation was laid for queſtions and debates. Of theſe public and private genealogies, ſee the note on Matt. i. 16. to which may be added what R. Benjamin ſays [c] of ſome Jews in his time, who were the Rechabites, and were very numerous, and had a prince over them of the houſe of David; and, adds he, they have a genealogical book; ומשגרות שאלות, and extracts of queſtions, which I ſhould be tempted to render cluſters of queſtions, which are with the head of the captivity; and this comes very near to what our Apoſtle here ſays. And when it is obſerved, that Herod, that he might hide the meanneſs of his deſcent and birth, burnt all the genealogical writings in the public archives [d], it muſt be ſtill more difficult to fix the true account of things; and for the loſs of the genealogical book, the public one, the Jews expreſs a very great concern: for they ſay [e], that "from "the time the book of genealogies was hid, the "ſtrength of the wiſe men was weakened, and the "light of their eyes grew dim. Says Mar Zutra, "between Azel and Azel, (that is, between 1 Chron. "viii. 38. and ch. ix. 44.) there's need of four "hundred camel loads of commentaries." So intricate an affair, and ſuch an endleſs buſineſs was this. And this affair of genealogies might be now the more the ſubject of enquiry among judaizing chriſtians, ſince there was, and ſtill is, an expectation among the Jews, that in the times of the Meſſiah theſe things will be ſet aright. Says Maimonides [f]; "in the days of the king Meſſiah, when "his kingdom ſhall be ſettled, and all Iſrael ſhall "be gathered to him, יתייחסו כולם, they ſhall all "of them be genealogized, according to his word, "by the Holy Ghoſt, as it is ſaid, Mal. iii. 3. he "ſhall purify the ſons of Levi, and ſay, this is a "genealogized prieſt, and this is a genealogized "levite; and ſhall drive them away who are not "genealogized (or related) to Iſrael, as it is ſaid, "Ezra ii. 63. Hence you learn, that by the Holy "Ghoſt they ſhall be genealogized, thoſe that arrogate and proclaim their genealogy; and he "ſhall not genealogize Iſrael but by their tribes, "for he ſhall make known that this is of ſuch a "tribe, and this is of ſuch a tribe; but he ſhall "not ſay concerning ſuch an one he is a baſtard, "and this is a ſervant; for ſo ſhall it be, that the "family that is obſcure ſhall be obſcure." Or elſe the genealogical account of their traditions may be meant, which they trace from Moſes to Joſhua, from Joſhua to the elders, from the elders to the prophets, from the prophets to the men of the great ſynagogue, and from one doctor to another [g]; which to purſue is endleſs, tedious, and tireſome: which miniſter queſtions; as the traditions of the elders, and the genealogical account of them did; the Talmud is full of the queſtions, debates, contentions, and deciſions of the doctors about them: rather than godly edifying, which is in faith; and which is the principal end of preaching, hearing, and converſation; and that may be called godly edifying, or the edification of God, as it may be rendered, which he is the author of, and which he approves of, and is by, and according to his word; or that in which ſouls are built up, an habitation for God, and are built up in faith and holineſs, and by an increaſe of every grace: and this is in faith, not only in the grace of faith, but by the doctrine of faith, on which the ſaints may build one another, and by which they are edified thro' the faithful miniſtration of it by the miniſters of the word; when fabulous ſtories and diſputes, about genealogies, are uſeleſs and unedifying: not that the Apoſtle condemns all genealogies, ſuch as we have in the writings of the Old Teſtament, and in the Evangeliſts, nor all enquiries into them, and ſtudy of them, which, rightly to ſettle, is in ſome caſes of great importance and uſe, but the private and unprofitable ones before mentioned. Some copies read, the diſpenſation of God, which is in faith; meaning the diſpenſation of the myſteries of grace, which are in the doctrine of faith, which becomes a faithful ſteward of them, and not fables and genealogies, which iſſue in queſtions, quarrels, and contentions.

Ver. 5. Now the end of the commandment is charity, &c.] By the commandment may be meant, the order given to Timothy, or the charge committed to him; ſee ver. 18. to forbid the teaching of another doctrine, and to avoid fables and endleſs genealogies; the end and deſign of which was to cultivate peace, to maintain and ſecure brotherly love, which cannot long ſubſiſt, when a different doctrine is introduced and received; and to promote godly edification, which is brought about by charity or love, for charity edifies; but is greatly hindered by ſpeculative notions, fabulous ſtories, and genealogical controverſies and contentions: or by it may be intended, the miniſtration of the Goſpel, called the commandment, ch. vi. 14. becauſe enjoined the preachers of it by Chriſt; the end of which is to bring perſons to the obedience of faith, or to that faith which works by love, to believe in Chriſt, to love the Lord, his truths, ordinances, people, and ways; or rather the moral law is deſigned, which is often called the commandment, Rom. vii. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. ſince of this the Apoſtle treats in ſome following verſes; the end and deſign, ſum and ſubſtance, completion and perfection of which law are love to God, and love to one another; ſee Matt. xxii. 36, 37, 38, 39. Rom. xiii. 8, 9. Gal. v. 14. which charity or love, when right, ſprings out of a pure heart; which no man has naturally; every man's heart is naturally impure; nor can he make it pure, by the ſtrength of nature, or by any thing that he can do: there are ſome that are pure in their own eyes, and in the eſteem of others, and yet are not cleanſed from their filthineſs, and are inwardly full of all manner of impurity; tho' there are ſome that have pure hearts, and they are ſuch, who have clean hearts created in them by the Spirit of God; who are regenerated and ſanctified by him; whoſe hearts are purified by faith; and who have their hearts ſprinkled from an evil conſcience by the blood of Chriſt; and who are not double-minded, ſpeak with a heart and a heart, but whoſe hearts are ſincere and upright, and without hypocriſy; ſo that charity or love, from ſuch a heart, is love without diſſimulation, which is not in tongue and words only, but in deed and in truth; 'tis an unfeigned love, or loving with a pure heart fervently. And of a good conſcience; there is a conſcience in every man, that accuſes or excuſes, unleſs it is cauterized or ſeared; but this conſcience is naturally evil and defiled, and does not perform its office aright; either it takes no notice of, and is not concerned about ſin, and has no remorſe for it, or it takes notice of little things, and lets paſs greater ones, or ſpeaks peace when deſtruction is at hand: a good conſcience is a conſcience purified by the grace of God, and purged from dead works by the blood of Chriſt; under the influence of which a man acts uprightly in the diſcharge of his duty, and exerciſes a conſcience void of offence towards God and man; and charity, proceeding from ſuch a conſcience, is of the right kind: and of faith unfeigned; with which a man really, and from the heart, believes what he profeſſes; ſo did not Simon Magus, and all other temporary believers, whoſe faith is a feigned faith, a dead and inactive one; whereas true faith is an operative grace; it is attended with good works, and particularly it works by love: and that charity or love, which ſprings from faith unfeigned, is unfeigned love alſo, ſuch as anſwers the deſign, and is the ſubſtance of the commandment. Theſe words may be conſidered in a gradation, or as a ſpiritual genealogy, in oppoſition to the endleſs ones before mentioned, thus; that charity which is the end of the commandment, comes out of a pure heart, out of which proceeds a good conſcience, and from thence faith unfeigned. But the other way of interpreting ſeems beſt.

Ver. 6. From which ſome having ſwerved, &c.] The Apoſtle in this verſe, and the next, deſcribes the perſons he ſuſpected of teaching other doctrines, and of introducing fables and endleſs genealogies; they were ſuch who departed from the above things; they erred from the commandment, or law, notwithſtanding their great pretenſions to a regard unto it; at leaſt they miſſed the mark, the end and deſign of it; they went aſtray from that, and inſtead of promoting charity or love, created feuds, contentions, and diviſions in the churches; and were far from having a pure heart, being filthy dreamers, and ſenſual perſons, deſtitute of the Spirit of God, and were ſuch who put away a good conſcience, and made ſhipwreck of faith: ſuch were Hymeneus, Philetus, Alexander, and others, of whom he alſo ſays, they have turned aſide to vain jangling; which he elſewhere calls empty talk, and vain bablings, ch. vi. 20. 2 Ep. ii. 16. from the ſolid doctrines of the Goſpel, and a ſolid way of handling them, they turned to vain, idle, uſeleſs, and unprofitable ſubjects of diſcourſe, and to treating upon ſubjects in a vain, jejune, and empty manner; entertaining their hearers with fooliſh and trifling queſtions and anſwers to them about the law, and with ſtrifes about words, which were unſerviceable and unedifying; they were unruly and vain talkers, Tit. i. 10.

Ver. 7. Deſiring to be teachers of the law, &c.] They were very fond of being called Rabbi, Rabbi, and ſtiled doctors of the law, and of being thought to have ſkill in interpreting the law, and good talents in expounding it, and preaching upon it; which was now moſt in vogue, and gained the greateſt applauſe, when the preaching of the Goſpel was treated with contempt, not only by the unbelieving Jews, but by judaizing chriſtians, and carnal profeſſors. Underſtanding neither what they ſay, nor whereof they affirm; they did not underſtand the law, the nature and end, the purity and ſpirituality, and perfection of it, which they were ſo fond of teaching, and went into many fooliſh and unlearned queſtions about it; ſee 2 Tim. ii. 23. Tit. iii. 9. and which they as fooliſhly anſwered: theſe are the ignorant and unlearned men, who, notwithſtanding their vain ſhow of learning, and pretence to ſkill in interpreting the law, wreſted the ſcriptures to their own deſtruction, and that of others; they were ignorant of the things they talked of, and knew not by what arguments to confirm them, and yet were very bold and confident in their aſſertions: and generally ſpeaking ſo it is, that thoſe who can prove leaſt, aſſert moſt, and that with the greateſt aſſurance.

Ver. 8. But we know that the law is good, &c.] The Apoſtle ſays this to prevent an objection that might be made to him, that ſeeing he bore ſo hard on ſuch who were fond of being teachers of the law, he was himſelf againſt the law, and the preaching and proper uſe of it; but this he would not have concluded, for he and his fellow-labourers in the miniſtry, and all true believers know, from the ſcriptures of truth, from the agreement of the law with the Goſpel, and from their own experience, that the law is good, provided it be uſed in a lawful way, and to lawful purpoſes: and this is to be underſtood not of the ceremonial law, which was now diſanulled, becauſe of the weakneſs and unprofitableneſs of it, ſo that there was no lawful uſe of that; but of the moral law, which muſt needs be good, ſince the author of it is God, who is only good; and nothing but good can come from him:

the law, ſtrictly moral, is a copy of his nature, tranſcribed out of himſelf, as well as with his own hands; and is a declaration of his will, and is enſtamped with his authority, and therefore muſt be good: the matter of it is good, it contains good, yea great and excellent things; the matter of it is honeſtly and morally good, as to love mercy, do juſtice, and walk humbly with God: and it is pleaſantly good to a regenerate man, who loves it, and delights in it after the inner man, and ſerves it with his Spirit; tho' the carnal mind cannot be ſubject to it, but rejects it, and rebels againſt it: and it is alſo profitably good; for tho' obedience to it is not profitable to God, yet it is to men; and tho' eternal life is not obtained hereby, nor any reward given for keeping it, yet in keeping it there is a reward; and that peace is enjoyed, which the tranſgreſſors of it are ſtrangers to: it is good in the uſes of it, both to ſinners and to ſaints. To ſinners it is uſeful for the knowledge of ſin, to convince of it, and bring them to a ſenſe of it, and concern for it, which is effectually done, when the Spirit of God ſets in with it, or brings this commandment home to the heart; and if it has not this uſe, it is ſometimes a means of reſtraining men from ſin, which is the uſe of civil laws among men; and if it has not this, it is of uſe however to accuſe men rightly of ſin, and to pronounce juſtly guilty before God for it, to curſe them as they deſerve it, and to ſentence to condemnation and death: and to believers it is of uſe, tho' they are not under it as in the hands of Moſes, and as a covenant of works, and are freed from its curſe and condemnation, and under no obligation to ſeek for life and righteouſneſs by it; to them it is of uſe, to point out to them what is the will of God, and what ſhould be done, and not done; and it is a rule of walk and converſation to them, as in the hands of Chriſt; and is as a glaſs to them to behold their own deformity, the impurity of their nature, the plague of their own hearts, and the imperfection of their obedience; by which they ſee the inſufficiency of their own righteouſneſs, how far they are from perfection, and what carnal creatures they are, when compared with this law: and as this ſerves to put them out of conceit with themſelves, ſo it tends to make Chriſt and his righteouſneſs more lovely and valuable in their eſteem; who has wrought out a righteouſneſs as broad and as long as the law is, and by which it is magnified and made honourable, and has delivered them from its curſe and condemnation. And this law is good as it is holy, in its author, nature, and uſe; and as it is juſt, requiring juſt things, and doing that which is juſt, by acquitting thoſe who are intereſted in Chriſt's righteouſneſs, and in condemning thoſe that have no righteouſneſs; and as it is a ſpiritual and perfect law, which reaches the ſpirit and ſoul of man, and is concerned with inward thoughts and motions, as well as outward actions; and eſpecially the end of it, the fulfilling end of it is good, which is Jeſus Chriſt, who was made under it, came to fulfil it, and has anſwered all the demands of it: ſo that it muſt be good, and which cannot be denied, if a man uſe it lawfully; for if it is uſed in order to obtain life, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation by the works of it, or by obedience to it, it is uſed unlawfully; for the law does not give life, nor can righteouſneſs come by it; nor are, or can men be ſaved by the works of it; to uſe the law for ſuch purpoſes, is to abuſe it, as the falſe teachers did, and make that which is good in itſelf, and in its proper uſe, to do what is evil; namely, to obſcure and fruſtrate the grace of God, and make null and void the ſufferings and death of Chriſt. A lawful uſe of the law is to obey it, as in the hands of Chriſt, the king of ſaints, and lawgiver in his church, from a principle of love to him, in the exerciſe of faith on him, without any mercenary, ſelfiſh views, without truſting to, or depending on, what is done in obedience to it, but with a view to the glory of God, to teſtify our ſubjection to Chriſt, and our gratitude to him for favours received from him.

Ver. 9. Knowing this, that the law is not made for a righteous man, &c.] No man is naturally righteous ſince Adam, excepting the man Chriſt Jeſus: ſome that are righteous in their own opinion, and in the eſteem of others, are not truly and really ſo; none are righteous, or can be juſtified in the ſight of God by the works of the law; thoſe only are righteous men, who are made ſo thro' the imputation of Chriſt's righteouſneſs to them: and ſuch a righteous man is here intended, who believes in Chriſt with the heart unto righteouſneſs, who lays hold on Chriſt's righteouſneſs, and receives it by faith; in conſequence of which he lives ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly, tho' not without ſin, ſince there is no ſuch juſt man upon earth. Now for ſuch a man the law was not made; which muſt be underſtood not of its original conſtitution and make, for it was certainly made for, and given to Adam, who was a righteous man, and was written upon his heart in a ſtate of innocence; and who had a poſitive law made alſo for him, and given to him as a trial of his obedience to this: it was alſo delivered to the Iſraelites on mount Sinai, who were many of them, at leaſt, righteous men; and beſides all this, the law was made for Jeſus Chriſt; he was the end, the mark, and ſcope at which it aimed, and for whoſe ſake it was given to Iſrael, that he might be made under it, and fulfil it. Nor does this expreſſion deny all uſe of the law to a righteous man, which has been pointed out on the preceding verſe, but only removes an unlawful uſe, and a wrong end of the law: it never was made with any ſuch view as to obtain righteouſneſs by it; for, a righteous man, as Adam, in innocence, and all that are juſtified by Chriſt's righteouſneſs need it not for ſuch a purpoſe, becauſe they are already righteous; and ſinners can never attain to righteouſneſs by it, ſince it cannot give life unto them: it is made therefore not for the former with the view now mentioned, but for the latter, and that both for the reſtraining of ſin, and puniſhing of ſinners. The words, δικαιω νομος ȣ κειται, may be rendered, the law does not lie upon a righteous man, or againſt him. It does not lie as a weight or burden on him; its precept does not lie on him, as a taſk to be performed; nor does its penalty, the curſe, lie on him as a puniſhment to be bore by him: it does not lie upon him, nor againſt him, as an accuſing law, its mouth is ſtopped by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, by which he is denominated a righteous man; nor as a terrifying law, and bringing into bondage by its threats and menaces; nor as a rigorous law, obliging to obedience in a forcible and compulſive way; ſeeing there is no need of it, the righteous man delights in it, and chearfully ſerves it, and the love of Chriſt conſtrains him to obey it freely. And much leſs does it lie on him, or againſt him as a curſing or condemning law, ſince Chriſt has redeemed him from the curſe of it. But for the lawleſs and diſobedient; by the lawleſs are meant, not the Gentiles, which were without the written law, but ſuch who have it, and deſpiſe and reject it, and live not according to it, but tranſgreſs it: and the diſobedient deſign ſuch who are unſubjected to it; who are ſons of Belial, children without the yoke; who caſt the law of the Lord behind their backs; who are not, nor can they be ſubject to it without the powerful and efficacious grace of God. Now the law lies upon, and againſt ſuch perſons, as an accuſing, terrifying, curſing, and condemning law. For the ungodly, and for ſinners; by the ungodly are intended, ſuch as are without God in the world, who neither fear God, nor regard man, who neglect and deſpiſe the worſhip of God, and ſay to him, depart from us, Job xxi. 14, 15. and by ſinners are deſigned notorious ones, who are exceeding great ſinners, always ſinning, making ſin their conſtant buſineſs and employment; on and againſt theſe the law lies: for unholy and prophane; ſuch are unholy perſons, who are deſtitute of inward principles of truth and holineſs, and who live unholy lives and converſations; and prophane perſons are thoſe who prophane the name of the Lord by curſing and ſwearing, and who prophane his day, doctrines, and ordinances, and live diſſolute and prophane lives, being abandoned to all ſin and wickedneſs; theſe three couples of wicked men, expreſſed in general terms, ſeem to have reſpect greatly to the moral part of the four precepts of the decalogue, as the following particulars do to the other ſix: for murderers of fathers, and murderers of mothers; tho' there is no law that expreſly mentions this, yet is beyond all doubt a breach both of the fifth and ſixth commands; and if curſing parents, and diſobedience to them, were puniſhable by the law with death, then much more the murder of them; ſee Lev. xx. 9. Deut. xxi. 18. tho' the words will bear to be rendered, for ſtrikers of fathers, and ſtrikers of mothers; and ſo the Syriac and Arabic verſions render them, and againſt this there was an expreſs law, Exod. xxi. 15. According to the Pompeian law, one guilty of parricide was to be ſewed up in a ſack with a dog, a cock, a viper, and an ape, and caſt into the ſea, or into a river[h]: for manſlayers, guilty of the murder of any man, which was always puniſhable with death, and was a breach of the ſixth command; ſee Gen. ix. 6. Exod. xx. 13. and xxi. 12.

Ver. 10. For whoremongers, &c.] Fornicators and adulterers, who were tranſgreſſors of the ſeventh command, Exod. xx. 14. ſee Lev. xx. 10. theſe God will judge, and ſuch ſhall have their portion in the lake that burns with fire and brimſtone: for them that defile themſelves with mankind; who are guilty of ſodomy; ſuch, according to the law, were to die, Lev. xviii. 22. and xx. 13. the wrath of God was revealed from heaven in a very viſible and remarkable manner againſt this abomination, by raining fire and brimſtone upon Sodom and Gomorrha, and upon the cities of the plain, who defiled themſelves in this way: for men ſtealers; who decoyed ſervants or free men, and ſtole them away, and ſold them for ſlaves; ſee the laws againſt this practice, and the puniſhment ſuch were liable to, in Exod. xxi. 16. Deut. xxiv. 7. This practice was condemned by the Flavian law among the Romans[i], and was not allowed of among the Grecians[k]; the death with which ſuch were puniſhed, was ſtrangling, according to the Jews[l]: for liars; who ſpeak what is falſe, againſt their own knowledge and conſcience, and with a deſign to deceive; who lye againſt their neighbours, and act falſly and deceitfully in trade and merchandize, as well as ſpeak that which is not true; ſee Lev. vi. 2. for perjured perſons; who take a falſe oath on any account, and bear falſe witneſs againſt their neighbour. Now upon, and againſt all, and each of theſe, the law lies, as an accuſing, threatning, and curſing law: and if there be any other thing that is contrary to ſound doctrine; the law lies againſt it, takes notice of it, charges with it, condemns and puniſhes for it: by ſound doctrine is meant, the doctrine of the Goſpel, which is in itſelf pure and incorrupt, and is the cauſe of ſoundneſs and health to others; 'tis health to the navel, and marrow to the bones; its doctrines are the wholeſome words of Chriſt, and by them ſouls are nouriſhed up unto eternal life; when the errors and hereſies of men are in themſelves rotten and corrupt, and alſo eat as do a canker. Here it may be obſerved, that there is an entire harmony and agreement between the Goſpel and the law, rightly underſtood and uſed; what is contrary to the one, is alſo to the other; the Goſpel no more countenances ſin than the law does; and whatever is repugnant to the Goſpel, is liable to be puniſhed by the law.

Ver. 11. According to the glorious Goſpel of the bleſſed God, &c.] For no doctrine is ſound, but but what is agreeable to that: this is a very great encomium of the Goſpel. The doctrine preached by the Apoſtles was not only Goſpel, or good news, and glad tidings, but the Goſpel of God; of which he is the author, and which relates to his glory, the glory of all his perfections; which reveals his purpoſes, ſhews his covenant, and exhibits the bleſſings and promiſes of it; and is the Goſpel of the bleſſed God, who is bleſſed in himſelf, and is the fountain of bleſſedneſs to others; and particularly he bleſſes his choſen ones with ſpiritual bleſſings, and which are ſet forth and declared in the Goſpel; for which reaſon this epithet ſeems to be given to God here: and it is a glorious one; it diſcovers the glory of God, of his wiſdom, grace, and love in the ſalvation of men; its doctrines of peace and pardon, righteouſneſs and ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt, are glorious ones; and ſo are its promiſes, being great and precious, all yea and amen in Chriſt, abſolute, unconditional, unchangeable, and irreverſible; its ordinances alſo are glorious ones, being amiable and pleaſant, and not grievous and burdenſome to believers; and it is glorious in its effects, being the power of God unto ſalvation, the means of enlightning the blind, of quickning the dead, of delivering men from bondage and ſervitude, of turning men from ſin and ſatan to God, and of refreſhing and comforting diſtreſſed minds, and of reviving the ſpirits of drooping ſaints, of eſtabliſhing and ſtrengthening them, and nouriſhing them up to eternal life. The Apoſtle adds, which was committed to my truſt; to diſtinguiſh this Goſpel from another, from that of the falſe teachers, which was an inglorious one, and he had nothing to do with; and to ſhew the excellency and worth of it; it being valuable, was deſerving of care and keeping, and was a depoſitum the perſon intruſted with was faithfully and carefully to keep and preſerve.

Ver. 12. And I thank Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, &c.] The ſubject-matter of this thankſgiving being the Apoſtle's call to the miniſtry of the word, and his furniture and fitneſs for it, ſhows, that whilſt others were fond of being teachers, and called doctors of the law, he eſteemed it an high honour and ſpecial favour beſtowed upon him, that he was a preacher of the Goſpel; and that all his gifts and abilities for it were not of himſelf, nor from men, but were owing to the free grace of God, and favour of Chriſt; wherefore he gloried not in them, as if he had not received them, but gives Chriſt the glory of them, and thanks to him for them: who hath enabled me; who gave him all his abilities for the preaching of the Goſpel, and all that ſtrength to perform the various parts of labour and ſervice he was called unto, and all that firmneſs, reſolution, and fortitude of mind he was endued with, to bear and ſuffer what he did for the ſake of Chriſt and his Goſpel. For that he counted me faithful; not that he was ſo antecedent to the grace and gifts beſtowed on him by Chriſt, or that Chriſt foreſaw that he would be ſo, and therefore choſe him for his ſervice; but he counted him faithful, having made him ſo by his grace, and thus he kept him; faithfulneſs being a neceſſary requiſite and qualification for a Goſpel-miniſter, he having a great truſt committed to him, being made a ſteward of the manifold grace and myſteries of God: putting me into the miniſtry. The miniſtry of the word, the work of the miniſtry, or preaching of the Goſpel, the diſpenſation or adminiſtration of it to the ſons of men; this he did not thruſt himſelf into, nor take this honour to, and of himſelf; nor was he put into it by men, but was choſen to it of God, and called unto it by the Spirit, and was placed in it by Chriſt himſelf, who in perſon appeared to him, and made a miniſter of him; ſee Rom. i. 1. Acts ix. 15. and xiii. 2. and xxvi. 16. The Arabic and Ethiopic verſions read, his miniſtry, the miniſtry of Chriſt.

Ver. 13. Who was before a blaſphemer, &c.] Of the name of Chriſt, contrary to which he thought he ought to do many things; and he not only blaſphemed that name himſelf, calling him an impoſtor and a deceiver, but he compelled others to blaſpheme it alſo, Acts xxvi. 9, 11. This, as well as what follows, is ſaid, to illuſtrate the grace of God in his converſion, and call to the miniſtry: and a perſecutor; for not content to ſpeak evil of Chriſt, of his perſon, people, truths and ordinances, he acted againſt them; not only breathed out againſt the diſciples threatnings and ſlaughter, but did many evil things to them and deſtroyed them which called on the name of Chriſt; perſecuted Chriſt in his members, and them beyond meaſure, even unto death, Acts ix. 1, 5, 13, 21. and xxii. 4. Gal. i. 13. And injurious; not barely uſing contumelious and reproachful words of Chriſt, and his people, which is the ſenſe of ſome verſions, and ſeems to be included in the firſt character; but uſing force and violence, and doing injury, not only to the characters, but perſons and properties of the ſaints, making havock of the church, haling men and women out of their houſes, and committing them to priſon; and now it was that Benjamin ravined as a wolf, the Apoſtle being of that tribe; ſee Acts viii. 3. Gen. xlix. 27. But I obtained mercy; the Vulgate Latin verſion reads, the mercy of God; God had mercy on him, unaſked and unſought for, as well as unmerited; God had mercy on him when he was in the career of his ſin, and ſtopped him; and of his abundant mercy begat him again to a lively hope of forgiveneſs and eternal life; and thro' his great love quickned him, when dead in treſpaſſes and ſins; and according to the multitude of his tender mercies, forgave and blotted out all his iniquities; and put him openly among his children, his family and houſhold; and to all this added the grace of Apoſtleſhip: he put him into the miniſtry, and of a blaſpheming and injurious perſecutor, made him a laborious, faithful, and uſeful preacher of the Goſpel. Becauſe I did it ignorantly in unbelief. This is ſaid, not as an extenuation of his ſin, or as an excuſe for himſelf; for this was not the Apoſtle's method, ſince in the next verſe he calls himſelf the chief of ſinners; beſides, ignorance is not an excuſe, but an aggravation of ſin, eſpecially when there are means of knowledge, and theſe are not attended to; and when perſons are not open to conviction, and reject the fulleſt evidence, which was the caſe here: nor can unbelief be pleaded in ſuch a man's favour, who heard what Stephen had to ſay; and tho' he could not reſiſt his wiſdom, received not the truth ſpoken by him, but conſented to his death; moreover, all ſins ſpring from ignorance, and are aggravated by unbelief: but this phraſe deſcribes the Apoſtle's ſtate and condition; he was a poor, blind, ignorant bigot, an unbelieving and hardened creature, and ſo an object of mercy, pity, and compaſſion; and he who has compaſſion on the ignorant, and them that are out of the way, had compaſſion on him. He indeed did not know that Jeſus was the Chriſt, or that his followers were the true church of God; he really thought he ought to do what he did, and that in doing it, he did God good ſervice; he had a zeal, but not according to knowledge; and therefore did not ſin wilfully and maliciouſly againſt light, and knowledge, and conſcience, and ſo not the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt; as ſome of the Phariſees did, and therefore died without mercy, and were not capable ſubjects of mercy, and proper objects of it; nor is it ever extended to ſuch: but this not being the caſe of the Apoſtle, mercy was of ſovereign good-will and pleaſure vouchſafed to him; his ignorance and unbelief were not a reaſon or cauſe of his obtaining mercy, which is always ſhown in a ſovereign way; but a reaſon, ſhewing, that that was mercy that was vouchſafed to him, ſince he was ſuch an ignorant and unbelieving creature. It is a good note of Beza's on the place, en merita preparationis quæ profert apoſtolus; what works, merits, previous qualifications and preparations were there in the Apoſtle, fitting him for the grace and mercy of God, ſeeing in the midſt of his ſins, and in the full purſuit of them, the grace of God laid hold upon him, and mercy was ſhown him? there's nothing between his being a blaſphemer, a perſecutor, an injurious perſon, an ignorant unbeliever, and his obtaining mercy.

Ver. 14. And the grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant, &c.] That is, the love of Jehovah the Father; ſo the Ethiopic verſion reads, the grace of God; of God the Father, ſince he is diſtinguiſhed in the text from Jeſus Chriſt. God is abundant in grace and goodneſs; he is rich and plenteous in mercy; there is an overflow of love in his heart to his choſen people, and in converſion it flows out, and abounds and ſuper-abounds; ſee Rom. v. 20. with faith and love which is in Chriſt Jeſus; theſe are the effects of the love and favour of God diſplayed in converſion, or which the grace of God brings along with it, and implants in the ſoul at that time, as it did in the Apoſtle; for by faith is not meant the faithfulneſs of God to his Son, and to his covenant, oath, and promiſe, which now began viſibly to be made good; nor the faith of the Goſpel committed to the Apoſtle's truſt, which was an high favour; but the grace of faith, which is a pure gift of God, and a diſtinguiſhing inſtance of his grace; for all men have it not, only his elect; and is a moſt precious and excellent grace, and of great uſe and importance: it receives every bleſſing from Chriſt, and gives him all the glory; thro' it much peace, joy, and comfort are enjoyed here, and with it is connected eternal life and ſalvation hereafter: and by love alſo is meant, not the love with which God loves his people, for that is deſigned by the grace of our Lord, tho' there is a very great diſplay of that in converſion, which is a time of love; but the internal grace of love, even love to God, to Chriſt, and to his people, which the Apoſtle was before deſtitute of; but now inſtead of unbelief he had faith, and inſtead of rage and madneſs againſt Chriſt, and the ſaints, his ſoul was filled with love to both. The Arabic verſion reads, with my faith, and my love. The phraſe, which is in Chriſt Jeſus, denotes either that the ſpring of theſe graces is in Chriſt, and that they come from him, in whom all fulneſs dwells; or that he is the object of them, in which they center, and on whom they are exerciſed, and particularly that love to the ſaints was ſhown for his ſake.

Ver. 15. This is a faithful ſaying, and worthy of all acceptation, &c.] This is ſaid, leſt it ſhould be thought ſtrange, or ſcarcely credible, that ſo great a ſinner ſhould be ſaved; as well as to give a ſummary of the glorious Goſpel the Apoſtle was entruſted with; and in oppoſition to fables, endleſs genealogies, and vain jangling, and contentions about the law. The doctrine of Chriſt's coming into the world, and of ſalvation by him, as it is the ſum and ſubſtance of the Goſpel, ſo it is a faithful ſaying; in which the faithfulneſs of God is diſplayed to himſelf, and the perfections of his nature, his holineſs, juſtice, love, grace, and mercy; to his law, which is magnified, and made honourable; to his word of promiſe hereby fulfilled; and to his Son in carrying him thro' the work: and the faithfulneſs of Chriſt is diſcovered herein, both to his Father with whom, and to his friends for whom, he engaged to obtain ſalvation; and the faithfulneſs of miniſters is ſhewn in preaching it, and of other ſaints in profeſſing it, and abiding by it: it is a true ſaying, and not to be diſputed or doubted of, but to be believed moſt firmly; it is certain that God the Father ſent his Son into the world for this purpoſe; and Chriſt himſelf aſſures us, that he came for this end; his carriage to ſinners, and his actions, teſtified the ſame; his works and miracles confirm it; and the numberleſs inſtances of ſinners ſaved by him, evince the truth of it: and it is worthy of all acceptation; or to be received by all ſorts of perſons, learned or unlearned, rich or poor, greater or leſſer ſinners; and to be received in all ways, and in the beſt manner, as the word of God, and not man; with heartineſs and readineſs, and with love, joy, and gladneſs, and with meekneſs, faith, and fear, and by all means; for it is entirely true, abſolutely neceſſary, and ſuitable to the caſe of all, and is to be highly valued and eſteemed by thoſe who do approve and accept of it. It is the chriſtian Cabala, or the evangelical tradition, delivered by the Father to Chriſt, by him to his Apoſtles, and by them to the ſaints, by whom it is cordially received. The Apoſtle ſeems to allude to the Cabala of the Jews, their oral law, which they ſay [m] was delivered to Moſes on mount Sinai, and by him to Joſhua; and by Joſhua to the elders; and by the elders to the prophets; and ſo from one to another to his times: but here he ſuggeſts, that if they would have a Cabala, here is one, that is firm, and true, and certain, and worthy to be received; whereas the Jewiſh one was precarious, yea falſe and untrue. Indeed, ſometimes the words of the prophets are ſo called by them; ſo that paſſage in Joel ii. 13. is called קבלה, Cabala [n], ſomething delivered and received; upon which, one of their commentators [o] has theſe words, "whatever a prophet commands the Iſraelites, "makes known unto them, or exhorts them to, is "a Cabala." And if a prophetic command or admonition, then ſurely ſuch an evangelical doctrine, as follows, is entitled to this character, that Chriſt Jeſus came into the world to ſave ſinners; Chriſt came into the world, being ſent by his Father, but not againſt his will, but with his free conſent: he came voluntarily in the fulneſs of time into this ſinful world, where he was ill treated; and this was not by local motion, or change of place, but by aſſumption of nature; and the end of it was, that he might be the ſaviour of loſt ſinners, as all men are, both by Adam's ſin, and their own tranſgreſſions; tho' he came not to ſave all, for then all would be ſaved, whereas they are not; and if he came to ſave them, he muſt have then ſo far loſt his end; but he came to ſave ſinners, of all ſorts, even notorious ſinners, the worſt and chief of ſinners: and the Apoſtle inſtances in himſelf, of whom I am chief; or firſt; not that he was the firſt in time; Adam was the firſt man that ſinned, tho' Eve was before him in the tranſgreſſion: it is a moſt ſtupid notion, that ſome gave into from this paſſage, as if the ſoul of Adam paſſed from one body to another, till it came to Paul, and therefore he calls himſelf the firſt of ſinners: but his meaning is, that he was the firſt in quality, or the greateſt and chiefeſt of ſinners, not only of thoſe that are ſaved, but of all men, Jews or Gentiles; and this he ſaid not hyperbolically, nor out of modeſty, but from a real ſenſe or apprehenſion he had of himſelf, and his ſins, which were made exceeding ſinful to him; or he was the chief of ſinners, and exceeded all others in his way of ſinning, in blaſpheming the name of Chriſt, and perſecuting his ſaints; otherwiſe his converſation was externally moral, and in his own, and in the opinion of others, blameleſs: he was no fornicator, adulterer, thief, extortioner, &c. but in the above things he went beyond all others, and was a ring-leader in them; and the remembrance of theſe ſins abode with him, and kept him humble all his days; he was always ready to acknowledge them, and expreſs his vileneſs and unworthineſs on account of them: hence he here ſays, not of whom I was, but of whom I am chief. Now ſuch ſinners, and all ſorts of ſinners, Chriſt came to ſave from all their ſins, original and actual; from the law, its curſe and condemnation; from the bondage of ſatan, the evil of the world, and wrath to come, and from every enemy; and that, by his obedience, ſufferings, and death, by fulfilling the law, bearing its penalty, offering himſelf a ſacrifice for ſin, thereby finiſhing it, making reconciliation for it, and bringing in an everlaſting righteouſneſs: and a great ſaviour he is, and an only one; a full, ſuitable, able, and willing ſaviour; a ſaviour of the ſoul, as well as of the body, and of both with an everlaſting ſalvation.

Ver. 16. Howbeit, for this cauſe I obtained mercy, &c.] Tho' ſo great a ſinner, and even the chief of ſinners: that in me firſt Jeſus Chriſt might ſhew forth all long-ſuffering; not that the Apoſtle was the firſt that was converted upon Chriſt's coming to ſave ſinners; for there were many converted before him, and very great ſinners too, and he ſpeaks of himſelf as one born out of due time; unleſs it can be thought that he was the firſt of the perſecutors of the church, upon the death of Stephen, that was converted: but the word firſt, is not an adverb of time, but a noun expreſſing the character of the Apoſtle, as before; and the ſenſe is, that in him, the firſt or chief of ſinners, Jeſus Chriſt exhibited an inſtance of his abundant long-ſuffering exerciſed towards his elect for their ſalvation; he waiting in the midſt of all their ſins and rebellions to be gracious to them; and of this, here was a full proof in the Apoſtle Paul: what long-ſuffering and patience were ſhewed, whilſt he held the clothes of them that ſtoned Stephen, when he made havock, and haled men and women to priſon, and perſecuted them to death? and this was done, for a pattern to them that ſhould hereafter believe on him to life everlaſting; either to thoſe of his fellow-perſecutors, or of others in that age, who ſhould be made ſenſible of their ſins, and by this inſtance and example of grace, be encouraged to believe in Chriſt for life and ſalvation; or to all awakened and convinced ſinners then, and in every age, who from hence may conceive hope of ſalvation in Chriſt for themſelves, tho' ever ſo great ſinners; ſince ſuch patience and long-ſuffering were exerciſed towards, and ſuch grace beſtowed upon, one that had been a ſinner of the firſt rank and ſize, yea, the chief of ſinners: in him was delineated the grace of God, and in his converſion it was painted in its moſt lively colours; and a juſt repreſentation is given of it, for the encouragement of the faith and hope of others in Chriſt. Chriſt is here repreſented as the object of faith; and true faith regards him, looks unto him, and deals with him for eternal life and ſalvation. Our countryman, Mr. Mede, thinks, that the ſenſe is, that the converſion of the Apoſtle Paul was a pattern of the converſion of the Jews in the latter day; and his thought ſeems to be a very good one: the Apoſtle's converſion is a pledge and earneſt of theirs, and ſhowed, that God had not caſt away all that people; and carries in it ſome likeneſs and agreement with theirs: as his, theirs will be in the midſt of all their blindneſs and unbelief; and when they have filled up the meaſure of their ſins; and they will be a nation born at once, ſuddenly, and by the immediate power and grace of God, without the miniſtry of the word, which they will not hear: thus they'll be converted as he was, and become as hearty lovers and friends of the Gentile churches.

Ver. 17. Now unto the king eternal, &c.] This doxology, or aſcription of glory to God, on account of the grace beſtowed upon the Apoſtle, may be conſidered, either as referring to all the three divine perſons, Father, Son, and Spirit, who are the one and only God; and to whom all the attributes of wiſdom, power, eternity, immortality, or incorruptibleneſs, and inviſibility belong; and who are jointly concerned in the grace beſtowed upon any of the ſons of men. Or elſe to God the Father, in agreement with a parallel place in Rom. xvi. 27. who is the only true God, in oppoſition to nominal and fictitious deities, tho' not to the excluſion of the Son and Spirit; and to whom the ſeveral epithets here uſed, may be unqueſtionably given: he has ſhown his wiſdom in the works of creation, providence, and grace; he is the everlaſting king, or the king of ages, or of worlds; he is maker of the worlds, and the governour of them throughout all ages and generations; he only has immortality, and is the incorruptible God, and who is inviſible, whoſe ſhape has never been ſeen, nor his voice heard: or elſe this may be thought to belong to Jeſus Chriſt, ſince it is to him the Apoſtle gives thanks for putting him into the miniſtry; and from him he obtained mercy, and received abundant grace; and he it was who came into the world to ſave ſinners, and who ſhewed forth all long-ſuffering in him, ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. upon which the Apoſtle breaks out into this attribution of glory and honour, and which agrees with Jude 25. And every thing here ſaid is applicable to him; he is the eternal king, whoſe is the kingdom of nature, providence, and grace; his throne is for ever and ever, and of his kingdom and government there is no end; he is the king of ages, as the phraſe may be rendered, and ſo his kingdom is called, מלכות כל עלמים, the kingdom of all ages, Pſ. cxlv. 13. and which endures throughout all generations; and this diſtinguiſhes him from all other kings. Scarce any king ever reigned an age, but Chriſt has reigned, and will reign throughout all ages. No regard is here had, as ſome have thought, to the Æones of the Gnoſticks and Valentinians; but rather the Apoſtle adopts a phraſe into his doxology, frequently uſed by the Jews in their prayers, many of which begin after this manner; "bleſſed art thou, O Lord our God, מלך העולם, "the king of the age, or world, &c." and רבון כל העולמים, Lord of all ages, or worlds, &c.[p] Other attributes and epithets follow, as immortal, or incorruptible. Chriſt is the living God, and the living redeemer; and tho' he died as man, he'll die no more, but ever lives to make interceſſion for his people, and to reign over them, and protect them: who alſo may be ſaid to be inviſible, who was ſo in his divine nature, till manifeſt in the fleſh; and now in his human nature he is taken out of the ſight of men, and is not to be beheld with bodily eyes by men on earth: and he is the only wiſe God; he is the only God, ſo the Alexandrian copy, the Syriac and Vulgate Latin verſions read; not to the excluſion of the Father or Spirit, but in oppoſition to all falſe deities, or thoſe who are not by nature God: and he is the only wiſe God; who is wiſdom itſelf, and of himſelf; and is the fountain of wiſdom, both natural and ſpiritual, unto others; wherefore to him be honour and glory for ever and ever, amen. Chriſt is crowned with honour and glory, and he is worthy of it; and it becomes all men to honour the Son, as they do the Father: he is the brightneſs of his glory, and equal to him; and the glory of deity, of all the divine perfections, and works, and alſo worſhip, ſhould be given him; as well as the glory of ſalvation, and of all the grace the ſons of men partake of; and that not only now, but to all eternity.

Ver. 18. This charge I commit unto thee, ſon Timothy, &c.] After a digreſſion the Apoſtle had made concerning himſelf, his converſion, and call to the miniſtry, he returns to his former ſubject, and original deſign, and renews the charge he gave to Timothy; and which was not only an order to charge others to teach no other doctrine than that of the Goſpel; but includes the charge of preaching it himſelf, and intends the glorious Goſpel of the bleſſed God committed to his truſt, and the whole form of ſound words he had heard of him, and which he had charged him to keep pure and incorrupt: and this was done, according to the prophecies which went before on thee; by which are meant, not the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, tho' of theſe Timothy had a conſiderable ſhare of knowledge from a child, and was hereby greatly qualified to have ſuch a charge committed to him; but then theſe were not prophecies concerning him, but the Meſſiah, his perſon, office, kingdom, and grace: nor are any particular revelations made unto the Apoſtle Paul concerning Timothy intended, of which there is no account; the revelations and viſions he had, related not to men, and their characters, but to doctrines; rather the teſtimonies of the brethren at Lyſtra and Iconium, and the good reports they made of him to the Apoſtle, which promiſed and fore-boded future uſefulneſs, are deſigned; tho' it ſeems beſt of all to underſtand theſe prophecies of ſuch as were delivered out by the prophets in the church, for ſuch there were in thoſe times; who, when Timothy was a child, or a youth, foretold, that he would have great gifts beſtowed upon him, and would be a very uſeful, diligent, laborious, and ſucceſsful preacher of the Goſpel; and therefore the Apoſtle mentions theſe to ſtimulate him the more to the diſcharge of his work, that he might anſwer the prophecies concerning him: for he adds, that thou by them mighteſt war a good warfare; that is, that in conſideration of the charge committed to him, and the prophecies that went before of him, he might be the more induſtrious to fulfil his miniſtry, which is ſignified by a warfare, in alluſion to the ſervice of the levites, which is ſo called, Numb. viii. 24. with zeal and courage, faithfulneſs and integrity: for not that warfare is intended, which is common to all believers; who being enliſted as voluntiers under Chriſt, the captain of their ſalvation, and having on the whole armour of God, fight againſt the world, the fleſh, and the devil; and are more than conquerors thro' him that has loved them: but that warfare, which is peculiar to the miniſters of the word; whoſe buſineſs it is more eſpecially to fight the good fight of faith, and as good ſoldiers of Chriſt, to endure hardneſs for the ſake of him, and his Goſpel; and who beſides the other enemies, have to do with falſe teachers; and their warfare lies in publiſhing and defending the Goſpel of Chriſt, and in contending for it, and in the weakening of ſatan's kingdom, and enlarging the kingdom of Chriſt; and for which the weapons of their warfare are peculiarly made, and are eminently ſucceeded; and when they are uſed to ſuch good purpoſes, by the miniſters of the Goſpel, they war a good warfare.

Ver. 19. Holding faith, and a good conſcience, &c.] By faith is meant, not the grace of faith, but the doctrine of faith, a ſenſe in which it is often uſed in this Epiſtle; ſee ch. iii. 9. and iv. 1. and v. 8. and the holding of it does not intend a mere profeſſion of it, and a retaining of that without wavering, which is to be done by all believers; but a holding it forth in the miniſtry of the word, in oppoſition to a concealing or dropping it, or any part of it; and a holding it faſt, without wavering, and in oppoſition to a departure from it, or any cowardice about it, and againſt all oppoſers: to which muſt be added, a good conſcience; the conſcience is not naturally good, but is defiled by ſin; and that is only good, which is ſprinkled by the blood of Chriſt, and thereby purged from dead works; the effect of which is an holy, upright, and becoming converſation; and which ſeems to be chiefly intended here, and particularly the upright conduct and behaviour of the miniſters of the Goſpel, in the faithful diſcharge of their work and office; ſee 2 Cor. i. 12. Heb. xiii. 18. to which may be added 1 Tim. iii. 9. Which ſome having put away; that is, a good conſcience; and which does not ſuppoſe that they once had one, ſince that may be put away which was never had: the Jews, who blaſphemed and contradicted, and never received the word of God, are ſaid to put it from them, Acts xiii. 46. where the ſame word is uſed as here; and ſignifies to refuſe or reject any thing with deteſtation and contempt: theſe men always had an abhorrence to a good conſcience among men, and to a good life and converſation, the evidence of it; and at length threw off the maſk, and dropped the faith they profeſſed, as being contrary to their evil conſcience: tho' admitting it does ſuppoſe they once had a good conſcience, it muſt be underſtood not of a conſcience cleanſed by the blood of Chriſt, but of a good conſcience in external ſhew only, or in compariſon of what they afterwards appeared to have: and beſides, ſome men, deſtitute of the grace of God, may have a good conſcience in ſome ſenſe, or with reſpect to ſome particular facts, or to their general conduct and behaviour among men, as the Apoſtle Paul had whilſt unregenerate, Acts xxiii. 1. and which being acted againſt, or loſt, is no inſtance of falling from the true grace of God, which this paſſage is ſometimes produced in proof of: concerning faith have made ſhipwrack; which deſigns not the grace, but the doctrine of faith, as before obſerved, which men may profeſs, and fall off from, and entirely drop and loſe. Tho' ſuppoſing faith as a grace is meant, the phraſe, have made ſhipwrack of it, is not ſtrong enough to prove the total and final falling away of true believers, could ſuch be thought to be here meant; ſince perſons may be ſhipwracked, and not loſt, the Apoſtle Paul was thrice ſhipwracked, and each time ſaved; beſides, as there is a true and unfeigned, ſo there is a feigned and counterfeit faith, which may be in perſons who have no true grace, and may be ſhipwracked, ſo as to be loſt.

Ver. 20. Of whom is Hymeneus and Alexander, &c.] The former of theſe is mentioned in 2 Tim. ii. 17, 18. and that part of faith he made ſhipwrack of, or erred in, was the doctrine of the reſurrection of the dead, whereby the faith of ſome nominal believers were overthrown; and this was attended with the putting away of a good conſcience, he ſeemingly before had; for his prophane and vain bablings increaſed to more ungodlineſs: the latter ſeems to be the ſame with Alexander the copperſmith, who did the Apoſtle much evil, 2 Tim. iv. 14. and it may be is the ſame with him who was at Epheſus when the Apoſtle was there, Acts xix. 33, 34. and where he might be now with Hymeneus, with whom he might agree in his erroneous opinions, and therefore are particularly mentioned, Epheſus being the place where Timothy now was. It ſeems by their names that they were both Greeks; Alexander is a known name among the Greeks, ſince the times of Alexander the Great, and even became common among the Jews; ſee the note on Acts iv. 6. and Hymenæus was a name among the Grecians, from Hymen, the heathen God of marriage: one of this name is mentioned among thoſe ſaid to be raiſed from the dead by Æſculapius[q]; there was alſo a biſhop of Jeruſalem of this name[r]. Whom I have delivered to ſatan; not by excommunication, which is the act of a church, and not of a ſingle perſon; but by an apoſtolical power he had of delivering the bodies of men into the hands of ſatan, by him to be tortured and afflicted, in order to bring them to a ſenſe of their ſins, and as a chaſtiſement and correction for them, and a token of God's diſpleaſure at them; ſee the note on 1 Cor. v. 5. That they may learn not to blaſpheme; or that being chaſtized, chaſtized, corrected, or diſciplined; they might not blaſpheme, as they had before done; either by words, contradicting reviling and ſcoffing at the doctrine of the reſurrection; or by their unbecoming lives and converſations, giving themſelves great liberty in ſinning, ſuppoſing there was no truth in that doctrine; whereby they not only blaſphemed the chriſtian religion themſelves, but cauſed it to be evil ſpoken of by others.

CHAP. II.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle exhorts to prayer for all ſorts of men; gives rules and directions about the dreſs of women, and their ſubjection to their huſbands; and concludes with ſome comfort to them. The Apoſtle exhorts to prayer in the firſt place, directs to the ſeveral parts and branches of prayer, and points to the perſons to be prayed for, and what ſhould be prayed for on their account, ver. 1, 2. And next follow the reaſons or arguments engaging to it, which are taken from the agreeableneſs of it in the ſight of God; from the will of God, that all men ſhould be ſaved; from there being but one God of all, and one mediator between God and men; from Chriſt's giving himſelf a ranſom-price for all; and from the Apoſtle being a preacher of the Goſpel to the Gentiles, as well as Jews, ver. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. wherefore he concludes and determines, according to his apoſtolical power and authority, that prayer be made in any place, provided there were faith and purity, and wrath and doubting were laid aſide, ver. 8. Alſo, he exhorts women to appear, eſpecially in public ſervice, in a modeſt and becoming dreſs, and to adorn themſelves with good works, ver. 9, 10. and that they ſhould be ſilent learners, and not teachers, and be in ſubjection to their huſbands, ver. 11, 12. The reaſons of which ſubjection are taken from the formation of Adam before Eve, and from Eve's being deceived, and not Adam, ver. 13, 14. However, for the comfort of women, it is obſerved, that tho' in ſorrow they bring forth children, yet thro' the birth of a ſon, the promiſed Meſſiah, they ſhall be ſaved, who continue in faith, charity, and holineſs, with ſobriety, ver. 15.

Ver. 1. I exhort therefore, that firſt of all, &c.] The two principal parts of public worſhip, being the miniſtry of the word and prayer; and the Apoſtle having inſiſted on the former, in the preceding chapter, in which he orders Timothy to charge ſome that they teach no other doctrine than that of the Goſpel, gives an account of his own miniſtry, and call to it, and of the glorious Goſpel of the bleſſed God, which was committed to his truſt, and ſtirs up Timothy to the faithful and diligent diſcharge of his work and office; now proceeds to the latter, to prayer, and exhorts unto it; either Timothy in particular, for ſo read the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, I exhort thee, or deſire thee; or elſe the church in general; unleſs it ſhould rather be thought to be a charge to Timothy to exhort, and ſo Beza's Claromontane copy reads, exhort thou therefore; but it is commonly conſidered as an exhortation of the Apoſtle's, which he was very urgent in: it was what lay much upon his mind, and he was greatly deſirous that it ſhould be attended unto; for ſo the words may be read, I exhort firſt of all, or before all things; of all things he had to ſay, this was the chief, or it was what he would have principally and chiefly done by others: for this does not ſo much regard the order of time, that prayer ſhould be made early in the morning, in the firſt place, before any thing elſe is done, and particularly before preaching, which ſeems to have been the cuſtom of the primitive ſaints, Acts iv. 31. but the pre-eminence and ſuper-excellency of it; tho' the words may be rendered, I exhort, that firſt, the ſupplications of all be made; and ſo may regard publick prayer, the prayer of the whole church, in diſtinction from private prayer, or the prayer of a ſingle perſon; which is expreſſed by different words, ſupplications, prayers, interceſſions, and giving of thanks: the firſt of theſe, ſupplications, ſignifies ſuch petitions for things that are wanted by men, either by themſelves or others; and that either for their bodies or ſouls, as food and raiment for the one, and diſcoveries of pardoning love, ſupplies of grace, ſpiritual peace, comfort, &c. for the other: and the ſecond word, prayers, ſignifies good wiſhes and deſires, directed and expreſſed to God for things that are in themſelves to be wiſhed for, and deſired of God, either for ourſelves or others: and the next word, interceſſions, intends either complaints exhibited in prayer againſt others that have done injuries; or prayers put up for others, either for the averting of evil from them, or for the beſtowing ſome good thing on them: and the laſt word, thankſgivings, with which requeſts ſhould always be made known to God, deſigns that branch of prayer in which thanks are given to God for mercies received, whether temporal or ſpiritual: and theſe are to be made for all men; not only for all the ſaints, for all the churches of Chriſt, and miniſters of the Goſpel; nor only for near relations and friends, according to the fleſh; but for all the inhabitants of the country and city, in which men dwell, the peace and proſperity of which are to be prayed for; yea, for enemies, and ſuch as reproach, perſecute, and deſpitefully uſe the ſaints, even for all ſorts of men, Jews and Gentiles, rich and poor, high and low, bond and free, good men and bad men: for it cannot be underſtood of every individual that has been, is, or ſhall be in the world; millions of men are dead and gone, for whom prayer is not to be be made; many in hell, to whom it would be of no ſervice; and many in heaven, who ſtand in no need of it; nor is prayer to be made for ſuch who have ſinned the ſin unto death, 1 John v. 16. beſides, giving of thanks, as well as prayers, are to be made for all men; but certainly the meaning is not, that thanks ſhould be given for wicked men, for perſecutors, and particularly for a perſecuting Nero, or for hereticks, and falſe teachers, ſuch as Hymeneus and Alexander, whom the Apoſtle had delivered to ſatan. But the words muſt be underſtood of men of all ſorts, of every rank and quality, as the following verſe ſhews.

Ver. 2. For kings, and for all that are in authority, &c.] For ſupreme governours, as the emperor of Rome, and kings of particular nations; and for all ſub-governours, or inferior magiſtrates, as procurators or governours of provinces, and proconſuls, and the like; all that were in high places, and acted under the authority of thoſe that were ſupreme; theſe are particularly mentioned, the then governours, whether ſupreme or ſubordinate, who were avowed enemies, and violent perſecutors of the ſaints; and it might be a ſcruple with ſome of them, them, whether they ſhould pray for them, and therefore the Apoſtle enjoins it; and this in oppoſition to the notions and practices of the Jews, who uſe to curſe the heathens, and pray for none but for themſelves, and thoſe of their own nation: that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life, in all godlineſs and honeſty; which does not merely deſign the end of civil government by kings and magiſtrates, which is to preſerve the peace and quiet of the commonwealth; to protect the perſons and properties of men, that they may poſſeſs their own undiſturbed; and to ſecure to them their civil and religious rights and liberties, that they may have the free uſe and exerciſe of religion, ſignified by all godlineſs; and to encourage morality and virtue, expreſſed by honeſty; and ſo is an argument for prayer, taken from the advantage of civil government: nor does this clauſe only point out the duty of ſaints to live peaceably under the government they are, and not diſturb it; to mind only their religious exerciſes among themſelves, and behave honeſtly and morally among men, as they generally ſpeaking are, the quiet in the land; but alſo expreſſes the thing to be prayed for; and the ſenſe is, that ſince the hearts of kings are in the hands of the Lord, and he can turn them as he pleaſes, prayer ſhould be made to him for them, that he would either convert them, and bring them to the knowledge of the truth, they now perſecuted; or at leaſt ſo diſpoſe their hearts and minds, that they might leave off to perſecute, and ſo ſaints might live peaceably under them, enjoy their religious liberty, and be encouraged in their moral converſation. The Arabic verſion renders it, that they may be preſerved; that is, kings, and all in authority. It is a ſaying of R. Hananiah, or Ananias, the ſagan of the prieſts[s], "pray for the peace or ſafety of the "kingdom; (one of their commentators on it "adds[t], even of the nations of the world, which "is remarkable, and agrees with the exhortation "of the Apoſtle) for if there was no fear "of that, men would devour one another alive."

Ver. 3. For this is good and acceptable in the ſight of God our Saviour.] Not only to live peaceably and quietly under the government men are, ſince that is the ordination of God, and to live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly, which his grace teaches; but to pray for all ſorts of men, and for thoſe who are ſet in the higheſt place of government, even tho' enemies and perſecutors: this is good in itſelf, and in the ſight of an omniſcient God, who ſees not as man ſeeth; and it is acceptble unto him thro' Jeſus Chriſt, by whom every ſacrifice of prayer or praiſe is ſo; for by God our Saviour is meant God the Father, who is the ſaviour of all men, in a way of providence, and the ſaviour of all the elect in a way of ſpecial grace; ſee the note on ver. 1.

Ver. 4. Who will have all men to be ſaved, &c.] The ſalvation which God wills that all men ſhould enjoy, is not a mere poſſibility of ſalvation, or a mere putting them into a ſalvable ſtate; or an offer of ſalvation to them; or a propoſal of ſufficient means of it to all in his word; but a real, certain, and actual ſalvation, which he has determined they ſhall have; and is ſure from his own appointment, from the proviſion of Chriſt as a Saviour for them, from the covenant of grace, in which every thing is ſecured neceſſary for it, and from the miſſion of Chriſt to effect it, and from its being effected by him: wherefore the will of God, that all men ſhould be ſaved, is not a conditional will, or what depends on the will of man, or on any thing to be performed by him, for then none might be ſaved; and if any ſhould, it would be of him that willeth, contrary to the expreſs words of ſcripture; but it is an abſolute and unconditional will reſpecting their ſalvation, and which infallibly ſecures it: nor is it ſuch a will as is diſtinguiſhable into antecedent and conſequent; with the former of which it is ſaid, God wills the ſalvation of all men, as they are his creatures, and the work of his hands; and with the latter he wills, or not wills it, according to their future conduct and behaviour; but the will of God concerning man's ſalvation is entirely one, invariable, unalterable, and unchangeable: nor is it merely his will of approbation or complacency, which expreſſes only what would be grateful and well-pleaſing, ſhould it be, and which is not always fulfilled; but it is his ordaining, purpoſing, and determining will, which is never reſiſted, ſo as to be fruſtrated, but is always accompliſhed: the will of God, the ſovereign and unfruſtrable will of God, has the governing ſway and influence in the ſalvation of men; it riſes from it, and is according to it; and all who are ſaved God wills they ſhould be ſaved; nor are any ſaved, but whom he wills they ſhould be ſaved: hence by all men, whom God would have ſaved, cannot be meant every individual of mankind, ſince it is not his will that all men, in this large ſenſe, ſhould be ſaved, unleſs there are two contrary wills in God; for there are ſome who were before ordained by him unto condemnation, and are veſſels of wrath fitted for deſtruction; and it is his will concerning ſome, that they ſhould believe a lye, that they all might be damned; nor is it fact that all are ſaved, as they would be, if it was his will they ſhould; for who hath reſiſted his will? but there is a world of ungodly men that will be condemned, and who will go into everlaſting puniſhment: rather therefore all ſorts of men, agreeable to the uſe of the phraſe in ver. 1. are here intended, kings and peaſants, rich and poor, bond and free, male and female, young and old, greater and leſſer ſinners; and therefore all are to be prayed for, even all ſorts of men, becauſe God will have all men, or all ſorts of men, ſaved; and particularly the Gentiles may be deſigned, who are ſometimes called the world, the whole world, and every creature; whom God would have ſaved, as well as the Jews, and therefore heathens, and heathen magiſtrates were to be prayed for as well as Jewiſh ones. Moreover, the ſame perſons God would have ſaved, he would have alſo come to the knowledge of the truth; of Chriſt, who is the truth, and to faith in him, and of the truth of the Goſpel, as it is in Jeſus; not merely to a notional knowledge of it, which perſons may arrive unto, and not be ſaved, but a ſpiritual and experimental knowledge of it; and all that are ſaved are brought to ſuch a knowledge, which is owing to the ſovereign will, and good pleaſure of God, who hides the knowledge of Goſpel truths from the wiſe and prudent, and reveals them to babes: whence it appears, that it is not his will with reſpect to every individual of mankind, that they ſhould thus come to the knowledge of the truth; for was it his will they ſhould, he would, no doubt, give to every man the means of it, which he has not, nor does he; he ſuffered all nations to walk in their own ways, and overlooked their times of ignorance, and ſent no meſſage nor meſſenger to inform them of his will; he gave his word to Jacob, and his ſtatutes unto Iſrael only; and the Goſpel is now ſent into one part of the world, and not another; and where it does come, it is hid to the moſt; many are given up to ſtrong deluſions to believe a lye, and few are ſavingly and experimentally acquainted with the truths of the Goſpel; though all that are ſaved are brought to the knowledge of ſuch truths, as are neceſſary to ſalvation; for they are choſen to it thro' ſanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth.

Ver. 5. For there is one God, &c.] This does not ſo much regard the unity of God, with reſpect to himſelf, or his divine eſſence, though that is a truth; but does not carry in it any apparent and forcible reaſon why all men ſhould be prayed for, for which it is produced; but the unity of God with reſpect to men, as that there is but one God, who is the creator of all men, and who, in a providential way, is the ſaviour of all men; and in a way of ſpecial grace is the one God, the one covenant God of all ſorts of men, of Jews and Gentiles; for he has taken of the latter into the covenant of his grace, as well as the former, and has loved them with a ſpecial and diſtinguiſhing love, has choſen them in Chriſt to ſalvation, and has ſent his Son to redeem them; and of theſe he calls by his grace, regenerates, ſanctifies, adopts, pardons, and juſtifies; ſee Rom. iii. 29, 30. and therefore all ſorts of men, Gentiles as well as Jews, are to be prayed for: another argument follows, and one mediator between God and men; a mediator is of more than one, and has to do with two parties; and theſe at variance among themſelves, between whom he ſtands as a middle perſon; his buſineſs is to bring them together, and make peace between them; and ſuch an one is Chriſt: the two parties are God and his elect, who in their nature-ſtate are at a diſtance from God, and at enmity to him, and who have broken his law, and affronted his juſtice; Chriſt ſtands as a middle perſon, a day's man between them, and lays his hands upon them both; has to do with things pertaining to the glory of God, and makes reconciliation for the ſins of the people; brings them that were afar off nigh to God, and makes peace for them by the blood of his croſs, by fulfilling the law, and ſatisfying juſtice for them; in conſequence of this, he appears for them in the court of heaven, intercedes and pleads for them, is their advocate, and ſees that all covenant bleſſings, of which he is the mediator, are applied unto them, and preſerves their perſons, which are committed to his car eand charge, ſafe to everlaſting happineſs: and this mediator is the man Chriſt Jeſus; not that he is a mere man, for he is truly and properly God; or that he is a mediator only according to the human nature: it was proper indeed that he ſhould be man, that he might have ſomething to offer, and that he might be capable of obeying, ſuffering, and dying, and ſo of making ſatisfaction in the nature that had ſinned; but then, had he not been God, he could not have drawn nigh to God on the behalf of men, and undertook for them, and much leſs have performed; nor would his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice have been available to cleanſe from ſin, to procure the pardon of it, juſtify from it, make atonement for it, or make peace with God: the reaſon why he is particularly mentioned as man, is, with a view to the argument in hand, praying for all men; ſince he who is the mediator between God and man, has aſſumed a nature which is common to them all: and this mediator is ſaid to be one, not ſo much in oppoſition to other mediators, angels or ſaints departed, tho' it is a truth, and ſtands full againſt them, but with reſpect to men; there is but one mediator between God, and all ſorts of men, through whom both Jews and Gentiles have an acceſs to God, and peace with him; and therefore prayer thro' this mediator ſhould be made for all. So the Jews ſay of the Meſſiah [u], that he is, אמצעי אל, a mediator, God, a middle perſon between God and men. And they call him, עמודא דאמצעיתא, the pillar of mediation [w], or the middle pillar; that is, the mediator or reconciler. And Philo [x] the Jew ſpeaks of the word, as μεσος, a middle perſon, and ſtanding in the middle between the dead and the living, and between God and men. The Ethiopic verſion here renders it, there is one elect of God; which is one of the characters of the Meſſiah, Iſ. xlii. 1.

Ver. 6. Who gave himſelf a ranſom for all, &c.] What the mediator gave as a ranſom for men is himſelf, his body and his ſoul, which were both made an offering for ſin; and his life, which is the reſult of union between ſoul and body; his whole human nature as in union with his divine perſon, and ſo might be truly ſaid to be himſelf: this he gave into the hands of men, of juſtice and of death; and that voluntarily, which ſhows his great love to his people; and alſo as a ranſom, or a ranſom-price for them, αντιλυτρον, in their room and ſtead; to ranſom them from the ſlavery of ſin, and damnation by it, from the captivity of ſatan, and the bondage of the law, and from the grave, death, hell, ruin, and deſtruction: and this ranſom was given for all; not for every individual of mankind, for then all would be delivered, freed, and ſaved, whereas they are not; or elſe the ranſom-price is paid in vain, or God is unjuſt to receive a ſufficient ranſom-price from Chriſt, and yet not free the captive, but puniſh the perſon for whom he has received ſatisfaction; neither of which can be ſaid. But the meaning is, either that he gave himſelf a ranſom for many, as in Matt. xx. 28. for the Hebrew word, כל, to which this anſwers, ſignifies ſometimes many, a multitude, and ſometimes only a part of a multitude, as Kimchi obſerves [y]; or rather it intends, that Chriſt gave himſelf a ranſom for all ſorts of men, for men of every rank and quality, of every ſtate and condition, of every age and ſex, and for all ſorts of ſinners, and for ſome out of every kindred, tongue, people, and nation, for both Jews and Gentiles; which latter may more eſpecially be deſigned by all, as they are ſometimes by the world, and the whole world; and ſo contains another argument, why all ſorts of men are to be prayed for, ſince the ſame ranſom-price is given for them; as that for the children of Iſrael was the ſame, for the rich as for the poor. We [z] read, that when the people of Iſrael comforted the high-prieſt upon the death of his wife, or any relation, they uſed to ſay to him, אנו כפרתך, we are thy atonement, expiation, or ranſom; that is, as the commentators [a] explain it, by us thou ſhalt be atoned, for we will be in thy room and ſtead, with reſpect to all things that ſhall come upon thee; but here the high-prieſt and mediator is the atonement and ranſom for the people: to be teſtified in due time; or a teſtimony in his own times; that is, the ſum and ſubſtance of what is before ſaid is the Goſpel, which is a teſtimony concerning the perſon, office, and grace of Chriſt, exhibited in the times of the Meſſiah, or the Goſpel-diſpenſation. Some copies read, the myſtery, which is another word often uſed for the Goſpel; for that that is intended, appears by what follows.

Ver. 7. Whereunto I am ordained a preacher, and an Apoſtle, &c.] He was ordained or appointed to be a preacher of the Goſpel from all eternity, and was ſeparated or ſet apart unto it in time, and was put into the miniſtry of it by Chriſt himſelf, and was not a common or ordinary preacher of the word, but an Apoſtle, an extraordinary officer in the Goſpel-church. I ſpeak the truth in Chriſt, and lye not; which are a ſort of an oath, or an appeal to Chriſt the omniſcient God, for the truth of what he ſaid, concerning his ordination to the Goſpel; ſee a like phraſe in Rom. ix. 1. The phraſe, in Chriſt, is left out in the Alexandrian copy, and in three of Beza's ancient copies, and in ſome others, and in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions: a teacher of the Gentiles in faith and verity; the Goſpel of the uncircumciſion, or which was to be preached to the uncircumciſed Gentiles, was committed to this Apoſtle; and his work and miniſtry lay among them, and therefore he is called the Apoſtle of the Gentiles: and ſo he was in faith and verity; which may regard the ſubject-matter of his teachings and miniſtry; it was the faith and truth of the Goſpel, even the whole of it, the faith which was once delivered to the ſaints, and the truth as it is in Jeſus; or elſe the character of the Apoſtle, as a teacher, that he was a true and faithful one, who with all integrity and veracity, fully and faithfully preached the Goſpel; and ſince he was appointed a teacher of it to the Gentiles, this is another argument why they, as well as the Jews, ſhould be prayed for.

Ver. 8. I will therefore that men pray every where, &c.] In this declaration of the Apoſtle's will concerning prayer, he only takes notice of men; not but that it is both the duty and privilege of women, as well as men, to pray in their houſes and cloſets; but becauſe he is ſpeaking of public prayer in the church, which only belongs to men, he ſpeaks only of them; and his will is, that prayer ſhould be performed by them every where, or in any place, in any part of the world where they lived. Now was the prophecy in Mal. i. 11. fulfilled, and now was the time come our Lord refers to, John iv. 21. This ſeems to be ſaid in oppoſition to a Jewiſh notion, that the temple at Jeruſalem was the only place for prayer, and that prayer made elſewhere ought to be directed towards that. The Jews ſay [b], that “ there is no way for the prayers “ of the nations of the world to aſcend, ſeeing the “ gates of heaven are only opened in the land of “ Iſrael. —— And again, that the prayers with- “ out the land have no way to go up before the “ Lord, but the Iſraelites ſend them without the “ land over-againſt Jeruſalem; and when they “ come to Jeruſalem, from thence they remove, “ and aſcend above.——No prayer aſcends above “ from that place in which it is made, till it come “ to the land of Iſrael, and from thence to Jeru- “ ſalem, and from thence to the ſanctuary, and “ then it aſcends above.” They have alſo many rules concerning places of private prayer, as that care ſhould be taken that it be not in a place where there is any filth, or any bad ſcent [c]. Lifting up holy hands; lifting up of hands was a prayer-geſture among the heathens [d], and ſo it was among the Jews [e]. R. Simeon lift up his hands in prayer to the bleſſed God, and prayed his prayer. Yea, they [f] ſay, “ it is forbidden a man to lift up his “ hands above, except in prayer, and in bleſſings “ to his Lord, and ſupplications, as it is ſaid, Gen. “ xiv. 22. which is interpreted of lifting up of hands “ in prayer.” And this was an emblem of the elevation of the heart in prayer to God, without which the former would be of little avail. It is an obſervation of the Jews [g], we have found prayer without lifting up of hands, but we never found lifting up of hands without prayer. And theſe hands muſt be holy and pure; there muſt be purity of heart, and cleanneſs of hands, or a freedom from any governing ſin, which renders prayer unacceptable unto God; ſee Iſ. i. 15, 16. The Apoſtle alludes to a cuſtom of the Jews, who always uſed to waſh their hands before prayer; ſee Judith xii. 7, 8. So it is ſaid [h] of the Septuagint interpreters, that after the Jewiſh manner they waſhed their hands and prayed. The account Maimonides gives [i], is this; “ cleanneſs of hands, how is it done? a “ man muſt waſh his hands up to the elbow, and “ after that pray; if a man is on a journey, and “ the time of prayer is come, and he has no wa- “ ter, if there is between him and water four miles, “ which are eight thouſand cubits, he may go to “ the place of water, and waſh, and after that “ pray. If there is between him more than that, “ he may rub his hands, and pray. But if the “ place of water is behind him, he is not obliged “ to go back but a mile; but if he has paſſed “ from the water more than that, he is not obliged “ to return, but he rubs his hands and prays; “ they do not make clean for prayer but the “ hands only, in the reſt of prayers, except the “ morning prayer; but before the morning prayer “ a man waſhes his face, his hands and feet, “ and after that prays.” But, alas! what does all this waſhing ſignify? Unleſs, as Philo the Jew [k] expreſſes it, a man lifts up pure, and as one may ſay virgin hands, to heaven, and ſo prays. Without wrath, and doubting; or reaſoning, or diſputation in a contentious way: the former of theſe, ſome think, has reference to murmuring, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it, impatience and complaint againſt God in prayer, and the other to doubt and diffidence about being heard, and having the petitions anſwered; for prayer ought to be with praiſe to God, and faith in him: or rather, wrath may intend an angry and unforgiving temper towards men, with whom prayer is made, which is very unbecoming; ſee Matt. v. 23, 24. and vi. 12. 1 Pet. iii. 7. and both that and doubting, or diſputation, may have regard to thoſe heats and contentions that were between the Jews and Gentiles, which the Apoſtle would have laid aſide, and they join together in prayer, and in other parts of publick worſhip, in love and peace. Maimonides [l] ſays, “ men may not ſtand praying, either with laughter, “ or with levity, nor with confabulation, nor with “ contention, nor with anger, but with the words “ of the law.” And it is a ſaying of R. Chanina, “ in a day of wrath, a man may not pray [m].”

Ver. 9. In like manner alſo, &c.] Let the women pray likewiſe; though they are not to lead in prayer, or be the mouth of the church, which would be indecent, yet they are to join with the church in publick prayer; ſee Acts i. 14. and in like manner as the men, with purity of heart and hand, hand; without murmuring and impatience towards God, and without wrath and anger towards others, and in faith, without doubting and diſtruſt: and the Apoſtle proceeds to point out what ſort of dreſs he would have them appear in at the time of prayer, and at any part of publick worſhip; and thus the Ethiopic verſion renders it, ſo let the women be cloathed in prayer, namely as follows; that women adorn themſelves in modeſt apparel: the word rendered apparel ſignifies a long robe, which reaches down to the feet; and the word tranſlated modeſt, ſignifies that which is clean, neat and decent, yea, beautiful and ornamental; and the ſenſe of the Apoſtle is, that he would not have them to come to public worſhip in rags, and in dirty and filthy garments, but, that their bodies ſhould be covered with clean and decent raiment; ſo the Iſraelites waſhed their clothes that they might be ready to meet the Lord at mount Sinai, Exod. xix. 14. The Jews always appeared in their beſt clothes on the ſabbath-day; this is one of their rules: [n] "for " the honour of the ſabbath every man muſt be " clothed, כסות נקייה, with clean or neat apparel; " and clothing on the week-day muſt not be as " clothing on the ſabbath-day; and if a man can " make no change, he muſt let down his Talith " (or upper garment, his cloak;) ſo that his clothing may not be as the clothing of the week- " days, when that was girt up about him." The Apoſtle adds with ſhamefacedneſs and ſobriety; theſe are the two general rules by which dreſs is to be regulated: it is right and proper, when it is conſiſtent with chaſtity, when it is not immodeſt and impudent, and more like the attire of an harlot, than of a woman profeſſing godlineſs; and when it is moderate as well as modeſt, and ſuitable to a perſon's age and ſtation, and is not beyond the circumſtances of life, in which they are. There is no religion or irreligion in dreſs, provided pride and luxury are guarded againſt, and modeſty and moderation preſerved. Not with broidered hair, or plaited, as in 1 Pet. iii. 3. ſee the note there. The Jews had women on purpoſe for this buſineſs; Mary Magdalene is thought to have her name from hence; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 56. Or gold, or pearls or coſtly array: not that the Apoſtle forbids all uſe or wear of ſuch things by proper perſons, whoſe circumſtances would admit of it, and upon proper occaſions, and at proper times: certain it is, that ear-rings and bracelets of gold, and jewels ſet in ſilver and gold, and raiment, coſtly raiment, were ſent by Abraham, and given to Rebekah, and wore by her, who was a woman profeſſing godlineſs: ſo the church in Pſal. xlv. 9, 13, 14. tho' in figurative expreſſions, yet in alluſion to what is literal, and honourable, and commendable, is ſaid to be in gold of Ophir, and her clothing to be of wrought gold, and to be brought to the king in raiment of needle work: but however juſtifiable ſuch a dreſs may be at other ſeaſons, the Apoſtle judged it very improper at the time of public prayer, or at the time of public worſhip; ſeeing it might ſwell the heart of the wearer with pride, ſo as to forget herſelf and the buſineſs ſhe was come about, and draw the eyes of others upon her; and ſo cauſe a general inattention. It was a complaint of Chryſoſtom's many hundreds of years ago, that ſome who came to public worſhip, appeared in ſuch a dreſs, as if they came rather to dance than to pray; ſuch apparel ſhould be avoided: it is ſaid of Pythagoras, [o] that he taught the inhabitants of Crotona, the men literature, and the women chaſtity and modeſty; and by his diſputations, ſo far prevailed upon the latter, as to lay aſide their garments of gold and other ornaments of their dignity, as inſtruments of luxury; all which they brought into the temple of Juno, and dedicated them to that goddeſs; declaring, that ſhamefacedneſs or chaſtity, and not garments, are the true ornaments of matrons.

Ver. 10. But (which becometh women profeſſing godlineſs) &c.] By which is meant not any particular grace, was it, the fear of God might be deſigned, and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it; nor the whole of internal religion only; nor the form of godlineſs, or the whole ſcheme of Goſpel truth, which is according to godlineſs; nor only outward holineſs of life and converſation; but the whole of of all this, all religion, internal and external, the whole of godlineſs, both in a doctrinal and in a practical way. All this, theſe women the Apoſtle gives directions unto, had made a profeſſion of, and had been baptized upon it, and received members of churches; and as yet held their profeſſion: and ſuch perſons it beſt became them, not ſo much to adorn themſelves with any outward adornings, as with good works; ſuch as are mentioned in ch. v. 10. ſee 1 Pet. iii. 3, 4, 5. Good works are like good cloaths, to which the Apoſtle alludes; they don't make perſons men and women, but they adorn them as ſuch; ſo good works, they don't make men and women chriſtians, or believers, but they adorn them as ſuch; they are ornaments to their perſons, and to their profeſſion, and to the Goſpel they profeſs. See Tit. ii. 10.

Ver. 11. Let the woman learn in ſilence, &c.] The Apoſtle goes on to give ſome other inſtructions to women, how they ſhould behave themſelves in public worſhip, in the church of God; he would have them be learners and not teachers, ſit and hear, and learn more of Chriſt, and of the truth of the Goſpel, and to maintain good works; and he would have them learn in ſilence, and not offer to riſe and ſpeak, under a pretence of having a word from the Lord, or of being under an impulſe of the Spirit of the Lord, as ſome frantic women have done; and if they ſhould meet with any thing under the miniſtry of the word, they did not underſtand, or they had an objection to, they were not to ſpeak in public, but aſk their own huſbands at home; ſee 1 Cor. xiv. 34, 35. And thus, they were to behave with all ſubjection; both to the Miniſters of the word, and to their own huſbands; obeying from the heart the form of doctrine delivered to them; and ſubmitting chearfully to the ordinances of Chriſt; the whole of which is a profeſſed ſubjection to the Goſpel, and which becomes all profeſſing godlineſs.

Ver. 12. But I ſuffer not a woman to teach, &c.] They may teach in private, in their own houſes and families; they are to be teachers of good things, Tit. ii. 3. They are to bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; nor is the law or doctrine of a mother to be forſaken, any more than the inſtruction of a father; ſee Prov. i. 8. and xxxi. 1, 2, 3, 4. Timothy, no doubt, received much advantage, from the private teachings and inſtructions of his mother Eunice, and grandmother Lois; but then women are not to teach in the church; for that is an act of power and authority, and ſuppoſes the perſons that teach, to be of a ſuperior degree, and in a ſuperior office, and to have ſuperior abilities to thoſe who are taught by them:

nor to uſurp authority over the man; as not in civil and political things, or in things relating to civil government; and in things domeſtic, or the affairs of the family; ſo not in things eccleſiaſtical, or what relate to the church and government of it; for one part of rule, is to feed the church with knowledge and underſtanding; and for a woman to take upon her to do this, is to uſurp an authority over the man: this therefore ſhe ought not to do, but to be in ſilence; to ſit and hear quietly and ſilently, and learn, and not teach, as in ver. 11.

Ver. 13. For Adam was firſt formed, &c.] Immediately by God, out of the duſt of the earth; and the breath of life was breathed into him, and he became a living ſoul; thus wonderfully and fearfully was he made; after this he was put into the garden of Eden, to dreſs it, and all creatures were brought to him, to give them names; and ſtill an help-meet or a companion was not found for him. All this while Eve was not as yet formed, but after this, then Eve. She was formed out of him, was made out of one of his ribs; and was formed for him, for his uſe, ſervice, help and comfort: and here lies the ſtrength of the Apoſtle's reaſon, why the woman ſhould be in ſubjection to the man; not ſo much becauſe he was made before her; for ſo were the beaſts of the field before Adam; and yet this gave them no ſuperiority to him; but becauſe ſhe was made out of him, and made for him, ſee 1 Cor. 11. 8, 9. So that the woman's ſubjection to the man, is according to the laws of nature and creation; and was antecedent to the fall; and would have been, if that had never been; though that brought her into a lower, and meaner, and more depreſſed eſtate; which the Apoſtle next mentions. The words may be rendered, the firſt Adam, or Adam the firſt was formed, and then Eve. See 1 Cor. xv. 45, 47.

Ver. 14. And Adam was not deceived, &c.] There is no need to ſay with interpreters, that he was not deceived firſt; and that he was not deceived immediately by the ſerpent, but by Eve; and that he is never ſaid in ſcripture to be deceived, as Melchizedech is never ſaid to have a father or mother. The Apoſtle's poſitive aſſertion is to be taken without any ſuch limitations or qualifications; Adam never was deceived at all; neither by the ſerpent, with whom he never converſed; nor by his wife, he knew what he did, when he took the fruit of her, and eat; he eat it not under any deception, or vain imagination, that they ſhould not die, but ſhould be as Gods, knowing good and evil. He took and eat out of love to his wife, from a fond affection to her, to bear her company, and that ſhe might not die alone; he knew what he did, and he knew what would be the conſequence of it, the death of them both; and inaſmuch as he ſinned willfully, and againſt light and knowledge, without any deception, his ſin was the greater: and hereby death came in, and paſſed on all men, who ſinned in him: but the woman being deceived was in the tranſgreſſion; and the ſerpent really beguiled her; ſhe owned it herſelf, Gen. iii.. 13. And this is elſewhere ſaid of her, 2 Cor. xi. 2. which never is of Adam. She really thought the ſerpent ſpoke truth, that ſhe and her huſband ſhould not die, if they eat of the fruit; but that it was good to make them wiſe; and that upon eating it, they ſhould be as Gods, knowing good and evil; and under this deception ſhe fell into the tranſgreſſion, and was the cauſe and means, by her perſuaſions and example, of bringing her huſband into the ſame ſin; which involved him and all his poſterity in ruin and deſtruction. And therefore ſhe is called by the Jews [p] אם העון the mother of iniquity and ſin; to which they refer, Pſ. li. 5. And they ſay, [q] ſhe was the cauſe of death to Adam, and to all the world: ſee the note on Rom. v. 12. And they obſerve [r] the order of the puniſhment of the ſerpent, Eve, and Adam, as of their ſin; the ſerpent was firſt accurſed, then Eve, and laſt of all Adam. They ſay “[s] Samael (the devil) could not ſubvert Adam, “till the ſerpent came and turned the heart of “Eve, and Eve turned his heart, and they both “ſinned; wherefore it is ſaid, the woman which “thou gaveſt me; Samael had no power to turn “him, till Eve came, and ſhe was the cauſe of “his eating.” Now inaſmuch as the ſerpent did not attack Adam, he being the ſtronger and more knowing perſon, and leſs capable of being managed and ſeduced; but made his attempt on Eve, in which he ſucceeded; and ſince not Adam, but Eve, was deceived, it appears that the man is the more proper perſon to bear rule and authority, as in civil and domeſtic, ſo in eccleſiaſtic affairs; and it is right for the woman to learn, and the man to teach: and ſeeing that Eve was the cauſe of tranſgreſſion to Adam, and of puniſhment to him and his poſterity, the ſubjection of the woman to the man was confirmed afreſh; and ſhe was brought into a more depreſſed ſtate of dependance on him, and ſubjection to him; ſee Gen. iii. 16. The Ethiopic verſion renders the text, Adam hath not deceived, the woman hath deceived and prevaricated.

Ver. 15. Notwithſtanding ſhe ſhall be ſaved, &c.] Not Eve, though no doubt ſhe is ſaved; ſince ſhe had a ſenſe of her ſin, and ſhame for it, a revelation of the Meſſiah to her, and faith in him; ſee Gen. iii. 7, 8, 15. and iv. 2. But rather any woman, particularly ſuch as profeſs godlineſs, who ſhall be ſaved in child-bearing; which is to be underſtood not of a temporal ſalvation, or being ſaved thro' child-bearing, thro' the perilous time, and be delivered out of it; for tho' this is generally the caſe, yet not always, not always the caſe of good women. Rachel died in child-bed: the Jews ſay [t] for three tranſgreſſions women die in child-bearing; becauſe they don't take care of their menſtrues, and of the cake of the firſt-fruits, and of lighting the lamp (when the ſabbath approaches.) But ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation is here meant; not that bearing children is the cauſe, condition, or means of ſalvation; for as this is not God's way of ſalvation, ſo it confines the ſalvation of women to child-bearing ones; and which muſt give an uneaſy reflection to maidens, and women that never bore any; but rather the meaning is, that good women ſhall be ſaved, notwithſtanding their bearing and bringing forth children in pain and ſorrow, according to the original curſe, in Gen. iii. 16. And ſo the words adminiſter ſome comfort to women, in their preſent ſituation of ſubjection and ſorrow; though they may be rendered impersonally thus, notwithſtanding there is ſalvation through the birth of a ſon: and the ſenſe is, that notwithſtanding the fall of man by the means of the woman, yet there is ſalvation for both men and women, thro' the birth of Immanuel, the child born, and ſon given; at whoſe birth, the Angels ſung peace on earth, good will to men; through the true Meſſiah, the ſeed of the woman, through the incarnate Saviour, who was made of a woman, there is ſalvation for loſt ſinners: he was born of a woman, and came into the world in order to obtain ſalvation for them; and he has effected it, and it is in him, for all ſuch who apply to him for it; and with it all true believers, men and women, ſhall be ſaved through him, if they continue in faith and charity, and holineſs, with ſobriety. The Vulgate Latin verſion reads in the ſingular, if ſhe continues, &c. but the ſenſe is the ſame; for the ſhe or woman is to be taken in a collective ſenſe, as it is in the context, for many women; even for ſuch as profeſs faith and godlineſs. The Syriac and Ethiopic verſions render the words, ſhe ſhall be ſaved by her children, if they continue, &c. i. e. ſhe ſhall be ſaved by bearing of children, and bringing of them up in a religious way; if they, the children, continue as they were brought up; which is a very ſtrange rendering of the words, and is as ſtrange an interpretation of them; and yet is what many have given into, but needs no confutation. The meaning of the words is, that there is ſalvation thro' the incarnate Meſſiah, for all ſorts of perſons; for all men and women who believe in him, with that faith which works by love, and ſhews itſelf in holineſs and ſobriety; provided that they continue herein. For there are ſome that profeſs theſe things, that have only a temporary faith, and feigned love, and not true holineſs; and theſe fall away, and are not ſaved; but ſuch who have theſe graces in truth, as they do, and ſhall continue in them, ſo they ſhall certainly be ſaved.

CHAP. III.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle treats of the qualifications of officers of churches, biſhops and deacons, and of their wives; and points at the principal reaſon of writing this Epiſtle to Timothy: and firſt, he commends the office of a biſhop, as a good and deſirable one; and aſſerts it to be ſuch in the ſtrongeſt manner, ver. 1. and then follow the qualifications for it, ſome of which are of the œconomical or domeſtic kind, and regard him as an huſband and parent, and the head of a family; others of a moral nature, and relate to ſobriety, hoſpitality, temperance, patience, and liberality; and others of the eccleſiaſtical ſort, as aptneſs to teach, and that he ſhould not be a novice in religion; and in general, that he ſhould be a man of a blameleſs life, and of good report in the world, ver. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. next an account is given of the qualifications of deacons; ſome which concern their moral character; others their ſoundeſs in the faith; and others their domeſtic affairs, and their conduct in their families; about which they ſhould be firſt examined, before they are put into their office; the characters of their wives are alſo given; and for their encouragement in the faithful performance of their office, it is obſerved, that they hereby obtain a good degree of honour and boldneſs in the faith of Chriſt, ver. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. And the end of the Apoſtle's writing this epiſtle, and particularly of giving Timothy this account of the qualifications of the officers of the church of God, is, that he might know whom to appoint over it, and how to conduct in it himſelf; which he commends from its being the houſe of God, the church of the living God, and the pillar and ground of truth, ver. 14, 15. Of which truth, he gives a ſummary, in ſeveral particulars of it, which open the great myſtery of godlineſs, ver. 16.

Ver. 1. This is a true ſaying, &c.] Some think this clauſe belongs to the laſt verſe of the preceding chapter; and then the ſenſe is, this is a doctrine that is true, and to be believed, that there is ſalvation through the birth of a ſon, or through the incarnate ſon of God, for men and women that believe in him, and continue in the faith of him, and love to him, joined with works of righteouſneſs and holineſs. And ſo the ſame phraſe ſeems to belong to what goes before in ch. iv. 8, 9. and 2 Ep. ii. 10, 11. Though it regards what follows in ch. i. 15. and ſo it ſeems that it ſhould be conſidered here; and is uſed to excite attention, and ſuggeſts, that what was about to be ſaid, was of moment and importance, and what was without controverſy, and unqueſtionably true. The Apoſtle having denied to women, the work and office of teaching; proceeds to obſerve, that tho' this belonged to men, yet not to every man; and therefore, he gives the qualifications of ſuch; which might ſerve as a direction to churches, in the choice of them; as well as be a means of ſtirring up perſons in ſuch an office, to a proper regard to themſelves and their work: if a man deſire the office of a biſhop; which is the ſame with that of a paſtor or elder; and ſo here the Syriac verſion renders it, if a man deſires preſbytery, or elderſhip; and it lies in preaching the word, adminiſtering the ordinances of the Gopel, and taking care of the diſcipline of the church, and in the viſiting, inſpection, and overſight of it; as the word επισκοπη, Epiſcopacy, here uſed, ſignifies; and this work and office may be lawfully and laudably deſired, with a view to the glory of God, and the good of immortal ſouls. Nor ſhould any undertake it, but ſuch who find in themſelves an hearty deſire, and inclination to it, on ſuch principles, and a real delight and pleaſure in it; and ſuch an one he deſireth a good work: the office of a biſhop, elder, or paſtor of a church, is a work, and a very laborious one; wherefore ſuch are called labourers in the word and doctrine: it is not a mere title of honour, and a place of profit, but it is a buſineſs of labour and care; yet a good one, a famous and excellent one; it being an employment in things of the greateſt excellency in themſelves, and of the greateſt uſefulneſs for the good of men, and the honour of God; as the doctrines, ordinances, and diſcipline of the Goſpel; and ſo muſt be excellently, honeſtly, pleaſantly, and profitably a good work.

Ver. 2. A biſhop then muſt be blameleſs, &c.] Or an elder, as the Syriac verſion renders it; not that it can be expected that ſuch an one ſhould be entirely free from ſin, or be blameleſs in the ſight of God; but that he ſhould be one, who is ſo before men, and has not been guilty of any notorious and flagitious crime; and particularly, is not chargeable with the vices hereafter mentioned or hinted at. So the prieſts under the law were to be without blemiſh, even in their bodies, Lev. xxi. 17—23. to which the Apoſtle may here allude. The huſband of one wife; which is not to be underſtood in a myſtical and allegorical ſenſe of his being the paſtor of one church, ſince the Apoſtle afterwards ſpeaks of his houſe and children, that are to be ruled and kept in good order by him, in diſtinction from the church of God; but in a literal ſenſe of his conjugal eſtate; though this rule does not make it neceſſary that he ſhould have a wife; or that he ſhould not marry, or not have married a ſecond wife, after the death of the firſt; only if he marries or is married, that he ſhould have but one wife at a time; ſo that this rule excludes all ſuch perſons from being elders, or paſtors, or overſeers of churches, that were polygamiſts; who had more wives than one at a time, or had divorced their wives, and not for adultery, and had married others. Now polygamy and divorces had very much obtained among the Jews; nor could the believing Jews be eaſily and at once brought off of them. And though they were not lawful nor to be allowed of in any; yet they were eſpecially unbecoming and ſcandalous, in officers of churches. So the high-prieſt among the Jews, even when polygamy was in uſe, might not marry, or have two wives at once; if he did, he could not miniſter in his office until he divorced one of them.[v] For it is written, Lev. xxi. 13. he ſhall take a wife, אחת ולא שתים, one, and not two[w]. And the ſame that is ſaid of the high-prieſt, is ſaid of all other prieſts; ſee Ezek. xliv. 22. likewiſe the Egyptian prieſts might not marry more wives than one, though others might have as many as they pleaſed[x]: and ſo the Flamines among the Romans.[y] An elder or paſtor muſt alſo be one that is vigilant; or wakeful and watchful, who is diligent in his buſineſs, and attends to his care and charge; is watchful over himſelf, his words, and actions; and watches for the ſouls of men, to do them all the good he can; and is ſober in body, is temperate, and uſes moderation in eating and drinking; and in mind, is modeſt, humble, and prudent; and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion renders the word, prudent; and the Ethiopic verſion, a wiſe man, one of a ſound judgment, a good underſtanding, and prudent conduct; is not wiſe above what is written, but thinks ſoberly of himſelf, as he ought. The Syriac and Arabic verſions render it, chaſt, as free from intemperance, ſo from uncleanneſs: and of good behaviour; neat and decent in his apparel; modeſt in his whole deportment and conduct, and affable and courteous to all; beautiful in his life and converſation, being adorned with every thing that is graceful and comely: given to hoſpitality; to the love of ſtrangers, and to the entertainment of them; and eſpecially the ſaints and fellow-miniſters, who are exiled, or are travelling for the ſake of ſpreading the Goſpel, or upon ſome lawful and laudable account. Theſe he is to aſſiſt by his advice and counſel, and with the neceſſaries of life, according to his abilities. Abraham and Lot are noted inſtances of this virtue. Apt to teach; who has a conſiderable furniture of knowledge; is capable of interpreting the ſcripture to the edification of others; is able to explain, lay open, and illuſtrate the truths of the Goſpel, and defend them, and refute error; and who is not only able, but ready and willing to communicate to others, what he knows; and who likewiſe has utterance of ſpeech, the gift of elocution, and can convey his ideas of things in plain and eaſy language, in apt and acceptable words; for otherwiſe it ſignifies not what a man knows, unleſs he has a faculty of communicating it to others, to their underſtanding and advantage.

Ver. 3. Not given to wine, &c.] One that does not ſit at it, or is continually drinking it, and is intemperate in the uſe of it; otherwiſe it is lawful for perſons in ſuch an office to drink wine, and ſometimes abſolutely neceſſary; ſee ch. v. 23. it ſignifies one that is not given to much wine, as in ver. 8. is not addicted to it, or a follower of it; the Syriac verſion renders it, who does not tranſgreſs over wine, or go beyond due bounds in the uſe of it, who is not immoderate in it; the Arabic verſion renders it, not inſolent through wine, as one that is heated with it, is fierce and furious, and wrangling and quarrelſome, and often very miſchievous and injurious; and this ſenſe is followed by ſome. No ſtriker; either with his hands, ſo the Syriac verſion, whoſe hand is not ſwift to ſtrike; not one who is nimble and ready at it, who no ſooner is abuſed or injured, but he lifts up his hands and ſtrikes; is but a word and a blow: or with his tongue; ſo the Arabic verſion, not wounding with his tongue; being too ſharp and ſevere in the admonitions and reproofs of weak brethren, or fallen believers; and eſpecially, he ought not to uſe ſcurrilous, reproachful, and contumelious language to any; ſee Jer. xviii. 18. Not greedy of filthy lucre; not covetous of getting money, of amaſſing wealth and riches together; or deſirous of popular applauſe and glory from men. This clauſe is not in the Alexandrian copy, nor in five of Beza's manuſcripts and other copies, nor is it in the Vulgate Latin verſion, nor in any of the Oriental verſions; it ſeems to be tranſcribed from Tit. i. 7. And indeed it is unneceſſary here; ſince the ſame is expreſſed by the word, covetous, at the end of the verſe, and makes that a tautology; and moreover, by leaving out this clauſe, the oppoſition appears more manifeſt, between no ſtriker and what follows, but patient; one who patiently bears all reproaches and injuries, puts up with affronts, and gives up what is his right and due, rather than contend, quarrel, and ſtrike; who is patient towards all men, and does not bear hard on thoſe that have offended, but is moderate and mild, and gentle in his cenſures, reproofs, and admonitions: not a brawler; not a quarrelſome litigious perſon, given to fighting, either with the fiſt or ſword, or any other weapon: not covetous; or a lover of money in an immoderate way, greedy of worldly ſubſtance and riches, and inſatiable in his deſires after them; niggardly, ſordid, and illiberal; acting a mercenary part; ſeeking his own things, and not the things of Chriſt; his gain from his quarter, and not the good of ſouls; and withholding from himſelf, from his family, and the poor, what ought to be enjoyed by them. Whereas on the other hand, he ought to be generous and liberal, hoſpitable, and charitable, and ready to communicate on all occaſions, according to his abilities.

Ver. 4. One that ruleth well his own houſe, &c.] His family, wife, children, and ſervants; and is not to be underſtood of his body, and of keeping of that under, and of preſerving it chaſte and temperate, as appears from what follows: having his children in ſubjection with all gravity; keeping a good decorum in his family; obliging his children to obſerve his orders, and eſpecially the rules of God's word; and not as Eli, who did not uſe his authority, or lay his commands upon his ſons, nor reſtrain them from evil, or ſeverely reprove them for their ſins, but neglected them, and was too mild and gentle with them; 1 Sam. ii. 23. and iii. 13. but like Abraham, who not only taught, but commanded his children and his houſhold, to keep the way of the Lord; Gen. xviii. 19. and ſo ſhould thoſe act who are in ſuch an office as is here treated of; and ſhould not only rule well in their families, preſide over them, go before them, and ſet an example to them, and keep their children in obedience and ſubjection; but this ſhould be with all gravity; not only in the maſter of the family, but in the children; who as their father is, or ſhould be, ſhould be brought up in, and uſed to gravity in words and in dreſs; and in the whole of their deportment and converſation. This may be obſerved againſt the papiſts who forbid marriage to the miniſters of the Goſpel.

Ver. 5. For if a man know not how to rule his own houſe, &c.] Which is an affair of leſs importance, and more eaſy to be done; not requiring ſo much reſolution, prudence, care, and thought: how ſhall he take care of the church of God? preſide over it, rule in it, provide for it, and ſee that every thing is in its proper place, and done according to the will of God. The argument is from the leſſer to the greater.

Ver. 6. Not a novice, &c.] Or one newly planted, the Arabic verſion adds in the faith; meaning not a young man, for ſo was Timothy himſelf; but a young profeſſor and church member; one that is lately come to the knowledge of the truth, and has juſt embraced and profeſſed it, and become a member of a church, a new plant there: ſo the Hebrew word נטע a plant, is by the Septuagint in Job xiv. 9. rendered by this very word. The reaſon why ſuch a perſon ſhould not be a biſhop, elder, or paſtor of a church, is, leſt being lifted up with pride; through the dignity of the office he is advanced to, and the high opinion of men he ſtands in, and the great gifts qualifying him for ſuch a place, he is ſuppoſed to have: for pride on account of theſe, is apt to creep in, and ſwell and elate the minds of young profeſſors eſpecially; ſo that there is danger that he fall into the condemnation of the devil; or of the ſlanderer, as the word is rendered in ver. 11. and the ſenſe then is, leſt he ſhould be cenſured and condemned by ſuch who are given to calumny and detraction, and are glad of any opportunity to reproach and vilify the miniſters of the word: but it is better to underſtand it of ſatan; and then the meaning is, either leſt ſuch an one fall under the cenſure and condemnation of the accuſer of the brethren; or rather leſt he fall into the ſame condemnation and puniſhment the devil is fallen into, their crimes being alike. For it ſeems from hence, that pride was the firſt ſin of the devil, and the cauſe of his apoſtacy from God; being elated with his own knowledge, ſtrength, and dignity; and not being able to bear it, that the human nature ſhould be advanced above that of angels.

Ver. 7. Moreover he muſt have a good report of them which are without, &c.] That is, without the church, as the Arabic verſion reads; for wicked men, though they diſlike the principles and profeſſion of godly miniſters, and deſpiſe their office, yet cannot but ſpeak well of their becoming life and converſation. And this part of their character is neceſſary to invite perſons to hear them, and to recommend their miniſtry to them, as well as for the reaſons that follow: leſt he fall into reproach; into the reproach of men; not only of the world, but of profeſſors of religion; who may be apt to upbraid him with his paſt ſins; eſpecially ſuch that may fall under his cenſures, admonitions, and reproofs, which hereby will become in a great meaſure uſeleſs and ineffectual: and the ſnare of the devil; leſt ſatan ſhould take encouragement from hence to tempt him to other and greater ſins; or leſt finding himſelf ſlighted and deſpiſed by the people of God, becauſe of his former ſins, he ſhould break out into anger and revenge againſt them; or into deſpondency and deſpair in himſelf; or ſhould be negligent of his duty, and timorous of exhorting and reproving others, leſt they ſhould retort upon him, and reproach him with his former crimes. The Jews have a regard to the wiſdom, prudence, gravity, and manners of a man, they appoint as a miniſter of a congregation. Their rule is this[z]: "they don't appoint a meſſenger or miniſter of "a congregation, but he who is the greateſt in the "congregation for wiſdom and works; and if he "is an elderly man, it is the better; and they "take care that the meſſenger or miniſter of the "congregation be a man whoſe voice is pleaſant, "and he is uſed to read: but he whoſe beard "is not full grown, though he is a very conſiderable man, he may not be a miniſter of the "congregation, becauſe of the honour of the congregation."

Ver. 8. Likewiſe muſt the deacons be grave, &c.] The Apoſtle proceeds to give the qualifications, and ſo the rules for chuſing another ſort of officers in the church, deacons; whoſe work and buſineſs is, not to preach the goſpel, and adminiſter ordinances; but to take care of the ſecular affairs of the church, and particularly to ſerve tables; to provide the bread and wine for the Lord's table, to attend at it, and diſtribute the elements from the miniſter to the people, to collect for it, defray the charges of it, and divide what remains among the poor; and they are to take care of the miniſter's table, that he is provided for in a comfortable way, and to ſtir up the members to their duty in this reſpect; and to take care of the poor's table, and diſtribute what the church collects for them, with ſimplicity and chearfulneſs; and are to be helps to the paſtor, in obſerving the walk of members, in compoſing differences between them, in viſiting the ſick and poor, and in preparing matters for church-meetings. Their characters are, that they be grave; in their ſpeech, geſture, and dreſs; honeſt, and of good report among men; and chaſte in their words and actions; all which may be ſignified by the word here uſed; and the latter may be rather hinted at, becauſe of Nicholas, one of the firſt deacons, who was charged with uncleanneſs: not double tongued; whoſe hearts and tongues do not agree together; and who being a ſort of middle perſons between the paſtor and the members of the church, ſay one thing to one, and another to the other; which to do is of bad conſequence: or who ſpeak well to the poor when they apply to them, and promiſe them to do them all the ſervice they can, and when it comes to the upſhot ſpeak againſt them: not given to much wine; which impairs the health, ſtupifies the mind, and ſo renders unfit for any ſuch office, as well as waſtes the temporal eſtate; and may lead them to embezzle and conſume the church's ſtock: not greedy of filthy lucre; for ſuch would with-hold from the poor that which is meet for them, and make uſe of money in their hands, to their own advantage.

Ver. 9. Holding the myſtery of the faith, &c.] The doctrine of the Goſpel called the faith, becauſe [z] Maimon. Hilchot Tephilla, c. 8. §. 11.

---

cauſe it contains things to be believed; propoſes Chriſt the object of faith; is the means by which faith comes, and is unprofitable without it: it is called the myſtery, becauſe it is of divine revelation, and could have never been diſcovered by human reaſon; and now it is revealed, the modus of many things contained in it, remains a myſtery; ſeveral of the doctrines of it are myſterious ones, particularly the doctrine of the trinity; and which the antient Jews call by this very name, [a] רזא דמהימנותא the myſtery of faith; the incarnation of the ſon of God, the union of the ſaints to Chriſt, and their communion with him, and the reſurrection of the dead, with others. Now this myſterious doctrine of faith is to be held by deacons; they are to profeſs it, and to hold faſt the profeſſion of it, and that in a pure conſcience; with a conſcience ſprinkled by the blood of Chriſt; with a conſcience void of offence both towards God and man; with a ſuitable life and converſation; a converſation becoming the Goſpel of Chriſt, and by which it is adorned: and this part of their character is neceſſary, that ſuch may be able to inſtruct and eſtabliſh thoſe who are weak in the faith, and oppoſe and refute the erroneous, and alſo recommend the Goſpel by their own example; otherwiſe ſhould their principles or practices be bad, their influence on others might be very pernicious and fatal.

Ver. 10. And let theſe alſo firſt be proved, &c.] Not that they ſhould be tried in any part of the deacon's office, to ſee how capable they are of performing it; but their internal and external characters are to be looked into and examined, and if they appear to be right, then they are to be approved of, choſen and called unto, and inveſted with the office: then let them uſe the office of a deacon; let them be employed and miniſter in the ſeveral parts and branches of that office: being found blameleſs; not without ſin, but free from any groſs and enormous one; not before God, but in the ſight of men; ſee the note on ver. 2.

Ver. 11. Even ſo muſt their wives be grave, &c.] Some inſtead of wives read women, and underſtand them of Deaconneſſes, ſuch as were in the primitive churches; whoſe buſineſs it was to viſit the poor and ſick ſiſters of the church, and take care of things belonging to them; but it is better to interpret the words, of the wives of the deacons, who muſt be as their huſbands, grave in ſpeech, geſture and dreſs, of an honeſt report, a good behaviour, and chaſte converſation; which will reflect honour and credit to their huſbands: not ſlanderers; or accuſers, and ſo act like devils, as the word is ſometimes rendered; for ſhould they act ſuch a part, and accuſe either the poor, or any of the members of the church wrongfully, or on any trifling occaſion, as perſons addicted to this vice, are wont to do, it would be of bad conſequence: and they alſo ſhould be ſober, temperate, not given to wine; exceſſive drinking is very ſcandalous in the female ſex; and is the rather mentioned here, becauſe women in the eaſtern countries were too frequently addicted to it: faithful in all things; as in the marriage bed, ſo with whatſoever elſe they are entruſted with in the family, and civil concerns of their huſbands; and this is the rather obſerved, becauſe the wives of deacons may be ſometimes entruſted with the church's ſtock in their huſband's abſence, to impart to the poor.

Ver. 12. Let the deacons be the huſbands of one wife, &c.] See the note on ver. 2. ruling their children and their own houſes well. Theſe qualifications are the ſame with thoſe of the biſhop or elder; ſee the note on v. 4.

Ver. 13. For they that have uſed the office of a deacon well, &c.] With diligence and faithfulneſs, with ſimplicity and chearfulneſs; taking good care of the miniſter and poor, and of the diſcipline of God's houſe: purchaſe to themſelves a good degree; not an higher office, as that of preſbytery or epiſcopacy, which is a ſenſe calculated to ſerve a hierarchy; nor a degree in glory and happineſs hereafter; but rather an increaſe of gifts and grace; or a degree of reſpect and honour in the church: or the ſenſe is, they poſſeſs and enjoy, which is the meaning of the word rendered, purchaſe, a very honourable office in the church; and which is ſo to them, they uſing it well, and diſcharging it in an honourable manner; unleſs the Apoſtle ſhould deſign what the Jews called דרגא דמהימנותא a degree of faith; [b] but that is expreſſed in the next clauſe: and great boldneſs in the faith, which is in Chriſt Jeſus; either in the exerciſe of the grace of faith at the throne of grace; or in aſſerting the doctrine of faith before men; and in reproving either for error or immorality; all which may be boldly done by thoſe who uſe this office well.

Ver. 14. Theſe things write I unto thee, &c.] Concerning the offices of biſhops and deacons, their ſeveral qualifications and the rules of judging of perſons fit for ſuch ſervice: hoping to come unto thee ſhortly; at Epheſus. He could not tell whether he could come or no, and therefore makes no promiſe, but hoped he ſhould; and ſince it was uncertain, he thought fit to write the above things for his inſtruction and uſe.

Ver. 15. But if I tarry long, &c.] Or ſhould long delay coming, defer it longer than may be expected; let it be obſerved that theſe things are written, that thou mayeſt know how thou oughteſt to behave thyſelf in the houſe of God; that is, the church of God, as it is afterwards explained; called a houſe, in alluſion either to an edifice, it being a ſpiritual houſe built of lively ſtones, or true believers, upon the foundation Jeſus Chriſt, and who alſo is the door into it; the pillars of it are the miniſters of the goſpel; and the windows are the ordinances, and which alſo are the entertainment in it: or elſe to a family, as this is ſometimes called the houſhold of God, and of faith; the family named of Chriſt, of which he is the maſter; and in which are fathers, young men and children; in which miniſters are ſtewards; and which is regulated by good and wholeſome laws: and it is called the houſe of God, becauſe as an edifice, it is of his building and repairing, and in which he dwells; and as a family, is what he provides for. Now the above things were written to Timothy, that he might know how to order and manage things in this houſe and family; what became him to do himſelf, in the character he was; and what perſons to direct in the choice of, to be officers in it. And of this houſe it is ſaid, which is the church of the living god; in oppoſition to, and diſtinction from the houſes and temples of idols which are inanimate and ſenſeleſs creatures; whereas the true God is the living God, has life in himſelf, eſſentially, originally, and independently, and is the author and giver of life to others. It is added, the pillar and ground of the truth; which holds forth the truth to be ſeen and read of all, as pillars that bear inſcriptions; and which ſupports and maintains truth, as every true church of Chriſt does ſo long as it remains ſo; though truth is the pillar and ground of the church; for if once truth is gone, a church is no more ſo: rather therefore Timothy himſelf is here deſigned; and the ſenſe is, that what was written to him, was with this view, that he might the better know how to conduct himſelf in the church of God, as a pillar and ground of truth, to hold it forth and to ſecure it: miniſters of the goſpel are called pillars, Gal. ii. 9. and that with greater propriety than the Church itſelf, which is before called an houſe: though it may be beſt of all to underſtand it of Chriſt as incarnate, the great myſtery of godlineſs; who as he is the ground and foundation of the church, and all believers, ſo he is the foundation of all true doctrine; and particularly the doctrine of his perſon, as truly God and truly man, is the pillar and ground which ſupports all other truths, and without which they fall to the ground: and ſo this clauſe may be read in connection with the following words, thus; the pillar and ground of the truth, and without controverſy, is the great myſtery of godlineſs, &c. And this way of ſpeaking is uſed by the Jews, both of perſons, and things; ſo Zebulun is ſaid [c] to be עמוד התורה the pillar of the law; and it is ſaid [d] of "the great Sanhedrim in Jeruſalem, "they are the root of the oral law; and they are "עמודי ההוראה the pillars of doctrine; and from "them go forth the ſtatutes and judgments unto "Iſrael;" and the ſame is ſaid of things as of perſons. Maimonides ſays, [e] "the foundation of foun"dations and the pillar of wiſdom, is to know that "there is a firſt being, that gives being to all be"ings;" and R. Sangari, another of their writers, ſays, [f] "there are two things which are "עמודי התורה the pillars of the law; the one is "that the law is from God; the other is that it is "received with a faithful (or ſincere) heart, from "the congregation:" to which may be added, that it is ſaid [g] that "the myſtery of faith is "עקרא וקיומא the root and ground of the world;" all which may ſerve to illuſtrate this paſſage.

[b] Ibid. in Exod. fol. 36. 3.

Ver. 16. And without controverſy great is the myſtery of godlineſs, &c. What follows is ſo, the incarnation of Chriſt, his birth of a virgin, the union of the two natures divine and human in his perſon; this is a myſtery, which though revealed, and ſo to be believed, is not to be diſcerned nor accounted for, nor the modus of it to be comprehended by reaſon: and it is a great one, next, if not equal, to the doctrine of a Trinity of perſons in the divine eſſence; and is a myſtery of godlineſs, which tends to encourage internal and external religion, powerful and practical godlineſs in all the parts and branches of it; and is ſo beyond all diſpute and doubt. God was manifeſt in the fleſh; not God eſſentially conſidered, or Deity in the abſtract, but perſonally; and not the firſt nor the third perſon; for of neither of them can this or the following things be ſaid; but the ſecond perſon, the word, or ſon of God; ſee 1 John iii. 8. who exiſted as a divine perſon, and as a diſtinct one from the father and ſpirit, before his incarnation; and which is a proof of his true and proper deity: the ſon of God in his divine nature is equally inviſible as the father, but became manifeſt by the aſſumption of human nature in a corporal way, ſo as to be ſeen, heard, and felt: and by fleſh is meant, not that part of the body only, which bears that name, nor the whole body only, but the whole human nature, conſiſting of a true body, and a reaſonable ſoul; ſo called, partly to denote the frailty of it, and to ſhew that it was not a perſon, but a nature, Chriſt aſſumed; and the clauſe is added, not ſo much to diſtinguiſh this manifeſtation of Chriſt from a ſpiritual manifeſtation of him to his people, as in diſtinction from all other manifeſtations of him in the Old Teſtament, in an human form for a time, and in the cloud, both in the tabernacle and temple. This clauſe is a very apt and full interpretation of the word Moriah, the name of the mount in which Jehovah would manifeſt himſelf, and be ſeen, Gen. xxii. 2, 14. Juſtified in the ſpirit; either by the ſpirit of God, making his human nature pure and holy, and preſerving it from original ſin and taint; and by deſcending on him at his baptiſm, thereby teſtifying that he was the ſon of God; and by the miracles wrought by his power, which proved Jeſus to be the Meſſiah against thoſe that rejected him; and by his coming down upon the Apoſtles at Pentecoſt; and who in their miniſtry vindicated him from all the aſperſions caſt upon him: or elſe it is to be underſtood of the divine nature of Chriſt in diſtinction from his fleſh or human nature; in the one he was manifeſt and put to death for the ſins of his people, which were put upon him, and bore by him; and by the other, he was quickened and declared to be the ſon of God; and being raiſed from the dead, he was juſtified and acquitted from all the ſins of his people, and they were juſtified in him; he having made full ſatisfaction to juſtice for them. Seen of angels; meaning not miniſters of the Goſpel, and paſtors of churches, who are ſometimes ſo called; but the bleſſed ſpirits, the inhabitants of heaven: by theſe he was ſeen at his birth, who then deſcended and ſung praiſe to God on that account; and in the wilderneſs, after he had been tempted by Satan, when they miniſtered unto him; and in the garden upon his agony and ſweat there, when one appeared and ſtrengthened him; and at his reſurrection from the dead, who rolled away the ſtone from the ſepulchre, and told the women he was riſen from the dead; as alſo at his aſcenſion to heaven, when they attended him thither in triumph; and now in heaven, where they wait upon him, and worſhip him, and are miniſtring ſpirits, ſent forth by him to do his pleaſure; and he is ſeen by them in the miniſtry of the Goſpel; into the truths of which they look with pleaſure, and gaze upon with unutterable delight and admiration; eſpecially thoſe which reſpect the perſon and office of Chriſt. Some copies read ſeen of men, but that is implied in the firſt clauſe: preached unto the Gentiles; the worſt of men, and that by the expreſs orders of Chriſt himſelf; and which was foretold in the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, and yet was a myſtery, hid from ages and generations paſt: believed on in the world; among the Jews, and in the nations of the world, ſo that he was preached with ſucceſs; and faith in Chriſt is the end of preaching; though this is not of a man's ſelf, but is the gift of God, and the operation of his power: and it was a marvellous thing, conſidering, the reproach and ignominy Chriſt lay under, through the ſcandal of the croſs, that he ſhould be believed on as he was. This can be aſcribed to nothing elſe but to the power of God, which went along with the miniſtry of the word. Received up into glory; he was raiſed from the dead, and had a glory put upon his riſen body; he aſcended in a glorious manner to heaven, in a cloud, and in chariots of angels, and was received there with a welcome by his Father; and is ſet down at his right hand, and crowned with glory and honour, and glorified with the glory he had with him before the world was.

CHAP. IV.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle foretels a dreadful apoſtaſy which ſhould happen in the laſt times, the particulars of which he gives; and on occaſion of one branch of it, diſcourſes of chriſtian liberty in eating all ſorts of food fit for uſe; and delivers out exhortations to Timothy to various duties relating to himſelf, his doctrine, and his charge. The prophecy is in ver. 1, 2, 3. the author of this prophecy is the Spirit of God; the manner in which it was delivered was very clear and expreſs; the time when it ſhould be fulfilled, the laſt days; the thing itſelf, a departure of ſome from the faith; the means whereby it would come about are, ſome giving heed to ſeducing ſpirits, and doctrines of devils, and the hypocriſy and hardened conſciences of others, who would forbid marriage, and order an abſtinence from certain meats; the evil of which laſt is expoſed by their being the creatures of God, and by their being made for this purpoſe to be received with thankfulneſs by all believers, and who know the truth: and the reaſons why they ſhould be received and uſed, follow; becauſe they are all good, as they are the creatures of God; and becauſe there is nothing to be refuſed, provided it be received with a thankful heart; and becauſe every creature is ſanctified by the word of God, and prayer, ver. 4, 5. And then Timothy is exhorted to put the brethren in mind of thoſe things, by which he would ſhew himſelf to be a faithful miniſter of Chriſt, and well inſtructed in the doctrines of the Goſpel, ver. 6. and to reject things prophane and fabulous, but uſe himſelf to internal and powerful godlineſs, ſince outward worſhip ſignifies little, but the former has the promiſe of this, and the other world annexed to it; which is a true ſaying, and to be depended on, ver. 7, 8, 9. and which is confirmed from the practice and experience of the Apoſtles, and therefore ſhould be taught with authority, ver. 10, 11. And then the Apoſtle gives Timothy ſome advice, which being taken, would prevent his being deſpiſed on account of his youth; as with reſpect to his life and converſation, ſo to behave as to be a pattern to others, ver. 12. and with reſpect to the exerciſe of his miniſtry, to make uſe of ſuch means, as reading and meditation, that his profiting might be manifeſt to all, ver. 13, 14, 15. and with reſpect to the doctrines he preached, to abide by them, whereby he would be a means of ſaving himſelf, and others, ver. 16.

Ver. 1. Now the Spirit ſpeaketh expreſly, &c.] The prophecy hereafter mentioned was not an human conjecture, but as all true prophecy, it came from the Spirit of God, who ſpoke or delivered it; either in the prophets of the Old Teſtament, who, as they ſpoke of the Goſpel-diſpenſation; ſo of the defection that ſhould be in it; and particularly of antichriſt, and of the apoſtacy thro' him, which is what is here intended, eſpecially in Daniel's prophecies, under the names of the little horn, and vile perſon, ch. vii. and xi. or in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who foretold that falſe prophets would ariſe and deceive many; or in ſome of the prophets in the chriſtian church, ſuch as Agabus, and others, who might in ſo many words foretel this thing; or rather in the Apoſtle himſelf, at this time, ſince this prophecy was delivered not in dark ſayings, in an enigmatical way, in an obſcure manner, as prophecies generally were, but in plain language, and eaſy to be underſtood, and wanted no interpreter to unriddle it; and ſeeing that it is no where to be found in ſo many expreſs words elſewhere: and moreover, the Apoſtle does not ſay the Spirit hath ſpoken but the Spirit ſpeaketh; then, at the time of the writing of theſe words, in and by him. The prediction follows, that in the latter times ſome ſhould depart from the faith; that is, from the doctrine of faith, notwithſtanding it is indiſputably the great myſtery of godlineſs, as it is called in the latter part of the preceding chapter; for from the true grace of faith there can be no final and total apoſtaſy, ſuch as is here deſigned; for that can never be loſt. It is of an incorruptible nature, and therefore more precious than gold that periſhes; Chriſt is the author and finiſher of it; his prevalent mediation is concerned for it; it is a gift of ſpecial grace, and is without repentance; it ſprings from electing grace, and is ſecured by it; and between that and ſalvation there is an inſeparable connexion; it may indeed decline, be very low, and lie dormant, as to its acts and exerciſe, but not be loſt: there is a temporary faith, and a perſuaſion of truth, or a mere aſſent to it, which may be departed from, but not that faith which works by love: here it intends a profeſſion of faith, which being made, ſhould be dropped by ſome; or rather the doctrine of faith, which ſome would embrace, and then err concerning, or entirely quit, and wholly apoſtatize from. And they are ſaid to be ſome, and theſe many, as they are elſewhere repreſented, tho' not all; for the elect cannot be finally and totally deceived; the foundation of election ſtands ſure amidſt the greateſt apoſtacy; and there are always a few names that are not defiled with corrupt principles and practices; Chriſt always had ſome witneſſes for the truth in the darkeſt times: and now this defection was to be in the latter times; either of the apoſtolic age, which John, the laſt of the Apoſtles, lived to ſee; and therefore he calls it the laſt time, or hour, in which were many antichriſts, 1 John ii. 18. And indeed in the Apoſtle Paul's time, the myſtery of iniquity began to work, which brought on this general defection; tho' here it has regard to ſome later times under the Goſpel-diſpenſation; to the time when the man of ſin, and the ſon of perdition, was revealed, and when all the world wondered after the beaſt: and indeed, ſuch will be the degeneracy in the laſt days of all, that when the ſon of man comes, as the grace, ſo the doctrine of faith will be ſcarcely to be found in the world: the means by which this apoſtacy will obtain and prevail, will be thro' mens giving heed to ſeducing ſpirits; either to doctrines, which are of a deceiving nature; or to men who profeſs to have the Spirit of God, and have not, but are evil men and ſeducers, deceiving, and being deceived; that lie in wait to deceive, and handle the word of God deceitfully; and by attending on the miniſtry of ſuch perſons, thro' hearing them, and converſing with them, the defection was to begin and ſpread; and therefore ſuch ſhould be carefully avoided, and their miniſtry ſhunned; nor ſhould they be received, nor bid God ſpeed. And doctrines of devils; ſuch as are deviſed by devils, as all damnable doctrines be; and all lying ones, for the devil is the father of them; and as are all the falſe doctrines introduced by antichriſt, for his coming was after the working of ſatan; and particularly thoſe doctrines of his concerning worſhipping of angels, and ſaints departed, may be called the doctrines of devils, or of dæmons; being much the ſame with the dæmon worſhip among the heathens, of which the devil was the inventer: unleſs by doctrines of devils ſhould be meant the doctrines of men, who for their cunning and ſophiſtry, for their lyes and hypocriſy, for their malice, and murdering of the ſouls of men, are comparable to devils.

Ver. 2. Speaking lyes in hypocriſy, &c.] Or thro' the hypocriſy of thoſe that ſpeak lyes; for the Apoſtle is ſtill ſpeaking of the means by which the apoſtacy ſhould riſe, and get ground; and it ſhould be by the means of perſons that ſhould deliver lying or falſe doctrine under the colour of truth, and make great pretenſions to religion and holineſs, which would greatly take with men, and captivate and lead them aſide: and this plainly points at the abetters of antichriſt, the Romiſh prieſts, who deliver out the lying doctrines of merit, purgatory, invocation of ſaints, faſtings, pilgrimages, &c. and the fabulous legends of ſaints, and the lying wonders and miracles done by them, and all under a ſhew of godlineſs, and the promoting of religion and holineſs: having their conſcience ſeared with a hot iron; which exactly deſcribes the above mentioned perſons, whoſe conſciences are cauterized and hardened, and paſt feeling; and have no regard to what they ſay or do, make no conſcience of any thing, but under a cloak of ſanctity commit the moſt ſhocking impieties; and are men of the moſt infamous characters, and of the moſt enormous and ſcandalous lives and converſations; ſo that the metaphor may be taken either from the ſearing of fleſh with an iron, or cauterizing it, whereby it grows callous and hard; or from the ſtigma's or marks which uſed to be put on malefactors, or ſuch who have been guilty of notorious crimes.

Ver. 3. Forbidding to marry, &c.] Which points out not the Encratites, Montaniſts, and Manichees, who ſpoke againſt marriage; but the Papiſts, who forbid it to their prieſts under a pretence of purity and holineſs, and at the ſame time allow them to live in all manner of debauchery and uncleanneſs; for theſe are the perſons that forbid marriage in an authoritative way, and in hypocriſy: for that phraſe is to be joined to all the ſentences that follow it; as thro' the hypocriſy of thoſe whoſe conſciences are ſeared; and thro' the hypocriſy of thoſe that forbid marriage to their prieſts, this being, by the common people, taken as an inſtance of great purity and holineſs, and hereby they are drawn into the deception; as well as alſo thro' the hypocriſy of thoſe that command to abſtain from meats; not from ſome certain meats forbidden by the law of Moſes, as did ſome judaizing chriſtians; but from all meats at ſome certain ſeaſon of the year, as at what they call the Quadrageſima or Lent, and at ſome days in the week, as Wedneſdays and Fridays; and this all under an hypocritical pretence of holineſs, and temperance, and keeping under the body, and of mortification; when they are the greateſt pamperers of their bodies, and indulge themſelves in all manner of ſenſuality: the evil of this is expoſed by the Apoſtle, as follows, which God hath created; and therefore muſt be good, and ought not to be abſtained from: and beſides, the end of his creation of them is, to be received; to be taken, and uſed, and eat; and therefore it is wicked to command men to abſtain from them, and evil in thoſe that do it: and the manner in which they ſhould be received is with thankſgiving; ſince they are the creatures of God, and uſeful to men, and men are unworthy of them, having forfeited them by ſin; and ſince they are the bounties of providence, and a free uſe of them is allowed; ſo far then ſhould men be from abſtaining from them, that they ought to take them, and uſe them with all thankfulneſs: and eſpecially this ſhould be done of them which believe and know the truth; that is, who believe in Chriſt, and know the truth of the Goſpel, which frees from every yoke of bondage, and from the burdenſome rites, ceremonies, and inventions of men; for theſe have the good creatures as the fruits of divine love, thro' Chriſt the mediator, and as bleſſings indeed; and who have the beſt right, claim, and title to them thro' Chriſt, being in him heirs of the world, and for whoſe ſake all things are; and therefore theſe, as they know how to uſe them, and not abuſe them, are to receive them at the hands of God, with thankſgiving, and not put them away, or abſtain from them under a pretence of religion and holineſs.

Ver. 4. For every creature of God is good, &c.] For food; and ſhould be taken and uſed for that purpoſe, at all times, without diſtinction; even every creature which is made for food, and which is eaſy to be diſcerned by men: and nothing to be refuſed; or rejected as common and unclean, or to be abſtained from at certain times: if it be received with thankſgiving; if not, perſons are very ungrateful, and very unworthy of ſuch favours; and it would be juſt in God to with-hold them from them; and this they may expect at his hands, who reject them with contempt, or receive them with unthankfulneſs, or abſtain from them in a religious way he never enjoined.

Ver. 5. For it is ſanctified, &c.] Or ſet apart for uſe, and may be lawfully uſed at all times: by the word of God; which declares that there is nothing in itſelf common, or unclean, or unfit for uſe, and that nothing that goes into a man defiles him; ſo that by virtue of this word of God, every creature may be made uſe of, that is fit for food: or elſe this deſigns the word of God, which gives a bleſſing to what is eaten; for it is not by bread or meat only, but through the word of God commanding a bleſſing on what is eaten, that man lives, Matt. iv. 4. and therefore this bleſſing upon our food ſhould be aſked for: wherefore it follows, and prayer; this being uſed before eating for a bleſſing on the food, and after it, in a way of thankſgiving for it, ſanctifies every creature of God, or gives men a free uſe of any, or all of them. So the Iſraelites, when they had eaten, and were full, were to bleſs the Lord, Deut. viii. 10. And thus our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, at meals, uſed to take the food, and bleſs it, or aſk a bleſſing on it, Matt. xiv. 19. And ſo did the Eſſenes among the Jews[h], and the Chriſtians in Tertullian's[i] time. And the practice is highly neceſſary and commendable, nor ought it to be diſuſed.

Ver. 6. If thou put the brethren in remembrance of theſe things, &c.] Either of all the main and principal things already mentioned in the preceding chapters; as that the end of the commandment is love; that Chriſt's coming into the world to ſave the chief of ſinners, is a faithful ſaying, and worthy of acceptation; that prayers ſhould be made for all ſorts of men, for the reaſons given; and that there is ſalvation for men and women thro' the incarnate Son of God; that ſuch and ſuch are the qualifications of elders and deacons; and that the incarnation of Chriſt is without controverſy, the great myſtery of godlineſs: or of the things which are particularly hinted at in the prophecy delivered in the beginning of this chapter; as that there ſhould be a falling off from the doctrine of faith in the latter days; that this ſhould come to paſs thro' attending to erroneous ſpirits, and doctrines of dæmons, and thro' the lyes of hypocritical, hardened, and infamous men; whoſe particular dogma's, by which they might be known, would be, to forbid marriage to certain perſons, which is of divine inſtitution and honourable, and to order an abſtinence from meats at certain times, contrary to the will and providence of God. Theſe the Apoſtle would have Timothy propoſe, and ſubject to conſideration, and from time to time refreſh the memories of the ſaints with, who are apt, thro' negligence and inattention, and the weakneſs of the natural faculty, to be forgetful hearers of the word; that whenever ſuch perſons ſhould ariſe, they might be on their guard againſt them. It is one part of the buſineſs of Goſpel miniſters to put the churches in mind of what they have received and known, and are eſtabliſhed in. By the brethren are meant, the members of the church at Epheſus; whom the Apoſtle accounted as brethren, being of the ſame family and houſhold, and would have Timothy reckon and uſe as ſuch, and not as ſubjects and ſervants, to be lorded over. Thou ſhalt be a good miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt; a miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt is one of his making, qualifying, calling, and ſending; and who makes Chriſt, the doctrines reſpecting his perſon and offices, his grace, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation, the ſubject of his miniſtry; and he is a good one, who, beſides having a good work of grace wrought in him, has good gifts and abilities from Chriſt, and who makes a good uſe of them, and freely and fully imparts them for the good of others; and being employed in a good work, he abides in it, and nothing can deter or remove him from it; and ſuch an one was Timothy, and ſo would it be manifeſt by doing what the Apoſtle hints unto him; as well as he would appear to be nouriſhed up in the words of faith, and of good doctrine: by which are meant the truths of the Goſpel, called the words of faith, becauſe they are things to be believed, hold forth the object of faith, Chriſt, and are the means by which faith comes, and is increaſed: and good doctrine, being the doctrine of the ſcriptures, and of Chriſt, and of his Apoſtles, and according to godlineſs; and contain good things, which make for the glory of the grace of God, and the comfort and welfare of immortal ſouls. Theſe are of a nouriſhing nature; they are the wholeſome and ſalutary words of Chriſt; they have in them milk for babes, and meat for ſtrong men; by which both grow and thrive, when error eats as does a canker. So Philo the Jew [k] ſpeaks of the ſoul, being nouriſhed with ſciences, and not with food and drink, which the body needs; and a little after he ſays, you ſee the food of the ſoul what it is, it is the continual word of God. Now Timothy, by diſcharging his work aright, would ſhew to the brethren, that as he had been nouriſhed and trained up, firſt under his religious parents, and then under the Apoſtle Paul; ſo he ſtill continued in the ſame truths, and to live and feed upon them, and to be nouriſhed by them: or the words may be rendered actively, nouriſhing; that is, either himſelf, as the Syriac verſion renders it, or others; for tho' all nouriſhment comes from Chriſt the head, yet it is miniſtred by joints and bands to the members; it is conveyed by the means of the word and ordinances, miniſtred by the preachers of the Goſpel, who feed the church with knowledge, and with underſtanding; and none but thoſe who are nouriſhed themſelves, are fit to be the nouriſhers of others; and ſuch an one was this Evangeliſt: for it follows, whereunto thou haſt attained; he had arrived to a conſiderable degree of knowledge of Goſpel truths, and was ſtill purſuing and following on to know more of them, and was exhorted to continue in them, knowing of whom he had learned them. All this is ſaid by way of encouragement to him, to do as the Apoſtle directs.

[h] Porphyr. de Abſtinentia, l. 4, §. 12.

[i] Apolog. c. 39.

Ver. 7. But refuſe prophane and old wives fables, &c.] Either Jewiſh ones, the traditions of the elders; or thoſe of the Gnoſticks, concerning God, angels, and the creation of the world; or thoſe doctrines of dæmons, and which forbad marriage, and commanded abſtinence from meats before mentioned; which are called prophane, becauſe impious, and ungodly, and old wives fables, becauſe fooliſh and impertinent; and which were to be rejected with abhorrence and contempt, in compariſon of the words of faith and good doctrine. And exerciſe thyſelf rather unto godlineſs; either to the doctrines which are according to godlineſs, and tend to godly edification, which the above fables did not, ſtudy theſe, meditate on them, digeſt them, and deliver them to others; or to a godly life and converſation, exerciſe thyſelf, to have a conſcience void of offence to God and men; or to internal religion, inward godlineſs, the exerciſe of the graces of faith, hope, love, fear, reverence, humility, &c. or rather to the ſpiritual worſhip of God, according to his will, not in a formal, cold, and cuſtomary way, but with the heart, in truth and ſincerity, in faith, and with fervency and purity.

Ver. 8. For bodily exerciſe profiteth little, &c.] Meaning not the exerciſe of the body in the Olympic games, as by running, wreſtling, &c. which profited but little, for the obtaining of a corruptible crown at moſt; tho' ſince a word is uſed here, and in the preceding verſe borrowed from thence, there may be an alluſion to it: much leſs exerciſe of the body for health or recreation, as riding, walking, playing at any innocent diverſion; which profits but for a little time, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions read; and the latter renders the phraſe, bodily recreation: nor is the exerciſe of the body in the proper employment of trade and buſineſs, to which a man is called, and which profits for the ſupport of life for a little while, intended; nor any methods made uſe of for the mortification of the body, and the keeping of it under, as watchings, faſtings, lying on the ground, ſcourging, &c. but rather mere formal external worſhip, as oppoſed to godlineſs, or ſpiritual worſhip. There ought to be an exerciſe of the body, or a preſenting of that in religious worſhip before God; there ſhould be an outward attendance on the word and ordinances; but then without internal godlineſs, this will be of little advantage: it is indeed ſhowing an outward regard to public worſhip, and may be a means of keeping perſons out of bad company, and from doing evil things; but if this is truſted to, and depended on, it will be of no avail to everlaſting life; ſee Luke xiii. 26, 27. but godlineſs is profitable unto all things; to the health of the body, and the welfare of the ſoul; to the things of this life, and of that which is to come; to themſelves and others, tho' not to God, or in a way of merit: having promiſe of the life that now is; of the continuance of it, of length of days, of living long in the earth, and of enjoying all neceſſary temporal good things, the mercies of life; for God has promiſed to his ſpiritual worſhippers, to them that fear him, and walk uprightly, that their days ſhall be prolonged, that they ſhall want no good thing, nor will he with-hold any from them, that is for their good, that is proper and convenient for them: and of that which is to come; even of eternal life; not that eternal life is merited or procured hereby; for it is the free gift of God, and is not by any works of men, for otherwiſe it would not be by promiſe; for its being by promiſe, ſhows it to be of grace: there is nothing more or leſs in it than this, that God promiſes glory to his own grace; for internal godlineſs, which animates and maintains ſpiritual worſhip, is of God, is of his own grace, and every part of it is a free gift of his, as faith, hope, love, fear, &c.

[k] Allegor. l. 2. p. 90, 92.

Ver. 9. This is a faithful ſaying, &c.] A true one, and to be believed, that godlineſs has ſuch promiſes annexed to it; ſee 1 Pet. iii. 10, 11. Matt. vi. 33. Pſ. lxxxiv. 11, 12. and worthy of all acceptation; by all godly perſons, to encourage them to the exerciſe of godlineſs.

Ver. 10. For therefore we both labour, &c.] Not in the word and doctrine, tho' they did; nor in the exerciſe of internal godlineſs, tho' there is a work in faith, and a labour in love; nor with their own hands, at their trades and buſineſs, to ſupport themſelves, and others; but by enduring hardſhips and afflictions, as ſtripes, impriſonment, wearineſs, pain, watchings, faſtings, hunger, thirſt, cold, and nakedneſs; ſee 2 Cor. xi. 23—27. And ſuffer reproach; with patience and chearfulneſs. The Alexandrian copy, and another manuſcript, read, we ſtrive; or contend even to an agony, combating with ſin, ſatan, and the world, with prophane men, and with falſe teachers; and to all this they were animated by the promiſes made to godlineſs; and therefore they ſhowed it by their practices, or rather by their ſufferings, that they believed it to be a true and faithful ſaying; and which is further confirmed by what follows: becauſe we truſt in the living God; for the accompliſhment of the ſaid promiſes, who has power, and therefore can, and is faithful, and therefore will make good what he has promiſed; and ſince it is life he has promiſed, faith is the more encouraged to truſt in him, ſince he is the living God, in oppoſition to, and diſtinction from, lifeleſs idols; he has life in himſelf, eſſentially, originally, and independently, and is the author and giver of life, natural, ſpiritual, and eternal, unto others. Wherefore there is good reaſon to truſt in him for the fulfilling of the promiſes of the preſent and future life, made unto godlineſs. Who is the ſaviour of all men; in a providential way, giving them being and breath, upholding them in their beings, preſerving their lives, and indulging them with the bleſſings and mercies of life; for that he is the ſaviour of all men, with a ſpiritual and everlaſting ſalvation, is not true in fact. Specially of thoſe that believe; whom tho' he ſaves with an eternal ſalvation; yet not of this, but of a temporal ſalvation, are the words to be underſtood: or as there is a general providence, which attends all mankind, there is a ſpecial one which relates to the elect of God; theſe are regarded in providence, and are particularly ſaved and preſerved before converſion, in order to be called; and after converſion, after they are brought to believe in Chriſt, they are preſerved from many enemies, and are delivered out of many afflictions and temptations; and are the peculiar care and darlings of providence, being to God as the apple of his eye: and there is a great deal of reaſon to believe this, for if he is the ſaviour of all men, then much more of them who are of more worth, value, and eſteem with him, than all the world beſide; and if they are ſaved by him with the greater ſalvation, then much more with the leſs; and if he is the common ſaviour of all men, and eſpecially of ſaints, whom he ſaves both ways, then there is great reaſon to truſt in him, for the fulfilment of the promiſes of life, temporal and eternal, made to godlineſs, and godly perſons. This epithet of God ſeems to be taken out of Pſal. xvii. 7. where he is called, מושיע חוסים, the ſaviour of them that truſt, or believe.

Ver. 11. Theſe things command and teach.] What are to be commanded, command, and what are to be taught, teach; command to refuſe, and reject all prophane and fabulous doctrines, and exhort to the exerciſe of true godlineſs, and teach the profitableneſs of that, and declare the promiſes made unto it, and aſſert the truth and acceptableneſs of them; command, order, and encourage believers to labour and ſuffer reproach for the ſake of Chriſt, and his Goſpel, in hope of enjoying the ſaid promiſes, and teach them to truſt in the God of their lives, and the ſaviour of all men; and whereas to this authoritative way of teaching, Timothy's youth might be objected by himſelf, and others; it follows,

Ver. 12. Let no man deſpiſe thy youth, &c.] Timothy was now a young man; ſome think he was about three and twenty years of age; but he might be older, and yet be ſo called. Saul is ſaid to be a young man, when he held the clothes of them that ſtoned Stephen, when he muſt be at leaſt thirty years of age, ſome ſay thirty-five; ſince thirty years after that he ſtiles himſelf Paul the aged, when he muſt be ſixty years of age and upwards, Acts vii. 58. Philem. ver. 9. Young men are ſometimes honoured by God with great gifts, for uſefulneſs both in church and ſtate, as Samuel, David, Solomon, Daniel, and his companions: nor ſhould they be deſpiſed on account of their age, when they have gifts ſuitable to their office, and behave well in it, but, on the contrary, ought to be eſteemed for their works ſake; and ſuch ſhould take care that no man has an opportunity or reaſon to treat them with contempt on that account: the Apoſtle's ſenſe is, either that Timothy, being in office, ſhould not ſuffer any man to uſe him contemptuouſly, but exert his power and authority, and magnify his office, and not allow men to trample upon him, or uſe him ill, tho' he was a young man; which ſenſe ſuits with the preceding words: or rather his meaning is, that he would have him ſo conduct, and behave himſelf, as he had taught him to behave, in the houſe and church of God, and ſo fill up his place and office, and live ſuch an exemplary life and converſation, that there might be no occaſion for any to deſpiſe his age, or him, on the account of it: and this agrees with what follows, but be thou an example of the believers; the members of the church, before called brethren, from their relation to one another, and here believers, from their concern with Chriſt, the object of their faith; a more honourable character cannot be given of men, tho' treated with great contempt in this age of infidelity. The Mahometans would engroſs this character to themſelves, calling themſelves the believers, and reckoning all others infidels; but to them only it belongs, who believe in Chriſt unto righteouſneſs and life everlaſting. Now ſometimes young men may be examples to older ones; and all that are in office in the church, eſpecially in the miniſtry, whether old or young, ſhould be enſamples to the flock, and that in the following things: in word; meaning either the word of truth, the doctrine of the Goſpel; by delivering that which is according to the rule of God's word, ſhewing in it incorruptneſs, gravity, and ſincerity, and by holding it faſt; all which may be for the imitation of others, to receive the pure doctrine, and retain it: or rather this may reſpect common diſcourſe; which ſhould not be corrupt, filthy, nor fooliſh; but ſhould be always with grace, ſeaſoned with ſalt, or ſhould be grave and ſerious, wiſe and prudent, pleaſant, profitable, and edifying. In converſation; in the family, church, and world; which ſhould be as becomes the Goſpel of Chriſt, in all godlineſs and honeſty, with ſimplicity and godly ſincerity; ſo as to adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour, recommend it to others, ſtop the mouths of gainſayers, and obtain a good report of them that are without. In charity; in love to God, to Chriſt, and one another; without which, if a man has the tongue of men and angels, or ever ſuch great and excellent gifts, he is nothing. In Spirit; in the exerciſe of ſpiritual gifts; in ſpiritual talk and converſation; and in fervency of ſpirit, or true zeal for the honour of God, the glory of the redeemer, the ſpread of his Goſpel, truths and ordinances, and the ſupport of the ſame. This clauſe is wanting in the Alexandrian and Claromontane copies, and in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions. In faith; in the exerciſe of the grace of faith; in holding faſt the profeſſion of faith; and in retaining the doctrine of faith, with all integrity, faithfulneſs, and conſtancy, ſtanding faſt in it, ſtriving and contending for it. In purity; or chaſtity of body, in oppoſition to all impurity of the fleſh, by fornication, adultery, and the like; which was very proper to be ſuggeſted to a young man: tho' this may alſo have reſpect to all that is before ſaid, as to purity of language, converſation, love, zeal, and faith.

Ver. 13. Till I come, &c.] To Epheſus; where the Apoſtle hoped to be ſhortly, but was prevented; he afterwards came to Miletus, and ſent for the elders of Epheſus thither, when he took his final leave of them. He mentions this circumſtance, not as if Timothy was to attend to the following things no longer, but to quicken him to an attendance to them from the conſideration of his being ſhortly with him. Give attendance to reading; that is, of the ſcriptures, which the Jews call, מקרא, reading. [l] "Says R. Tanchum Bar Chanilai, for "ever let a man divide his years or life into three "parts; one third (let him ſpend) in the Mikra, "(the ſcriptures, and the reading of them) another third in the Miſna, and the other third in "the Talmud." And this is to be underſtood, not of the reading of the ſcriptures in public, for the advantage of others, a cuſtom which obtained in the Jewiſh ſynagogues; ſee Acts xiii. 15. and xv. 21. but in private, for his own uſe and ſervice, that he might be more perfect, and more thoroughly furniſhed for the work and office to which he was called; for the ſcriptures are the fund of ſpiritual knowledge, as well as the teſt and ſtandard of doctrine, out of which all muſt be fetched, and by which it muſt be tried; and if Timothy, who had known the ſcriptures from a child, had been trained up in them, and was always converſant with them, had need to give diligent attention to the reading of them, then much more others: as alſo to exhortation, to doctrine; as he was privately to read the ſcriptures, for his own benefit, he was publickly to expound them, or preach from them, to the advantage of others; for theſe two, exhortation and doctrine, are branches of the miniſterial work, which reading furniſhes and qualifies for. Exhortation intends the ſtirring up of believers to the exerciſe of grace, and the diſcharge of duty; and is a conſiderable part of the work of the miniſtry, and on which a miniſter of Chriſt ſhould much inſiſt; and it becomes the ſaints to ſuffer every word of exhortation from them, and receive it kindly, 2 Tim. iv. 2. Rom. xii. 8. Heb. xiii. 22. The word ſignifies alſo conſolation, and which is another branch of the miniſtry. Believers are oftentimes diſconſolate thro' the prevalence of corruptions, the power of ſatan's temptations, and the hidings of God's face, and need comfort; when the miniſters of the Goſpel ſhould be Barnabaſes, ſons of conſolation, and ſhould ſpeak comfortably to them; for which they are qualified by the God of all comfort, who comforts them in all their tribulations, that they might be capable of ſpeaking good and comfortable words to others. Doctrine deſigns the teaching and inſtructing of the church in the myſteries of the Goſpel; opening and explaining the truths of it; defending them againſt all oppoſers, and refuting errors and hereſies contrary to them. This is the evangelic Talmud; and theſe three, reading, exhortation, and doctrine, may anſwer to the above three things the Jew adviſes men to divide their time among, the Mikra, Miſna, and Talmud: reading anſwers to the Mikra, and indeed is no other; and exhortation to the Miſna, or oral law; and doctrine to the Talmud, and which alſo that word ſignifies: but the Apoſtle would have Timothy ſpend his time in, and give his attention to that which might be truly beneficial to himſelf, and profitable unto others.

Ver. 14. Neglect not the gift that is in thee, &c.] What qualifies men for the work of the miniſtry, is a gift from God: it is not of nature, nor is it mere natural abilities and capacity; nor is it any thing acquired, it is not human learning, or the knowledge of languages, arts, and ſciences; nor is it ſpecial ſaving grace; for a man may have all theſe, and yet not be apt to teach, or fit for the miniſtry; but it is a peculiar and diſtinct gift, it is a gift of interpreting the ſcriptures, and of diſpenſing the myſteries of grace to the edification of others; which, when it meets in a man with all the reſt before-mentioned, makes him very conſiderable: and this gift is in a man; it is a treaſure put into earthen veſſels, a good treaſure in the heart, out of which a good miniſter of Chriſt brings forth many good things, things new and old, both for the delight and profit of men: and this gift is by no means to be neglected; this talent ſhould not be hid in the earth, or wrapped up in a napkin; it ſhould not lie dormant and uſeleſs, but ſhould be ſtirred up, cultivated and improved; as it may, by reading, meditation, and prayer. And in order to enforce this exhortation on Timothy, the Apoſtle adds, which was given thee by prophecy; that is, it was propheſied of before-hand, by ſome of the prophets in the church, that a very extraordinary gift ſhould be beſtowed upon this young man, which would make him a very uſeful perſon in the church of God; ſee ch. i. 18. and ſince it was now given, he ought not therefore to neglect it: or it was given him, as ſome read it, with prophecy, that he ſhould uſe it, and it ſhould be of great advantage to many ſouls; or together with this gift of preaching, he had alſo a gift of foretelling things to come; or it may be, the words may be better rendered, for prophecy; that is, for preaching, for propheſying is frequently uſed for preaching; ſee 1 Cor. xiii. 2. and xiv. 1, 3, 31. and then the ſenſe is, that this gift was given him to qualify him for the interpreting of the ſcriptures, the explaining of the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, and for the preaching of the Goſpel; and therefore he ſhould not neglect it, but uſe it for this purpoſe: and he adds, that it was given him with the laying on of the hands of the preſbytery; or of the elderſhip, or elders. So γερουσια, elderſhip, is uſed by the Septuagint on Exod. iii. 16, 18. for the elders of Iſrael. Now of theſe elders Paul was one, 2 Tim. i. 6. nor is it unuſual to call the Apoſtles elders; ſee 1 Pet. v. 1. 2 John i. and 3 John i. Who joined with the Apoſtle in the impoſition of hands on Timothy, is not certain; I ſhould think only Apoſtles, ſince here was a gift of the Holy Ghoſt came along with it; and it was only thro' the laying on of the hands of the Apoſtles, that the Holy Ghoſt was given. Philip, an Evangeliſt, laid not hands on the believing Samaritans; but Peter and John, Apoſtles, were ſent down from Jeruſalem to Samaria to do it, whereby many received the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, fitting them to take the care of thoſe new converts, and to ſpread the Goſpel further in thoſe parts, Acts viii. 5, 12, 14, 17, 18. And ſince gifts have ceaſed being conveyed this way, the rite of laying on of hands in ordinations ſeems uſeleſs, and of no avail. The Apoſtle in calling thoſe that joined with him, in putting hands on Timothy, the preſbytery or elderſhip, may have ſome reference to the זקני העדה, the elders of the congregation, which laid hands on the bullock for a ſin-offering, Lev. iv. 15. by whom ſome underſtand the great Sanhedrim [m]; others [n], not all the elders, but ſome particular perſons, in number three; and ſo the ordination of a Rabbi was by three [o]; hence we read of סמיכה בזקינים, impoſition of hands by the elders [p].

Ver. 15. Meditate on theſe things, &c.] Not only on thoſe inſtructions, advices, and exhortations, which the Apoſtle had given him, throughout this chapter, which might be very uſeful to him, often to think of, and revolve in his mind, and ſeriouſly conſider and reflect upon; but upon the ſcriptures, the reading of which he had recommended to him, and the doctrines contained therein; it becomes every man not only to read, but meditate on the word of God, and much more miniſters of the Goſpel. The ſcriptures ſhould be read with care, and be induſtriouſly and laboriouſly ſearched into, as men dig in mines for ſilver or golden oar; and paſſages in it ſhould be carefully compared together, the more obſcure with thoſe that are more plain and eaſy; and the whole is to be ſtudied with great attention and application: give thyſelf wholly to them; to the reading of the ſcriptures, meditation upon them, and preaching the doctrines contained in them, clear of all ſecular affairs, or worldly buſineſs, and employment. The Apoſtles threw off the branch of deaconſhip, or miniſtring to the poor, that they might give themſelves up wholly to the miniſtry of the word, and prayer; and much more ſhould worldly buſineſs be caſt off, where the circumſtances of miniſters and churches will admit of it: a chriſtian ſoldier, or miniſter of the Goſpel, ought not, if poſſible, to be entangled with the affairs of this life; he finds enough to do without, in the diſcharge of his miniſterial function; and tho' the Apoſtles ſometimes wrought with their own hands, yet it was not becauſe they had ſo much leiſure from the miniſtry, or time on their hands, or becauſe they had not a power of forbearing working, but out of neceſſity; ſee Acts xx. 34. 1 Cor. ix. 6, 7. 2 Tim. ii. 4. or theſe words may be rendered, be thou in theſe things; let thine heart be in them; for if a miniſter's heart is not in his work, if he does not take delight in it, it will be a ſlavery and drudgery to him; ſpend all thy time and ſtrength in them, give thyſelf continually to them, and be always diligent and laborious in them: that thy profiting may appear to all; that it may be manifeſt to all that attend the miniſtry of the word, that there is an increaſe in gifts, a growing in ſpiritual knowledge, an improvement of the talents beſtowed: or that this profiting or increaſe might appear in all things; in every branch of the miniſtry, both in exhortation or conſolation, and in doctrine: or that it might be manifeſt among all; that is, all that hear might receive ſome profit, might learn, and be comforted, and edified; faith might be increaſed, and the joy of it be furthered; and all under the miniſtry viſibly thrive and flouriſh.

Ver. 16. Take heed unto thyſelf, &c.] Not as a man, or a chriſtian only, but as a miniſter; and as every miniſter ſhould take heed to his life and converſation, that it be exemplary, as in ver. 12. to his gifts, that they be not loſt, or neglected, but uſed and improved; to the errors and hereſies abroad, that he be not infected with them; and to his flock, which is the other part of himſelf, that he feed it with knowledge and underſtanding: and to thy doctrine; preached by him, that it be according to the ſcriptures, be the doctrine of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, and according to godlineſs; that it tend to edification, and is pure, incorrupt, and all of a-piece; and that it be expreſſed in the beſt manner, with all boldneſs and plainneſs; and that he defend it againſt all oppoſition: continue in them; or with them; the members of the church at Epheſus; or rather in the doctrines of the Goſpel; which ſhould be done, tho' a majority is againſt them; tho' rejected by the wiſe, learned, and rich; tho' not to be comprehended by carnal reaſon; and tho' loaded with reproach and ſcandal; and tho' perſecuted, yea even unto death for them: for in doing this, thou ſhall both ſave thyſelf; a miniſter by taking heed to himſelf, and doctrine, ſaves himſelf from the pollutions of the world, from the errors and hereſies of falſe teachers, from the blood of all men, and from all juſt blame in his miniſtry. And them that hear thee; by being an example to them in doctrine and converſation, a miniſter is the means of ſaving and preſerving thoſe that attend on him, from erroneous principles, and immoral practices; and by faithfully preaching the Goſpel to his hearers, he is inſtrumental in their eternal ſalvation; vation ; for though Jeſus Chriſt is the only ſaviour, the only efficient and procuring cauſe of ſalvation, yet the miniſters of the Goſpel are inſtruments by which ſouls believe in him, and ſo are ſaved ; the word preached by them, being attended with the Spirit of God, becomes the engrafted word, which is able to ſave, and is the power of God unto ſalvation ; and nothing can more animate and engage the miniſters of the word to take heed to themſelves, and doctrine, and abide therein, than this, of being the happy inſtruments of converting ſinners, and ſaving them from death ; ſee Jam. v. 20.

CHAP. V.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle lays down rules about the manner of rebuking perſons ſuitable to their ſeveral ages ; gives directions concerning widows, both old and young ; and inſtructs Timothy how to behave towards elders in office on different accounts. The rules for giving reproof to old men, as fathers ; to young men, as brethren ; to elder women, as mothers ; and to the younger, as ſiſters, are in ver. 1, 2. Next follow the directions about taking care of widows, who are to be honoured and maintained by the church, that are widows indeed, ver. 3. not ſuch who have relations that are capable of taking care of them, who ought to do it, and not burden the church ; ſince ſo to do is an act of piety, a requiting parents for their former care and kindneſs, and is good and acceptable in the ſight of God, ver. 4. but ſuch who are deſolate and alone, and have no huſbands nor children, nor any to ſupport their wants, but wholly depend on the providence of God, and are conſtant at the throne of grace crying for help and relief, which ſhows they are living chriſtians ; whereas ſuch who ſpend their time in ſinful luſts and pleaſures, are dead while they live ; wherefore if members of churches, with reſpect to this buſineſs, would be blameleſs, they ought to take care of the former, and reprove the latter, ver. 5, 6, 7. And as for thoſe perſons who caſt their poor widows upon the church, and won't provide for them, when they are able, they are to be looked upon as deniers of the faith, and to be worſe than the heathens themſelves, ver. 8. The qualifications of widows to be taken care of by the church, beſides thoſe before-mentioned, are, that they be ſixty years of age, having been the wife of one man, and well known for their good works, ſome of which are particularly mentioned, ver. 9, 10. but thoſe who are under the age fixed, and eſpecially are fit for marriage, and the procreation of children, ſhould be rejected, becauſe of their laſciviouſneſs, idleneſs, tatling, and buſying themſelves about other peoples matters ; theſe, on the contrary, ſhould be directed to marry, bear children, take care of houſhold affairs, and give no occaſion to the enemy to reproach and blaſpheme ; and the rather ſuch advice ſhould be taken, ſince there had been ſome ſad inſtances of apoſtacy in ſuch perſons, ver. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. And then the Apoſtle repeats his order to believers, to take care of their poor widows, who were able to do it themſelves, that ſo the church might not be burdened, and might be able to relieve ſuch as were real and proper objects, ver. 16. And then follow rules with reſpect to elders in office, as that thoſe that rule well, and labour in the miniſtry of the word, ſhould be honourably maintained ; which is confirmed by a paſſage of ſcripture in the Old Teſtament, and by a ſaying of Chriſt's in the New, ver. 17, 18. that an accuſation ſhould not be received againſt one of ſuch a character, but by two or three witneſſes, ver. 19. and that ſuch of them that fell into any notorious ſin, ſhould be publickly rebuked, in order to make others afraid to ſin, ver. 20. And theſe things the Apoſtle, in the moſt ſolemn manner, charges Timothy, in the ſight of God, Chriſt, and the angels, to obſerve, without partiality, ver. 21. To which he adds, that he would not have him be haſtily concerned in the ordination of any one as an elder, leſt he ſhould involve himſelf in his ſin, whereas by acting otherwiſe he would be free, ver. 22. and then inſerts ſome advice to himſelf, to take care of his health, ver. 23. and concludes the chapter with obſerving, on occaſion of what he had ſaid, ver. 22. that ſome mens ſins were open, and their characters were eaſily diſcerned, and others were private, and ſuch were alſo the good works of others ; which made the caſe either more eaſy or more difficult to determine what was to be done ; and therefore nothing ſhould be done ſuddenly and raſhly, ver. 24, 25.

Ver. 1. Rebuke not an elder, &c.] By whom is meant, not an elder in office, but in age ; for elders by office are afterwards ſpoken of, and particular rules concerning them are given, ver. 17, 19. Beſides, an elder here is oppoſed, not to a private member of a church, but to young men in age ; and the Apoſtle is here giving rules to be obſerved in rebuking members of churches, according to their different age and ſex, and not according to their office and ſtation ; and this ſenſe is confirmed by a parallel text in Tit. ii. 2—6. Now an ancient man, a member of a church, is not to be rebuked in a ſharp and ſevere way ; the word here uſed ſignifies to ſmite or ſtrike ; and ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, do not ſtrike an elder ; meaning not with the hand, but with the tongue, giving hard words, which are as heavy blows ; reproof is a ſmiting, and there is a gentle and a ſharp one, Pſ. cxli. 4. Tit. i. 13. It is with the former, and not the latter, that a man in years is to be reproved, when he is in a fault, whether with reſpect to doctrine or practice, as ſuch perſons may be as well as younger ones ; and when they are obſerved to err, they ſhould not be roughly and ſharply dealt with : but intreat him as a father ; as a child ſhould intreat a father, when he is going out of the way ; give him honour and reſpect, fear and reverence, and perſuade him to deſiſt ; intreat and beſeech him to return to the right path of truth and holineſs ; uſe him as a father in Chriſt, that has known him that is from the beginning, and as of long ſtanding in the church : this muſt be underſtood of leſſer crimes, and not of atrocious and flagitious ones, obſtinately continued in, to the great ſcandal of religion, and diſhonour of the Goſpel ; for then ſeverer methods muſt be uſed ; ſee Iſ. lxv. 20. But tho' this is the ſenſe of the paſſage, yet the argument from hence is ſtrong, that if an elder in years, a private member, who is ancient, and in a fault, is not to be roughly uſed, but gently intreated, then much more an elder in office. And the younger men as brethren ; the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read, as thy brethren. Timothy was a young man himſelf ; and as he was to conſider an elderly man as his father, and uſe him accordingly ; cordingly; ſo he was to conſider young men as equal with him, at leaſt in age, and take the more freedom with them, in reproving them for their faults, and uſe ſomewhat more authority with them; and yet conſider them as brethren in Chriſt, and reprove them in a brotherly way, and with brotherly love.

Ver. 2. The elder women as mothers, &c.] When they offend in any point, they are to be reaſoned, and argued, and pleaded with, as children ſhould with their mothers; ſee Hoſ. ii. 2. and are to be conſidered as mothers in Iſrael, and to be treated with great tenderneſs and reſpect. The younger as ſiſters; uſing the freedom as a brother may with a ſiſter; and conſidering them as ſiſters in Chriſt, and in a way becoming the relation, tell them their faults freely and privately, but with all purity; in ſuch manner as to preſerve chaſtity in looks, in words, and actions.

Ver. 3. Honour widows that are widows indeed.] Who thoſe are, ſee in ver. 5, 9, 10. The honour to be given them is not a putting of them into the office of a deaconneſs, in the church; which office, ſome think, is referred to in Acts vi. 1. 1 Tim. iii. 11. and v. 9. and did obtain in ſome of the primitive churches; and it might be that ſome of theſe widows, the Apoſtle here, and hereafter ſpeaks of, might be preferred to the reſt, and be ſet over them, and have the care of ſuch, who were more infirm; but then this could only be the caſe of ſome, whereas the honour here ſpoken of, is what is to be given to all, that are really widows; and therefore rather regards ſome external honour and reſpect to be ſhown them, by words and actions; and eſpecially it deſigns an honourable proviſion for them, and maintenance of them; in which ſenſe the word is uſed in ver. 17. and in Matt. xv. 4, 5, 6. So with the Jews, giving gifts to perſons, and making preſents to them, is called honour. When Manoah aſked the angel's name, that he might do him honour, when his ſaying came to paſs, Judg. xiii. 17. the ſenſe, according to them is[q], "that I may enquire in what place I may "find thee, when thy prophecy is fulfilled, and "give thee, דורן, a gift; for there is no honour, "but what ſignifies a gift, as it is ſaid, Numb. "xxii. 17. honouring I will honour thee." So giving gifts to the poor, or providing for their maintenance, is doing them honour; and that this is the ſenſe here, appears by what follows in the context.

Ver. 4. But if any widow have children or nephews, &c.] Such are not widows indeed; they are not deſolate, or alone, or without perſons to take care of them; their children or nephews ſhould, and not ſuffer the church to be burdened with them. Wherefore it follows, let them learn firſt to ſhew piety at home; which ſome underſtand of the widows, who inſtead of caſting themſelves upon the church, for a maintenance, or taking upon them the office of a deaconneſs, to take care of others, ſhould continue in their own families, and bring up their children and nephews in like manner, as they have been brought up by their parents, which will be more pleaſing and acceptable unto God; but it is better to interpret it of their children; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion expreſſes it, let the children firſt learn to do well to their own houſe, or family. It is the duty of children to take care of their parents in old age, and provide for them, when they can't for themſelves: this is a leſſon they ought to learn in the firſt place, and a duty which they ought principally to obſerve; they ſhould not ſuffer them to come to a church for relief, but firſt take care of them themſelves, as long as they are in any capacity to do it; and theſe ſhould be their firſt care before any others; ſo to do is an act of piety, a religious action, a pious one; it is doing according to the will and law of God, and is well-pleaſing to him: and to requite their parents; for all the ſorrow, pain, trouble, care, and expences they have been at in bearing and bringing them forth into the world, in taking care of them in their infancy, in bringing them up, giving them an education, providing food and raiment for them, and ſettling them in the world; wherefore to neglect them in old age, when uncapable of providing for themſelves, would be baſe ingratitude; whereas to take care of them is but a requital of them, or a repaying them for former benefits had of them: for that is good and acceptable before God; it is good in itſelf, and grateful, and well-pleaſing in his ſight; it is part of the good, and perfect, and acceptable will of God; and which, as other actions done in faith, is acceptable to God thro' Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 5. Now ſhe that is a widow indeed, &c.] A real widow, whom the Jews[r] call, גמורה, a perfect one, in oppoſition to one that is divorced, or a brother's widow, that has had the ſhoe plucked off for her: and ſuch an one as the Apoſtle means, is one that is deſolate, or alone; who has neither huſband to take care of her, nor children or nephews to ſhew kindneſs to her, nor any worldly ſubſtance to ſubſiſt upon: but truſteth in God; not in man, nor in an arm of fleſh, but in the living God, the giver of all good things, the judge of widows; who vindicates their cauſe, avenges the injuries done them, protects and defends them, and relieves their wants, and gives all encouragement to them, to truſt in him; ſee Jer. xlix. 11. and continueth in ſupplications and prayers night and day; as the widow Anna did, Luke ii. 36, 37. A widow indeed is one that has no outward dependance, betakes herſelf to the Lord, puts her confidence in him, and cries to him continually for a daily ſupply; and ſuch an one, amidſt all her poverty and meanneſs, is a living believer, one that lives by faith on the Lord; and is profitable, and uſeful to the church by her prayers and ſupplications made for them, as well as for herſelf; whereas ſhe that is in the next verſe deſcribed, is juſt the reverſe.

Ver. 6. But ſhe that liveth in pleaſure, &c.] Voluptuouſly, and deliciouſly; lives a wanton, looſe, and licentious life, ſerving divers luſts and pleaſures: is dead while ſhe liveth; is dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, while ſhe lives in them; is dead morally or ſpiritually, while ſhe lives a natural or corporal life. There is a likeneſs between a moral and a corporal death. In a corporal death, the ſoul is ſeparated from the body; and in a moral death, ſouls are ſeparated from God, and are alienated from the life of God; and are without Chriſt, who is the author and giver of ſpiritual life; and have not the Spirit, which is the Spirit of life: death defaces and deforms the man, and a moral death lies in the defacing of the image of God, firſt enſtamped on man, and in a loſs of original righteouſneſs; for as death ſtrips a man naked of all, as he was when he came into the world, ſo ſin, which brings on this moral death, has ſtripped man of his moral righteouſneſs, whereby he is become dead in law, as well as in ſin: and as in death, there is a privation of all ſenſe, ſo ſuch who are dead, morally or ſpiritually, have no true ſenſe of ſin, and of their ſtate and condition; are not concerned about ſin, nor troubled for it, but rejoice in it, boaſt of it, plead for it, and declare it: between ſuch perſons and dead men, there is a great ſimilitude; as dead men are helpleſs to themſelves, ſo are they; they can do nothing of, nor for themſelves, in matters of a ſpiritual nature; and as dead men are unprofitable unto others, ſo are they to God, and man; and as dead men are hurtful and infectious to others, ſo they by their evil communications corrupt good manners; and as dead bodies are nauſeous and diſagreeable, ſo are ſuch perſons, eſpecially to a pure and holy being; and as dead men are deprived of their ſenſes, ſo are theſe: they are blind and cannot ſee, and diſcern the things of the Spirit of God; they have not ears to hear the joyful ſound of the Goſpel, ſo as to underſtand it, approve of it, and delight in it; they have no feeling, nor are they burdened with the weight of ſin; nor have they any taſte and ſavour of the things of God, but only of the things of men; ſo that in a ſpiritual ſenſe they are dead, while they are alive. It is a common ſaying to be met with in Jewiſh writers, רשעים שבחייהן קרויין מתים, the wicked whilſt alive are ſaid to be dead [s]. And they ſay [t] alſo, that men are called, מתים, dead, from the time they ſin; and that he that ſins is accounted, כמת, as a dead man [u].

[q] Bemidbar Rabba, §. 10. fol. 199. 4.

[r] Jarchi in Ezek. xliv. 22.

Ver. 7. And theſe things give in charge, &c.] Concerning rebuking perſons of a different age and ſex, and concerning the maintenance of widows; and particularly that children provide for their parents, when helpleſs; and that widows truſt in God, and give themſelves to prayer and ſupplication, and not live in ſin: that they may be blameleſs; before men, and in the view of the world, and not be chargeable with any notorious crime; tho' none are without blame in themſelves, and before God, but as conſidered in Chriſt Jeſus.

Ver. 8. But if any provide not for his own, &c.] Not only for his wife and children, but for his parents, when grown old, and can't help themſelves: and ſpecially for thoſe of his own houſe; that is, who are of the ſame houſhold of faith with him; ſee Gal. vi. 10. and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, and eſpecially thoſe who are the children of the houſe of faith; for tho' the tie of nature obliges him to take care of them, yet that of grace makes the obligation ſtill more ſtrong and binding; and he muſt act both the inhuman and the unchriſtian part, that does not take care of his pious parents: wherefore it follows, he hath denied the faith; the doctrine of faith, tho' not in words, yet in works; and is to be conſidered in the ſame light, and to be dealt with as an apoſtate from the chriſtian religion. And is worſe than an infidel; for the very heathens are taught and directed by the light of nature to take care of their poor, and aged parents. The daughter of Cimon gave her ancient father the breaſt, and ſuckled him when in priſon. Æneas ſnatched his aged father out of the burning of Troy, and brought him out of the deſtruction of that city on his back; yea, theſe are worſe than the brute creatures, and may be truly ſaid to be without natural affections; ſuch ſhould go to the ſtorks and learn of them, of whom it is reported, that the younger ones will feed the old ones, when they can't feed themſelves; and when weary, and not able to fly, will carry them on their backs. The Jews [w] have a rule or canon, which obliged men to take care of their families, which runs thus: "as a man is bound to provide for his wife, ſo he is "bound to provide for his ſons and daughters, "the little ones, until they are ſix years old; and "from thence forward he gives them food till "they are grown up, according to the order of "the wiſe men; if he will not, they reprove him, "and make him aſhamed, and oblige him; yea, "if he will not, they publiſh him in the congre-"gation, and ſay ſuch an one is cruel, and will "not provide for his children; and lo, he is worſe "than an unclean fowl, which feeds her young."
